Author's Preface

The purpose of the Believer's Bible Commentary (BBC) is to give the average Christian reader a basic knowledge of what the Old Testament (OT) is all about.

The BBC is also intended to stimulate such a love and taste for these neglected books that the believer will want to delve more deeply into their inexhaustible treasures. While scholars will hopefully find food for their souls, they will be considerate in understanding that the book was not designed primarily for them.

With the exception of Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes, the exposition of the OT is generally presented in paragraph-by-paragraph rather than in verse-by-verse form. The comments on the text are augmented by practical applications of spiritual truths and by a study of typology, where appropriate.

Passages that point forward to the coming Redeemer are highlighted and handled in greater detail.

The Books of Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes are handled verse by verse, either because they do not lend themselves to condensation, or because most believers desire to study them in greater depth.

We have tried to face problem texts and to give alternative explanations where possible. Many passages are the despair of commentators, and we must confess that on these we still "see in a mirror, dimly."

More important than any commentary is the Word of God itself, as illuminated by the Holy Spirit of God. Without it there is no life, growth, holiness, or acceptable service. We should read it, study it, memorize it, meditate on it, and above all obey it. As someone has said, "Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge."

Editor's Introduction

"Don't despise the commentaries." This was the advice of a Bible teacher to his class at Emmaus Bible School (now College) in the late 1950's. At least one student remembered those words through three decades. The teacher was William MacDonald, the author of Believer's Bible Commentary. The student was the editor, Arthur Farstad, at that time a callow freshman. He had only read one commentary in his life—In the Heavenlies (Ephesians) by Harry A. Ironside. Reading the commentary every night one summer as a teenager, Art Farstad found out what a commentary is.

What a Commentary Is Exactly what is a commentary and why should we not despise one? Recently a prominent Christian publisher listed fifteen types of Bible-related books. If some people don't know exactly how a commentary differs from a Study Bible, e.g., or even from a concordance, an atlas, an interlinear, a Bible dictionary—to name five—it should be no surprise.

A commentary comments, or makes (hopefully) helpful remarks on the text, either verse by verse or paragraph by paragraph. Some Christians sneer at commentaries and say, "I only want to hear the spoken word and read the Bible itself!" Sounds pious, but it is not. A commentary merely puts in print the best (and hardest!) type of Bible exposition—the verse by verse teaching and preaching of the Word of God. Some commentaries (such as Ironside's) are quite literally sermons put into print. What's more, the greatest Bible expositions of all ages and tongues are available in English. Unfortunately many are so long, so dated, and so difficult that the ordinary Christian gets discouraged, not to say overwhelmed. Hence, Believer's Bible Commentary (BBC).

Kinds of Commentaries

Theoretically, anyone interested in the Bible could write a commentary. For this reason they range from extremely liberal to very conservative—with every shade of thought in between. The BBC is a very conservative one, accepting the Bible as the inspired and flawless Word of God, totally sufficient for faith and practice.

A commentary can range all the way from highly technical (minute details of Greek and Hebrew syntax, e.g.) to a very breezy sketch. The BBC is somewhere in between. What technicalities are needed are largely relegated to the endnotes, but a serious interaction with the details of the text is given with no dodging of difficult passages or convicting applications. Mr. MacDonald's writing is rich in exposition. It's aim is to help produce, not merely garden-variety, lowest-common-denominator Christians, but disciples.

Commentaries also differ as to theological camp—conservative or liberal, Protestant or Roman Catholic, premillennial or amillennial. The BBC is conservative, Protestant, and premillennial.

How to Use This Book

There are several approaches to the BBC. We suggest the following, pretty much in this order:

Browsing—If you like or love the Bible you will enjoy leafing through this book, reading bits and pieces here and there to get the flavor of the whole work.

Specific Passage—You may have a question on a verse or paragraph that you need help on. Look it up in the appropriate place in context and you will surely find good material.

A Doctrine—If you are studying creation, the Sabbath, the covenants, the dispensations, or the Angel of the Lord, look up the passages that deal with those subjects. The table of contents lists essays on a number of these topics. Use a concordance to help locate key words to guide to central passages for topics other than the ones listed.

Bible Book—Perhaps your Sunday school class or congregation is going through a book of the Old Testament. You will greatly enrich yourself (and have something to contribute, if there is a discussion) if you read ahead each week the passage to be covered. (Of course, if the leader is also using the BBC as a main study help, you may want to have two different commentaries!)

The Whole Book—Eventually every Christian should read through the entire Bible. There are hard texts scattered throughout, and a careful, conservative book like the BBC will greatly enhance your study.

Bible study may start out in the "shredded wheat" stage—"nutritious but dry," but as you progress it will become "chocolate pie"!

Mr. MacDonald's advice to me thirty years ago was, "Don't despise the commentaries." Having studied his Commentaries on the Old and New Testaments with great care while editing them for the New King James text, I can go a step further. My advice: "Enjoy!"

Transliteration of Hebrew Words

The Believer's Bible Commentary, being tailor-made for the ordinary Christian who has studied no Hebrew, uses only a handful of Hebrew words in the text, and a few more in the endnotes.

1. In modern (Israeli) Hebrew the letter is always pronounced as a "d."

2. In modern Hebrew this letter is called vav and pronounced as "v."

3. In biblical times italic had a guttural sound. For example the Hebrew original of the name Gaza began with this letter; apparently it was close enough to a hard "g" sound to make the Hellenists transliterate it here with a gamma.

4. In modern Hebrew this letter is called tav and always pronounced as a "t."

The Consonants

OT Hebrew has twenty-two letters, all consonants; the early biblical scrolls did not contain vowels. These vowel "points," as they are called, were invented and inserted during the seventh century A.D. Hebrew words are written from right to left, just the opposite from English writing.

We have used a somewhat simplified system of transliteration (similar to what is used in popular transliterations from Israel).

For example, when a bêth is pronounced "v" we put a v in the transliteration, not a b with a line under it (nevî´îm, not nebî´îm . Because the difference in sound between hê (=h) and hêth (=guttural h) is strong, we have put a dot under the h when it represents hêth (=h).[5]

We have not, however, put marks on English s's or t's to differentiate minor differences that are too subtle for popular usage.

Names that have become anglicized by frequent usage, such as Elohim, are not usually marked with diacritical marks over the English vowels.

The Vowels

Here are a few pointers on how to pronounce the vowels:

The unmarked vowels are short: a, e, i, o, u, are pronounced as in c*a*t, p*e*t, k*i*d, d*o*ll, p*u*t.

The vowels marked with either a long mark (¯) or a circumflex accent (^) are pronounced as follows:

a¯ or á as in f*a*ther (E.g. Tôra¯h) e¯ or ê as in th*e*y (E.g. ´a¯me¯n)

i¯ or î as in pol*i*ce (E.g.: ´Elo¯hîm)

o¯ or ô as in g*o*ld (E.g.: sha¯lôm)

u¯ or û as in tr*u*th (E.g.: halle¯lû Ya¯h)

INTRODUCTION TO THE OLD TESTAMENT

"For us the supreme sanction of the Old Testament is that which it derived from Christ Himself. ... What was indispensable to the Redeemer must always be indispensable to the redeemed."

—Professor G. A. Smith

I. The Name "Old Testament"

Before launching out into the deep seas of OT studies, or even the comparatively small area of studying a particular book, it will prove helpful to outline briefly some general facts about the Sacred Book we call "The Old Testament."

Our word "covenant" translates the Hebrew word berîth.[1] In the NT covenant and testament both translate the same Greek word (diathe¯ke¯). In the title of the Scriptures the meaning "covenant" seems definitely preferable because the Book constitutes a pact, alliance, or covenant between God and His people.

It is called the Old Testament (or Covenant) to contrast it with the "New" one, although "Older Covenant" might be a better title, since Old to some people suggests that it is not worth learning. This would be a deadly error from a spiritual, historical, or cultural viewpoint. Both Testaments are inspired by God and therefore profitable for all Christians. While the believer in Christ frequently turns to that part of the Bible that specifically tells of our Lord, His church, and how He wishes His disciples to live, the importance of the OT for a fully-furnished believer cannot be overstressed.

The relationship between the OT and the NT was nicely expressed by Augustine:

The New is in the Old concealed;

The Old is in the New revealed.[2]

II. The OT Canon

The word canon (Gk. kano¯n) refers to a "rule" by which something is measured or evaluated. The OT Canon is that collection of divinely inspired, and hence authoritative, books recognized by the spiritual leaders of Israel in ancient times. How do we know that these are the only books that should be in the canon or that all of these thirty-nine writings should be there? Since there were other religious writings (including heretical ones) from early days, how can we be sure that these are the right ones?

It is often said that a Jewish council drew up the canonical list in the late first century of our era. Actually, the books were canonical as soon as they were written. Godly and discerning Jews recognized inspired Scriptures from the start. However, there was a dispute for a time over some of the books (Esther, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, e.g.) in some quarters.

The Jews divide the OT into three parts: The Torah, the Prophets (Former and Latter), and the Writings.[3]

There are several theories as to why, for example, the Book of Daniel, a prophecy, should be among the Writings, and not among the Prophets. A common liberal view is that Daniel was written too late to get into the second section, which they see as already "closed" when Daniel wrote (See Introduction to Daniel.) A conservative view sees Daniel in the third section because he was not a prophet by office, but a statesman used by God to write a prophecy. Dr. Merrill F. Unger taught that the three-fold division is determined by the position of the writers[4]:

> This is the conservative and (we believe) the correct view. The Old Testament books were written with the definite purpose of being held sacred and divinely authoritative. Therefore, they possessed the stamp of canonicity from the moment of their appearance. The three-fold division is due to the official position and status of the writers and not to degrees of inspiration, differences of content or chronology.[5]

The council that officially recognized our canon was actually confirming what had been generally accepted for centuries. The council drew up not an inspired list of books, but a list of inspired books.

Even more important for Christians is the fact that our Lord Himself quoted frequently and treated as authoritative books from the three sections of the Hebrew OT. See, for example, Luke 24:27 and 44; endnote 4. Furthermore, Christ never quoted from the so-called apocryphal books.

III. The Apocrypha

Eastern Orthodox, Roman Catholic, and Protestant Bible students all agree on the twenty-seven-book NT Canon, generally[6] in the same order, with the exact same 260 chapters. The situation with the OT is a little more complex.

Protestants and Jews agree on the content of the OT, but the Eastern Orthodox and Roman Catholics[7] accept several Jewish books of history and poetry which they call "deutero-canonical" (Gk. for secondary canon) and Protestants and Jews call "apocryphal" (Gk. for "hidden"[8]).

The thirty-nine books of the current King James,[9] New King James, and other truly Protestant versions constitute the exact same materials as the twenty-four books of the Hebrew Bible. The difference in number is because of several combinations in the Jewish editions. For example, the six books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles are considered to be just three books, and the Minor Prophets, called "The Book of the Twelve," are seen as just one book.

The Jews wrote many other religious books, often not even in Hebrew, that they did not consider inspired and authoritative. Some, such as 1 and 2 Maccabees, are valuable for inter-testamental history. Others, such as "Bel and the Dragon," need only to be read by the discerning to reveal their non-canonical status.

The least valuable of these Jewish books are called Pseudepigrapha (Gk. for "false writings") and the better ones are called Apocrypha.

Some ancient Jews and Christians, but especially the Gnostics of Egypt, accepted a larger canon, including some of these books.

When scholarly St. Jerome was asked to translate the apocryphal books into Latin by Damasus, the Bishop of Rome, he did so only under protest. This was because he knew his Hebrew text well and also that they were not authentic parts of the Jewish Canon. Hence, although Jerome could discern their (at best) secondary status, he did translate these books for the Latin Vulgate. Today they also appear in Roman Catholic versions such as the New American Bible and the Jerusalem Bible, and usually in such ecumenical versions as the New English Bible, the Revised English Bible, and the New Revised Standard Version.

Even the Roman Catholic Church did not officially recognize the Apocrypha as canonical until the Counter-Reformation Period (1500's).[10] One reason that the Vatican did this was that a few of her teachings, such as praying for the dead, are found in the Apocrypha. Actually, the Apocrypha is largely Jewish literature and history, and not directly relevant to Christian doctrine. While not inspired, some of these books are worth reading from a cultural and historical viewpoint, after one has a firm grip on the inspired books of the Hebrew Canon.

IV. Authorship

The Divine Author of the OT is the Holy Spirit. He moved Moses, Ezra, Isaiah, and the anonymous authors to write under His guidance. The best and correct understanding of this question of how the OT books were produced is called dual authorship. The OT is not partly human and partly divine, but totally human and totally divine at the same time. The divine element kept the human element from making any errors. The result is an inerrant or flawless book in the original manuscripts.

A helpful analogy to the written Word is the dual nature of the Living Word, our Lord Jesus Christ. He is not partly human and partly divine (like some Greek myth) but completely human and completely divine at the same time. The divine nature made it impossible for the human to err or sin in any way.

V. Dates

Unlike the NT, which took only half a century to write (about A.D. 50-100), the OT took at least a millennium to complete (about 1400-400 B.C.).[11] The first books written were either the Pentateuch (about 1400 B.C.) or Job (date unknown, but the contents suggest an era before the law was given).

Other books followed that were written before the exile (about 600 B.C.), such as Joshua through Samuel, during the exile (such as Lamentations and Ezekiel), or after the exile, such as Chronicles, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi (about 400 B.C.).

VI. Contents

The contents of the OT, presented in the order of the Protestant versions, may be summarized concisely as follows:

Pentateuch

Genesis through Deuteronomy

Historical[12]

Joshua through Esther

Poetic

Job through Song of Solomon

Prophetic

Isaiah through Malachi

Separate introductions to these four main sections of the OT will be found in the Believers Bible Commentary at the appropriate places.

A Christian who gets a good grasp of these books, along with the later and fuller revelation of the NT, will be "thoroughly furnished for every good work."

It is our prayer that the BBC will greatly aid many believers to be just that.

VII. Languages

1. Hebrew

Except for a few sections in Aramaic, a related Semitic[13] tongue, the OT was originally written in the Hebrew language.

Believers are not surprised that God used a thoroughly suitable vehicle for the earlier portion of His Word, an expressive language rich in color and idiom, well adapted to the inspired narratives, poetry, and laws that constitute the OT. Hebrew is one of the ancient languages—but it is the only one that (almost miraculously) has been revived as the modern[14] everyday speech of a nation—Israel.

Hebrew is written from right to left, originally in consonants only. The person reading aloud supplied the proper vowel sounds from his knowledge of the language. Providentially, this made it possible for the Hebrew text to remain readable for many centuries, since it is chiefly the vowel sounds that change from century to century, from country to country, and from region to region.[15]

Sometimes what was written (called kethîv), such as the name of God,[16] was thought too sacred to pronounce and so a marginal note told what to read aloud (qere¯). This was also the case for copyists' errors and for words that, over the centuries, had come to be considered vulgar.

In the earlier Christian centuries Jewish scholars called Masoretes (from the Hebrew word for tradition) arose. Seeing that Hebrew was becoming an obsolete language, and desiring to preserve the correct reading of the sacred OT text, they devised a sophisticated phonetic system of dots and dashes above, and in, but chiefly below, the twenty-two Hebrew consonants to indicate the accepted vocalization of the words. Even today this ancient "vowel pointing," as it is called, is more scientific and precise than English, French, or even German spelling!

The consonantal text is also the source of disputed readings, since a set of consonants at times can be read with different vowels, and therefore different meanings. Usually the context will determine which is original, but not always. The variant spellings of names in Chronicles (see commentary there) that differ from Genesis, e.g., are partly due to this phenomenon.

By and large, however, the traditional, or Masoretic Text, is remarkably well-preserved. It is a living witness to the Jews' great reverence for God's Word. Often the ancient versions (Targums, Septuagint, and Vulgate) help us to choose the correct variant where a problem exists. Since the mid-twentieth century the Dead Sea Scrolls have given added information on the Hebrew text—chiefly as a confirmation of the accuracy of the Masoretic Text.

Fortunately for us who read the OT in an English translation, Hebrew translates very nicely into English—much better than it does into Latin, for example, as the great sixteenth century Reformation translator William Tyndale pointed out.

The version on which the BBC is based is a direct descendant of Tyndale's beginnings in the OT. He managed to complete Genesis through Chronicles and some poetic and prophetic sections before the Inquisition had him burned at the stake for his efforts (1536). His OT work was completed by others and updated in the King James Version of 1611 and more recently in the New King James Version of 1982.

2. Aramaic

Like Hebrew, Aramaic is a Semitic language, but a Gentile one, spoken widely in the ancient world for very many centuries. As Hebrew became a dead language for the Jews, the OT had to be interpreted for them into Aramaic, the closely related, but different, language that they had come to adopt. The script that we associate with Hebrew was probably borrowed from Aramaic about 400 B.C. and developed into the artistic square letters that are familiar to Hebrew students today.[17]

Most of the above facts concerning Hebrew are also true for the Aramaic portions of the OT. These passages are few, and understandably, chiefly concern Israel's contacts with her Gentile neighbors, such as in the Babylonian Exile and afterward.[18]

VIII. Translation

English is blessed with many translations (perhaps too many!). There are, however, far fewer translations of the OT than of the NT. These translations fall into four general types:

1. Very Literal

J. N. Darby's "New" Translation of 1882 (NT much earlier), the English Revised Version of 1881 and its U.S. variant, the American Standard Version of 1901, are extremely literal. This makes them helpful for careful study but weak for worship, public reading, and memorization. The masses of believers have never abandoned the majesty and beauty of the Tyndale-King James tradition for these useful—but rather wooden—versions.

2. Optimum Equivalence

Versions that are quite literal and follow the Hebrew or Greek closely when English allows it, yet still permit a freer translation where good style and idiom demand it, include the KJV, the RSV, the NASB, and the NKJV. Unfortunately, the RSV, while generally reliable in the NT, is wedded to an OT that plays down many Messianic prophecies. This dangerous trend is seen today even among some previously sound scholars. The BBC was edited to conform to the NKJV as the most viable position between the beautiful (but archaic) KJV and today's usage, yet without using any thee's and thou's.[19]

3. Dynamic Equivalence

This type of translation is freer than the complete-equivalence type, and sometimes resorts to paraphrase, a valid technique as long as the reader is made aware of it. The NEB, NIV, and the Jerusalem Bible all fall into this category. An attempt is made to put whole thoughts into the structure that Moses and Isaiah might have used if they were writing today—and in English. When done conservatively, this methodology can be a helpful tool. The danger lies in the theological looseness of many translators who use this method.

4. Paraphrase

A paraphrase seeks to transmit the text thought by thought, yet it often takes great liberties in adding material. Since it is far removed from the original text in wording there is always the danger of too much interpretation. The Living Bible, e.g., while evangelical, makes many interpretive decisions that are at best debatable.

It is good to have a Bible from at least three of these categories for purposes of comparison. However, we believe that the complete, or optimum-equivalence translation is safest for the type of detailed Bible study presented in the BBC.

IX. Inspiration

Amid all this welter of historical and technical details we do well to consider the words of the great English Baptist preacher, Charles Haddon Spurgeon:

> This volume is the writing of the living God: each letter was penned with an Almighty finger; each word in it dropped from the everlasting lips; each sentence was dictated by the Holy Spirit. Albeit, that Moses was employed to write his histories with his fiery pen, God guided that pen. It may be that David touched his harp, and let sweet Psalms of melody drop from his fingers; but God moved his hands over the living strings of his golden harp. It may be that Solomon sang canticles of love, or gave forth words of consummate wisdom, but God directed his lips, and made the preacher eloquent. If I follow the thundering Nahum, when his horses plow the waters, or Habakkuk, when he sees the tents of Cushan in affliction; if I read Malachi, when the earth is burning like an oven; ... it is God's voice, not man's; the words are God's words, the words of the Eternal, the Invisible, the Almighty, the Jehovah of this earth.[20]

INTRODUCTION TO THE PENTATEUCH

"Modern criticism has ventured to undermine and assail almost all the books of holy scripture, but none with such boldness as the Pentateuch, unless it be the prophecy of Daniel. ... Let us take our stand on the fact, broad, deep, and conclusive, that the authority of Christ has decided the question for all who own Him to be God as well as man."

—William Kelly

"The Pentateuch is an essential introduction to the entire word of God. It opens up that which is afterwards unfolded, and ever leads us on in hope to a consummation which, though distant, is certain."

—Samuel Ridout

Before commenting on the individual Books of Moses, since this is such a basic part of biblical revelation, we would like to present a few facts on the Pentateuch as a whole.

I. Titles of the Pentateuch

The first five books of the Bible are commonly called "the Pentateuch." In ancient times books were in the form of scrolls rather than bound as pages of a "codex" (book form). These scrolls, called teuchoi[1] in Greek, were stored in sheath like containers. The Greek word for "five-roll" is pentateuchos, whence our word "Pentateuch."

Jews refer to the Pentateuch as "the Torah" (Heb. tôrá, "law" or "instruction"), and treat it as the most important part of their Bible.

A third common title of these volumes is "the Books of Moses." It is ironical that the Bibles of certain northern European countries that most widely reject the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch label these books not as "Genesis, Exodus," etc., but as "First Book of Moses," "Second Book of Moses," etc.

Except for Numbers, whose name is the English translation of the Greek Arithmoi and the Latin Numeri, we retain the Greek LXX (Septuagint) titles of these five books, but anglicize the spelling and pronunciation. (See the individual books in the Believers Bible Commentary for their meanings.)

The Jews often call the books by their first few words in the Hebrew text. Thus Genesis is called Bere¯shîth ("In the beginning").

II. Contents of the Pentateuch

The usage of our English word law is more restricted than the Hebrew meanings of tôrâ, hence the term "Pentateuch" is ideal for Christian usage to express the great importance of this five-volume set.

A. Genesis

Genesis is well-named, as it is the Greek word for beginning. The first book of the Bible traces the origins of the universe, the earth, man, marriage, sin, true religion, the nations, diverse languages, and the chosen people. The first eleven chapters recount the broad sweep of human history, but chapters twelve through fifty narrow the story down to the family of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his sons.

B. Exodus

Exodus, Greek for the way out, narrates how in four hundred years the family of Abraham grew to a nation under the forced labor of the Pharaohs in Egypt, and their redemption from bondage under Moses. The Law of Moses and the detailed description of the tabernacle make up the rest of the book.

C. Leviticus

Leviticus is a manual for the Levites, hence the name. It describes the rituals necessary for sinful men of that era to have fellowship with a holy God. The book contains pictures and types of the sacrifice of Christ.

D. Numbers

Numbers, as the name suggests, includes a numbering of the people, or census—one at the beginning and another at the end of the book. The Hebrew title for the book, "in the desert" (Bemidba¯r), is more expressive, since Numbers recounts the historical events experienced by the Israelites in their wilderness wanderings.

E. Deuteronomy

Deuteronomy, Greek for second law, is more than a mere re-telling of the law to a new generation, though it is that. It is the link with the historical books that follow, since it recounts the death of Moses, and his replacement by Joshua, his successor.

Griffith Thomas, in his usual lucid and concise style, summarizes the contents of the Books of Moses as follows:

> The five books of the Pentateuch record the introduction of the Divine religion into the world. Each book gives one phase of God's plan, and together they constitute a real unity. Genesis speaks of the origin of the religion, and of the people chosen by God as its medium. Exodus records the formation of the people into a nation, and the establishment of God's relationship with it. Leviticus shows the various ways in which this relationship was maintained. Numbers shows how the people were organized for the purpose of commencing the life of the divine religion in the Promised Land. This book also tells of the nation's failure and the consequent delay, with re-organization. Then Deuteronomy shows how the people were prepared, while on the border of the Promised Land, for the entry which was soon to follow.[2]

III. Importance of the Pentateuch

Since the whole OT, in fact the whole Bible, is based on these first five books, the importance of the Pentateuch for revealed religion can hardly be overstated. If rationalistic, unbelieving scholars can undermine faith in the integrity and authenticity of these books, the origins of Judaism become lost in a sea of uncertainty. Christians should not think that our faith is unaffected by such attacks either, since the NT and our Lord Himself also quote the Books of Moses as true and trustworthy.

Dr. Merrill Unger put the case very bluntly:

> The foundation of all revealed truth and of God's redemptive plan is based on the Pentateuch. If this foundation is unreliable, the whole Bible is unreliable.[3]

IV. Authorship of the Pentateuch

Except for some who in early Christian times opted for Ezra[4] as the author of the Torah, by and large, Judeo-Christian orthodoxy has maintained Mosaic authorship through the centuries—and still does.

A. Mosaic Authorship

Before examining briefly the documentary theory, which largely denies Mosaic authorship, let us note the positive evidence for it.

1. Moses' Qualifications

The nineteenth century German critic Hartmann denied Mosaic authorship on the grounds that it was quite literally impossible—writing not having yet been invented. (Or, so many thought then!) Archaeology has shown that Moses could have written in early Hebrew script, Egyptian hieroglyphics, or Accadian cuneiform. Of course Acts 7:22 told believers long before archaeology confirmed it, that Moses was educated "in all the learning of the Egyptians." When we say Moses "wrote" the Pentateuch, this allows for his using previous documents in Genesis. It also allows for inspired editorial updatings as Hebrew script changed through the centuries. Of course, the fact that Moses could have written the Pentateuch doesn't prove that he did. However, as the father of the Jewish faith it is inevitable that he would make a permanent record of God's revelation for future generations. And so God had commanded him.

2. Pentateuchal Claims

The text of the Torah says specifically that Moses did write down at God's command on occasion. See, e.g., Exodus 17:14; 24:4; 34:27; Numbers 33:2; Deuteronomy 31:19.

3. Later Biblical Claims

The rest of God's Word accepts Mosaic authorship as well. See, e.g., Joshua 1:7 and 1 Kings 2:3; and in the NT, Luke 24:44 and 1 Corinthians 9:9.

4. The Witness of Christ

For Christians the fact that our Lord Himself accepted Mosaic authorship should settle the matter. The notion that in His humanity Jesus was ignorant of science and history, or that He knew better but accommodated Himself to the ignorance and prejudice of His countrymen is unworthy of a believer's consideration.

5. Archaeology and the Pentateuch

Many customs, words, names, and historical and cultural details that liberal critics once said were "too late" to be Mosaic have now been found to predate Moses by centuries. While this doesn't "prove" Mosaic authorship, it tallies much better with the traditional view than it does with the theory that "redactors" or editors living many centuries later knew all these (by then largely lost) details and pieced them together so nicely.

B. The Documentary Hypothesis

In 1753 Jean Astruc, a French doctor, set forth the theory that Moses compiled Genesis from two documents. Those passages that used the name Jehovah for God came from one source, he wrote, and those using Elohim another. These supposed sources he labeled "J" and "E" respectively.

Later, liberal scholars developed the theory much further, eventually putting all their supposed sources much later than Moses. Other proposed documents were "D" ("Deuteronomic") and "P" ("Priestly"). The Pentateuch was viewed as a patchwork of sources built up between the ninth and sixth centuries B.C. Popularly, the hypothesis became known as the "JEDP theory."

Several things made the hypothesis attractive to nineteenth-century scholars. First of all it fitted in well with Darwin's theory of evolution, which was being applied to many fields other than just to biology. Next, the anti-supernaturalistic spirit of the day found delight in trying to put the Bible down on a merely human level. Thirdly, the humanistic trends that replaced divine revelation with man's efforts dovetailed with this theory.

In 1878 Julius Wellhausen popularized the documentary hypothesis in a clever and deceptively plausible way.

In this short Introduction we can only mention a few of the main points against the theory.[5]

Serious problems with the theory include the following:

1. Lack of Manuscript Evidence

There is no manuscript evidence that any of the editorial work proposed in the "JEDP" theory ever occurred.

2. Conflicting and Subjective Fragmentation

Scholars divide the Pentateuch up into fragments quite differently, which exposes the extreme, personal viewpoints and lack of concrete, objective evidence for the theory.

3. Archaeology

Archaeology has tended to support the writing, customs, religious knowledge, etc., of the Pentateuch as being very ancient, and definitely not from the much later period of composition proposed by the Wellhausen theory.

4. Linguistics

Supposedly "late" language forms and personal names found in the Pentateuch have been found in sources well before the time of Moses. An example is the recently unearthed "Ebla tablets," which contain many Pentateuchal names.

5. Unity of the Pentateuch

Editorially, the five books of Moses hold together very well and exhibit a unity and coherence that is most difficult to reconcile with the alleged evolutionary "scissors and paste" origins of these books.

6. Spiritual Bankruptcy

Finally, from a spiritual viewpoint, the documentary theories, even as modified by archaeology and other similar theories, are unworthy of the great and beautiful truths enshrined in these books. If these theories were true, the Pentateuch would be, in the words of Dr. Unger, "unauthentic, unhistorical, and unreliable, a fabrication of men, not the work of God."[6]

V. Date of the Pentateuch

The contents of the Pentateuch take us back to creation, but the actual writing, of course, was thousands of years later. Obviously the date for the writing that we choose is dependent upon who wrote it.

Liberal scholars date the various theorized stages of the work largely as follows: The so-called "J document" is dated about 850 B.C.; the "E document" about 750 B.C.; the "D document" about 621 B.C.[7]; and the "P document" about 500 B.C.

Conservative scholars generally date the Pentateuch around the time of the Exodus, in the fifteenth century B.C. Some prefer a date for this event of about a century and half later.

Probably the best date to fit all the biblical data is sometime between 1450-1410 B.C. See the individual books in the BBC for more details.

VI. Conclusion

We conclude our Introduction to the Pentateuch with the words of Canada's foremost OT scholar:

> The Pentateuch is a homogeneous composition in five volumes, and not an agglomeration of separate and perhaps only rather casually related works. It described, against an accredited historical background, the manner in which God revealed Himself to men and chose the Israelites for special service and witness in the world and in the course of human history. The role of Moses in the formulation of this literary corpus appears pre-eminent, and it is not without good reason that he should be accorded a place of high honor in the growth of the epic of Israelite nationhood, and be venerated by Jews and Christians alike as the great mediator of the ancient Law.[8]

GENESIS

INTRODUCTION

"The first book of the Bible is for several reasons one of the most interesting and fascinating portions of Scripture. Its place in the Canon, its relation to the rest of the Bible, and the varied and striking character of its contents combine to make it one of the most prominent in Holy Writ. It is with a real spiritual insight, therefore, that the people of God in all ages have fastened upon this book, and given it their earnest attention."

— W. H. Griffith Thomas

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Genesis (Greek for "Beginning"), called Bereshîth by the Jews (Hebrew for "In the beginning"), is well named. This exciting volume gives the only true account of creation by the only One who was there—the Creator!

Through His servant Moses, the Holy Spirit traces the beginnings of man, woman, marriage, the home, sin, sacrifices, cities, trade, agriculture, music, worship, languages, and the races and nations of the world. All this in the first eleven chapters.

Then, from chapters 12-50 we see the beginnings of Israel, God's "test-tube nation," to be a spiritual microcosm of all the peoples of the world. The lives of the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his twelve sons-especially the attractively devout Joseph, have inspired untold millions, from young children to advanced OT scholars.

A solid grasp of Genesis is necessary for an understanding of the rest of the sixty-five books of the Bible. They all build on its beautifully proportioned literary base.

II. AUTHORSHIP

We accept the ancient Jewish and Christian teaching that Genesis was written and compiled by Moses the man of God and Lawgiver of Israel. Since all the events in Genesis are pre-Mosaic it is virtually certain that Moses used ancient documents and perhaps oral accounts as he was guided by the Holy Spirit. See Introduction to the Pentateuch for a discussion of Mosaic authorship.

III. Date

The most conservative scholars generally date the Exodus about 1445 B.C. Hence Genesis would probably have been written between this date and Moses' death about forty years later. It is always possible, of course, that this one book of the Pentateuch was written before the Exodus, since all the events in Genesis predate that great event.

See Introduction to the Pentateuch for further details.

IV. Background and Themes

Except for those who are extremely biased against the Bible, Judaism, or Christianity, nearly everyone agrees that Genesis is a fascinating account of very ancient times and contains narratives of great beauty, such as the story of Joseph.

But just what is the background of this first book of the Bible. In short, what is it?

Those who reject a personal God have tended to class Genesis as a collection of myths adapted from pagan Mesopotamian myths and "cleaned up" from their worst polytheistic elements for monotheistic Hebrew edification.

Others, not quite as skeptical, see Genesis as a collection of sagas or legends, with some historical value.

Yet others see the stories as explanations of the origins of things in nature and culture (technically called etiologies). There are etiologies in the OT, especially in this book of beginnings (the origin of sin, the rainbow, the Hebrew people, e.g.) but this by no means makes the explanations unhistorical.

Genesis is history. Like all history, it is interpretive. It is theological history, or facts narrated in a framework of the divine plan. It has been well said that "history is His story."

Though Genesis is the first book of the "law" there is very little legal material in it. It is "Law" (Torah, Heb. for instruction) in that it lays the foundation for Exodus through Deuteronomy and God's giving of the Law through Moses. In fact, it lays the foundation of all Bible history—yes, of history itself.

The twin themes of blessing and cursing are carefully woven throughout the fabric of Genesis, and indeed, the whole word of God. Obedience brings enrichment of blessing, and disobedience the opposite.

The great curses are the penalties of the fall, the universal Flood, and the confusion of tongues at Babel.

The great blessings are the promise of a Redeemer, the salvation of a remnant through the Flood, and the choice of a special nation to be a channel of God's grace, Israel.

If Genesis is factual history, how could Moses have known all the ancient genealogies, conversations, events and correct interpretation of these events?

First, let is be said, that archaeology has supported (not "proved" but confirmed and illustrated) the Genesis account in many areas, especially regarding the patriarchs and their customs.

Some nineteenth century liberals, such as Hartmann,[1] taught that Moses could not have written the Pentateuch because writing had not yet been invented! Now we know that Moses could have written in any one of several ancient scripts, being learned in all the lore of Egypt.

Moses no doubt used accounts left by Joseph, and the tablets, parchments, and oral translations brought from ancient Mesopotamia by Abraham and his descendants. These would include the genealogies, the major sections, known as "the generations of Adam," etc.

In the final analysis this is still not enough. The Holy Spirit of God inspired Moses to choose exactly the right materials and to ignore the rest. He probably supplied details of conversations and other things by direct revelation.

It comes down to a matter of faith. Either God is capable of producing such a work through His servants or He is not. Believers of all generations from primeval times to today have set their seal that God is true.

Archaeology can help us reconstruct the culture of the patriarchs to make the Bible accounts more vivid,[2] but only the Holy Spirit can illuminate the truth of Genesis to our hearts and daily lives.

As you read the Believers Bible Commentary on Genesis—or any of the OT books—you must be dependent on the Spirit's illumination of the Holy Word itself to really benefit from the comments. A true commentary is not an independent means, but an arrow, pointing to a "thus says the Lord."

COMMENTARY

I. EARTH'S EARLIEST AGES (CHAPS. 1-11)

A. The Creation (Chaps. 1, 2)

1:1 "In the beginning God ... ." These first four words of the Bible form the foundation for faith. Believe these words, and you can believe all that follows in the Bible. Genesis provides the only authoritative account of creation, meaningful for people of all ages but exhaustible by no one. The divine record assumes the existence of God rather than seeking to prove it. The Bible has a special name for those who choose to deny the fact of God. That name is fool (Ps. 14:1 and 53:1). Just as the Bible begins with God, so He should be first in our lives.

1:2 One of several conservative interpretations of the Genesis account of creation, the creation-reconstruction view, says that between verses 1 and 2 a great catastrophe occurred, perhaps the fall of Satan (see Ezek. 28:11-19).[3] This caused God's original, perfect creation to become without form and void (to¯hû wa¯vo¯hû). Since God didn't create the earth waste and empty (see Isa. 45:18), only a mighty cataclysm could explain the chaotic condition of verse 2. Proponents of this view point out that the word translated was (ha¯yetha¯) could also be translated "had become."[4] Thus the earth "had become waste and empty."

The Spirit of God was hovering over the face of the waters, preparatory to the great creative and reconstructive acts to follow. The remaining verses describe the six days of creation and reconstruction which prepared the earth for human habitation.

1:3-5 On the first day God commanded light to shine out of darkness and established the Day and Night cycle. This act is not to be confused with the establishment of the sun, moon, and stars on the fourth day. In 2 Corinthians 4:6 the Apostle Paul draws a parallel between the original separation of light from darkness and the conversion of a sinner.

1:6-8 Prior to the second day, it seems that the earth was completely surrounded by a thick layer of water, perhaps in the form of a heavy vapor. On the second day God divided this layer, part covering the earth with water and part forming clouds, with the atmospheric layers (firmament or "dome") between. God called the firmament Heaven—that is, the expanse of space immediately above the earth (not the stellar heavens, nor the third heaven, where God dwells). Verse 20 makes it clear that the heaven here is the sphere where the birds fly.

1:9-13 Then God caused the dry land to appear out of the waters that covered the face of the planet. Thus were born the Earth and the Seas. Also on the third day He caused vegetation and trees of all kinds to spring up in the earth.

1:14-19 It was not until the fourth day that the Lord set the sun, moon, and stars in the heavens as light bearers and as means for establishing a calendar.

1:20-23 The fifth day saw the waters stocked with fish and the earth stocked with bird-life and insects. The word translated birds means "flying ones" and includes bats and probably flying insects.

1:24, 25 On the sixth day God first created animals and reptiles. The law of reproduction is repeatedly given in the words according to its kind. There are significant variations within "kinds" of biological life, but there is no passing from one kind to another.

1:26-28 The crown of God's work was the creation of man in His image and according to His likeness. This means that man was placed on earth as God's representative, and that He resembles God in certain ways. Just as God is a Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Spirit), so man is a tripartite being (spirit, soul, and body). Like God, man has intellect, a moral nature, the power to communicate with others, and an emotional nature that transcends instinct. There is no thought of physical likeness here. In contrast to animals, man is a worshiper, an articulate communicator, and a creator.

There is an allowance for or even an intimation of the Trinity in verse 26: Then God [Elohim, plural] said [singular verb in Hebrew], "Let Us [plural] make man in Our image ... ."

The Bible describes the origin of the sexes as a creative act of God. Evolution has never been able to explain how the sexes began. Humanity was commanded to be fruitful and multiply.

God gave man a mandate to subdue creation and have dominion over it—to use it but not abuse it. The modern crises in the earth's environment are due to man's greed, selfishness, and carelessness.

1:29, 30 It is clear from these verses that animals were originally herbivorous and that man was vegetarian. This was changed after the Flood (see 9:1-7).

Were the six days of creation literal 24-hour days, or were they geological ages? Or were they days of "dramatic vision" during which the creation account was revealed to Moses? No scientific evidence has ever refuted the concept that they were literal solar days. The expression "the evening and the morning" points to 24-hour days. Everywhere else in the OT these words mean normal days. Adam lived through the seventh day and died in his 930th year, so the seventh day could not have been a geological age. Wherever the "day" is used with a number in the OT ("first day," etc.) it means a literal day. When God commanded Israel to rest on the Sabbath day, He based the command on the fact that He had rested on the seventh day, after six days of labor (Ex. 20:8-11). Consistent interpretation here requires the same meaning of the word "day."

A difficulty, however, is that the solar day as we know it may not have begun until the fourth day (vv. 14-19).

As far as the Bible is concerned, the creation of the heavens and the earth is undated. The creation of man is undated also. However, genealogies are given, and, even allowing for possible gaps in the genealogies, man could not have been on the earth for the millions of years demanded by evolutionists.

We learn from John 1:1,14, Colossians 1:16, and Hebrews 1:2 that the Lord Jesus was the active Agent in creation. For the inexhaustible wonders of His creation, He is worthy of endless worship.

1:31 At the end of the six days of creation God saw everything that He had made, and indeed it was very good.

2:1-3 God rested from His creative activity on the seventh day. This is not the rest that follows weariness but the rest of satisfaction and completion of a job well done. Although God did not command man to keep the Sabbath at this time, He taught the principle of one day of rest in seven.

2:4-6 The name LORD God (Jehovah [Yahweh] Elohim) appears for the first time in verse 4, but only after the creation of man (1:27). As Elohim, God is the Creator. As Jehovah, He is in covenant relation with man. Failing to see this, some Bible critics have concluded that these different names for God can only be explained by a change in authorship.

This is the history (v. 4) refers to the beginnings described in chapter 1. Verse 5, which reads, "before any plant of the field was in the earth and before any herb of the field had grown," describes conditions on the earth in 1:10, when the dry land appeared but before vegetation appeared. The earth was watered by a mist rather than by rain.

2:7 A fuller account of the creation of man is now given. God formed his body from the dust of the ground, but only the impartation of the breath of God made him a living being. Adam ("red" or "ground") was named after the red earth from which he was made.

2:8-14 The garden that God planted in Eden was toward the east, i.e., east of Palestine, the point of reference for Bible directions. It was located in the region of Mesopotamia, near the Hiddekel (Tigris) and Euphrates Rivers. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil provided a test of man's obedience. The only reason it was wrong to eat of that fruit was because God had said so. In different forms, that fruit is still with us today.

2:15-23 The penalty for violating the commandment was death (v.17)—instant spiritual death and progressive physical death. In the process of naming the animals and birds, Adam would have noticed that there were males and females. Each one had a mate that was similar to itself, yet different. This prepared Adam for a helper who would be comparable to himself. His bride was formed from one of his ribs, taken from his side as he slept. So from Christ's side, His Bride was secured as He shed His life's blood in untold agony. Woman was taken not from Adam's head to dominate him, nor from his feet to be trodden down, but from under his arm to be protected, and from near his heart to be loved.

God gave headship to man before sin entered. Paul argues this fact from the order of creation (man was created first) and the purpose of creation (woman was made for the man) (1 Cor. 11:8, 9). Also, although it was Eve who sinned first, it is by Adam, the head, that sin is said to have entered the world. He had the position of head and was thus responsible.

Verse 19 is clearer with the pluperfect tense[5]: "The LORD God had formed ... every beast," i.e., before He made man.

2:24 With the words of verse 24 God instituted monogamous marriage. Like all divine institutions, it was established for man's good and cannot be violated with impunity. The marriage bond illustrates the relationship that exists between Christ and the church (Eph. 5:22-32).

2:25 Although Adam and Eve lived in the Garden of Eden without any clothes, they were not ashamed.

B. The Temptation and Fall (Chap. 3)

3:1-6 The serpent that appeared to Eve is later revealed to be none other than Satan himself (see Rev. 12:9). Those who seek to "demythologize" the Bible believe that this account of the fall is allegorical and not literal. They cite the talking serpent as proof. Can the story of the serpent's deceiving Eve be accepted as factual? The Apostle Paul thought so (2 Cor. 11:3). So did the Apostle John (Rev. 12:9; 20:2). Nor is this the only instance of a talking animal in Scripture. God gave a voice to Balaam's donkey to restrain the madness of the prophet (Num. 22), and the Apostle Peter accepted this as literal (2 Pet. 2:16). These three apostles were inspired by the Holy Spirit to write as they did. Thus to reject the account of the fall as literal is to reject the inspiration of Holy Scripture. There are allegories in the Bible, but this is not one of them.

Notice the steps that plunged the human race into sin. First Satan insinuated doubt about the Word of God: "Has God indeed said?" He misrepresented God as forbidding Adam and Eve to eat of every tree. Next, Eve said that they were not to eat or "touch the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden." But God had said nothing about touching the tree. Then Satan flatly contradicted God about the inevitability of judgment on those who disobeyed, just as his followers still deny the facts of hell and eternal punishment. Satan misrepresented God as seeking to withhold from Adam and Eve something that would have been beneficial to them. Eve yielded to the threefold temptation: the lust of the flesh (good for food), the lust of the eyes (pleasant to the eyes), and the pride of life (a tree desirable to make one wise). In doing so, she acted independently of Adam, her head. She should have consulted him instead of usurping his authority. In the words "she took of its fruit and ate" lie the explanation of all the sickness, sorrow, suffering, fear, guilt, and death that have plagued the human race ever since that time. Someone has said, "The wreckage of earth and a million billion graves attest that God is true and Satan is the liar." Eve was deceived (1 Tim. 2:14), but Adam acted willfully and in deliberate rebellion against God.

Secular humanism perpetuates Satan's lie, "You will be like God."

3:7-13 The first result of sin was a sense of shame and fear. The aprons of fig leaves speak of man's attempt to save himself by a bloodless religion of good works. When called to account by God, sinners excuse themselves. Adam said, "The woman whom You gave to be with me ... " as if blaming God (see Prov. 19:3). Eve said, "The serpent ... " (v. 13).

In love and mercy God searched after His fallen creatures with the question "Where are you?" This question proved two things—that man was lost and that God had come to seek. It proved man's sin and God's grace.[6] God takes the initiative in salvation, demonstrating the very thing Satan got Eve to doubt—His love.

3:14 The LORD God cursed the serpent to degradation, disgrace, and defeat. The fact that the serpent is cursed more than all cattle or any other beast of the field suggests that reptiles are primarily in view here rather than Satan.

3:15 But verse 15 switches to the Devil himself. This verse is known as the protevangelium, meaning "The First Gospel." It predicts the perpetual hostility between Satan and the woman (representing all mankind), and between Satan's seed (his agents) and her Seed (the Messiah). The woman's Seed would crush the Devil's head, a mortal wound spelling utter defeat. This wound was administered at Calvary when the Savior decisively triumphed over the Devil. Satan, in turn, would bruise the Messiah's heel. The heel wound here speaks of suffering and even of physical death, but not of ultimate defeat. So Christ suffered on the cross, and even died, but He arose from the dead, victorious over sin, hell, and Satan. The fact that He is called the woman's Seed may contain a suggestion of His virgin birth. Note the kindness of God in promising the Messiah before pronouncing sentence in the following verses.

3:16-19 Sin has inevitable consequences. The woman was sentenced to suffering in childbirth. She would be subject to her husband. The man was sentenced to earn his livelihood from ground that was cursed with thorns and thistles. It would mean toil and sweat for him. Then at the end of life, he himself would return to dust. It should be noted here that work itself is not a curse; it is more often a blessing. It is the sorrow, toil, frustration, perspiration, and weariness connected with work that are the curse.

3:20, 21 Adam displayed faith in calling his wife's name Eve ... the mother of all living, since no baby had ever been born up to this time. Then tunics of skin were provided by God through the death of an animal. This pictures the robe of righteousness which is provided for guilty sinners through the shed blood of the Lamb of God, made available to us on the basis of faith.

3:22-24 There was a shade of truth in Satan's lie that Eve would become like God (v. 5). But she and Adam learned by the hard way of experience to discern between good and evil. If they had then eaten of the tree of life, they would have lived forever in bodies subject to sickness, degeneration, and infirmity. Thus it was God's mercy that prevented them from returning to Eden. Cherubim are celestial creatures whose function is to "vindicate the holiness of God against the presumptuous pride of fallen man."[7]

Adam and Eve had to decide whether God or Satan was lying. They decided that God was. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Thus their names are missing from the Honor Roll of Faith in Hebrews 11.

The ideal environment of Eden did not prevent the entrance of sin. A favorable environment is not the answer to man's problems.

C. Cain and Abel (Chap. 4)

4:1 Adam knew Eve his wife in the sense that he had sexual relations with her. When Cain was born, she acknowledged that this birth was only by the Lord's enablement. In naming him Cain ("acquisition"), Eve may have thought that she had given birth to the Promised Seed.

4:2-6 The process of time mentioned in verse 3a allows for a considerable increase in the world's population. There must have been a time when Cain and Abel were instructed that sinful man can approach the holy God only on the ground of the blood of a substitutionary sacrifice. Cain rejected this revelation and came with a bloodless offering of fruits and vegetables. Abel believed the divine decree and offered slain animals, thus demonstrating his faith and his justification by God (Heb. 11:4). He brought the firstborn of his flock, saying in effect that the LORD deserves the best. Abel's offering points forward to the substitutionary death of the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world.

4:7 Because Cain's jealous anger was incipient murder, God spoke to him in loving warning. Verse 7 may be understood in several ways:

> 1. "If you do well [by repenting], you will be able to look up again in freedom from anger and guilt. If you do not do well [by continuing to hate Abel], sin is crouching at your door, ready to destroy you. His [Abel's] desire is for you [i.e., he will acknowledge your leadership] and you will rule over him" [i.e., if you do well].
> 2. "If you do well (or, as the Septuagint reads it, "If you offer correctly") will you not be accepted?" The well-doing had reference to the offering. Abel did well by hiding himself behind an acceptable sacrifice. Cain did badly by bringing an offering without blood, and all his after-conduct was but the legitimate result of this false worship.[8]
> 3. The RSV says, "If you do well, will you not be accepted? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; its desire is for you, but you must master it."
> 4. F. W. Grant says in his Numerical Bible, "If you do not well, a sin-offering croucheth or lieth at the door."[9] In other words, provision was made if he wanted it.

4:8-12 Cain's evil attitude of jealous rage was soon translated into evil action, the murder of his brother. Though Abel is dead, he still witnesses to us that the life of faith is the life that counts (Heb. 11:4). When the Lord's loving question was met by an unrepentant, insolent reply, He pronounced Cain's judgment—he would no longer be able to make a living from the soil, but would wander as a fugitive in the desert.

4:13-16 Cain's whimpering complaint reveals remorse for the consequences of his sin rather than for its guilt. But even then the Lord allayed the fugitive's fears for his life by putting a protective mark on Cain and a curse on anyone who killed him. Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, the saddest of all departures.

4:17-24 Cain married his sister or other blood relative. As mentioned, Genesis 4:3 allows time for a population increase, and Genesis 5:4 specifically states that Adam had sons and daughters. Marriage of close relatives was not forbidden then (nor was it genetically risky).

Verses 17-24 list Cain's posterity, and a series of firsts: the first city, named Enoch; the first case of polygamy; the beginning of organized animal husbandry; the beginning of the art of music and of metalcrafts; the first song, concerning violence and bloodshed. In the song, Lamech explains to his wives that he killed ... a young man in self-defense, but that because it wasn't premeditated, like Cain's murder of his brother, Lamech would be much more immune from reprisal.

4:25, 26 Now in striking relief, the godly line of Seth is introduced. It was through this line that the Messiah would eventually be born. When Enosh (meaning "frail" or "mortal") was born, men began to use the name of the LORD (Jehovah) for God, or perhaps to call on the name of Jehovah in public worship.

D. Seth and His Descendants (Chap. 5)

Chapter 5 has been called "The Tolling of the Death Bells" because of the oft-repeated expression "and he died." It records the bloodline of the Messiah from Adam to Noah's son, Shem (compare Luke 3:36-38).

5:1-17 Adam was created in the likeness of God. Seth was born in the image of Adam. In between, the Fall took place and the image of God in man became marred by sin. Verse 5 records the physical fulfillment of what God said would happen in 2:17; the spiritual fulfillment took place the day Adam sinned.

5:18-24 The Enoch and Lamech mentioned here should not be confused with those in chapter 4. The Enoch in verse 18 is the seventh from Adam (Jude 14), not the third. By faith Enoch walked with God for 300 years and pleased the Lord (Heb. 11:5). It seems that the birth of his son had a sanctifying, ennobling influence on his life (v. 22a). It is good to start well, but it is even better to continue steadfastly to the end. The word walk implies a steady, progressive relationship and not just a casual acquaintance. To walk with God is the business of a lifetime, and not just the performance of an hour. Enoch was transported to heaven prior to the flood just as the church will be raptured to heaven before the Tribulation begins (1 Thess. 4:13-18; Rev. 3:10).

5:25-32 Methuselah lived longer than any other man (nine hundred and sixty-nine years). If, as Williams says, the name Methuselah means "it shall be sent,"[10] it may be a prophecy, because the flood came in the year of his death. Perhaps Lamech's prediction when he named Noah looked forward to the comfort that would come to the world through Noah's greater Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. Noah's name means "rest." As the years passed, man's life expectancy decreased. Psalm 90:10 speaks of seventy years as normal.

E. Widespread Sin and the Universal Flood (Chaps. 6-8)

6:1, 2 There are two principal interpretations of verse 2. One is that the sons of God were angels who left their proper sphere (Jude 6) and intermarried with women on earth, a form of sexual disorder that was most hateful to God. Those who hold this view point out that the expression "sons of God" in Job 1:6 and 2:1 means angels who had access to the presence of God. Also, "the sons of God" as a term for angels is a standard Semitic expression. The passage in Jude 6, 7 suggests that the angels who left their own abode were guilty of vile sexual behavior. Notice the words "as Sodom and Gomorrah" at the beginning of verse 7, immediately after the description of the fallen angels.

The main objection to this view is that angels don't reproduce sexually, as far as we know. Matthew 22:30 is used to prove that Jesus taught that the angels don't marry. What the verse actually says, however, is that the angels in heaven neither marry nor are given in marriage. Angels appeared in human form to Abraham (Gen. 18:1-5), and it seems from the text that the two who went to Sodom had human parts and emotions.

The other view is that the sons of God were the godly descendants of Seth, and the daughters of men were the wicked posterity of Cain. The argument is as follows: The preceding context deals with the descendants of Cain (chap. 4) and the descendants of Seth (chap. 5). Genesis 6:1-4 describes the intermarriage of these two lines. The word angels is not found in the context. Verses 3 and 5 speak of the wickedness of man. If it was the angels who sinned, why was the race of man to be destroyed? Godly men are called "sons of God," though not in exactly the same Hebrew wording as in Genesis 6:2 (see Deut. 14:1; Ps. 82:6; Hos. 1:10; Matt. 5:9).

There are several problems with this view. Why were all the Sethite men godly and all the women of Cain's lineage ungodly? Also, there is no indication that Seth's line stayed godly. If they did, why should they be destroyed? Also, why should such a union between godly men and ungodly women produce giants?

6:3 The LORD warned that His Spirit would not strive with man forever, but that there would be a delay of one hundred and twenty years before the judgment of the flood would occur. God is longsuffering, not willing that any should perish, but there is a limit. Peter tells us that it was Christ who was preaching through Noah to the antediluvians by the Holy Spirit (1 Pet. 3:18-20; 2 Pet. 2:5). They rejected the message and are now imprisoned.

6:4, 5 Regarding the giants (Heb. nephilim, "fallen ones") Unger explains:The Nephilim are considered by many as giant demigods, the unnatural offspring of "the daughters of men" (mortal women) in cohabitation with "the sons of God" (angels). This utterly unnatural union, violating God's created orders of being, was such a shocking abnormality as to necessitate the worldwide judgment of the Flood.[11]

6:6, 7 The Lord's sorrow does not indicate an arbitrary change of mind, though it seems that way to man. Rather, it indicates a different attitude on God's part in response to some change in man's behavior. Because He is holy, He must react against sin.

6:8-22 Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD and was forewarned to build an ark. The measurements are given in cubits (1 cubit = 18 inches). Thus the ark was 450 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 45 feet high. It had three decks. The window in verse 16 was literally "a place of light," probably an opening for light and air which extended the full length of the ark.

Noah was saved by grace, an act of divine sovereignty. His response was to do all that God had commanded (v. 22), an act of human responsibility. Noah built the ark to save his family, but it was God who shut and sealed the door. Divine sovereignty and human responsibility are not mutually exclusive, but are complementary.

Noah (v. 9) and Enoch (5:22) are the only men in Scripture who are said to have walked with God. If Enoch is a symbol of the church raptured to heaven, Noah symbolizes the faithful Jewish remnant preserved through the Tribulation to live on the millennial earth.

Verse 18 gives the first mention of covenant in the Bible. Scofield lists eight covenants: Edenic (Gen. 2:16); Adamic (Gen. 3:15); Noahic (Gen. 9:16); Abrahamic (Gen. 12:2); Mosaic (Ex. 19:5); Palestinian (Deut. 30:3); Davidic (2 Sam. 7:16); and the New Covenant (Heb. 8:8). These eight, plus the Solomonic Covenant, are covered in the following essay. Needless to say, a subject as complex as the covenants has been interpreted differently by various schools of theology. The treatment presented here is in the premillennial and dispensational tradition.

THE MAJOR COVENANTS OF SCRIPTURE

The Edenic Covenant (Gen. 1:28-30; 2:16, 17)

The Edenic Covenant made man, in his innocence, responsible to multiply, populate the earth, and subdue it. He was given authority over all animal life. He was to cultivate the garden and eat of all its produce except the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Disobedience to this latter command would bring death.

The Adamic Covenant (Gen. 3:14-19)

After the fall of man, God cursed the serpent and predicted enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between Satan and Christ. Satan would injure Christ, but Christ would destroy Satan. Woman would experience pain in childbirth and would be under the authority of her husband. The ground was cursed. Man would have to contend with thorns and thistles in cultivating it. His work would involve sweat and weariness, and he would eventually return to dust, from which he came.

The Noahic Covenant (Gen. 8:20-9:27)

God promised Noah that He would not curse the ground again or destroy the entire earth with a flood. He gave the rainbow as a pledge of this. But the covenant also includes the establishment of human government, with the power of capital punishment. God guaranteed the regularity of time periods and seasons, directed man to repopulate the earth, and reaffirmed his dominion over lower creatures. Man could now add meat to his previous vegetarian diet. Concerning Noah's descendants, God cursed Ham's son, Canaan, to be a servant to Shem and Japheth. He gave Shem a place of favor, which we know includes being in the line of the Messiah. Japheth would enjoy great expansion, and would dwell in the tents of Shem.

The Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:1-3; 13:14-17; 15:1-8; 17:1-8)

The Abrahamic Covenant is unconditional. Only God, manifesting Himself as "a smoking oven and a burning torch," passed through the two pieces of the sacrificed animal in Genesis 15:12-21. This is quite significant. When two people made (Heb., "cut") a covenant, they would both walk together between the two pieces to show they would abide by the conditions of the covenant. God put no conditions on Abraham; hence the provisions listed below will (and have) come to pass no matter how faithful Abraham's descendants might prove.

Those who see no future for God's ancient people often try to make this covenant appear to be conditional, at least regarding the land. Then they lay claim to all the blessings for the church, leaving Israel with little or nothing.

The covenant includes the following promises to Abraham and his descendants: a great nation (Israel); personal blessings to Abraham; a name of renown; being a source of blessing to others (12:2); divine favor to his friends and a curse on his enemies; blessing to all nations—fulfilled through Christ— (12:3); everlasting possession of the land known as Canaan and later as Israel and Palestine (13:14, 15, 17); numerous posterity, natural and spiritual (13:16; 15:5); a fatherhood of many nations and kings—through Ishmael and Isaac—(17:4, 6); special relationship to God (17:7b).

The Mosaic Covenant (Ex. 19:5; 20:1-31:18)

In its broadest sense, the Mosaic Covenant includes the Ten Commandments, describing duties to God and to one's neighbor (Ex. 20:1-26); numerous regulations concerning the social life of Israel (Ex. 21:1-24:11); and detailed ordinances dealing with religious life (Ex. 24:12-31:18). It was given to the nation of Israel, not to the Gentiles. It was a conditional covenant, requiring man's obedience, and therefore it was "weak through the flesh" (Rom. 8:3a). The Decalogue was never intended to provide salvation, but rather to produce conviction of sin and failure. Nine of the Ten Commandments are repeated in the NT (the Sabbath excepted), not as law with penalty attached, but as behavior suitable for those who have been saved by grace. The Christian is under grace, not law, but he is bound to Christ by love, a higher motivation.

The Palestinian Covenant (Deut. 30:1-9)

This covenant has to do with the still-future occupation of the land which God promised to Abraham "from the river of Egypt [i.e., the Brook of Egypt, not the Nile] to the great river, the River Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). Israel has never fully occupied the land. During Solomon's reign, countries in the eastern portion paid tribute (1 Kgs. 4:21, 24), but that cannot be counted as possession or occupation.

The Palestinian Covenant foresees the dispersion of Israel among the nations because of disobedience, their return to the Lord, the Lord's Second Advent, their regathering to the land, their prosperity in the land, their change of heart (to love and obey the Lord), and the punishment of their enemies.

The Davidic Covenant (2 Sam. 7:5-19)

God promised David not only that his kingdom would endure forever, but that he would always have a lineal descendant to sit on the throne. It was an unconditional covenant, not dependent in any way on David's obedience or righteousness. Christ is the legal heir to the throne of David through Solomon, as is seen in Joseph's genealogy (Matt. 1).

He is a lineal descendant of David through Nathan, as is seen in Mary's genealogy (Luke 3). Because He lives forever, His kingdom is everlasting. His one-thousand-year reign on earth will merge into the eternal kingdom.

The Solomonic Covenant (2 Sam. 7:12-15; 1 Kgs. 8:4, 5; 2 Chron. 7:11-22)

The covenant with Solomon was unconditional as far as the everlasting kingdom was concerned, but conditional as far as Solomon's descendants sitting on the throne (1 Kgs. 8:4, 5; 2 Chron. 7:17, 18). One of Solomon's descendants, Coniah (also called Jeconiah), was barred from having any physical descendant sit on David's throne (Jer. 22:30). Jesus is not a descendant of Solomon, as pointed out above. Otherwise He would come under the curse of Coniah.

The New Covenant (Jer. 31:31-34; Heb. 8:7-12; Luke 22:20)

The New Covenant is clearly made with the house of Israel and the house of Judah (Jer. 31:31). It was future when Jeremiah wrote (Jer. 31:31a). It is not a conditional covenant, like the Mosaic Covenant, which Israel broke (Jer. 31:32). In it God unconditionally promises (note the repetition of "I will"): Israel's regeneration (Ezek. 36:25); the indwelling of the Holy Spirit (Ezek. 36:27); a heart that is favorably disposed to do the will of God (Jer. 31:33a); a unique relationship between God and His people (Jer. 31:33b); universal knowledge of the Lord in Israel (Jer. 31:34a); sins both forgiven and forgotten (Jer. 31:34b); and the continuance of the nation forever (Jer. 31:35-37).

Israel as a nation has not as yet received the benefits of the New Covenant, but will at the Lord's Second Advent. In the meantime, true believers do share some of the blessings of the covenant. The fact that the church is related to the New Covenant is seen in the Lord's Supper, where the cup represents the covenant and the blood by which it was ratified (Luke 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25). Also Paul spoke of himself and the other apostles as ministers of a New Covenant (2 Cor. 3:6).

A pair of every living creature was to be brought into the ark, as well as food. Critics claim that the ark was not big enough to hold all the species of animals and enough food for one year and seventeen days. But it is likely that the ark contained only the basic kinds of animal and bird life, and that many variations have resulted since then. The ark was more than large enough for this.

7:1 The word "come" appears for the first time in verse 1—a gracious gospel invitation: "Come into the ark of safety."

7:2-18 No reason is given why Noah was commanded to take seven pairs of clean animals into the ark, but only one pair of unclean. Perhaps it was for food and in anticipation of the clean animals' being needed for sacrifice (see 8:20). The ark was filled with its inhabitants for seven days before the rain began and the underground reserves of water gushed out. The torrent continued for forty days and forty nights; forty is the number of probation or testing in the Bible.

7:19-24 Was this a local flood, as some allege? Consider the following: All the high hills under the whole heaven were covered (v. 19). God need not have told Noah to build an ark equivalent to 1 1/2 football fields in length and 800 railroad cars in volume to escape a local flood. He could easily have moved eight people and the animals to a different location. Traditions of a universal flood have come from all parts of the world. The mountains of Ararat range up to 17,000 feet. The flood was fifteen cubits higher (vv. 19, 20). By what sort of miracle was this water kept in a localized area? In Genesis 9:15 God promised that the water would never again become a flood to destroy all flesh. There have been many local floods since then, but never a universal flood. If the flood was local, then God's promise has been broken—an impossible conclusion. Peter uses the destruction of the world by water as a symbol of a still future destruction of the earth by fire (2 Pet. 3:6).

The ark is a picture of Christ. The waters depict God's judgment. The Lord Jesus went under the waters of divine wrath at Calvary. Those who are in Christ are saved. Those who are outside are doomed (see 1 Pet. 3:21).

8:1-19 The chronology of the flood is as follows:

1. 7 days—from the time Noah entered the ark until the flood began (7:10).
2. 40 days and nights—duration of the rain (7:12).
3. 150 days—from the time the rain began until the waters decreased (8:3) and the ark rested on Mount Ararat (compare 7:11 and 8:4).
4. 224 days—from the beginning of the flood until the mountaintops reappeared (compare 7:11 and 8:5).
5. 40 days—from the time the mountaintops were seen until Noah sent out a raven (8:7).
6. 7 days—from the sending of the raven to the first sending forth of a dove (8:6-10; v. 10, "yet another seven days").
7. 7 more days—until the dove was sent forth a second time (8:10).
8. 7 more days—until the final sending forth of the dove.
9. 314 days—from the beginning of the flood until Noah removed the covering from the ark (compare 7:11 and 8:13).
10. 371 days—from the beginning of the flood until the earth was dried (compare 7:11 and 8:14). At this time, Noah was commanded to go out of the ark (v. 16)

The unclean raven (v. 7) and the clean dove (v. 8) are good illustrations of the believer's old and new natures. The old nature loves to feed on garbage and carrion whereas the new nature cannot find satisfaction in a scene of death and judgment. It finds no rest until it sets its feet on resurrection ground.

8:20-22 Noah responded to God's saving grace by building an altar. Those of us who have been saved from the wrath to come should likewise bring to God our heartfelt worship. It is as acceptable and pleasing today as it was in Noah's day. The LORD made a covenant that He would never again curse the ground or destroy every living thing, as He had done; also, He would provide regular seasons as long as the earth endured.

In 6:5 and here in verse 21, God speaks of the intense evil of man's heart. In the first instance, there was no sacrifice, and judgment ensued. Here there is a sacrifice; and God acts in mercy.

F. Noah after the Flood (Chap. 9)

9:1-7 Verse 3 suggests that after the Flood people were permitted to eat meat for the first time. Eating of blood was forbidden, however, because the blood is the life of the flesh, and the life belongs to God.

The institution of capital punishment presupposes the establishment of governmental authority. It would be chaos if anyone and everyone avenged a murder. Only duly appointed governments may do so. The NT perpetuates capital punishment when it says concerning the government," ... he does not bear the sword in vain" (Rom. 13:4).

9:8-17 The rainbow was given as a pledge that God would never again destroy the earth with a flood.

9:18-23 In spite of God's grace to Noah, he sinned by becoming drunk and then lying naked in his tent. When Ham saw him and reported the matter to his brothers, they covered their father's shame without looking on his naked body.

9:24, 25 When he awoke, Noah pronounced a curse on Canaan. The question arises, "Why did the curse fall on Canaan instead of Ham?" One possible explanation is that the evil tendency which was manifested in Ham was even more pronounced in Canaan. The curse was thus a prophecy of his immoral conduct and its fitting punishment. Another explanation is that Canaan himself committed some vulgar act against his grandfather, and that Noah later became aware of it. Noah knew what his younger son had done to him. It may be that verse 24 refers to Canaan as Noah's youngest grandson, rather than to Ham as his younger son. In the Bible, "son" often means "grandson" or other descendant. In this event, Canaan was not cursed for his father's sin, but for his own. Yet another possibility is that God's grace allowed Noah to curse only a small segment of Ham's descendants and not a possible third of the human race.

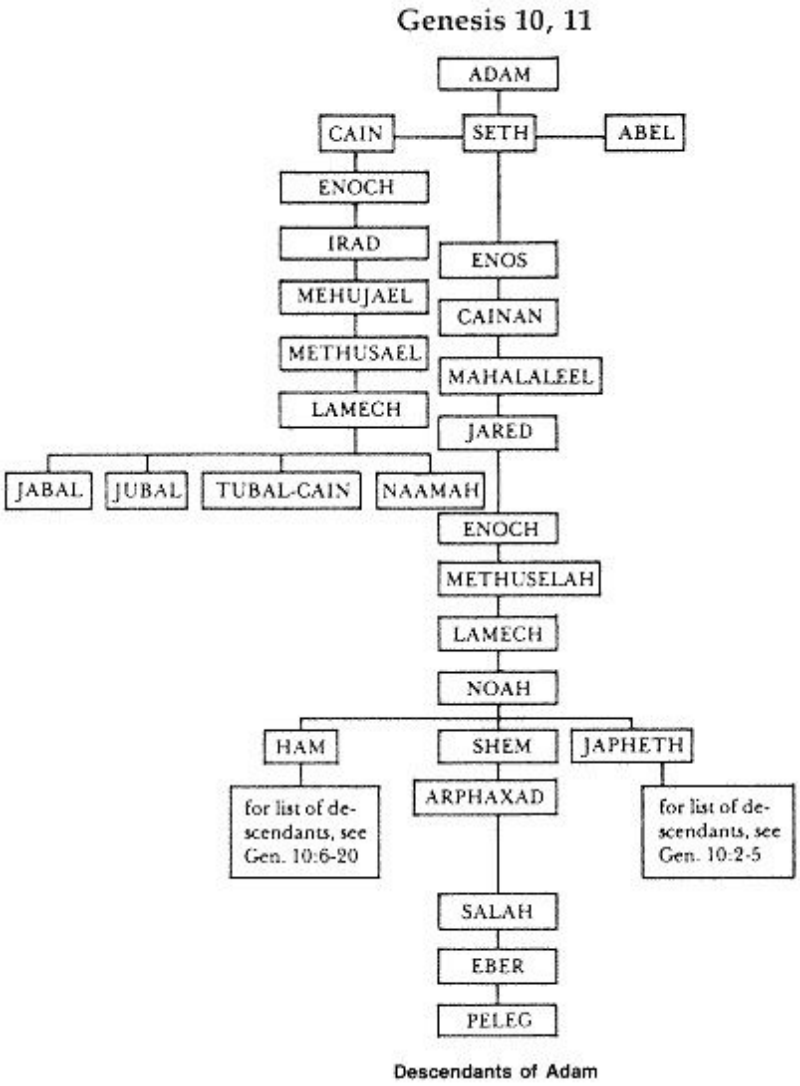
9:26-29 Canaan was cursed to serve Shem and Japheth. The Canaanites' servitude to the Israelites may be seen in Joshua 9:23 and Judges 1:28. This passage has been used to suggest the slavery of the black people, but there is absolutely no support for this view. Canaan was the ancestor of the Canaanites, who dwelt in the Holy Land before Israel arrived. There is no evidence that they were black people. Shem and Japheth were blessed with dominion. Verse 27 may suggest Japheth's sharing in spiritual blessings through Shem's descendants, the Israelites.

There is a dispute as to whether Shem or Japheth was the oldest son of Noah. Chapter 10:21 may read "Shem the brother of Japheth the elder" or "Shem ... the older brother of Japheth" (NKJV marg.) The latter is the preferred reading. Shem appears first in the genealogies of Genesis 5:32 and 1 Chronicles 1:4.



Descendants of Adam

G. The Table of Nations (Chap. 10)

10:1-32 Shem, Ham, and Japheth became the fathers of the nations.

Shem: The Semitic peoples—Jews, Arabs, Babylonians, Assyrians, Arameans, Phoenicians.

Ham: The Hamitic peoples—Ethiopians, Egyptians, Canaanites, Philistines, possibly the African and Oriental peoples, though many scholars view the Orientals as Japhetic.

Japheth: The Japhetic peoples—the Medes, Greeks, Cypriots, etc. Probably the Caucasian people of Europe and of northern Asia. Many scholars would also include the Orientals here.

The order in this chapter is the sons of Japheth (vv. 2-5), the sons of Ham (vv. 6-20), and the sons of Shem (vv. 21-31). The Spirit of God is going to center on Shem and his descendants during the rest of the OT. The different languages of verse 5 probably look forward to the time after the tower of Babel (11:1-9).

Notice three references in this chapter to the division of the people. Verse 5 describes the division of the Japhetic tribes into their different areas. Verse 25 tells us that the division of the earth (at Babel) took place in the days of Peleg. Verse 32 serves as an introduction to the Tower of Babel in chapter 11, when the families of the sons of Noah were divided into different nations with different languages.

Nimrod (vv. 8-10) means rebel. He appears as the first "mighty one on the earth" after the flood (v. 8) and as the first to establish a kingdom (v. 10). He built Babel (Babylon) in rebellion against God, and also Nineveh in Assyria (see v. 11), another inveterate enemy of God's people.

As already mentioned, verse 21 lists Shem as the older brother of Japheth.

It is impossible to identify with certainty the places where the various people settled, but the following will prove helpful in later studies.

Kittim (v. 4) • —Cyprus

Cush (v. 6) • —Ethiopia

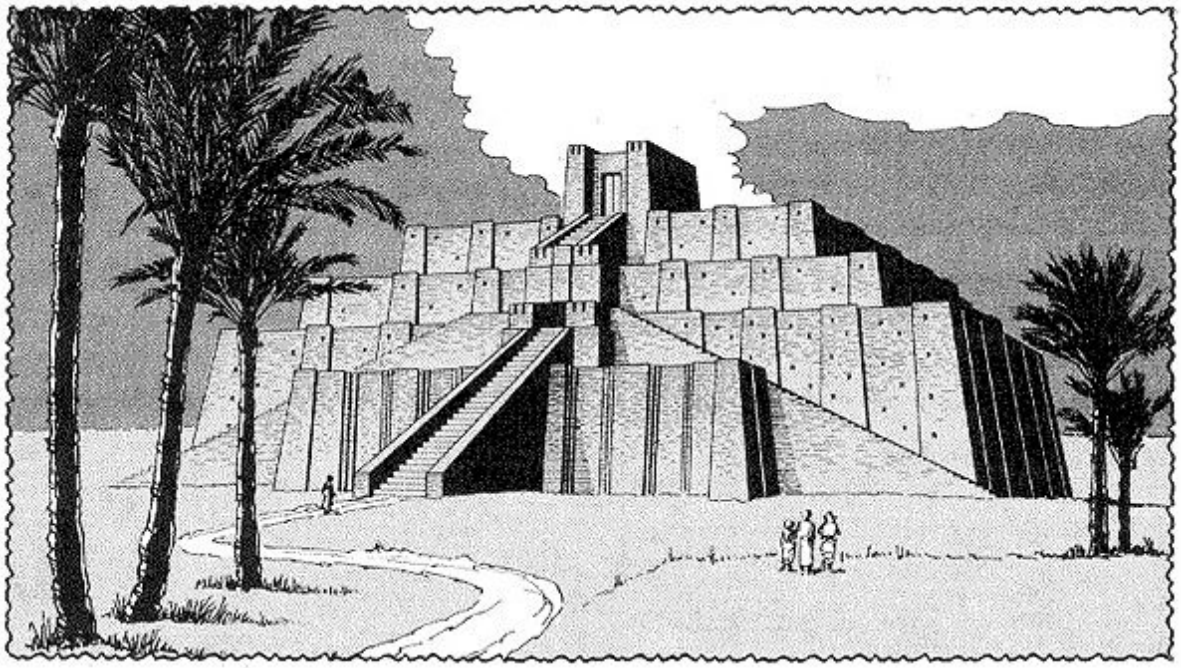
H. The Tower of Babel (Chap. 11)

11:1-4 In chapter 10, which chronologically comes after chapter 11, mankind was divided according to languages (vv. 5, 20, 31). Now we learn the cause of the divisions. Instead of dispersing over the earth, as God, intended, men built a city and a tower in Shinar (Babylon). They said to one another, "Come, let us build ourselves a city, and a tower whose top is in the heavens; let us make us a name for ourselves, lest we be scattered abroad over the face of the whole earth." So it was a policy of pride (to make a name for themselves) and defiance (to avoid being scattered). To us the tower may also picture fallen man's ceaseless effort to reach heaven by his own works instead of receiving salvation as a free gift of grace.



The Tower of Babel may have been similiar to ziggurats built by the Babylonians as places of worship of their chief god Marduk 11:5-9 The LORD judged the people by confounding their language. This was the beginning of the many different languages which we have in the world today. Pentecost (Acts 2:1-11) was the reverse of Babel in the sense that every man heard the wonderful works of God in his own language. Babel means confusion, the inevitable result of any union that leaves God out or is not according to God.

11:10-25 These verses trace the line of Shem to Abram. Thus the historical record narrows from the human race to one branch of that race (the Semites) and then to one man (Abram), who becomes the head of the Hebrew nation. The rest of the OT is largely a history of this nation.

11:26-32 Abram was a mighty man of faith and one of the most important men in history. Three world religions—Judaism, Christianity, and Islam—venerate him. He is mentioned in sixteen books of the OT and eleven books of the NT. His name means "exalted father" or, as changed to Abraham, "father of a multitude."

There is a mathematical problem in this passage. Derek Kidner explains:Terah's age at death presents a difficulty, since it makes his eldest son 135 years old (26), whereas Abram was only 75 (12:4, with Acts 7:4). One solution is to suppose Abram to have been the youngest son, born sixty years after the eldest but placed first in the list in 11:26, 27 because of his prominence (like Ephraim before Manasseh). Another is to follow the Samaritan text, which gives Terah's age as 145 at death. This seems preferable, if only because Abram would scarcely have made the exclamation of 17:17 had his own father begotten him at 130.[12]

Ur of the Chaldeans (v. 31), in Mesopotamia, was a center of pagan idolatry. Terah and his family traveled northwest to Haran, en route to the land of Canaan.

II. THE PATRIARCHS OF ISRAEL (CHAPS. 12-50)

A. Abraham (12:1-25:18)

1. The Call of Abraham (12:1-9)

12:1-3 The call of the LORD had come to Abram when he was still in Ur (compare v. 1 with Acts 7:1,2). Abram was called to leave his country, his family, and his father's house, and to embark on a life of pilgrimage (Heb. 11:9). God made a marvelous covenant with him which included the following significant promises: a land—that is, the land of Canaan; a great nation— namely, the Jewish people; material and spiritual prosperity for Abram and his seed; a great name for Abram and his posterity; they would be a channel of blessing to others; friends of Israel would be blessed and anti-Semites would be cursed; all the families of the earth would be blessed in Abram, pointing forward to the Lord Jesus Christ, who would be a descendant of Abram. This covenant was renewed and enlarged in 13:14-17; 15:4-6; 17:10-14; and 22:15-18.

12:4-9 After what have been called "the wasted years in Haran," that is, years without progress, Abram moved to Canaan with his wife Sarai, his nephew Lot, other relatives, and possessions. They came first to Shechem, where Abram built an altar to the LORD. The presence of hostile Canaanites was no obstacle to a man who was walking by faith. Abram next relocated between Bethel (house of God) and Ai. True to form, he not only pitched a tent for himself but also built an altar to the LORD. This says a great deal about the priorities of this man of God. Verse 9 finds Abram moving toward the South (the Negev).

2. To Egypt and Back (12:10-13:4)

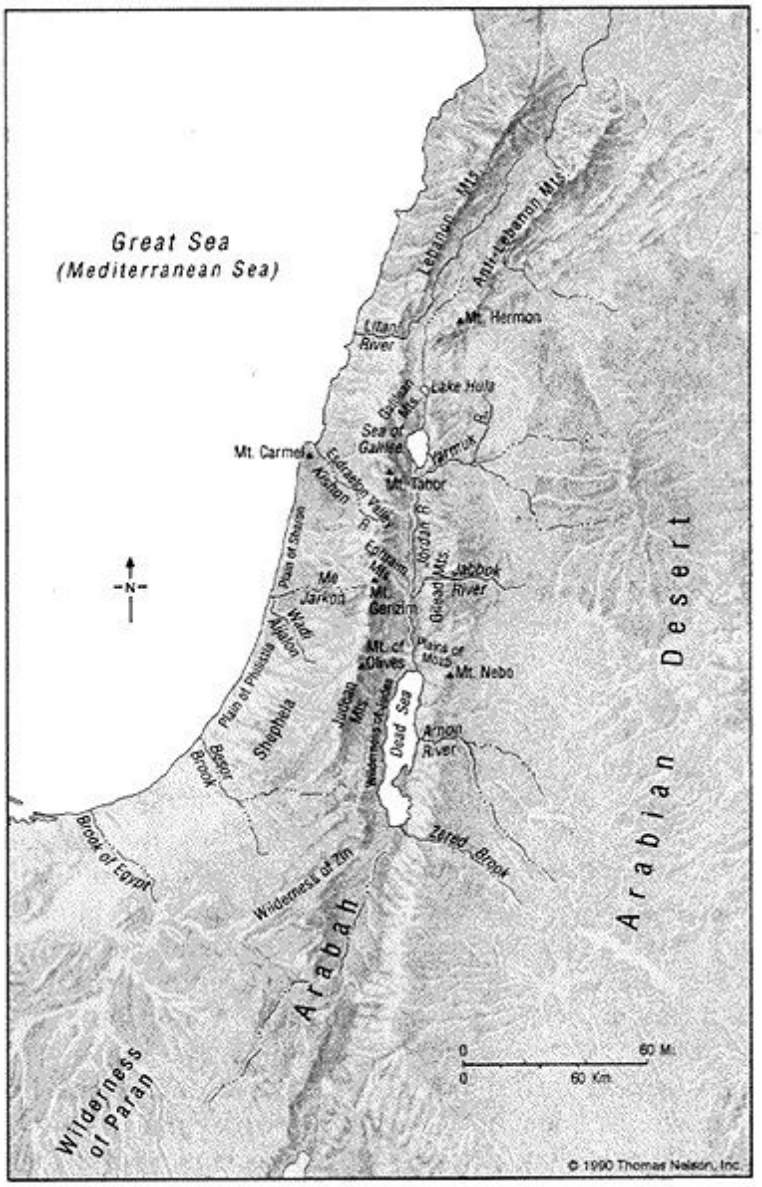
12:10-20 Faith, however, has its lapses. During a time of serious famine, Abram left the place of God's choosing and fled to Egypt, a symbol of the world. This move bred trouble. Abram became obsessed with the fear that the Pharaoh might kill him in order to seize his beautiful wife Sarai for his harem. So Abram prevailed on Sarai to lie by saying that she was his sister. Actually she was his half-sister (20:12), but it was still a lie, with deception as its motive. The ruse worked for Abram (he was rewarded handsomely) but it worked against Sarai (she had to join the Pharaoh's harem). And it worked against the Pharaoh (he and his household contracted plagues). The latter acted more righteously than Abram when he learned of the deception. After rebuking Abram, he sent him back to Canaan.

This incident reminds us that we should not wage a spiritual warfare with carnal weapons, that the end does not justify the means, and that we can't sin and get away with it.

God did not forsake Abram, but He did allow the sin to work itself out. Abram was publicly humbled by the Pharaoh and deported in disgrace.

The word "Pharaoh" was not a proper name but a title, such as king, emperor, president, etc.

13:1-4 Underlying Abram's return to Bethel ... from Egypt was a return to fellowship with God. "Back to Bethel" is the rallying cry for all who have wandered from the Lord.



3. Experiences with Lot and Abimelech (13:5-14:24)

13:5-13 The herdsmen of Lot and Abram quarreled over pastureland for their flocks. In true courtesy, kindness, and unselfishness, Abram offered Lot his choice of all the land. In lowliness of mind, he esteemed others better than himself (Phil. 2:3). Lot chose the lush pastures of the Jordan Valley, adjacent to the sin-cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Though a true believer (2 Pet. 2:7, 8), Lot was a world-borderer. As someone has said, "he got grass for his cattle while Abram got grace for his children" (vv. 15, 16).

The fact that the men of Sodom were exceedingly wicked and sinful against the LORD didn't restrain Lot in his choice. Notice the steps in his plunge into worldliness: He (his men) experienced strife (v. 7); he saw (v. 10); he chose (v. 11); he pitched his tent toward (v. 12); he resided away from the place where God's priest was (14:12); he sat in the gate, the place of political power (19:1). He became a local official in Sodom.

13:14-18 Abram renounced the choicest pastureland, but God gave all the land of Canaan to him and to his descendants forever. In addition, the Lord promised him an innumerable posterity. After settling in Hebron, Abram ... built his third altar ... to the LORD—always an altar for God, but never a house for himself!

Notice that God instructed Abram to walk throughout the land and see his possession. So we are to appropriate God's promises by faith.

14:1-12 Thirteen years before the main events of this chapter, Chedorlaomer, king of Elam (Persia), had conquered various kings in the plains adjacent to the Dead (Salt) Sea. In the thirteenth year, the five captive kings rebelled against Chedorlaomer. So he allied himself with three other kings from the region of Babylon, marched south along the eastern side of the Dead Sea, then north on the western side to Sodom, Gomorrah, and the other cities of the plain. The battle took place in the Valley of Siddim, which was full of asphalt pits. The invaders defeated the rebels and marched north with their booty and captives—including Lot, Abram's backslidden nephew.

14:13-16 When Abram received the news, he assembled a fighting force of three hundred and eighteen trained men and pursued the victors to Dan, in the north. He finally defeated them near Damascus, in Syria, and rescued Lot and all the spoils. Backsliders bring not only misery on themselves but trouble on others. Here Abram delivered Lot by the sword. Later he delivers him through intercessory prayer (chaps. 18, 19).

14:17, 18 As Abram was returning home, the king of Sodom went out to meet him, just as Satan often tempts the believer after a great spiritual victory. But Melchizedek, king of Salem and priest of God Most High, was on hand with bread and wine to strengthen Abram. We cannot read this first mention of bread and wine without thinking of these symbols of our Savior's passion. When we consider the price He paid to save us from sin, we are strengthened to resist every sinful temptation.

Names in Scripture have meanings. Melchizedek means king of righteousness and Salem (short for Jerusalem) means peace. So he was king of righteousness and king of peace. He is a symbol of Christ, true King of righteousness and peace, and our Great High Priest. When it says in Hebrews 7:3 that Melchizedek was "without father, without mother, without genealogy, having neither beginning of days nor end of life," this is to be understood only in connection with his priesthood. Most priests inherited their office and served for a limited tenure. But the priesthood of Melchizedek was unique in that, as far as the record is concerned, it wasn't passed on to him from his parents, and it did not have a beginning or an end. Christ's priesthood is "according to the order of Melchizedek" (Ps. 110:4; Heb. 7:17).

14:19, 20 Melchizedek blessed Abram, and Abram in turn gave to this priest of God a tithe of all his captured prizes. In Hebrews 7 we learn that there was a deep spiritual significance to these actions. Because Abram was the progenitor of Aaron, he is seen as representing the Aaronic priesthood. The fact that Melchizedek blessed Abram means that Melchizedek's priesthood is greater than Aaron's, because the one who blesses is superior to the one who is blessed. The fact that Abram paid tithes to Melchizedek is seen as a picture of the Aaronic priesthood acknowledging the superiority of Melchizedek's priesthood, because the lesser pays tithes to the greater.

14:21-24 The king of Sodom said, in effect, "Give me the persons; you take the material things." So Satan still tempts us to be occupied with toys of dust while people around us are perishing. Abram replied that he wouldn't take anything from a thread to a sandal strap.

4. Abraham's Promised Heir (Chap. 15)

15:1 The first verse is closely linked with the last part of chapter 14. Because the patriarch refused the rewards of the king of Sodom, Jehovah said to him, "Do not be afraid, Abram. I am your shield, your exceedingly great reward," thus making Abram both protected and fabulously wealthy.

15:2-6 Being childless, Abram feared that their servant, Eliezer of Damascus, would be their heir, since that was the law at that time. But God promised him a son and descendants as numerous as the stars. Humanly speaking this was impossible, since Sarai had passed the time when she could bear a child. But Abram believed God's promise, and God declared him to be righteous. The truth of justification by faith enunciated here is repeated in Romans 4:3, Galatians 3:6, and James 2:23. In 13:16 God had promised descendants as numerous as the dust, and here in 15:5 as numerous as the stars. The dust pictures Abram's natural posterity—those who are Jews by birth. The stars depict his spiritual seed—those who are justified by faith (see Gal. 3:7).

15:7-21 To confirm the promise of a seed (vv. 1-6) and of a land (vv. 7, 8, 18-21), God acted out a strange and significant symbolism (vv. 9-21). David Baron explains:According to the ancient Eastern manner of making a covenant, both the contracting parties passed through the divided pieces of the slain animals, thus symbolically attesting that they pledged their very lives to the fulfillment of the engagement they made (see Jer. 34:18,19). Now in Genesis 15, God alone, whose presence was symbolized by the smoking furnace and lamp of fire, passed through the midst of the pieces of the slain animals, while Abram was simply a spectator of this wonderful exhibition of God's free grace.[13]This signified that it was an unconditional covenant, dependent for fulfillment on God alone.

According to another view of this passage, the sacrificial pieces represent the nation of Israel. The vultures speak of the Gentile nations. The land that is not theirs, of course, is Egypt. Israel would be delivered from Egyptian bondage and return to Canaan in the fourth generation. The smoking oven and the burning torch describe the national destiny of Israel—suffering and witness-bearing.

Israel's deliverance would not come until the iniquity of the Amorites was complete. These pagan inhabitants of Canaan must eventually be exterminated. But God often allows evil to run its course, sometimes to the seeming detriment of His people, before He judges it. He is longsuffering, not willing that any should perish—even the depraved Amorites (2 Pet. 3:9). He also allows evil to come to fruition so that the awful consequences of wickedness can be clear to all. Thus His wrath is demonstrated to be completely righteous.

Verses 13 and 14 pose a chronological problem. They predict that Abram's people would be in harsh servitude in a foreign land for 400 years, and that they would leave at the end of that time, carrying great wealth with them. In Acts 7:6 this figure of 400 years is repeated.

In Exodus 12:40, 41 we read that the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, were sojourners for 430 years, to the very day.

Then in Galatians 3:17 Paul says that the period from the confirming of the Abrahamic Covenant until the giving of the Law was 430 years.

How can these figures be reconciled?

The 400 years mentioned in Genesis 15:13, 14 and in Acts 7:6 refer to the time of Israel's harsh affliction in Egypt. Jacob and his family were not in bondage when they first came to Egypt. On the contrary, they were treated quite royally.

The 430 years in Exodus 12:40, 41 refer to the total time the people of Israel spent in Egypt—to the very day. This is an exact figure.

The 430 years in Galatians 3:17 cover approximately the same period as Exodus 12:40, 41. They are reckoned from the time that God confirmed the Abrahamic Covenant to Jacob, just as Jacob was preparing to enter Egypt (Gen. 46:14), and they extend to the giving of the Law, about three months after the Exodus.

The four generations of Genesis 15:16 can be seen in Exodus 6:16-20: Levi, Kohath, Amram, Moses. Israel has not yet occupied the land promised in verses 18-21. Solomon had dominion over it (1 Kgs. 4:21, 24), as over vassal states, but his people did not occupy it. The covenant will be fulfilled when Christ returns to reign. Nothing can stop its fulfillment. What God has promised is as sure as if it had already occurred!

The river of Egypt (v. 18) is generally believed to be a small stream south of Gaza now known as Wadi el Arish, and not the Nile.

5. Ishmael, Son of the Flesh (Chaps. 16, 17)

16:1-6 The restlessness of the sin nature is seen here. Instead of waiting on God, Sarai persuaded Abram to obtain a child by her maid, Hagar, who was probably acquired during the ill-fated sojourn in Egypt. God is faithful in recording the marital irregularities of His people, even if He never approved them. When Hagar became pregnant, she looked down in disdain on her mistress. Sarai responded by blaming Abram, then driving Hagar out of the house. This illustrates the conflict between law and grace. They cannot cohabit (Gal. 4:21-31). While some of the behavior in this section may have been culturally acceptable then, it is certainly irregular from a Christian standpoint.

16:7-15 While Hagar was in the desert at Shur, on the way to Egypt, the Angel of the LORD came to her. This was the Lord Jesus in one of His preincarnate appearances, known as a Christophany. (See Judges 6 for an essay on the Angel of the LORD.) He counseled her to return and submit to Sarai, and promised that her son would become head of a great nation. That promise, of course, is fulfilled in the Arab people. The words "Return ... and submit" have marked great turning points in the lives of many who have had dealings with God.

Hagar's exclamation in verse 13 might be paraphrased, "You are a God who may be seen," for she said, "Have I also here seen Him who sees me?" She named the well "Beer Lahai Roi" (literally, well of the One who lives and sees me).[14]

16:16 Abram was eighty-six when Ishmael was born to Hagar. The name Ishmael means God hears. In this case He heard Hagar's misery. We should remember throughout this narrative that Hagar represents law whereas Sarai represents grace (see Gal. 4).

17:1-14 God's words to Abram in verse 1 may have been a veiled way of saying that he should stop trying to work things out in his own strength and let Almighty God work for him. Immediately afterward God renewed His covenant and changed the patriarch's name from Abram (exalted father) to Abraham (father of a multitude). Circumcision was then instituted as a sign of the covenant. This surgical operation, performed on the male child, was a physical sign that the person belonged to God's chosen earthly people. Although it was already practiced in the Middle East at this time, it took on new meaning for Abraham and his family. Every male in Abraham's house was circumcised, and thereafter every male baby was to be circumcised when he was eight days old or else be cut off from his people—that is, put away from the congregation of Israel (vv. 9-14). The expression "cut off" sometimes means to put to death, as in Exodus 31:14,15. In other places, as here, it seems to mean to ban or ostracize.

The Apostle Paul is careful to point out that Abraham was justified (15:6) before he was circumcised. His circumcision was "a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had while still uncircumcised" (Rom. 4:11). Believers today are not sealed with a physical mark; they receive the Holy Spirit as a seal at the time of their conversion (Eph. 4:30).

THE SIGN OF CIRCUMCISION

Circumcision was adopted by God as a physical sign of the covenant between Him and His people (Gen. 17:10-14). Thus all descendants of Abraham became known as "the circumcision" (Acts 10:45) and Gentiles were called the "uncircumcision" (Eph. 2:11). It is also the sign and seal of the righteousness which Abraham had by faith (Rom. 4:5).

But then the words "circumcision" and "circumcised" took on a variety of meanings. "Uncircumcised lips" (Ex. 6:12) signified a lack of skill in public speaking. "Uncircumcised ears" and "uncircumcised hearts" spoke of failure to hear, love, and obey the Lord (Lev. 26:41; Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Jer. 6:10; Acts 7:51). "Uncircumcised in flesh" (Ezek. 44:7) meant unclean.

In the NT, "the circumcision of Christ" (Col. 2:11) refers to His death on the cross. Believers are circumcised through their identification with Christ; Paul speaks of it as "the circumcision made without hands, by putting off the body of the sins of the flesh" (Col. 2:11). This circumcision speaks of death to the fleshly nature. It is true positionally of every believer, but should be followed by a practical mortifying of the sinful deeds of the flesh (Col. 3:5). The apostle speaks of believers as the true circumcision (Phil. 3:3), in contrast to a party of Jewish legalists known as "the circumcision" (Gal. 2:12).

In addition to their symbolism, some of God's kindly laws were designed to save His people from the diseases of the Gentiles. Many medical authorities today believe that circumcision tends to prevent certain forms of cancer in both the man and his wife.

17:15-17 God changed Sarai's name to Sarah (princess) and promised Abraham that his ninety-year-old wife would have a son. The patriarch laughed, but in joyful wonder, not in unbelief. His faith did not waver (Rom. 4:18-21).

17:18-27 When Abraham pled that Ishmael might have favor before God, he was told that the covenant would be fulfilled through his son, Isaac. However, Ishmael would be fruitful, would multiply, and would become a great nation. Isaac was a symbol of Christ, through whom the covenant receives its ultimate fulfillment.

Notice the promptness of Abraham's obedience: That very same day Abraham was circumcised, and his son Ishmael.

6. Sodom and Gomorrah (Chaps. 18, 19)

18:1-15 Shortly after the events of chapter 17, three men appeared to Abraham. Actually two of them were angels and the other was the LORD Himself. With typical Middle Eastern hospitality, Abraham and Sarah entertained the angels unawares (Heb. 13:2) and One who was greater than angels. When Sarah overheard the Lord say that she would have a child within a year, her laughter betrayed her unbelief. She was rebuked with the searching question, "Is anything too hard for the LORD?" But the promise was repeated in spite of her doubting (vv. 9-15). Hebrews 11:11 indicates that Sarah was basically a woman of faith in spite of this momentary lapse.

18:16-33 After the LORD revealed to Abraham that He was going to destroy Sodom, and while the two angels were walking toward that city, Abraham's great intercessory countdown began—fifty ... forty-five ... forty ... thirty ... twenty ... ten. Even for ten righteous people the Lord would not destroy Sodom! Abraham's prayer is a wonderful example of effectual intercession. It was based on the righteous character of the Judge of all the earth (v. 25) and evidenced that boldness, yet deep humility which only an intimate knowledge of God can give. Only when Abraham stopped pleading did the Lord close the matter and depart (v. 33). There are many mysteries in life for which the truth of verse 25 is the only satisfying answer.

Don't miss the tribute God paid to Abraham as an outstanding family man (v. 19). Something worth coveting!

19:1-11 The name of Sodom has become synonymous with the sin of homosexuality or sodomy. But sexual perversion was not the only cause of the city's fall. In Ezekiel 16:49,50, the Lord describes the sin of Sodom as "pride, fullness of food, and abundance of idleness."

Lot received the two angels and insisted that they spend the night in his home, knowing all too well the danger that would face them otherwise. Even then the men of Sodom sought to commit homosexual rape against these heavenly visitors. In a desperate effort to save his guests, Lot shamelessly offered his two daughters. Only a miracle saved the day; the angels struck the Sodomites with a temporary, confusing blindness.

HOMOSEXUALITY

Both in the OT (Gen. 19:1-26; Lev. 18:22; 20:13) and in the NT (Rom. 1:18-32; 1 Cor. 6:9; 1 Tim. 1:10), God condemns the sin of homosexuality. He showed His wrath against it by destroying the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Under the law of Moses, sodomy was punishable by death. No practicing homosexual will inherit the kingdom of God.

So-called "gays" pay a high price for their immoral lifestyle. Paul says that they receive in themselves "the penalty of their error which was due" (Rom. 1:27b). This includes venereal diseases, pneumocystis, Kaposi's sarcoma (a form of cancer) and AIDS. It also includes haunting guilt, mental and emotional disturbances, and abnormal personality changes.

Like all other sinners, a homosexual or lesbian can be saved if he or she repents of sin and receives the Lord Jesus Christ as personal Savior. God loves the gay person and the lesbian even if He hates their sin.

There is a difference between being a practicing homosexual and having a homosexual tendency. It is the practice that the Bible condemns, not the orientation. There are many who have an attraction to their own sex but refuse to give in to it. By the power of the Spirit, they have disciplined themselves to resist the temptation and to live in purity. Many Christian persons of homosexual orientation

> ... have regarded their condition with sorrow and contrition, but, unable to change, have drawn on the Spirit for the power of forbearance and chastity, which is sanctification indeed ... . In commitment to Christ, [they] have offered an enduring inner blemish for God's use that divine power may be perfected in human weakness.[15]

Some blame God that they were born with this tendency, but the fault does not lie with God but with human sinfulness. Every fallen child of Adam has evil tendencies. Some have a weakness in one area, some in another. The sin is not in being tempted, but in yielding to the temptation.

There is deliverance from homosexuality or lesbianism, as there is from any form of lust. However, ongoing godly counseling assistance is very important in nearly every case.

Christians should accept gays and lesbians as persons without approving their lifestyle. Because they are people for whom Christ died, believers should seek in every possible way to win them to a life of "holiness, without which no one will see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14).

19:12-29 The angels insisted that Lot and his family leave the city. But when he tried to persuade his sons-in-law (or perhaps prospective sons-in-law—see RSV), they thought he was joking. His backslidden life nullified his testimony when the crisis came. When the morning dawned, the angels escorted Lot, his wife, and daughters out of Sodom. Even then Lot temporized, preferring to stay in Zoar, one of the satellite sin cities. Not even ten righteous men were found in the city of Sodom, so God destroyed it. But Abraham's prayer was not unanswered, for God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow.

Though Lot's wife left the city, her heart was still in it, and she fell under the judgment of God. In the words "Remember Lot's wife" (Luke 17:32), Christ held her up as a warning to all who trifle with His offer of salvation.

19:30-38 Leaving Zoar, Lot fled to a mountain cave. There his daughters made him drunk and enticed him to commit incest with them. The older daughter subsequently bore a son named Moab, and the younger ... bore a son, Ben-Ammi. Thus began the Moabites and Ammonites, who became recurring thorns in Israel's side. It was Moabite women who later seduced the men of Israel to commit immorality (Num. 25:1-3) and Ammonites who taught Israel the worship of Molech, including the sacrifice of children (1 Kgs. 11:33; Jer. 32:35).

We know from 2 Peter 2:7, 8 that Lot was a just man, but because of his worldliness he lost his testimony (v. 14), his wife (v. 26), his sons-in-law, his friends, his communion (there was none in Sodom), his property (he went in rich but came out poor), his character (v. 35), his life's work, and nearly his life (v. 22). The depraved behavior of his daughters shows that they had been influenced by Sodom's vile standards. There is no escape (Heb. 2:3).

7. Abraham and Abimelech (Chap. 20)

20:1-18 It seems incredible to us that Abraham would again try to pass off Sarah as his sister within twenty years of the same blunder with Pharaoh—incredible, that is, until we remember our own perpetual proneness to sin! The incident with Abimelech in Gerar is almost a replay of Abraham's duplicity in Egypt (12:10-17). God intervened to work out His purposes in the birth of Isaac, which might otherwise have been frustrated. He threatened

Abimelech with death. He is more than just a spectator on the sidelines of history. He can overrule the evil of His people, even through the lives of the unregenerate. The pagan Abimelech acted more righteously in this incident than Abraham, the "friend of God." (Abimelech is a title, and not a proper name.) It is shameful when a believer has to be justly rebuked by a man of the world! When a half-truth is presented as the whole truth, it is an untruth. Abraham even tried to shift some of the blame onto God for making him wander in the first place. He would have been wiser to humbly acknowledge his guilt. Nevertheless, he was still God's man. And so the Lord sent Abimelech to him so that Abraham would pray that his household be healed of its barrenness.

The expression "this vindicates you" (v. 16) is literally "it is a covering of the eyes," meaning a gift given for the purpose of appeasing. Thus it might read, "It is given to you as a payment in satisfaction as evidence to all who are with you and to all men that the wrong has been righted."

8. Isaac, Son of the Promise (Chap. 21)

21:1-10 When the promised son was born to Abraham and Sarah, the ecstatic parents named him Isaac ("laughter"), as commanded by God (17:19, 21). This expressed their own delight and the delight of all who would hear the news. Isaac was probably from two to five years old when he was weaned. Ishmael would have been between thirteen and seventeen. When Sarah saw Ishmael mocking Isaac at the weaning party, she ordered Abraham to cast out Hagar and her son. Paul interprets this action as evidence that law persecutes grace, that law and grace cannot be mixed, and that spiritual blessings cannot be obtained on the legal principle (Gal. 4:29).

21:11-13 Abraham was grieved to lose Hagar and Ishmael, but God consoled him with the promise that Ishmael would become the father of a great nation. And yet the Lord made it clear that Isaac was the promised son through whom the covenant would be carried out.

21:14-21 When Hagar and the boy almost perished from thirst in the desert south of Canaan, God caused them to find a well, and they were spared. Ishmael was in his teens at this time; therefore, verse 15 probably means that Hagar pushed him under one of the shrubs in his weakness. Ishmael's name, "God hears," is found twice in verse 17—"God heard" and

"God has heard." Children and young people should be encouraged to pray. God hears and answers!

21:22-34 The Abimelech in verse 22 is not necessarily the same one as in chapter 20. This chieftain's servants had taken a well of water from Abraham's men. When Abimelech and Abraham made a treaty of friendship, the patriarch told Abimelech about the well that had been seized. The result was a covenant granting the well to Abraham. He promptly named it Beersheba ("well of the oath"). The place later became a city, marking the southernmost boundary of the land. Abraham planted a tamarisk tree as a memorial.

9. The Offering of Isaac (Chap. 22)

22:1-10 Perhaps no scene in the Bible except Calvary itself is more poignant than this one, and none gives a clearer foreshadowing of the death of God's only, well-beloved Son on the cross. The supreme test of Abraham's faith came when God ordered him to offer up Isaac as a burnt offering in the land of Moriah. Actually God had no intention of allowing Abraham to go through with it; He has always been opposed to human sacrifice. Moriah is the mountain range where Jerusalem is situated (2 Chron. 3:1) and also where Calvary stood. God's words, "your only son Isaac, whom you love," must have pierced Abraham's heart like ever-deepening wounds. Isaac was Abraham's only son in the sense that he was the only son of promise—the unique son, the son of miraculous birth.

The first occurrence of a word in the Bible often sets the pattern for its usage throughout Scripture. Love (v. 2) and "worship" (v. 5) are first found here. Abraham's love for his son is a faint picture of God's love for the Lord Jesus. The sacrifice of Isaac was a picture of the greatest act of worship—the Savior's self-sacrifice to accomplish the will of God.

22:11, 12 "Abraham, Abraham" is the first of ten name duplications found in the Bible. Seven are spoken by God to man (Gen. 22:11; 46:2; Ex. 3:4; 1 Sam. 3:10; Luke 10:41; 22:31; Acts 9:4). The other three are Matthew 7:21,22; 23:37; Mark 15:34. They introduce matters of special importance. The Angel of the LORD (v. 11) was God (v. 12).

22:13-15 To offer Isaac was surely the supreme test of Abraham's faith. God had promised to give Abraham a numberless posterity through his son. Isaac could have been as much as twenty-five at this time, and he was unmarried. If Abraham slew him, how could the promise be fulfilled? According to Hebrews 11:19, Abraham believed that even if he slew his son, God would raise him from the dead. This faith was remarkable because there was no recorded case of resurrection up to this time in the world's history. Notice his faith also in 22:5: "the lad and I will go yonder and worship, and we will come back to you." Abraham was first justified by faith (15:6), then justified (vindicated) by works here (see James 2:21). His faith was the means of his salvation, while his works were the proof of the reality of his faith. When Isaac asked, "Where is the lamb?", his father replied, "God will provide for Himself the lamb." This promise was not ultimately fulfilled by the ram of verse 13 but by the Lamb of God (John 1:29).

There are two outstanding symbols of Christ in this chapter. Isaac is the first: an only son, loved by his father, willing to do his father's will, received back from the dead in a figure. The ram is the second: an innocent victim died as a substitute for another, its blood was shed, and it was a burnt offering wholly consumed for God. Someone has said that, in providing the ram as a substitute for Isaac, "God spared Abraham's heart a pang He would not spare His own." The Angel of the LORD in verses 11 and 15, as in all the OT, is the Lord Jesus Christ. Abraham named the place The-LORD-Will-Provide (Jehovah-jireh) (v. 14). This is one of the seven compound names for God in the OT. The others are:

Jehovah-Rophekha—"The LORD who heals you" (Ex. 15:26).

Jehovah-Nissi—"The LORD my banner" (Ex. 17:8-15).

Jehovah-Shalom—"The LORD our peace" (Judg. 6:24).

Jehovah-Roi—"The LORD my Shepherd" (Ps. 23:1).

Jehovah-Tsidkenu—"The LORD our righteousness" (Jer. 23:6).

Jehovah-Shammah—"The LORD is present" (Ezek. 48:35).

22:16-19 The LORD swore by Himself because He couldn't swear by anyone greater (Heb. 6:13). God's promise here, confirmed by His oath, includes the blessing of the Gentile nations through Christ (see Gal. 3:16). In verse 17c God adds to the already vast blessing promised: Abraham's seed would possess the gate of his enemies. This means that his descendants would "occupy the place of authority over those who would oppose them. The capture of the city gate meant the fall of the city itself."[16]

22:20-24 Abraham's brother Nahor had twelve sons, whereas Abraham had only two—Ishmael and Isaac. How this must have tested Abraham's faith concerning God's promise of descendants as the stars of the sky! It may have prompted him to send Eliezer in search of a wife for Isaac (chap. 24). Notice the name Rebekah in 22:23.

10. The Family Burial Place (Chap. 23)

23:1-16 When Sarah died at one hundred and twenty-seven years, Abraham bargained with the Hittite inhabitants of Hebron for the purchase of the cave of Machpelah as a burial place—his only purchase of real estate during his long life of pilgrimage. The passage gives a priceless description of the bargaining that is so typical in Eastern lands. At first, the Hittites suggested that Abraham choose any one of their burial places. With overflowing courtesy, Abraham refused and insisted on paying full price for a cave owned by Ephron. At first Ephron offered not just the cave but the entire field as an outright gift, but Abraham understood that this was just a polite gesture. The owner really had no intention of giving it away. When Abraham countered by insisting on his desire to purchase it, Ephron suggested a price of four hundred shekels of silver, pretending that this was a great bargain. Actually it was an extortionate price, and ordinarily the buyer would have continued to haggle. So it was a surprise to everyone when Abraham agreed to Ephron's first asking price. Abraham didn't want to be indebted to an unbeliever, and neither should we.

23:17-20 The cave of Machpelah later became the burial place of Abraham, Isaac, Rebekah, Jacob, and Leah. The traditional location is now the site of a Moslem mosque.

11. A Bride for Isaac (Chap. 24)

24:1-9 Abraham bound his oldest servant by an oath that in seeking a bride for Isaac, he would not allow him to marry a Canaanite or to live in Mesopotamia. The ancient form of oath described in verses 2-4 and 9 is explained by Charles F. Pfeiffer:

> According to Biblical idiom, children are said to issue from the "thigh" or "loins" of their father (cf. Gen. 46:26). Placing the hand on the thigh signified that, in the event that an oath were violated, the children who had issued, or might issue from the "thigh"' would avenge the act of disloyalty. This has been called a "swearing by posterity" and is particularly applicable here, because the servant's mission is to insure a posterity for Abraham through Isaac.[17]

24:10-14 The servant is a type (symbol) of the Holy Spirit sent by the Father to win a bride for the "heavenly Isaac," the Lord Jesus. The narrative carefully records the preparation for the journey, the gifts carried by the servant, and the sign by which he would know the Lord's chosen woman. Murdoch Campbell elaborates:

It was a sign that was calculated to throw much light on the character and disposition of the girl worthy of his master's son. He was merely to ask her for "a sip"—as the Hebrew word may be rendered—of water for himself; but the one whom God had chosen to be the mother of a great people and a remote ancestress of Jesus Christ would reveal her generous nature and her willingness to serve others by offering him not a mere "sip" of water but an abundant "drink." To this she was also to add the astonishing offer of drawing water for the camels also. Now when we consider that these ten beasts, after the toil of the long desert, were prepared to empty at least four barrels of water in all, the spontaneous willingness of the girl of his prayers to serve man and beast would point to a kindly and unselfish disposition and also to a character of the highest order.[18]

24:15-52 It was lovely Rebekah, of course, who fulfilled the conditions and who therefore received the servant's gifts. As she led him to her father's home, Abraham's servant knew that his search had ended. When Rebekah explained the situation to her brother, Laban, he welcomed the entourage graciously, then heard the servant present his request for Rebekah as a bride for Isaac. The marvelous convergence of circumstances in answer to the servant's prayer convinced Laban and Bethuel, Rebekah's father, that the LORD had arranged it all.

24:53-61 The servant then brought out gifts for Rebekah, Laban, and her mother, sealing the engagement. In the morning, the family wanted to delay her departure, but Rebekah's willingness to go settled the matter, and she left with their blessing.

24:62-67 The first time we see Isaac after his experience on Mount Moriah is when he went out to meet Rebekah. So the first time we will see the Savior after His death, burial, resurrection, and ascension is when He returns to claim His chosen bride (1 Thess. 4:13-18). Isaac's meeting with Rebekah is one of tender beauty. Without ever having seen her before, he married her and loved her, and, unlike other patriarchs, he had no other wife besides her.

12. Abraham's Descendants (25:1-18)

25:1-6 In 1 Chronicles 1:32 Keturah is called Abraham's concubine. Verse 6 seems to confirm this. Thus she was a lesser wife, one who did not enjoy the full privileges of a wife in the home. Once again God records marital irregularities that He never approved.

25:7-18 Abraham breathed his last at one hundred and seventy-five years of age and became the second person to be buried in the cave at Hebron. The twelve sons of Ishmael listed in verses 12-16 fulfilled God's promise to Abraham: "He shall beget twelve princes" (17:20). With the death of Ishmael, Isaac moves to center stage in the narrative.

B. Isaac (25:19-26:35)

1. Isaac's Family (25:19-34)

25:19-26 For almost twenty years after her marriage, Rebekah ... was barren. Then, in answer to Isaac's prayer, she conceived. The struggle of two sons within her perplexed her until she was told that her sons would become the heads of two rival nations (Israel and Edom). The firstborn twin was named Esau (hairy). The other was named Jacob (supplanter). Even at birth, Jacob tried to gain advantage over his brother by grabbing hold of Esau's heel! Isaac was sixty when his twin boys were born.

25:27, 28 As the boys grew up, Esau turned into an outdoorsman and a skillful hunter. Jacob on the other hand was a mild, indoor type, dwelling in tents. Isaac loved Esau best, but Rebekah loved Jacob. Perhaps he was a "mama's boy."

25:29-34 As the firstborn, Esau was entitled to a double portion of his father's possessions—that is, twice as much as any other son might inherit. He also became the tribal or family head. This was known as the birthright. In Esau's case, it would also have included being the ancestor of the Messiah. One day, as Esau was returning from a hunting trip, he saw Jacob cooking some red stew. He asked for some of the red stuff so imploringly that he got the nickname "Red" (Edom), and it stuck to him and to his posterity, the Edomites. When Jacob offered some soup in exchange for Esau's birthright, Esau foolishly agreed. "No food except the forbidden fruit was as dearly bought as this broth." [19] The prophecy of verse 23 is partially fulfilled in verses 29-34. God does not condone Jacob's wheeling and dealing, but one thing is apparent—Jacob valued the birthright and a place in the godly line, while Esau preferred the gratification of his physical appetite to spiritual blessings.

The chapter closes by emphasizing Esau's treatment of his birthright rather than Jacob's treatment of his brother. Esau's descendants were bitter foes of Israel. Their final doom is pronounced in Obadiah.

2. Isaac and Abimelech (Chap. 26)

26:1-6 Isaac reacted to famine as his father had done (chaps. 12 and 20). As he journeyed south, the Lord appeared to him at Gerar and warned him not to go to Egypt. Gerar was sort of a halfway house on the route to Egypt. God told Isaac to stay temporarily [20] in Gerar but instead Isaac dwelt there. God also reconfirmed to him the unconditional covenant that He had made with Abraham.

26:7-17 Isaac reacted to fear as his father had done. He misrepresented his wife as his sister to the men of Gerar. It is the sad story of a father's weakness being repeated in his son. When the deceit was exposed and rebuked, Isaac confessed. Confession leads to blessing. Isaac became wealthy in Gerar—so wealthy that the Abimelech who was then reigning asked him to leave. So Isaac moved from Gerar to the Valley of Gerar, not far away.

26:18-25 The Philistines had stopped up the wells which Abraham had dug—an unfriendly act signifying that the newcomers were not welcome. Isaac cleaned out the wells. Strife ensued with the Philistines at Esek (contention) and Sitnah (enmity). Finally Isaac moved away from the Philistines. This time there was no strife when he dug a well, so he called it Rehoboth (broad places or room). He went from there to Beersheba, where the LORD reassured him with the promise of blessing, and where Isaac built an altar (worship), pitched a tent (abiding), and dug a well (refreshment). Just as water is a basic essential in the physical realm, so is the water of the Word in the spiritual.

26:26-33 Concerning verses 26-31, Williams says:

> It is when Isaac definitely separates himself from the men of Gerar that they come to him seeking blessing from God ... . The Christian best helps the world when living in separation from it ... .[21]

Isaac's servants ... found water the same day that Isaac made a nonaggression pact with Abimelech. Abraham had previously named the place Beersheba because he made a covenant there with his contemporary, Abimelech (21:31). Now, under similar circumstances, Isaac renames it Shebah or Beersheba.

26:34, 35 Esau's marriage to Judith and Basemath, two pagan women, caused grief to his parents, as have many other unequal yokes since then. It also brought out further his unfitness for the birthright.

C. Jacob (27:1-36:43)

1. Jacob Cheats Esau (Chap. 27)

27:1-22 Approximately thirty-seven years have passed since the events of the previous chapter. Isaac is now 137, his sight has failed, and he thinks he is about to die, perhaps because his brother Ishmael had died at that age (Gen. 25:17). But he will live forty-three more years.

When Isaac craved some venison from Esau, promising a blessing in return, Rebekah plotted to deceive her husband and to get the blessing for Jacob, whom she loved. Her trickery was unnecessary because God had already promised the blessing to Jacob (25:23b). She cooked goat's meat so that it tasted like savory venison, and put the goat's skins on Jacob's arms to impersonate the hairy Esau. Isaac made the mistake of trusting his feelings; the hairy arm "felt" like Esau's. We should not trust our emotional feelings in spiritual matters. As Martin Luther observed:

> Feelings come and feelings go, and feelings are deceiving;
> Our warrant is the Word of God; naught else is worth believing. [22]

Although Rebekah planned the deception, Jacob was equally guilty for carrying it out. And he reaped what he sowed. C. H. Mackintosh observed that:

> ... whoever observes Jacob's life, after he had surreptitiously obtained his father's blessing, will perceive that he enjoyed very little worldly felicity. His brother sought to murder him, to avoid which he was forced to flee from his father's house; his uncle Laban deceived him ... . He was obliged to leave him in a clandestine manner ... . He experienced the baseness of his son Reuben ... the treachery and cruelty of Simeon and Levi towards the Shechemites; then he had to feel the loss of his beloved wife ... the supposed untimely end of Joseph; and to complete all, he was forced by famine to go into Egypt, and there died in a strange land ... .[23]

27:23-29 Isaac blessed Jacob with prosperity, dominion, and protection. It is interesting that the blessings spoken by the patriarchs were prophetic; they came to pass literally because, in a real sense, these men spoke by inspiration.

27:30-40 When Esau returned and learned of the deception, he sought the blessing tearfully. But the blessing had been granted to Jacob and it couldn't be retracted (Heb. 12:16, 17). However, Isaac did have a word for Esau, as follows:

Far from rich soil on earth shall you live, far from the dew of heaven on high; you shall live by the sword and serve your brother; but when you grow restive, his yoke you shall break (vv. 39, 40—Moffatt).

This suggests that the Edomites would live in desert places, would be warriors, would be subject to the Israelites, but would one day rebel against this rule. This latter prophecy was fulfilled in the reign of Joram, King of Judah (2 Kgs. 8:20-22).

27:41-46 Esau planned to kill his brother Jacob as soon as his father would die and the period of mourning would end. When Rebekah learned of this, she told Jacob to head for her brother Laban's home in Haran. She feared not only that Jacob would be killed but that Esau would run away or be killed in a blood feud, and she would lose two sons at once. However, to explain Jacob's departure to Isaac, she said she was afraid Jacob might marry a Hittite, as Esau had done. Jacob expected to return soon, but it was not to be for more than twenty years. His father would still be living, but his mother would have passed on.

2. Jacob's Flight to Haran (Chap. 28)

28:1-9 Isaac called Jacob and blessed him, and sent him to Paddan Aram, a district of Mesopotamia, so that he would find a wife among his mother's people rather than among the Canaanites. This inspired Esau to try to regain his father's blessing by marrying a daughter of Ishmael. It was a case of doing evil (multiplying wives) that good might come.

28:10-19 At Bethel, Jacob had a wonderful dream in which he saw a ladder or staircase extending from earth to heaven. This suggested "the fact of a real, uninterrupted, and close communion between heaven and earth, and in particular between God in His glory and man in his solitude." [24] In His encounter with Nathanael, the Lord Jesus made an apparent reference to this incident and connected it with His Second Advent and millennial glory (John 1:51). But believers even now can enjoy moment-by-moment fellowship with the Lord. At this time when Jacob's heart was probably filled with regret for the past, loneliness in the present, and uncertainty about the future, God graciously made a covenant with him as He had with Abraham and Isaac. Notice the promise of companionship: "I am with you"; safety: "I will keep you wherever you go"; guidance: "and will bring you back to this land"; and personal guarantee: "I will not leave you until I have done what I have spoken to you." Conscious that he had met God there, Jacob changed the name of the place from Luz (separation) to Bethel (house of God).

"Prior to Bethel, where Jacob was 'surprised by joy' and 'transfixed by awe,' he had had no personal contact with God. Everything had come to him second-hand" (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

28:20-22 Next Jacob seems to be bargaining with God. He was actually bargaining for less than God had promised (v. 14). His faith was not strong enough to take God at His word, so he had to make his tithe conditional on God's performance of His part of the agreement, Another interpretation, however, is that the "if" is simply an inherent part of all Hebrew oaths and that Jacob was binding himself to give a tenth unconditionally (see Num. 21:2; Judg. 11:30,31; 1 Sam. 1:11 for similar Hebrew oaths).

3. Jacob, His Wives, and His Offspring (29:1-30:24)

29:1-14 Jacob was seventy-seven when he left Beersheba for Haran. He would spend twenty years serving his uncle Laban, thirty-three years back in Canaan, and the last seventeen years of his life in Egypt. Arriving in Paddan Aram, he was guided to the very field where some shepherds from Haran were tending their flocks. So perfect was God's timing that Rachel was just arriving with her flock when Jacob was talking with the shepherds. Being a good shepherd, Jacob wondered why they were all waiting at the well when there was still daylight for feeding the sheep. They explained that they did not remove the cover from the well until all the herds had arrived. It was an emotion-packed moment for Jacob when he met his cousin Rachel, and for Laban a short while later when he met his nephew Jacob.

29:15-35 Laban agreed to give Rachel to Jacob in exchange for seven years of service. The years seemed to Jacob but a few days because of the love he had for her. That is how it should be in our service for the Lord.

Leah was weak-eyed and not attractive. Rachel was beautiful.

According to custom, it was arranged that the bride should go in to the groom on the wedding night, veiled and perhaps when the room was in darkness. You can imagine how irate Jacob was in the morning when he found that his bride was Leah! Laban had tricked him, but excused the trick on the ground that the older daughter should be married first according to the local custom. Then Laban said, "Fulfill her week (that is, carry through on the marriage to Leah) and we will give you this one also (Rachel) for the service which you will serve with me still another seven years." At the end of the week-long wedding feast, Jacob also married Rachel, then served seven more years for her. Jacob had sown deceit, and now he was reaping it! When the Lord saw that Leah was hated (that is, loved less than Rachel) He compensated for this by giving her children. This law of divine compensation still operates: People who lack in one area are given extra in another. Leah acknowledged the Lord when she named her children (vv. 32, 33, 35). From her comes the priesthood (Levi), the royal line (Judah), and ultimately the Christ. In this chapter we have the first four of the sons of Jacob. The complete list of Jacob's sons is as follows:

The sons born to Leah:

- Reuben—(see, a son) (29:32)
- Simeon—(hearing) (29:33)
- Levi—(joined) (29:34)
- Judah—(praise) (29:35)
- Issachar—(hire) (30:18)
- Zebulun—(dwelling) (30:20)

The sons born to Bilhah, the handmaid of Rachel:

- Dan—(judge) (30:6)
- Naphtali—(wrestling) (30:8)

The sons born to Zilpah, handmaid of Leah:

- Gad—(a troop or good fortune) (30:11)
- Asher—(happy) (30:13)

The sons born to Rachel:

- Joseph—(adding) (30:24)
- Benjamin—(son of the right hand) (35:18)

30:1-13 In desperation to have a child playing on her knees, Rachel gave her maid, Bilhah, to Jacob as a wife or concubine. Even though such arrangements were common in those days, they were contrary to God's will. Bilhah bore two sons, Dan and Naphtali. Not to be outdone by Rachel, Leah gave her maid, Zilpah, to Jacob, and two more sons were born, Gad and Asher.

30:14-24 The mandrakes which Reuben found were a sort of love-apple, believed by the superstitious to impart fertility. Since Rachel was barren, she was anxious to have some of the mandrakes. In exchange, she agreed to let Leah live as wife with Jacob. (For some unexplained reason, Leah had apparently lost her privileges as wife.) After this, two more sons were born to Leah—Issachar and Zebulun—and also a daughter, Dinah. At last Rachel bore her first son and named him Joseph, expressing faith that God would give her still another son.

4. Jacob Outwits Laban (30:25-43)

30:25-36 When Jacob told Laban that he wanted to return home to Canaan, his uncle urged him to stay. Laban said he had learned by experience that the LORD had blessed him because of Jacob, and he would meet his wage demands if he would stay. Jacob agreed to continue serving if Laban would give him all the speckled and spotted sheep and goats and all the dark lambs. All other animals in the flock would be acknowledged as Laban's. The latter agreed to the pact, saying, "Oh, that it were according to your word." Laban took most of the animals designated for Jacob and gave them to his sons to shepherd, realizing that they would probably reproduce with markings that identified them as belonging to Jacob. Then he entrusted his own animals to Jacob, separated from his own sons by a three-day journey. This made it impossible for the marked animals in the herds tended by Laban's sons to breed with Laban's unmarked animals that were tended by Jacob.

30:37-43 When breeding Laban's herd, Jacob put rods that he had peeled in front of them, whether they were of solid color or marked. The lambs or kids were born streaked, speckled, and spotted. This, of course, meant that they belonged to Jacob. Did these rods actually determine the markings on the animals? There may or may not have been a scientific basis to the method. (New genetic evidence suggests that there might have been.) How else might the animals have been born with the markings Jacob desired?

First of all, it may have been a miracle (see 31:12).

Or it may have been a clever trick on Jacob's part. There are indications in the narrative that he knew the science of selective breeding. By careful breeding, he not only produced animals with the markings he desired, but he was also able to produce stronger animals for himself and feeble ones for Laban. Perhaps the peeled rods were just a trick to hide his breeding secrets from others. Whatever the explanation, Jacob's wealth increased during his final six years of serving Laban.

5. Jacob's Return to Canaan (Chap. 31)

31:1-18 After Jacob discovered that Laban and his sons were growing jealous and resentful, the LORD told him that the time had come to return to Canaan. First he called Rachel and Leah and discussed the matter, rehearsing how Laban had cheated him and changed his wages ten times, how God had overruled so that the flocks always bred in his favor, how God had reminded him of the vow he had made twenty years earlier (28:20-22), and how the Lord had told him to return to Canaan. His wives agreed that their father had not dealt honestly and that they should leave.

Griffith Thomas points out several interesting principles for discerning God's guidance here. First, Jacob had a desire (30:25). Secondly, circumstances necessitated a change of some sort. Thirdly, God's word came strongly to him. And finally, there was confirming support from his wives, despite their natural ties to Laban ... .[25] Note that the Angel of God (v. 11) is the God of Bethel (v. 13).

31:19-21 Before the secret departure, Rachel stole her father's household idols and hid them in her camel's saddle. Possession of these household gods implied leadership of the family, and, in the case of a married daughter, assured her husband the right of the father's property. [26] Since Laban had sons of his own when Jacob fled to Canaan, they alone had the right to their father's teraphim. Rachel's theft was therefore a serious matter, aimed at preserving for her husband the chief title to Laban's estate.

31:22-30 When Laban learned of their departure, he and his men pursued them for seven days' journey, but the Lord warned him in a dream not to trouble Jacob and his caravan. When he finally overtook them, he only complained that he had been denied the privilege of giving them a royal send-off and that his idols had been stolen.

31:31-35 To the first complaint Jacob answered that he left secretly for fear that Laban take his daughters (Rachel and Leah) from him by force. To the second complaint, he denied having stolen the gods and rashly decreed death for the culprit. Laban made a thorough search of the caravan, but in vain. Rachel was sitting on them and excused herself for not getting off the camel's saddle to honor her father because it was her menstrual period—or so she said.

31:36-42 Now it was Jacob's turn to be angry. He denounced Laban for accusing him of theft and for treating him so unfairly for twenty years, in spite of Jacob's faithful and generous service. This passage reveals that Jacob was a hard worker and that the blessing of the Lord was upon him in all that he did. Are we faithful to our employers? Does the blessing of God rest upon our work?

31:43-50 Laban avoided the issue by lamely protesting that he would not harm his own daughters, grandchildren, or cattle, then suggested that they should make a pact. It was not a gracious, friendly covenant, asking the Lord to watch over them while they were separated. Rather, it was a compact between two cheats, asking the Lord to make sure that they did what was right when they were out of sight from one another! It was, in effect, a nonaggression treaty, but it also charged Jacob not to treat Laban's daughters harshly nor to marry other wives. Laban called the pillar of stones marking the pact Jegar Sahadutha, an Aramaic expression. Jacob called it Galeed, a Hebrew word. Both words mean "the heap of witness." Neither man was to pass the stone-heap to attack the other.

31:51-55 Laban swore by the God of Abraham, the God of Nahor, and the God of their father, Terah. The capitalization of God in the NKJV (also Moffatt, NIV, etc.) indicates that the translators felt Laban was referring to the one true God that Abraham came to know. However, since the Hebrew does not have upper and lower case letters, we can't tell if Laban might have been referring to the pagan gods which these men had worshiped in Ur. Jacob swore by the Fear of his father Isaac—that is, the God whom Isaac feared. Isaac had never been an idolater. Jacob first offered a sacrifice, then made a banquet for all those present and camped all that night on the mountain.

6. Jacob and Esau Reconciled (Chaps. 32, 33)

32:1-8 En route to Canaan, Jacob met a band of angels and called the place Mahanaim (two hosts or double camp). The two camps may be God's army (v. 2) and Jacob's entourage. Or two hosts may be a figurative expression for a great multitude (v. 10). As Jacob neared the land, he remembered his brother Esau and feared revenge. Would Esau still be angry at the way he had been cheated out of the blessing? First, Jacob sent messengers ... to Esau with greetings of peace. Then when he heard that Esau was coming to meet him with a band of four hundred men, he was so terrified that he divided his family into two companies, so that if the first group was destroyed, the second could flee.

32:9-12 Jacob's prayer was born out of a desperate sense of need for divine protection. It was based on the ground of covenant relationship which the Lord had established with him and his forefathers, and it was prayed in humility of spirit. He based his plea on the word of the Lord and claimed the promises of God.

The best prayer comes from a strong inward necessity. By human security systems, we often protect ourselves from a dynamic prayer life. Why do we do ourselves this wrong?

32:13-21 Jacob next sent three successive droves of animals totaling 580 head as gifts for Esau, hoping to appease him. Esau would get the gift in three installments. Jacob's maneuvers manifested his unbelief or at least a mixture of faith and unbelief.

32:22-32 After sending his immediate family across the stream Jabbok (he will empty), Jacob spent the night alone at Peniel for what was to be one of the great experiences of his life. A Man wrestled with him. That Man was an angel (Hos. 12:4), the Angel of Jehovah, the Lord Himself. The Lord put the socket of Jacob's hip ... out of joint, causing him to walk with a limp the rest of his life. Although Jacob lost the encounter physically, he won a great spiritual victory. He learned to triumph through defeat and to be strong through weakness. Emptied of self and of confidence in his own cleverness, he confessed he was Jacob, a supplanter, a "con man." God then changed his name to Israel (variously translated as "God rules," "one who strives with God," or "a prince of God"). Jacob called the name of the place Peniel (the face of God) because he realized he had seen the Lord. Pfeiffer points out that verse 32 is still true among Jews today:

> The sciatic nerve, or thigh vein, must be removed from the slaughtered animal before that portion of the animal may be prepared for consumption by orthodox Jews." [27]

33:1-11 As Esau drew near, Jacob lapsed back into fearfulness and merely natural behavior, arranging his household in such a way as to afford maximum protection for those he loved most. Jacob bowed himself to the ground seven times as he approached his brother. Esau, by comparison, was relaxed, warm, and effusive as he met Jacob first, then Jacob's wives and children. He protested mildly against the extravagant gift of livestock but finally consented to accept it. Jacob seems to have shown undue servility to his brother, speaking of himself as his servant. Some think that he resorted to flattery and exaggeration in telling Esau that seeing his face was like seeing God. Others think that the face of God here means a reconciled face.

33:12-17 When Esau suggested that they travel back together, Jacob pretended that this would be impossible because of the slow pace required by the children and young animals. Jacob promised to meet Esau in Seir (Edom), although he had no intention of doing so. Even when Esau tried to leave behind some of his men to travel with Jacob's household, the latter refused the offer without revealing the real reasons—fear and suspicion.

33:18-20 Instead of traveling south to Mount Seir, Jacob went northwest. At length he arrived at Shechem and settled there, erecting an altar which he (perhaps presumptuously) called El Elohe Israel (God, the God of Israel).

Twenty years earlier, when God had appeared to him at Bethel, Jacob had vowed that the Lord would be his God, that he would give a tenth of his wealth to the Lord, and that he would establish Bethel as God's house (28:20-22). Now, instead of returning to Bethel, he settles thirty miles away in the fertile area of Shechem, probably for the sake of his livestock. (Shechem represents the world.) God does not speak directly to him until several years later, when He calls on Jacob to fulfill his vow (chap. 35). In the meantime, the tragic events of chapter 34 take place.

7. Sins at Shechem (Chap. 34)

34:1-12 The name of God is not mentioned in this chapter. While Jacob and his family were living in Shechem, Dinah his daughter mingled socially with the heathen women, a breach of proper separation from the ungodly. On one such occasion, Shechem, the son of Hamor, sexually assaulted her, then greatly desired to marry her. Realizing that Jacob and his sons were enraged, Hamor proposed a peaceful solution: intermarriage between the Israelites and Canaanites, and full rights for the Israelites as citizens of the land. (Verse 9 can be seen as one of many Satanic attempts to pollute the godly line.) Shechem also offered to pay whatever dowry and gift was requested.

34:13-24 The sons of Jacob had no intention of giving Dinah to Shechem, but they lied that they would do so if the men of the city would be circumcised. The sacred sign of God's covenant was to be used wickedly. In good faith, Hamor, Shechem, and all the men of their city met the condition.

34:25-31 But while the Shechemites were recovering from the surgery, Simeon and Levi treacherously murdered them and plundered their wealth. When Jacob administered a mild rebuke, Simeon and Levi answered that their sister should not have been treated like a harlot. Actually Jacob seemed to be more concerned about his own welfare than the horrible injustice that had been done to the men of Shechem. Notice his eight uses of the first-person pronoun in verse 30.

8. The Return to Bethel (Chap. 35)

35:1-8 Chapter 35 opens with God's command to Jacob to fulfill the vow made about thirty years earlier (28:20-22). The Lord used the tragic events of the previous chapter to prepare the patriarch to do it. Notice that God is referred to about twenty times in this chapter, in contrast to no references in chapter 34. Before obeying God's command to return to Bethel, Jacob first ordered his family to put away the foreign household gods and to put on clean clothes. As soon as they did this, they became a terror to their heathen neighbors. It was appropriate that Jacob should build an altar at "El Bethel" and worship the God who had protected him from his brother, Esau.

35:9-15 Once again God stated that Jacob's name was now Israel and renewed the covenant He had made with Abraham and Isaac. The patriarch marked the sacred spot with a pillar and once again named the place Bethel.

35:16-20 As Jacob's family journeyed south from Bethel, ... Rachel died in childbirth. She had named the child Ben-Oni (son of my sorrow), but Jacob named this twelfth son Benjamin (son of my right hand). These two names pre-picture the sufferings of Christ and the glories that would follow. The traditional (but probably not authentic) site of Rachel's grave may still be seen on the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. Why was she not buried with Abraham, Sarah, and Rebekah in the cave of Hebron? Perhaps it was because she had brought idols into the family.

35:21-29 A brief mention is made of Reuben's sin with Bilhah his father's concubine, a sin by which he forfeited the birthright (49:3, 4). The last sentence in verse 22 begins a new paragraph: Now the sons of Jacob were twelve. The next two verses list the twelve sons. Though it says in verse 26 that these sons were born to Jacob in Paddan Aram, Benjamin (v. 24) is excepted. He was born in Canaan (vv. 16-19). Jacob returned to Hebron in time to see his father Isaac before he died. His mother, Rebekah, had died some years earlier. Three funerals are recorded in this chapter: that of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse (v. 8); of Rachel (v. 19); and of Isaac (v. 29).

9. The Descendants of Jacob's Brother Esau (Chap. 36)

36:1-30 Chapter 36 is devoted to the descendants of Esau, who dwelt in the land of Edom, southeast of the Dead Sea. The genealogy represents the fulfillment of the promise that Esau would be the head of a nation (25:23). Esau had three or possibly four wives, depending on whether some of the women had two names (compare 26:34; 28:9; 36:2,3). In verse 24 Anah found water (or "hot springs," NASB).

36:31-43 Moses, the author of Genesis, knew by divine revelation (see 35:11) that Israel would eventually have a king. As seven generations of the ungodly line of Cain were given in chapter 4, so seven generations of kings in the ungodly line of Esau are mentioned here in verses 33-39. Seven, the number of completeness, probably indicates the entire line. Not one of Esau's descendants is mentioned in God's registry of the faithful; all are lost in the obscurity of those who depart from the living God. They had temporary riches and the passing fame of this world, but nothing for eternity.

D. Joseph (37:1-50:26)

1. Joseph Sold into Slavery (Chap. 37)

37:1-17 The words "This is the history of Jacob" seem abrupt. Jacob's history (chaps. 25-35) is interrupted by the generations of Esau (chap. 36), then continued from chapter 37 to the end of the book, with emphasis on Jacob's son, Joseph.

Joseph is one of the most beautiful types (symbols) of the Lord Jesus Christ in the OT, though the Bible never labels him as a type. A. W. Pink lists 101 correspondences between Joseph and Jesus, [28] and Ada Habershon lists 121. For example, Joseph was loved by his father (v. 3); he rebuked the sin of his brothers (v. 2); he was hated by his brothers and sold into the hands of enemies (vv. 4, 26-28); he was punished unjustly (chap. 39); he was exalted and became the savior of the world, for all the world had to come to him for bread (41:57); he received a Gentile bride during his rejection by his brethren (41:45).

The tunic of many colors (or a long robe with sleeves, RSV) was a sign of his father's special affection, and it stirred up the jealous hatred of his brothers. In Joseph's first dream, eleven sheaves of grain bowed down to the twelfth sheaf, a prophecy that his brothers would one day bow down to him. In the next dream, the sun, moon, and the eleven stars bowed down to Joseph. The sun and moon represented Jacob and Leah (Rachel had died), and the eleven stars were Joseph's brothers (vv. 9-11).

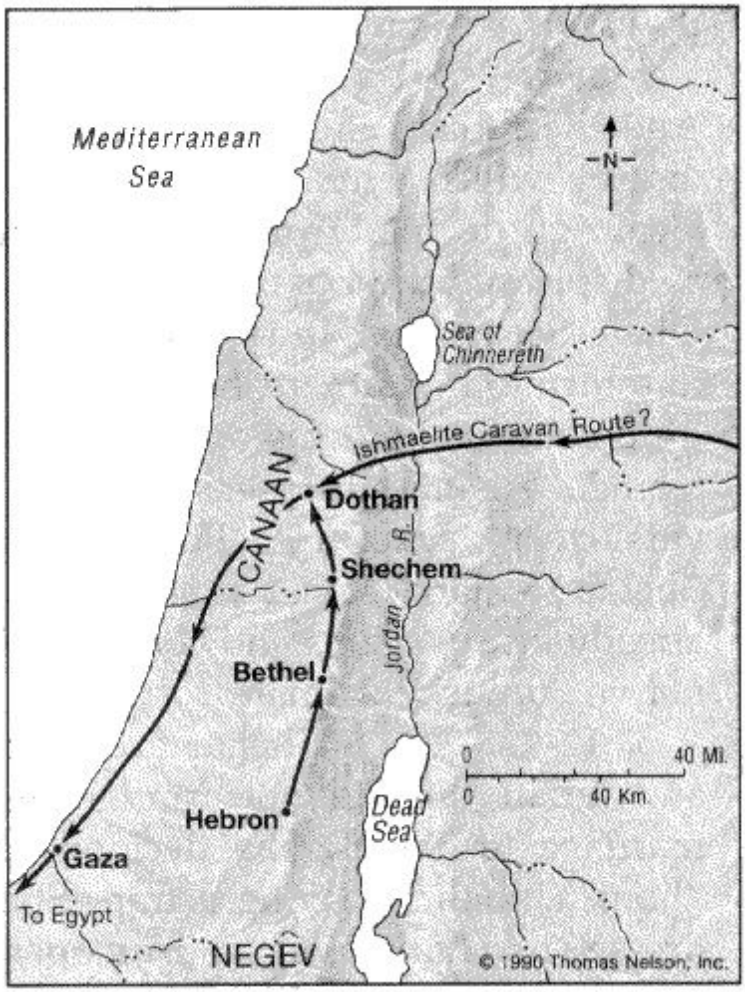
37:18-28 When Joseph was sent on an errand to his brothers, they conspired ... to kill him, but at Reuben's suggestion they agreed to cast him into a pit near Dothan. As they sat down to eat, they saw a company of Ishmaelites bound for Egypt, and at Judah's suggestion decided to sell him. In this passage, the Ishmaelites are also called Midianites, as in Judges 8:22-24. As the Midianite traders passed by, Joseph's brothers brought Joseph out of the pit and sold him to the traders.

37:29-36 Reuben was absent when all this was taking place. When he returned he was terrified, since he would be responsible to explain Joseph's absence to his father. So the brothers dipped Joseph's tunic in the blood of a goat and then callously returned it to Jacob, who naturally assumed that Joseph had been killed. Jacob had once deceived his father with a goat, using the skin to impersonate his brother's hairy arms (27:16-23). Now he himself was cruelly deceived by the blood of a goat on Joseph's coat. "The pain of deceit is learned once again." The Midianites unwittingly fulfilled God's purposes by providing free transportation for Joseph to Egypt and selling him to Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh. Thus God makes man's wrath to praise Him, and what will not praise Him, He restrains (see Ps. 76:10).



2. Judah and Tamar (Chap. 38)

38:1-11 The sordid story of Judah's sin with Tamar serves to magnify the grace of God when we remember that the Lord Jesus was descended from

Judah (Luke 3:33). Tamar is one of five women mentioned in the genealogy in Matthew 1; three of them were guilty of immorality—Tamar, Rahab (v. 5), and Bathsheba (v. 6). The others are Ruth, a Gentile (v. 5) and Mary, a godly virgin (v. 16). Pink notes deeper meanings to this story of moral failure:

> Genesis 37 closes with an account of Jacob's sons selling their brother Joseph unto the Midianites, and they in turn selling him into Egypt. This speaks, in type, of Christ being rejected by Israel and delivered unto the Gentiles. From the time that the Jewish leaders delivered their Messiah into the hands of Pilate, they have as a nation had no further dealings with Him; and God, too, has turned from them to the Gentiles. Hence it is that there is an important turn in our type at this stage. Joseph is now seen in the hands of the Gentiles. But before we are told what happened to Joseph in Egypt, the Holy Spirit traces for us, in typical outline, the history of the Jews, while the antitypical Joseph is absent from the land.[29]

It is no accident that the story of Joseph is interrupted by chapter 38. The disreputable behavior of other members of Joseph's family makes his conduct, by contrast, shine like a bright light in a sordid world.

Judah's first mistake was in marrying a Canaanite woman, the daughter of ... Shua. She bore him three sons—Er, Onan, and Shelah. Er married a Canaanite woman named Tamar, but was slain by the LORD for some unspecified wickedness. It was the custom at that time for a brother or other near relative to marry the widow and raise children for the one who had died. Onan refused to do this because the first child born as a result would be the legal heir of Er, not his own legal child. His sin was not so much sexual as it was selfish. It was not a single act but, as the Hebrew reveals, a persistent refusal. And the refusal affected the genealogy by which Christ would inherit legal right to the throne of David. It so displeased the LORD that He slew Onan. Seeing this, Judah told Tamar to return to her father's house till his third son, Shelah, was of marriageable age. Actually this was just a diversionary tactic. He didn't want Shelah to marry Tamar at all; he had already lost two sons and considered her an "unlucky woman."

38:12-23 When Shelah grew up and Judah still did not arrange his marriage to Tamar, she decided to "hook" Judah by laying a trap. She dressed as a harlot and sat in an open place on the road to Timnah, where Judah was going to join his sheepshearers. Sure enough, he went in and had illicit relations with her, not knowing it was his own daughter-in-law. The agreed fee was a young goat from the flock, but until he could send it to her, the "harlot" demanded Judah's signet, cord, and staff. The cord may have been the string by which the seal-ring was suspended. When Judah tried to deliver the kid and have the pledges returned, he couldn't find the "harlot."

38:24-26 Three months later, Tamar was accused of playing the harlot because she, a widow, was with child. Judah ordered her to be burned. At this point she returned the pledges with the announcement that their owner was the father of her expected child. They furnished positive proof that Judah had had sex with her. Walter C. Wright describes the scene vividly:

> The companions of Judah bring him word that his daughter-in-law, Tamar, has played the harlot. His judgment is quick and decisive: let her be burned. There is neither hesitation nor compromise. As he utters this fearful sentence, we cannot detect even a tremor in his voice. The Israelitish society must be preserved from such folly and wickedness. The word goes out; the day is fixed; the preparations go forward; the stake is planted; the pile is arranged; the procession forms; the crowd gathers; the woman walks to her apparent doom. But she bears in her hands the tokens; the pledges are with her; she carries the staff and the ring. And the staff is the staff of Judah, and the ring is his ring! The pledges become the accusation of her judge. What weight will his sentence have now?[30]

38:27-30 When Tamar was giving birth and a baby's hand emerged, the midwife tied a scarlet thread on it, thinking that it would be born first. But the hand withdrew and another baby was the first to come forth. She named the firstborn Perez (breakthrough) and the other Zerah. Both twins are mentioned in Matthew 1:3, though the Messianic line goes through Perez. Zerah was an ancestor of Achan (Josh. 7:1). "It is simply astonishing" comments Griffith Thomas, "that God could take up the threads of this very tangled skein, and weave them into His own pattern." [31]

Judah's marriage to the Canaanite woman (v. 2) was a first step in the intermingling of God's people with a race that was proverbial for its gross immorality. Israel would become contaminated by the unspeakable enormities of lewd nature worship. God is a God of separation; when we fraternize with the world, we pay an awful price.

3. Joseph's Test and Triumph (Chap. 39)

39:1-19 The story now returns to Egypt, where Joseph was appointed overseer in the house of Potiphar, ... captain of the guard in Pharaoh's palace. The LORD was with him and he became a successful man (Tyndale, in 1534, translated it, he was "a lucky fellow," v. 2). Potiphar's wife tried repeatedly to seduce Joseph, but he steadfastly refused. He would not betray his master's confidence or sin against his God. One day she caught him by his garment. He squirmed out of it and fled, leaving her holding it. He lost his coat but saved his character and eventually gained a crown. She used the coat as "evidence" that Joseph had attempted to rape her.

Believers are taught to flee fornication, idolatry, and youthful lusts. Better to flee than to fall.

39:20-23 Without proper investigation, Joseph's master ordered him to prison; but even there Joseph was blessed by the Lord and was given a position of responsibility. The fact that Joseph was not executed may indicate that Potiphar did not entirely believe his wife; he couldn't help knowing her true character. The truth of Romans 8:28 is wonderfully displayed in this chapter. God was working behind the scenes for Joseph. The latter resisted temptation and sought to avoid occasions for sin (vv. 8-10). Despite this, his would-be seducer framed him. And so for a second time Joseph found himself in chains (Ps. 105:17-19). Under the circumstances he should have been upset. But he was not "under the circumstances"; he was above them and saw God's hand in them. His time in prison was "training time for reigning time." So things that were meant by others for evil turned out to be for good.

4. Joseph Interpreting the Butler's and Baker's Dreams (Chap. 40)

40:1-19 Among Joseph's fellow-prisoners were the butler (cupbearer) and the baker of the king of Egypt (vv. 1-4). When they each had a dream, Joseph offered to interpret them (vv. 5-8). The butler's dream of the vine meant that Pharaoh would lift up his head to a position of favor in three days (vv. 9-15). But the baker's dream of the three white cake baskets indicated that within three days Pharaoh would lift off his head—by hanging him (vv. 16-19).

Notice that Joseph did not wait for his circumstances to change. He glorified God and served others in the circumstances.

40:20-23 When the chief butler was released, he failed to intercede for Joseph, as he had promised (v. 23). But the Lord did not forget. "Remember me, when it is well with you" (v. 14). The Savior spoke similar words on the night of His betrayal, words which we can obey by taking the symbolic bread and wine.

5. Joseph Interpreting Pharaoh's Dreams (Chap. 41)

41:1-13 When none of the magicians of Egypt could interpret Pharaoh's dreams of the seven fat and seven ugly and gaunt cows, of the seven plump and good ears and seven thin heads of grain, then the chief butler remembered Joseph and his ability to interpret dreams. The two full years mentioned in verse 1 may refer either to the time of Joseph's imprisonment or the time since the chief butler's release.

41:14-32 Called before Pharaoh, Joseph explained that there would be seven years of great plenty in Egypt, followed by seven years of famine which would devastate the land. The repetition or duplication of Pharaoh's dream meant that it was established by God and that He would shortly bring it to pass. We see this also in Joseph's two dreams concerning his future (37:6-9) and in the similar visions of Daniel 2 and 7. In the Bible, two is the number of witness. Joseph gave the same reply to Pharaoh in the royal hall as he gave to his servants in the prison house. "It is not in me; God will give ... an answer of peace" (v. 16; cf. 40:8). It is this humility that made it possible for the Lord to entrust Joseph with tremendous responsibility without fear that it would corrupt him.

41:33-36 Joseph counseled Pharaoh to set aside reserves of grain during the years of plenty so that there would be sufficient during the famine years. His plan was what has since been called "the ever-normal granaries."

41:37-46 Pharaoh was so pleased that he made Joseph second in command, appointed him to administer the program (v. 40), assured him that without his consent no one would do anything (v. 44), and gave him a new name, Zaphnath-Paaneah (v. 45a. The meaning of the name is uncertain. Some suggest Savior of the world; others say it probably means God speaks and He lives. He also gave Asenath, a Gentile, to be Joseph's wife (v. 45). How could Pharaoh set a Hebrew prisoner over the land of Egypt on the basis of a dream's interpretation without waiting to see if it was true? The answer is in Proverbs 21:1: "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord."

Cream rises to the surface. Joseph was the first of many godly Jews to rise to prominence in Gentile governments. He was thirty years old when he began this ministry (v. 46); it was thirteen years since he was sold by his brothers (cf. 37:2).

41:47-52 The abundance of the first seven years was so great that it was impossible to keep an accurate record. It was during those years that two sons were born to Joseph—Manasseh (making to forget) and Ephraim (fruitful). Forgetting the wrongs committed against him, Joseph became fruitful.

41:53-57 When the seven years of famine came, the starving people of Egypt and of all the countries came to Joseph ... to buy grain. Here Joseph is a type (symbol) of Christ, through whom all the blessings of God are dispensed to the hungering people of this earth. It was the providence of God that brought Joseph to Egypt to save his people from famine, but it was also to isolate them from the moral pollution of the land of Canaan. Chapter 38 illustrates what was happening to the children of Israel in Canaan. God's remedy was to remove them to Egypt, where they would be virtually cut off from the heathen (43:32).

6. Joseph's Brothers in Egypt (Chaps. 42-44)

42:1-5 The scene switches back to Jacob in Canaan, where the famine was very severe. Hearing that there was plenty of food (grain) in Egypt, but knowing nothing of Joseph's being there, Jacob sent ten of his sons for supplies. Only Benjamin remained at home. So far as Jacob knew, Benjamin was the only living son of his beloved Rachel.

42:6-25 When Joseph's brothers appeared before him, he treated them roughly, accusing them of being spies, putting them in prison, then demanding that their youngest brother, Benjamin, be brought to him. At last, Simeon was kept as a hostage in prison while the nine others returned to Canaan for Benjamin, well supplied with grain, with provisions, and with their money refunded secretly in the bags. Shining through the narrative we see Joseph's underlying love and compassion for his brothers (vv. 24a, 25) and their growing conviction of sin for what they had done to their "missing" brother over twenty years earlier (vv. 21, 22). Joseph, of course, was seeking to get them to confess their guilt.

We believe that Joseph is a type of Christ dealing with His Jewish brethren during the coming Tribulation Period. The events leading up to the reconciliation of Joseph's brothers form one of the most moving portions in the Bible. Almost no other story is as intimate, detailed, or complete a picture of Christ.

TYPOLOGY

Certain persons, events, and things in the OT are clearly identified as types or symbols in the NT. Thus, Adam is said to be a type of Christ (Rom. 5:14). Others are not specifically referred to as types, yet the parallels are too many and too obvious to be denied. Joseph, for instance, is never referred to as a type of the Lord Jesus, yet there are over one hundred correspondences between Jesus and Joseph.

When the Lord Jesus talked to the two sorrowing disciples on the road to Emmaus, "He expounded to them in all the Scriptures [emphasis supplied] the things concerning Himself" (Luke 24:27). The incarnate Christ said, "In the volume of the book it is written of Me ... " (Heb. 10:7). Therefore we are justified in looking for Christ in all the Scriptures.

Regarding Israel's experiences in the OT, Paul tells us that "all these things happened to them as examples and they were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages have come" (1 Cor. 10:11). This would strongly support the view that not just specifically named types are valid, but many more as well.

Paul reminded Timothy that all Scripture is profitable (2 Tim. 3:16). There are spiritual lessons to be learned, if only we have eyes to see them.

Large sections of the Book of Hebrews are an explanation of the typology of the tabernacle and its furnishings. While it is true that a too narrow view of typology will restrict a believer's spiritual enjoyment of much of the OT, the other extreme of making virtually everything a type, or even turning all history into allegory, is to be avoided as well.

Strained or fanciful explanations of the types have brought disrepute on the subject. We should should not allow extremism to rob us of the spiritual wealth in the OT. If an interpretation exalts Christ, and/or edifies His people, and/or conveys the gospel to the lost, and is consistent with the entire teaching of the Word, it is at the very least a valid application of the truth.

42:26-28 On the way home, one of the brothers found his money in his sack. This threw them into panic, making them fear they might be accused of theft (vv. 26-28).

42:29-38 When they got home and told their story, the rest of them also found their money, and their fears multiplied. Jacob was inconsolable. In spite of Reuben's offering the lives of his two sons as a guarantee, the patriarch feared to allow Benjamin to go to Egypt lest harm befall him.

43:1-15 Finally Jacob was forced by the severity of the famine to take action. The brothers could not return without Benjamin—that was the condition laid down by the governor, Joseph. So Judah agreed to serve as surety for Benjamin, and Jacob accepted the offer. In this one respect at least, Judah here reminds us of his descendant, the Lord Jesus, who became our Surety at the cross of Calvary. Jacob sent a present to the governor of Egypt, consisting of balm, honey, gum, spices, myrrh, pistachio nuts, and almonds—items not affected by the famine. He also insisted they take double the amount of money in case the refunded money was an oversight.

43:16-25 Joseph was deeply moved when he saw his brothers again, but he still did not reveal his identity. He ordered his servants to prepare a banquet. When his brothers were brought to Joseph's house, they thought they were on the carpet because of the money they found in their sacks. They made a complete explanation to the chief steward, and he in turn assured them there was nothing to worry about. His records showed that they had paid in full. Simeon was released from prison and joined them in preparation for the banquet. They got their father's present ready to give to Joseph when he arrived at noon.

> If we ask whether the replaced money was in truth discovered on the way back to Canaan (42:27; 43:21) or when they had arrived in the presence of Jacob (42:35), the answer is both. The discovery was in two stages. One brother discovered his plight en route, the others on arriving home. It is understandable that in relating the events to Joseph's steward (43:21), a compressed account was given (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

43:26-34 When Joseph arrived, his brothers bowed down before him in fulfillment of his dream (37:7). He was overcome with emotion as he asked for the family and met Benjamin. At the banquet, he ate by himself; the eleven brothers were served separately; and the Egyptians likewise ate by themselves. The astonishment of the brothers was caused by their being seated according to their ages. How could anyone in Egypt know their order of birth? Special favor was shown to Benjamin, Joseph's own full brother.

44:1-13 When the brothers were leaving to return to Canaan, Joseph commanded his silver cup to be hidden in Benjamin's sack. It was not only the cup from which he drank, but also the one which he used in divination—probably referring to his interpretation of dreams.

Later God's people were forbidden to practice divination (Deut. 18:10-12). But even at this early date, it is unlikely that Joseph practiced the Egyptian forms of fortune-telling. His intuition and foresight came from the Lord, but perhaps by using the cup as a prop, he wished to confirm in his brother's minds that he was an Egyptian.

Afterwards, when Joseph's brothers were accused of stealing the cup, they protested their innocence, rashly offering the life of anyone who was found with it. Joseph's steward agreed that the guilty one would be his slave. When the cup was found in Benjamin's sack, the brothers were crushed and returned to the city.

44:14-17 After Joseph had reproached them, Judah suggested that they all become his slaves, but Joseph said that Benjamin would do and the rest could return home. His action in hiding the silver cup in Benjamin's sack and in detaining Benjamin was purposely designed to bring his brothers to acknowledge their bloodguiltiness. George Williams writes:

> He acted so as to bring their sin to remembrance, to make them confess it with their own lips ... . His detention of Simeon, and afterwards of Benjamin, was skillfully designed so as to find out if they were still indifferent to the cries of a captive brother and the tears of a bereaved father. His plan succeeded admirably; his sternness and his kindness both conspired to disquiet them; and his goodness helped to lead them to repentance.[32]

The whole scene foreshadows that coming day when the remnant of Israel will confess its guilt in connection with the death of the Messiah and will mourn for Him as one mourns for an only son (Zech. 12:10).

44:18-34 Judah stood near Joseph and gave a detailed review of Benjamin's involvement—how Joseph had demanded the presence of the youngest son, how their father, still grieving over the loss of one son, had protested against Benjamin's going to Egypt and how Judah had offered himself as surety for Benjamin's safety. Judah said that their father would die if the brothers went back without Benjamin, so he offered to stay in Egypt and serve as a slave in the place of Benjamin.

What a change had been worked in Judah! In chapter 37 he ruthlessly sold Joseph for profit, without concern for his father's heartbreak. In chapter 38 he was involved in deception and immorality. But God was working in his heart, so that in chapter 43 he became surety for Benjamin. Now in chapter 44 he pours out his heart in intercession before Joseph, offering himself as a slave so as not to bring upon his father the crushing sorrow of losing Benjamin. From selling his own brother into slavery to becoming a slave in his brother's stead; from callousness toward his father to sacrificial concern for his well-being—this is the progress of the grace of God in the life of Judah!

7. Joseph Reveals Himself to His Brothers (Chap. 45)

45:1-8 In one of the most moving scenes in all the Bible, Joseph ordered his staff to go out of the room while, with an enormous emotional release, he revealed his identity to his brothers. He told them not to grieve for the way they had treated him, because God had overruled it for good.

45:9-15 They were to bring their father, their households, and their possessions to Goshen in Egypt for the remaining five years of famine. "Tell my father of all my glory in Egypt"—a command we too can obey when we rehearse before God the glories of His beloved Son. The fountains of the great deep were broken up as Joseph embraced Benjamin and then kissed all his brothers.

This is a happy preview of the joy that awaits the people of Israel when the Christ of Calvary appears to them and reveals Himself as their Messiah-King.

45:16-24 When Pharaoh heard what was going on, he told Joseph's brothers to bring their father and families from Canaan, but not to bother bringing their heavy furniture and goods because he would provide everything they needed. So they went back to Canaan with wagons provided by Pharaoh, and with beautiful garments, animals, and provisions from Joseph. Benjamin got a gift of money and a special wardrobe. Fearing that his brothers might accuse each other for their guilt in mistreating him years earlier, Joseph warned them not to quarrel on their homeward journey.

45:25-28 On reaching home, they broke the news to Jacob. At first it was too much for him. But when he heard the full story and saw the loaded carts, he knew it was true—Joseph was still alive and they would meet again!

Joseph mentions his father five times in this chapter. This reveals his Christlikeness in addition to the free forgiveness he extended to his brothers. It was our Lord's love for His Father and His desire to do the Father's will that brought Him into the world to redeem fallen man. Joseph's love for Jacob is but a faint shadow of that love.

8. Joseph's Reunion with His Family (Chap. 46)

46:1-7 On the way to Egypt, Israel stopped the caravan at historic Beersheba to worship the God of his father Isaac. This was the place where God appeared to Abraham in connection with the offering of Isaac (21:31-22). It was also the place where the Lord appeared to Isaac (26:23, 24). Now He appears to Jacob to encourage him. This is the last of the Lord's seven appearances to him. The second promise of verse 4 seems to indicate that Jacob would return to Canaan. Actually, of course, he died in Egypt. But the promise was fulfilled in two ways. His body was taken back to Canaan for burial, and, in a sense, he also returned when his descendants went back in the days of Joshua. The expression "Joseph will put his hand on your eyes" predicted a peaceful death. Atkinson explains the idiom beautifully:

> ... Joseph would close his father's eyes at the time of his death. Joseph would be with him when he died. Notice the personal promise graciously made to Jacob, which would compensate him for the long years of sorrow and mourning for Joseph. God cares for the personal needs of His servants (1 Pet. 5: 7).[33]

And so Jacob reached Egypt with all his descendants, his livestock, and his personal goods.

46:8-27 In verses 8-27 we have the family register of Jacob and his sons. There were sixty-six family members (v. 26) who came with Jacob to Egypt. There are admitted difficulties in reconciling this figure with the seventy of verse 27 and of Exodus 1:5 and the seventy-five of Acts 7:14. The most obvious explanation is that the numbers expand from direct descendants to wider circles of relatives.

46:28-34 The epic meeting between Israel and Joseph took place in Goshen, the most fertile section of Egypt, near the delta of the Nile. Jacob and his sons preferred to stay there, since it provided the best pasture for their herds. It was agreed that they would tell Pharaoh that they were shepherds. Since shepherds were despised by the Egyptians, Pharaoh would let them live in the land of Goshen, far away from the royal palace. There in Goshen they were isolated from social intercourse with the Egyptians, first because of their nationality (43:32) and then because of their occupation. God left them in this incubator until they were a strong nation, able to possess the land that He promised to their forefathers.

9. Joseph's Family in Egypt (Chap. 47)

47:1-6 When five of Joseph's brothers told Pharaoh that they were shepherds, he responded, as expected, by telling them to settle in the lush pasturelands of Goshen. He also asked Joseph to find some competent men from among his relatives to tend the royal herds.

47:7-12 Joseph arranged for his father, then one hundred and thirty, to be presented to Pharaoh. The fact that Jacob blessed Pharaoh means that this aged, obscure Jew was greater than the potentate of Egypt, because the lesser is blessed by the greater (Heb. 7:7). Jacob said that his days had been few and evil. Actually he had brought most of the evil upon himself! Joseph settled his family in the best part of Egypt, and provided all they needed. Theirs was truly the more abundant life.

47:13-26 When the people of Egypt and Canaan had spent all their money for food, Joseph accepted their livestock in payment. Then later he bought all the land, except that belonging to the Egyptian priests, gave the people seed with which to plant crops, and charged them one-fifth of the crop for land rental, a very fair arrangement.

47:27-31 As Israel neared the end of his life, he made Joseph promise to bury him in Canaan. Then he bowed himself on the head of his bed (or "on the top of his staff," Heb. 11:21). Actually the same Hebrew consonants can be read either "bed" or "staff," depending on which vowels are supplied. The traditional Hebrew text reads bed, but here the Septuagint, quoted in the Hebrews passage, reads "staff." Kidner comments:

> While both versions have "bed" at 48:2, the present occasion tells of Jacob before his last illness (cf. 48:1), and "staff" may well be the right meaning. It would be an appropriate object to mention as the symbol of his pilgrimage (cf. his grateful words in 32:10), worthy of the prominence it receives in the New Testament passage.[34]

And thus the ex-supplanter was to end his life in an act of worship. He is the only hero of faith of Hebrews 11 to be commended as a worshiper. He had come a long way by the grace of God, and would soon go out in a blaze of glory.

10. Jacob's Blessing of Joseph's Sons (Chap. 48)

48:1-7 When Joseph was told that his father was sick, he hurried to his bedside with Ephraim and Manasseh. The dying patriarch sat up on the bed and adopted his two grandsons as his own. By doing this he arranged that the tribe of Joseph would receive a double portion of the land of Canaan when it would be divided among the tribes years later. Joseph thus received the birthright as far as territory was concerned. Any offspring born to Joseph after them would be Joseph's, not Jacob's, and would dwell in the territories allotted to Ephraim or Manasseh. Verse 7 explains why Jacob wanted to adopt Joseph's sons as his own. They were his grandsons by his beloved wife, Rachel, who he felt had died so prematurely.

48:8-22 Then Jacob blessed the grandsons, giving the birthright to Ephraim, who was the younger. Joseph tried to correct this in favor of Manasseh, the firstborn, but Jacob said that he had done this intentionally. What memories must have gone through his mind as he, by faith, gave the blessing to the younger. Years earlier his own father had unknowingly blessed him, the younger. But now he was blessing the younger, not through ignorance, but because he was in touch with the God who holds the future. Israel had faith that his descendants would one day return to the Promised land. Jacob gave Joseph a mountain slope which he captured from the Amorites. Perhaps this refers to the area containing the well that came to be known as "Jacob's well" (John 4:5).

11. Jacob's Prophecy Concerning His Sons (Chap. 49)

49:1, 2 Jacob's last words were both a prophecy (v. 1) and a blessing (v. 28).

49:3, 4 Reuben, as the firstborn son, represented the primacy of his father's manly strength in procreation, and held the place of power and dignity. The birthright, with its double portion, belonged to him. But he forfeited his preeminence because he boiled over with dark passion and sinned with Bilhah, his father's concubine (35:22).

49:5-7 Because these brothers had cruelly killed the men of Shechem and hamstrung an ox, Simeon and Levi would be dispersed in Jacob and scattered in Israel. By the time of the second census (Num. 26), these were the two smallest tribes. This was also fulfilled when the tribe of Simeon was largely absorbed by Judah (Josh. 19:1-9), and the tribe of Levi was assigned to 48 cities throughout the land. Jacob cursed their cruel deception but not the people of these two tribes themselves.

49:8-12 Judah (meaning praise) would be praised and respected by his brothers because of his victories over his enemies. He is likened to a lion that goes forth to capture prey, then returns to well-deserved rest that no one dares disturb. Just as Joseph inherited the birthright with regard to territory, so Judah inherited it with regard to government. Rulership would continue in this tribe till Shiloh (the Messiah) came, and in Him it would remain forever. His people would give Him willing obedience in the day of His power. The meaning of the name "Shiloh" is obscure. Some suggested meanings are:

Prince of peace, tranquil, seed (of Judah), his descendant, whose it is (cf. Ezek. 21:27).

49:13 Zebulun would enjoy prosperity from maritime commerce. Since this tribe's territory in OT times was landlocked, this prophecy may look forward to the Millennium.

49:14, 15 Issachar is likened to a strong donkey, so content to rest in pleasant pastoral surroundings that it had no will to fight for independence and so became subject to the enemy's yoke.

49:16-18 Dan, true to the tribe's name, would concern itself with judging the people. Verse 17 is difficult. It may allude to Dan's introducing the idolatry which caused the nation's fall (Judg. 18:30, 31). Many think that it is a veiled reference to the Antichrist's springing from Dan, and that this is why this tribe goes unmentioned in 1 Chronicles 2:3; 8:40 and Revelation 7:3-8. In verse 18, Jacob injects a prayer for the final deliverance of his people from their foes or for his own deliverance.

49:19 Gad, unprotected in its territory east of the Jordan, would be subjected to frequent enemy raids. But the tribe would trample the troops of its foes.

49:20 Happily for Asher (happy), this tribe would have fertile agricultural land, producing delicacies fit for a king.

49:21 Naphtali is likened to a doe that has been released from confinement. It springs forth with tremendous speed to carry good news. All the disciples except the traitor came from the territory of Naphtali, and much of the Lord's ministry was there (Mark 4:13-16).

49:22-26 Compassing the territories of Ephraim and Manasseh, Joseph is a fruitful bough, sending out blessing far beyond his own borders. He was the object of bitter hostility but he did not yield, because he was strengthened by the Mighty God of Jacob—the One from whom the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel (that is, the Messiah) comes forth. God blesses Joseph with rain in abundance, wells and gushing springs, and numerous progeny. Jacob humbly felt that he had been blessed more richly than his ancestors. Now he wishes that such blessings might come to Joseph, the one who was separate from his brothers.

49:27 Benjamin, a tribe of fighters, would continually conquer and divide the spoil. Someone has said that Benjamin proved himself the most spirited and warlike of all the tribes.

49:28-33 In closing, Jacob instructed his sons to bury him in the cave ... of Machpelah, near his home in Hebron—the burial place of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Leah. Then he drew himself back into the bed and breathed his last.

12. Death of Jacob and Then of Joseph in Egypt (Chap. 50)

50:1-14 Even the Egyptians mourned for ... seventy days when Jacob died. His body was embalmed by the palace physicians. Then Pharaoh gave Joseph permission to accompany the body back to Canaan, with a great procession of officials, relatives, and servants. They stopped east of the Jordan and mourned for seven days so deeply that the Canaanites ... called the place Abel Mizraim, the meadow (or mourning) of Egypt. Following the burial in the cave ... of Machpelah at Hebron, Joseph and his entourage returned to Egypt.

50:15-21 Now that Jacob was dead, Joseph's brothers feared that he might seek vengeance on them, They sent word to him, claiming that their father Jacob had left word that Joseph should forgive them. Joseph disclaimed any intent to seek revenge or to judge, since that was God's prerogative. He further relieved their fears with the memorable words, "You meant evil against me, but God meant it for good ... "

50:22-26 Joseph was apparently the first of the twelve sons of Jacob to die. This was fifty-four years after his father's death. His faith that God would take the people of Israel back to Canaan is eulogized in Hebrews 11:22. He gave instructions that his bones be buried in that land.

It has been pointed out that Genesis opens with God's perfect creation and closes with a coffin in Egypt. It is a book of biographies. Whereas two chapters are devoted to an account of the creation of the heavens and earth, forty-eight chapters are largely concerned with the lives of men and women. God is interested primarily in people. What a comfort and challenge to those who know Him!

EXODUS

INTRODUCTION

"To those who see theology as essentially the recital of the saving acts of God, Exodus 1-15 gives the supreme example, around which the rest of the biblical narrative can be assembled. To those who see the Old Testament as the product of the worshipping life of the community, at the heart of the book of Exodus lies the account of the institution of the passover, greatest and most characteristic of Israel's festivals ... To those who see God's tôrá, His law, as central to the life and thinking of later Israel, Exodus enshrines the law giving and contains the very kernel of the law in the form of the ten commandments."

—R. Alan Cole

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Exodus (the way out in Greek) picks up the narrative of the Israelites after the death of Joseph. The foundations of the Jewish religion in the Passover are rooted in Israel's escape from four centuries of slavery in Egypt—but only after stubborn Pharaoh has defied the God of the Hebrews and has had to suffer ten dreadful plagues on his nation, the Bible's picture of the world.

The narrative of the Red Sea crossing, many other marvelous miracles, the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and the detailed instructions for the tabernacle complete this wonderful book.

II. AUTHORSHIP

We hold to the traditional Jewish and Christian view that The Second Book of Moses, like the rest of the Pentateuch, is actually by Moses. For a defense of this position see Introduction to the Pentateuch.

III. DATE

Bible scholars have set the date of the Exodus from Egypt as early as 1580 B.C. and as late as 1230 B.C. First Kings 6:1 says that the Exodus took place 480 years previous to Solomon's starting to build the temple. Since this was about 960 B.C. it would place the Exodus at 1440 B.C., the more conservative date. Many scholars maintain that archaeology better supports a later date (c. 1290 B.C.) but other archaeological finds seem to fit the early date. We cannot be sure of the exact date, of course, but all things considered, the early date of 1440 for the Exodus event, and the somewhat later date for the Book of Exodus, seems best.

IV. Background and Theme

As Exodus opens we find the Israelites in Egypt where we left them at the end of Genesis. But the background has changed completely. It is over four centuries later; the once-favored Hebrews are now slaves, making bricks for Pharaoh's vast building programs.

The themes of Exodus are redemption and the founding of the nation of Israel. For over 3,400 years Jews the world over have celebrated this event —the escape from Egypt by power and by blood, and the beginnings of the people of Israel as an actual nation—in the Passover.

The Christian Lord's Supper, also celebrating the redemption of God's people by power and blood, grows out of the Passover, both historically and theologically. To a certain extent, the bread and wine of the communion hark back to the same elements in the Passover ritual.

After the Exodus from Egypt, the scene changes to the wilderness, where Moses receives God's Law for His people. Nearly half of the book concerns the tabernacle and its priesthood (chaps. 25-40). These details are not merely historical.

To really enjoy the book of Exodus, we need to look for Christ in it. Moses, the Passover lamb, the rock, and the tabernacle are only a few of the types (symbols) of the Lord Jesus, many of which are referred to elsewhere in Scripture (see, for example, 1 Cor. 5:7; 10:4; Heb. chaps. 3-10). May the Lord do for us what He did for the two disciples on the road to Emmaus—interpret to us "in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke 24:27).

I. ISRAEL'S BONDAGE IN EGYPT (CHAP. 1)

1:1-8 The first words of the book, "Now these are the names" (Heb., we¯elleh shemôth), constitute the title of Exodus in the Jewish tradition. How personal God is! Not numbers or notches in a computer card, but names. Jesus said of the Good Shepherd, "He calls his own sheep by name and leads them out" (John 10:3). This is very fitting here. The Israelites came down to Egypt as shepherds—but now they are slaves. But God, the Good Shepherd, has plans "to lead them out."

For explanations of the seventy persons who were descendants of Jacob, see the notes on Genesis 46:8-27. The seventy people had multiplied to a few million, including 603,550 men of war, by the time the Jewish people were ready to leave Sinai for Canaan (Num. 1:46). Verses 6 and 7 indicate that many years elapsed between the end of Genesis and the events of Exodus. The meaning of verse 8 is that a new king ... arose who did not look with approval on the descendants of Joseph; Joseph himself was already dead, of course.

1:9-10 The Israelites had so increased in number and in power that the Pharaoh thought they would pose a threat in time of war, so he decided to make slaves of the people and to destroy every male child and thus eventually wipe out the Hebrew race. Three evil rulers in Scripture ordered the slaughter of innocent children: Pharaoh, Athaliah (2 Kgs. 11), and Herod (Matt. 2). These satanically inspired atrocities were aimed at the extinction of the Messianic line. Satan had never forgotten God's promise in Genesis 3:15.

1:11-14 Pharaoh used the enslaved Jews to build the supply cities of Pithom and Raamses. But instead of being wiped out by his repression, they multiplied all the more! Pharaoh meant the hard bondage for evil, but God meant it for good. It helped prepare the Jews for their arduous journey from Egypt to the Promised Land.

1:15-19 When Shiphrah and ... Puah, who were probably the chief Hebrew midwives, saw the Jewish mothers bearing children on the birthstools, they did not kill the male children, as Pharaoh had ordered. They excused their inaction by explaining that the Hebrew children were usually born too quickly—that is, before the midwives could get to the mothers. This assertion probably had some truth to it. 1:20-22 The Daily Notes of the Scripture Union comment on the midwives:

> The reward given to the midwives in terms of a flourishing family life (v. 21) was granted them not for their falsehood but for their humanity. This is not to say that the end justified the means, still less that there are no absolute standards of morality. But in a world as charged with sin and its effects as ours has become, it may be that obedience to greater duties is possible only at the cost of obedience to lesser ones. In this as in all else, "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Foiled by the Hebrew midwives, Pharaoh now commanded his own people to enforce the decree.

II. THE BIRTH, RESCUE, AND TRAINING OF MOSES (CHAP. 2)

2:1, 2 The man of the house of Levi in verse 1 was Amram, and the daughter of Levi was Jochebed (6:20). Thus both of Moses' parents were of the priestly tribe of Levi. By faith Moses' parents hid him for three months (Heb. 11:23). This must mean that they received some revelation that he was a child of destiny, because faith must be based on some revealed word of God.

2:3-8 Jochebed's ark, like Noah's, is a picture of Christ. Moses' sister was Miriam (Num. 26:59). This chapter is full of seeming coincidences. For example, why did Pharaoh's daughter happen to bathe right where the ark was floating? Why did the baby happen to cry and thus draw out her compassion? Why was Moses' mother accepted by Pharaoh's daughter as his nurse?

2:9, 10 Christian parents should take the words of verse 9 as a sacred charge and an unfailing promise. In Egyptian, "Moses," the name given by Pharaoh's daughter, probably means child or son. In Hebrew the same name means drawn out—i.e., drawn out of the water.[1] Mackintosh remarks with his usual insight:

> The devil was foiled by his own weapon, inasmuch as Pharaoh, whom he was using to frustrate the purpose of God, is used of God to nourish and bring up Moses, who was to be His instrument in confounding the power of Satan.[2]

2:11, 12 We know from Acts 7:23 that Moses was forty years old when he visited his own people. His killing the Egyptian was ill-advised; his zeal outran his discretion. God would one day use Moses to deliver his people from the Egyptians, but the time had not yet come. First he must spend forty years on the back side of the desert, learning in the school of God. God had predicted that His people would be in the land of Egypt as slaves for 400 years (Gen. 15:13), so Moses' actions were forty years premature. He needed more training in the solitude of the desert. And the people needed more training in the brickkiln. The Lord orders all things according to His infinite wisdom. He is not in a hurry, but neither will He leave His people in affliction one moment longer than necessary.

2:13-15a When he went out the second day Moses tried to break up a fight between two Hebrew men, but they rejected his leadership, as the Hebrews were later to reject One greater than Moses. When he found out they knew he had killed the Egyptian, Moses panicked. When Pharoah heard about the killing, he sought to kill Moses, so Moses fled to the land of Midian—that is, Arabia or the Sinai area.

2:15b-22 At a well in Midian, Moses helped the seven daughters of the priest of Midian against some surly shepherds, and watered their flocks. This priest of Midian is given two names—Jethro (3:1) and Reuel (v. 18), which is the same as Raguel (Num. 10:29; NKJV marg.; LXX). The Midianites were distant relatives of the Hebrews (Gen. 25:2). Jethro's daughter, Zipporah, became Moses' wife, and a son, ... Gershom (meaning stranger there), was born to them.

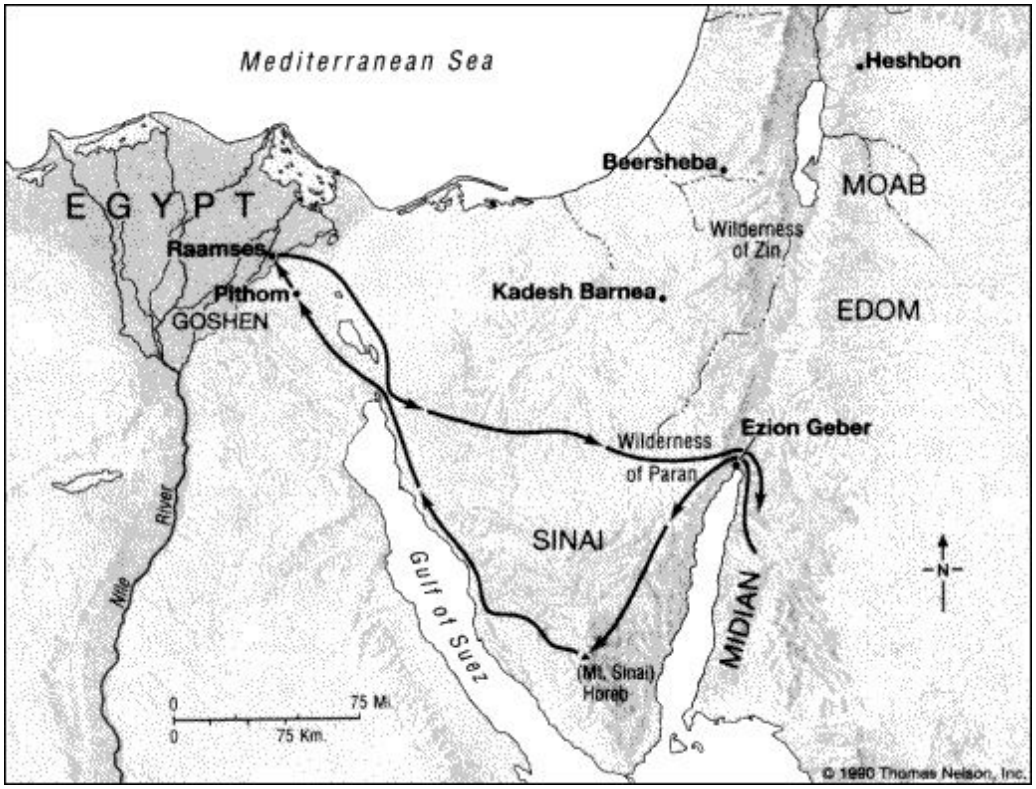
2:23-25 God was not oblivious to the plight of His people. When a new king ascended to the throne, God heard and remembered and looked upon the children of Israel and acknowledged their condition. His response was to bring His servant back to Egypt (chap. 3) to lead His people out of that land in the mightiest display of power since the creation of the world.



Moses' Flight & Return to Egypt

III. THE CALL OF MOSES (CHAPS. 3, 4)

A. The Revelation of Jehovah to Moses (Chap. 3)

3:1-4 In tending the flock of Jethro, Moses learned valuable lessons about leading God's people. When he went to Horeb (Mount Sinai), the Lord appeared to him in a bush that burned with fire but ... was not consumed. The bush suggests the glory of God, before which he was told to stand with unshod feet. It might also foreshadow Jehovah's dwelling in the midst of His people without their being consumed. And some have even seen in it the destiny of Israel, tried in the fires of affliction but not consumed. We should all be like the burning ... bush—burning for God, yet not consumed.[3]

3:5 The Lord promised Moses that He would deliver His people from Egypt and bring them into a land of abundance—that is, Canaan—inhabited by the six heathen nations listed in verse 8. The word "holy" occurs here for the first time in the Bible. By removing his sandals, Moses acknowledged that the place was holy.

3:6 God reassures Moses that He is the God of his forefathers—Abraham and Isaac and Jacob. Cole shows the importance of this revelation:

> Moses brings no new or unknown god to his people, but a fuller revelation of the One whom they have known. Not even Paul's words to the Athenians on the Areopagus are a fair parallel here (Acts 17:23). The only true parallel is the continuing Self-revelation made by God in later centuries, culminating in the coming of Christ. Yet in its day the Mosaic revelation, while a fulfilment of patriarchal promises, was as new and shattering to Israel as the coming of the Messiah was later to prove to be.[4]

3:7-12 Moses protested God's sending him to Pharaoh, citing his own inadequacy. But the Lord assured Moses of His presence and promised that he would yet serve God on this mountain (Mount Sinai) with a liberated people. J. Oswald Sanders remarks:

> His inventory of disqualifications covered lack of capability (3:11), lack of message (3:13), lack of authority (4:1), lack of eloquence (4:10), lack of special adaptation (4:13), lack of previous success (5:23), and lack of previous acceptance (6:12). A more complete list of disabilities would be difficult to conjure up. But instead of pleasing God, his seeming humility and reluctance stirred His anger. "The anger of the Lord was kindled against Moses" (4:14). In point of fact, the excuses Moses advanced to show his incapacity were the very reasons for God's selection of him for the task.[5]

3:13, 14 Moses anticipated questions from the children of Israel when he returned to them as the Lord's spokesman, and he wanted to be able to tell them who sent him. It was at this point that God first revealed Himself as Jehovah, the great I AM. Jehovah (more precisely Yahweh) comes from the Hebrew verb "to be," hãyãh. This sacred name is known as the tetragrammaton ("four letters"). English Jehovah comes from the Hebrew YHWH, with vowel markings supplied from Elohim and Adonai, other names of God. No one knows for sure the true pronunciation of YHWH because the ancient Hebrew spelling used no actual vowels in its alphabet. However, the pronunciation "Yahweh" is probably correct. The Jews consider YHWH too sacred to utter. The name proclaims God as self-existent, self-sufficient, eternal,[6] and sovereign. The fuller name I AM WHO I AM may mean I AM BECAUSE I AM or I WILL BE THAT I WILL BE.

3:15-22 Fortified by this revelation that God was really present and ready to come to His people's aid, Moses was told to announce to the people of Israel that they would soon be free. Also, he was to test Pharaoh by requesting that the Israelites be allowed to travel three days' journey to sacrifice to the LORD. This was not an attempt to deceive but a minimal test of Pharaoh's willingness. It would also prevent the Egyptians from witnessing the slaying of animals that were sacred to them. God knew that Pharaoh wouldn't yield until compelled by divine power. The wonders of verse 20 are the plagues that God sent on Egypt. By the time God was finished with them, the Egyptians would be glad to give the Jewish women anything they asked! The wealth thus accumulated would only be just compensation for all the slave labor of the Jews under the taskmasters of Egypt. The Israelites did not "borrow" jewels and clothing (as in the KJV); they "asked" for them (NKJV). No deceit was involved—only the just payment of wages.

B. The Reluctance of Moses (4:1-17)

4:1-9 Moses continued to doubt that the people would accept him as a spokesman of God. Maybe the disillusionment of 2:11-15 had eaten deep into his soul. Therefore God gave him three signs, or miracles, to confirm his divine commission. (1) His rod, thrown on the ground, became a serpent. Taken by the tail, the serpent became a rod again. (2) His hand, placed in his bosom, became leprous. The same hand, placed in his bosom again, became free of leprosy. (3) Water of the Nile, poured out on the land, became blood.

These signs were designed to convince the people of Israel that Moses was sent by God. They spoke of God's power over Satan (i.e., the serpent), and sin (pictured by the leprosy) and of the fact that Israel would be redeemed from both of these through blood.

4:10-17 Moses was still reluctant to obey the LORD, excusing himself because he was not eloquent. After reminding Moses that the Lord made man's mouth, and therefore could make him eloquent, God appointed Aaron, Moses' brother, to speak for him. Moses should have obeyed the Lord in simple dependence, knowing that His commands are His enablements. God never asks us to do anything without giving us the power to do it. Because Moses was not satisfied with God's best, he had to take God's second best—that is, having Aaron as his spokesman. Moses thought that Aaron would be a help, but he later proved to be a hindrance in leading the people to worship the golden calf (chap. 32).

C. The Return of Moses to Egypt (4:18-31)

4:18-23 Forty years after fleeing to Midian, Moses returned to Egypt at God's command and with Jethro's blessing. His wife and sons were Zipporah, Gershom, and Eliezer (18:2-4). The staff in verse 2 becomes the rod of God in verse 20. The Lord uses ordinary objects to do extraordinary things so that it can be plainly seen that the power is from God. The wonders which God commanded Moses to perform before Pharaoh were the plagues that followed. God hardened Pharaoh's heart, but only after that despotic ruler had first hardened his own heart. "Firstborn" sometimes refers to the order in physical birth, but here it means a position of honor normally held by the firstborn son, the inheritor of the birthright. Pharaoh was forewarned that if he did not obey, God would slay his son.

4:24-26 But before Moses could deliver the message, he had to learn obedience himself. He had failed to circumcise his own son (Gershom or Eliezer), possibly because of Zipporah's opposition. When God threatened to kill Moses, perhaps by serious illness, Zipporah angrily circumcised the son and secured her husband's release. She called him a "husband (or "bridegroom," NASB) of blood." This incident, plus Zipporah's apparent lack of faith in the Lord, may have been the reason why Moses sent Zipporah home to her father with her two sons (18:2, 3).

4:27-31 Aaron came out to meet Moses as he returned to Egypt. They both stood before the people of Israel, delivered the Lord's message, and confirmed it with the three signs which the Lord had given. So the people believed and worshiped the Lord.

IV. MOSES' CONFRONTATIONS WITH PHARAOH (5:1-7:13)

A. The First Confrontation (5:1-7:6)

5:1 In 3:18 God had told Moses to take the elders when he went before Pharaoh. In the meantime, the Lord had appointed Aaron as Moses' spokesman (4:14-16). So Aaron went with Moses in place of the elders. The LORD's message was unequivocal: "Let My people go."

5:2-14 When Moses and Aaron delivered their first ultimatum to Pharaoh, he accused them of distracting the people from their work. Also, he changed their work load by insisting that henceforth they would have to gather their own straw for making bricks, yet produce the same quota as before. Pharaoh was making an impossible situation for the Jews, reminding one of the Nazi treatment of the Jews in the concentration camps. They had to go throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw. The Hebrew text indicates the contempt with which these repressed people were treated. Cole points out that stubble is a poor substitute for straw since it is rough and uneven.[7]

5:15-23 Until now the straw had been provided for the Israelites. It was used to reinforce the bricks, and to keep them from sticking to the forms in which they were made. When the Jewish foremen were beaten, they protested to Pharaoh but received no consideration. Then they blamed Moses and Aaron, and Moses in turn blamed the LORD. Opposition from within the ranks of God's people is often harder to bear than persecution from without.

6:1-12 The LORD graciously answered Moses' petulant speech first by assuring him that Pharaoh would let the Israelites go because he would be compelled by God's strong hand. Then He reminded Moses that He had revealed Himself to the patriarchs as El-Shaddai or God Almighty, not primarily as Jehovah, the personal name of the covenant-keeping God. The thought here seems to be that He would now reveal Himself as Lord in a new way—that is, in new power in delivering His people. He had made a covenant and was about to fulfill it by freeing the Israelites from Egypt and bringing them into the Promised Land. Notice the seven "I will's" in verses 6-8. The name "Jehovah" had been used before, but now it took on new significance. Notice 25 personal pronouns used by God in these verses, emphasizing what He had done, was doing, and would do. Moses seems to have missed the point, being still occupied with his own inadequacy. After further reassurance, he did obey the word of the Lord (chap. 7). "Uncircumcised lips" in verse 12 and 30 means faltering speech. Moses did not consider himself a great speaker.

6:13-30 The genealogies in verses 14-25 are limited to Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, the first three sons born to Jacob. The author did not want to give a complete genealogy but only to trace the line to Moses and Aaron. So he quickly passed over Reuben and Simeon to come to the priestly tribe.

7:1-5 At the close of chapter 6, Moses wondered why the mighty Pharaoh would listen to such a poor speaker as he. The Lord's answer was that Moses stood before Pharaoh as a representative of God. Moses would speak to Aaron, and Aaron would convey the message to Pharaoh. Pharaoh would not heed, but God would deliver His people anyway!

7:6 Moses and Aaron were eighty and eighty-three years old respectively when their great ministry of deliverance began. Even in what today would be called "old age," God can use men and women for His glory.

B. The Second Confrontation (7:7-13)

Pharaoh was forewarned of coming trouble. When Aaron cast down his rod and it became a serpent, Pharaoh's magicians and sorcerers were able to duplicate the miracle through demonic powers. We learn from 2 Timothy 3:8 that the magicians of Egypt were Jannes and Jambres. They resisted Moses by imitating him and Aaron, but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods. God hardened Pharaoh's heart, not arbitrarily, but in response to his stubbornness. It was now time for the first plague.

V. THE FIRST NINE PLAGUES (7:14-10:29)

A. The First Plague—The Nile Turned to Blood (7:14-25)

7:14-18 The LORD told Moses to have a personal confrontation with Pharaoh down by the riverside when his majesty went out to the water. (He was probably bathing in the "sacred" Nile.) Moses was to warn the king that the fish would die, the river would stink and become loathsome to the Egyptians after it was turned to blood by the rod in Moses' hand.

7:19-25 Moses and Aaron did as God commanded. They stretched out the rod over the waters of Egypt. The waters of the Nile and of the land of Egypt were turned to blood, the fish ... died, and the river stank. The magicians duplicated this miracle with water found elsewhere than in the Nile. This probably encouraged Pharaoh to resist Moses' demands to let the people go. During the seven days when the Nile was polluted, the people obtained water by digging wells.

B. The Second Plague—Frogs (8:1-15)

The plague of frogs which covered the land of Egypt was so distressing that Pharaoh seemed to relent. When he asked Moses to have the plague lifted, Moses said, "Accept the honor of saying when I shall intercede for you, for your servants, and for your people, to destroy the frogs from you and your houses, that they may remain in the river only." The magicians were able to produce frogs also—as if there weren't enough already! They probably did this by demonic power, but they dared not destroy the frogs because the frog was worshiped as the god of fertility! When the frogs died the next day, there was a tremendous stench from their dead bodies. Pharaoh once again hardened his heart.

C. The Third Plague—Lice (8:16-19)

In the third plague the dust of the earth changed into gnats or lice. This time the magicians, unable to produce lice, warned Pharaoh that a power greater than theirs was at work, but the king was obdurate. The more he hardened his heart, the more it was hardened by God.

D. The Fourth Plague—Flies (8:20-32)

8:20-24 So God sent the fourth plague—swarms of flies. As the italics in the NKJV indicate, the Hebrew literally means swarms (or "mixed"), and the specific insect (flies) is supplied by the translators. Perhaps the swarms were a mixture of many species. Since most or all of the plagues were aimed at the false gods of Egypt (the Nile, and virtually every creature was a deity in Egypt!), it is possible that the beetle is meant. This would be an attack against Khepri, the god of the sacred beetle.[8]

8:25-32 Pharaoh buckled to the extent of allowing the Israelites to sacrifice to God in the land of Egypt. But this wouldn't do because they would be sacrificing animals worshiped by the Egyptians and thus incite a riot. Pharaoh made a further concession: The Jews could go into the wilderness to sacrifice but they must not go ... far. This too was unsatisfactory because God had commanded them to go three days' journey. As soon as Egypt got relief from the plague, Pharaoh changed his mind and forbade the people to go.

E. The Fifth Plague—Pestilence on Livestock (9:1-7)

After Pharaoh had been warned, God sent a pestilence, possibly anthrax, that killed all the Egyptians' livestock ... in the field. The animals belonging to the Israelites were not affected. So it was a discriminating judgment that cannot be explained by natural phenomena. All attempts to explain the plagues on naturalistic grounds dash themselves against the rocks. Not all the animals of the Egyptians were destroyed, since some are referred to in verse 19 and some were later killed on the Passover night (12:29b). Some fled into the houses (v. 20). So the "all" of verse 6a means "all in the field" or "all kinds." The ram, the goat, and the bull were sacred animals in Egypt. Now their decomposing carcasses were polluting the environment.

F. The Sixth Plague—Boils (9:8-12)

When Pharaoh steeled himself still further, God caused ashes to be turned into boils on the men and animals of Egypt. Even the magicians were affected. The more Pharaoh hardened his heart, the more it became judicially hardened by God.

G. The Seventh Plague—Hail and Fire (9:13-35)

"All My plagues" probably indicates the full force of God's plagues. The Lord reminds Pharaoh that He could have destroyed him and the Egyptians with the preceding pestilence, but instead He had spared Pharaoh in order to demonstrate His power and spread His fame. There is no thought in verse 16 that Pharaoh was predestined to be damned. Reprobation is not a Bible doctrine. The Lord used Pharaoh as an example of what happens to a person who is determined to resist the power of God (see also Rom. 9:16,17).

The next plague consisted of hail and lightning or fire, accompanied by thunder. It destroyed men, beasts, and the flax and ... barley, that were ready for harvest (cf. vv. 31, 32); but the wheat and the spelt were not struck, for they are late crops. The Israelites, dwelling in Goshen, were untouched. In response to Pharaoh's plea, Moses prayed and the plague stopped. But, as Moses expected, Pharaoh became even more adamant against letting the Hebrews leave.

H. The Eighth Plague—Locusts (10:1-20)

Moses and Aaron warned Pharaoh of an impending locust plague, but he would agree to let only the men go to hold a feast to the LORD. The women and children had to stay behind. But God would not have the men in the wilderness while their families were still in Egypt. The plague was of unprecedented severity, with locusts covering the land and eating everything edible. This showed that the god Serapis was powerless to protect from locusts. Pharaoh seemed willing to yield, but he would not let the children of Israel go.

I. The Ninth Plague—Three Days of Darkness (10:21-29)

10:21-28 The ninth plague was three days of darkness which could be felt. Only the children of Israel had light in their dwellings, an obvious miracle. The Egyptian sun god, Ra, was unmasked as impotent. Pharaoh told Moses to go to the wilderness with the women and children but to leave the flocks and ... herds behind. He thought this would guarantee their return. (Perhaps he also wanted to replenish his own herds.) But in that case, there would be nothing to sacrifice to Jehovah, and sacrifice was the reason for their departure from Egypt. When Moses was unwilling to make the demanded compromise, Pharaoh ordered him banished from his presence forever.

10:29 Moses' strong statement, "You have spoken well. I will never see your face again," seems contradicted by 11:8, where it says that Moses "went out from Pharaoh in great anger." Matthew Henry suggests that "never ... again" means "after this time," and 11:8 is included in the same "conference." He writes:

So that, after this interview, Moses came no more, till he was sent for. Note, When men drive God's word from them he justly permits their delusions, and answers them according to the multitude of their idols. When the Gadarenes desired Christ to depart, he presently left them.[9]

VI. THE PASSOVER AND THE DEATH OF THE FIRSTBORN (11:1-12:30)

11:1-10 Moses had not yet departed from Pharaoh's presence. In verses 4-8 he is still speaking to the ruler. The first three verses may be thought of as a parenthesis. In view of the tenth and final plague, God told Moses to have the Israelites ask (not "borrow," as in KJV) for gold and silver articles from the Egyptians. Moses warned Pharaoh that all the firstborn ... of Egypt would be slain at midnight of the appointed date (see 12:6), that the Israelites would not be affected by the slaughter, and that Pharaoh's officials would bow down, begging the Hebrews to leave at once and en masse. Then Moses left the potentate in great anger. The warning fell on deaf ears, and the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart still more.

12:1-10 The LORD gave detailed instructions to Moses and Aaron on how to prepare for the primary Passover. The lamb, of course, is a type of the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 5:7). It was to be without blemish, speaking of the sinlessness of Christ; a male of the first year, perhaps suggesting our Lord's being cut off in the prime of life; kept until the fourteenth day of the ... month, pointing forward to the Savior's thirty years of private life in Nazareth, during which He was tested by God, then publicly for three years by the full scrutiny of man; killed by the congregation of Israel, as Christ was taken by wicked hands and slain (Acts 2:23); killed at twilight, between the ninth and eleventh hours, as Jesus was killed at the ninth hour (Matt. 27:45-50). Its blood was to be applied to the door, bringing salvation from the destroyer (v. 7), just as the blood of Christ, appropriated by faith, brings salvation from sin, self, and Satan. The flesh was to be roasted with fire, picturing Christ enduring God's wrath against our sins. It was to be eaten with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs, symbolizing Christ as the food of His people. We should live lives of sincerity and truth, without the leaven of malice and wickedness, and with true repentance, always remembering the bitterness of Christ's suffering. Not a bone of the lamb was to be broken (v. 46), a stipulation that was literally fulfilled in the case of our Lord (John 19:36).

12:11-20 The first Passover was to be observed by a people ready to travel, a reminder to us that pilgrims on a long journey should travel light. The Passover was so named because the Lord passed over the houses where the blood was applied. The expression "passover" does not mean "pass by." Cole explains:

> Whether it was correct etymology or a pun, pesah to Israel meant "a passing-over" or "a leaping over" and was applied to God's act in history on this occasion, in sparing Israel.[10]

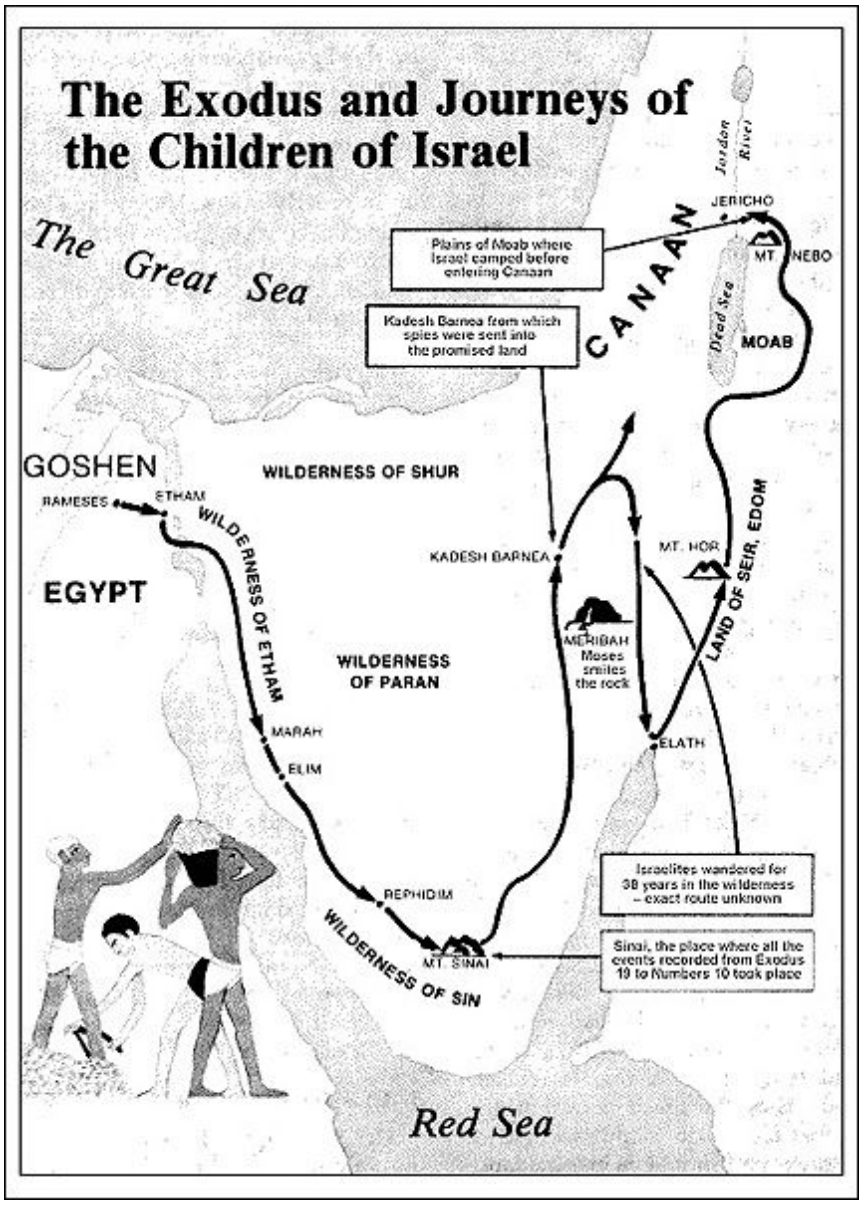
The Passover was on the fourteenth day of Israel's religious calendar year (v. 2). Closely connected with the Passover was the Feast of Unleavened Bread. On that first Passover night, the people left Egypt in such a hurry that there was no time for the dough to become leavened (vv. 34, 39). Thereafter, in keeping the Feast for seven days, they would be reminded of the speed of their exodus. But since leaven speaks of sin, they would also be reminded that those who have been redeemed by blood should leave sin and the world (Egypt) behind them. Whoever ate leavened bread would be cut off—that is, excluded from the camp and its privileges. In some contexts, the expression "cut off" means condemned to death.

12:21-27 Next we hear Moses passing on the instructions to the elders of the people. Further details are given about how to sprinkle the blood on the door. The hyssop may picture faith, which makes a personal application of the blood of Christ. The Passover would provide a springboard for teaching future generations the story of redemption when they would ask the meaning of the ceremony.

12:28-30 At midnight the blow finally fell as threatened. There was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead. The Israelites were at last permitted to leave.



VII. THE EXODUS FROM EGYPT (12:31-15:21)

A. Flight toward the Sea (12:31-13:22)

12:31-37 Verse 31 does not necessarily mean that Moses met Pharaoh face-to-face (see 10:29). What a servant says or does is often ascribed to his master. Moses had predicted that Pharaoh's servants would beg the Israelites to go (11:8).

The Israelites journeyed ... to Succoth, a district in Egypt, not to be confused with the town of that name in Palestine (Gen. 33:17). The Egyptians were only too glad to give their wealth to the Israelites and be rid of them. For the Hebrews, it was only just recompense for all the labor they had given to Pharaoh. It provided them with equipment for the journey and materials for the service of God. About six hundred thousand men left Egypt, in addition to women and children. The exact number of men was 603,550 (38:26). The total number of Israelites was about two million.

12:38, 39 There is considerable dispute concerning the date of the Exodus. A commonly accepted conservative date is c. 1440 B.C. Other scholars place it at 1290 B.C. or even later (see Introduction). A mixed multitude (that is, including foreigners) tagged along with the Israelites when they left Egypt. They are referred to as "rabble" in Numbers 11:4 (NASB), where they are seen complaining against the Lord despite His goodness to them.

12:40-42 Concerning the chronology in verse 40, see the commentary on Genesis 15:13, 14. The four hundred and thirty years mentioned here cover the total time that the Israelites spent in Egypt. It is an exact figure, to the very ... day. The important thing to see is that the Lord did not forget the promise He had made centuries earlier. In bringing His people out, He fulfilled His Word. God is not slack concerning the promise of our redemption either (2 Pet. 3:9). In a coming day, Moses' "antitype," the Lord Jesus, will lead His people out of this world to the eternal Promised Land.

12:43-51 The ordinance of the permanent Passover specified that only circumcised men were allowed to participate, whether aliens, neighbors, or servants. No foreigner shall eat it ... a sojourner and a hired servant shall not eat it.

13:1-15 God had saved the firstborn of the Israelites from death in Egypt; therefore, the firstborn of humans and of animals were to be consecrated to God, as belonging to Him. The firstborn sons became priests of God, until the tribe of Levi was later set apart for this service. The firstborn of clean animals were to be sacrificed to God within a year. The firstborn of unclean animals, such as a donkey, could not be sacrificed to the Lord; therefore, it had to be redeemed by the death of a lamb; that is, a lamb had to die in its place. If the donkey was not redeemed, then its neck had to be broken. It was a choice between redemption and destruction. Later, provision was made for the donkey to be redeemed with money (Lev. 27:27; Num. 18:15). The firstborn child, born in sin, also had to be redeemed, the payment being five shekels (Num. 18:16). This was a solemn reminder of man's unclean moral condition before God.

Just as the sanctification of the firstborn spoke of dedication to God, so the Feast of Unleavened Bread spoke of the moral purity that was expected of a redeemed people. For seven days the people were to eat unleavened bread, and their houses were to be leaven-free. Both the sanctification of the firstborn and the Feast of Unleavened Bread were to be object lessons to future generations of how the Lord had delivered His people from Egypt.

13:16 The Jews later followed verses 9 and 16 literally by making phylacteries, or little leather boxes containing portions of God's Word, and tying them to their foreheads and wrists. But the spiritual meaning is that all we do (hand) and all we desire (eyes) should be in accordance with God's Word.

13:17-20 The most direct route from Egypt to Canaan would have been through Philistine country, a trip of about two weeks along the coastal road known as "The Way of Horus." But this was a busy thoroughfare, under constant surveillance by the Egyptian army. To save His people from attack and consequent discouragement, God led them by a more southerly route through the Sinai Peninsula. The children of Israel went up in orderly ranks. They were also taking the bones of Joseph back to his native Canaan, in accordance with their ancestors' solemn oath to do so. C. F. Pfeiffer writes:

> The Biblical term for the sea which was opened before the Israelites is "Yam Suph," literally the "Sea of Reeds" (Exod. 13:18). The area now known as the Bitter Lakes may have been connected with the Red Sea in ancient times, thus accounting for the traditional rendering of "Reed Sea" by "Red Sea." There are numerous theories of the exact spot of crossing, but none has gained unqualified acceptance.[11]

13:21, 22 The Lord's presence with His people was indicated by the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. "These were," as Matthew Henry puts it, "constant standing miracles."[12] This glory cloud is known as the Shekinah, from the Hebrew word for dwell. The pillar (or column) spoke of God's guidance for His people and His protection from their enemies (Ex. 14:19, 20). In both respects it is a good picture of the Lord Jesus Christ.

B. Crossing the Red Sea (Chap. 14)

14:1-9 Chapter 14 is one of the most dramatic in the whole Bible. The Lord directed the children of Israel southward to Pi Hahiroth, somewhere west of the Red Sea. This made escape seem impossible, but made the subsequent miracle more marvelous. Pharaoh thought they were trapped and set out after them with his army of six hundred choice chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt with captains over every one of them. Pharaoh's overtaking the two million apparently helpless Israelites camping by the sea and shut in between the two is probably the origin of the popular idiom for a terrible dilemma: "Between the devil (Pharaoh) and the deep blue (Red!) sea."

14:10-14 When the children of Israel raised their eyes and saw the Egyptian army marching after them they were naturally petrified, but wisely cried out to the LORD. Yet they quickly complained to the Lord's leader, Moses, as they had once before (5:21), saying it would have been better for them to serve the Egyptians than to die in the wilderness. This was sheer unbelief on their part, and not the last instance, by any means. No longer timid, Moses told them to "stand still and see the salvation of the LORD."

14:15-18 One of the greatest miracles in all history was about to occur:

> The LORD instructed Moses, ... "Tell the children of Israel to go forward. But lift up your rod, and stretch out your hand over the sea and divide it. And the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea."

Regarding God's hardening of the hearts of the Egyptians, and gaining honor over Pharaoh and over all his military might, Matthew Henry writes:

It is a righteous thing with God to put those under the impressions of his wrath who have long resisted the influences of his grace. It is spoken in a way of triumph over this obstinate and presumptuous rebel.[13] troubled them and disabled their chariots so that they drove them with difficulty. Before they could retreat, the sea closed in on them at Moses' command. Not so much as one of them remained. The same faith that opened up the Red Sea enables us to do the impossible when we are moving forward in the will of God.

14:19-28 The Angel of God (Christ, see Judges 6 for discussion) took His place as a pillar of cloud at the rear of the host of Israel, protecting them from the Egyptians. The pillar of cloud provided light for the Israelites and darkness for the Egyptians. At Moses' bidding the Red Sea parted, forming two walls of water with a path of dry land between. The Israelites passed through safely, but when Pharaoh's army tried to follow, the LORD ...

14:29-31 The crossing of the Red Sea is set forth as the greatest display of God's power in the OT, but the greatest power of all time is that which raised Christ from the dead.

C. The Song of Moses (15:1-21)

Just as the Passover speaks of redemption by blood, the Red Sea tells of redemption by power. The song of Moses celebrates the latter. Dr. H. C. Woodring outlined it as follows:[14]

Prelude (v. 1)—The triumph of Jehovah.

Stanza #1 (vv. 2, 3)—What He is: strength, song, salvation*.*

Stanza #2 (vv. 4-13)—What He has done: victory over past enemies, deliverance of His people from Egypt.

Stanza #3 (vv. 14-18)—What He will do: victory over future enemies; bring His people into their inheritance.

Postlude (v. 19)—Contrast of the defeat of Egypt and the deliverance of Israel.

Antiphonal response by Miriam and all the women (vv. 20, 21).

Nearly three centuries ago the English commentator Matthew Henry expressed his appreciation and understanding of this great spiritual ode as follows:

We may observe respecting this song, that it is, (1.) An ancient song, the most ancient that we know of. (2.) A most admirable composition, the style lofty and magnificent, the images lively and proper, and the whole very moving. (3.) It is a holy song, consecrated to the honour of God, and intended to exalt his name and celebrate his praise, and his only, not in the least to magnify any man: holiness to the Lord is engraven on it, and to him they made melody in the singing of it. (4.) It is a typical song. The triumphs of the gospel church, in the downfall of its enemies, are expressed in the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb put together, which are said to be sung upon a sea of glass, as this was upon the Red Sea, Rev xv. 2, 3.[15]

VIII. THE JOURNEY TO SINAI (15:22-18:27)

A. The Wilderness of Shur (15:22-27)

Verse 22 begins the record of the journey from the Red Sea to Mount Sinai. Each step is filled with spiritual lessons for believers of every age. Marah, which means bitter, for instance, speaks of the bitter experiences of life. The tree suggests the cross of Calvary, which transmutes the bitter things of life into sweetness. At Marah the Lord revealed Himself as "the LORD who heals you" (YHWH R_phekã). He promised to deliver Israel from the diseases that afflicted the Egyptians. Elim, with its twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees, suggests the rest and refreshment which are ours after we have been to the cross.

B. The Wilderness of Sin (Chap. 16)

16:1-19 Journeying to the southeast, the people came to the Wilderness of Sin.[16] There they complained bitterly about the lack of food and sighed for the food of Egypt, seemingly forgetful of the terrible slavery that accompanied the food. God graciously responded by supplying plenty of quails at night and manna in the morning. The quails were provided only twice, here and in Numbers 11:31, whereas the manna was provided continuously. "Manna" means "What is it?" It was food miraculously provided by God; no attempts to explain it on a natural basis succeed. Manna was small, round, white, and sweet (v. 31), picturing the humility, perfection, purity, and sweetness of Christ, the Bread of God (John 6:48-51). Its arrival was somehow connected with the morning dew, reminding us that it is the Holy Spirit who ministers Christ to our souls. The Israelites were allowed to gather ... one omer (about three pints) per person. No matter how much or how little they gathered, seeking to approximate an omer, they always had enough and never too much. This suggests the sufficiency of Christ to meet every need of all His people, and the results achieved when Christians share with those who are in need (2 Cor. 8:15). The manna had to be gathered early in the morning, before the sun ... melted it. So we should feed on Christ at the start of each day, before the pressures of life crowd in on us. It had to be gathered daily, just as we must feed daily on the Lord. It was to be gathered on the first six days of the week; none was provided on the seventh.

16:20-31 On the sixth day the people were ordered to gather twice as much as on the other days, to tide them over the Sabbath. If they left part of it on any other day, the manna bred worms and stank. Manna was like white coriander seed, and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey. It could be baked or cooked. Moses rebuked those who went out to gather it on the Sabbath. 16:32-34 Some of the manna was placed in a golden urn and kept as a memorial, later to be placed in the Ark of the Covenant (Heb. 9:4). God rested on the seventh day at creation (Gen. 2:2), but He did not command man to do so at that time. But now He gave the law of the Sabbath to the nation of Israel. Later it became one of the Ten Commandments (20:9-11). It was a sign of the covenant made with Israel at Mount Sinai (31:13) and a weekly reminder of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Deut. 5:15). Gentiles were never commanded to keep the Sabbath. Nine of the Ten Commandments are repeated in the NT as instructions in righteousness for the church. The only one that is not repeated is the law of the Sabbath. Yet there is a principle of one day of rest in seven for all mankind. For the Christian, that day is the first day of the week, the Lord's Day. It is not a day of legal responsibility but a day of gracious privilege, when, released from secular activities, we can give ourselves more wholly to the worship and service of the Lord.

The "Testimony," meaning the "Ark" of the Covenant, is mentioned here before it ever existed. This is an illustration of the law of prior mention. The "Testimony" can also mean the Ten Commandments, depending on the context.

16:35, 36 Eating manna for forty years is a prediction of the time the Israelites would wander in the wilderness. The manna ceased when they reached Gilgal, just inside the border of the land of Canaan (Josh. 5:12).

C. Rephidim (Chap. 17)

17:1-7 At Rephidim the people contended with Moses because of a shortage of water. The Lord instructed Moses to proceed to the general area known as Horeb (meaning the desolate place) and to strike the rock with his rod. When he did, water flowed from the rock—a picture of the Holy Spirit, who was given on the day of Pentecost as the fruit of Christ's being struck on Calvary. Massah (tempting or testing) was where they tried or tested God. Meribah (chiding or strife) was where they strove with Moses.

17:8-16 Joshua (Jehovah is salvation) now comes on the stage for the first time. As the servant of Moses, he fought against Amalek in Rephidim. As long as Moses held up his hand in intercession and in dependance on God, the Israelites had the margin of victory. But when Moses' hand sagged, Amalek gained the ascendancy. Amalek, a descendant of Esau, is a type of the flesh—that is, the evil, corrupt, Adamic nature of man. Observe the following parallels between the flesh and Amalek: (1) It presents itself after the Holy Spirit is given at conversion to fight against the Spirit; (2) The LORD will have war with the flesh from generation to generation; (3) It is never eradicated from the believer till death or the Rapture of the church. (4) Two means of triumph over the flesh are suggested—prayer and the Word.

According to the ancient Jewish historian Josephus, Hur was the husband of Miriam, Moses' sister. This same Hur was later left with Aaron to supervise the people while Moses was on Mount Sinai (24:14).

The-LORD-Is-My-Banner (Heb. YHWH Nissî) is a compound name of Jehovah.

D. Moses and Jethro (Chap. 18)

18:1-12 Chapter 18 marks a distinct division in the book of Exodus. Until now we have had the manna, the stricken rock, and the stream—speaking of Christ's incarnation, His death, and the giving of the Holy Spirit. Now we seem to have a foregleam of Christ's future glory. Moses is a type of Christ reigning over the earth. We also see the Jews, represented by his sons; the Gentiles, pictured by Jethro; and the church, typified by Moses' Gentile bride, Zipporah. All these will enjoy the blessings of the Millennial Kingdom—the Jews and Gentiles as subjects in it, and the Church reigning with Christ over the earth.

The events are not in chronological order. Jethro is described as coming to Moses at Mount Sinai in verse 5, but the Israelites did not arrive at Mount Sinai until 19:2. One commentator suggests that this arrangement is to clear the way for an uninterrupted account of the meeting with Jehovah and the giving of the Law. Moses had probably left his wife and two sons in Midian when he went back to Egypt. Now Jethro brings Zipporah, Gershom and Eliezer (my God is help) to Moses for a joyous reunion. It appears that Jethro had become a convert to the one true God here, though some scholars believe he had already been a worshiper of Jehovah.

18:13-27 When Jethro saw the tremendous task that fell to Moses in judging the people, he advised his son-in-law to select men of high character, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, to assist him. Jethro's suggestion included rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens. This would ease the burden on Moses and enable the work to be handled more quickly. Some think that Jethro's counsel was divinely given, that it urged a sensible delegation of authority to others. Others remind us, however, that God never assigns tasks without giving grace for them. Up to this time God had been speaking to Moses as a man speaks with a friend, and had not been using a go-between. Therefore Moses should have carried on until God Himself made other arrangements.

IX. THE GIVING OF THE LAW (CHAPS. 19-24)

A. Preparation for Revelation (Chap. 19)

19:1-9 The children of Israel have now arrived at Mount Sinai. The rest of the book of Exodus, the entire book of Leviticus, and the first nine chapters of Numbers record events that took place here.

From Adam until this time, there had been no direct law of God. The Lord's dealings with His people had been predominantly in grace. Now He offered them a conditional covenant of law: If you will indeed obey My voice and keep My covenant, then you shall be a special treasure to Me above all people; ... you shall be to Me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. If they would obey, He would bless. Not realizing their own sinfulness and helplessness, the people readily agreed. D. L. Moody comments:

> "All that the Lord has spoken we will do." Bold and self-confident language. The golden calf, the broken tablets, the neglected ordinances, the stoned messengers, the rejected and crucified Christ, are overwhelming evidences of man's dishonored vows.[17]

THE DISPENSATIONS

There is a very major break here in the history of God's dealings with mankind, especially with His chosen nation Israel. The change in the Divine ordering of human affairs here and elsewhere indicates a change in dispensations or administrations.

Augustine once said, "Distinguish the ages and the Scriptures harmonize." God has divided human history into ages: " ... by whom also he made the ages" (Heb. 1:2 RV, marg.). These ages may be long or short. What distinguishes them is not their length but the way God deals with mankind in them.

While God Himself never changes, His methods do. He works in different ways at different times. We call the way God administers His affairs with man during a particular era a dispensation. Technically, a dispensation does not mean an age but rather an administration, a stewardship, an order, or an economy (our word "economy" comes from oikonomia, the NT Greek word for "dispensation" or "administration"). But it is difficult to think of a dispensation without thinking of time. For example, the history of the United States government has been divided into administrations. We speak of the Kennedy administration or the Bush administration. We mean, of course, the way the government was operated while those presidents were in office. The important point is the policies that were followed, but we necessarily link those policies with a particular period of time.

Therefore, we think of a dispensation as the way God deals with people during any period of history. God's dispensational dealings may be compared to the way a home is run. When there are only a husband and wife in the home, a certain program is followed. But when there are young children, an entirely new set of policies is introduced. As the children mature, the affairs of the home are handled differently again. We see this same pattern in God's dealings with the human race (Gal. 4:1-5).

For example, when Cain killed his brother Abel, God set a mark on him, so that anyone finding him would not kill him (Gen. 4:15). Yet after the Flood God instituted capital punishment, decreeing that "Whoever sheds man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed" (Gen. 9:6). The difference is due to the change in dispensations.

Another example is Psalm 137:8, 9, where the writer calls down severe judgment on Babylon: "O daughter of Babylon, who are to be destroyed, happy the one who repays you as you have served us! Happy the one who takes and dashes your little ones against the rock!"

Still later the Lord taught His people: "Love your enemies, bless those who curse you, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those who spitefully use you and persecute you" (Matt. 5:44).

It seems clear that language suitable for the psalmist living under law would no longer be suitable for a Christian living under grace.

In Leviticus 11 certain foods were designated as unclean. But in Mark 7:19b Jesus declared all foods to be clean.

In Ezra 10:3 the Jews were told to put away their foreign wives and children. In the NT, believers are instructed not to put them away (1 Cor. 7:12-16).

Under the law only the high priest could enter the presence of God (Heb. 9:7). Under grace all believers have access into the Most Holy place (Heb. 10:19-22).

These changes clearly show that there has been a change of dispensations.

Not all Christians are agreed on the number of dispensations or the names that should be given to them. In fact, not all Christians accept dispensations at all.

But we can demonstrate the existence of dispensations as follows. First of all, there are at least two dispensations—law and grace: "For the law was given through Moses, but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ" (John 1:17). The fact that our Bibles are divided into Old and New Testaments indicates that a change of administrations occurred. Further proof is given by the fact that believers in this age are not required to offer animal sacrifices. This too shows that God has introduced a new order. Hardly any Christians fail to see this major break between the Testaments.

But if we agree that there are two dispensations, we are forced to believe that there are three, because the Dispensation of Law was not introduced until here in Exodus 19, hundreds of years after Creation. So there must have been at least one dispensation before the law (see Rom. 5:14). That makes three.

And then we should be able to agree on a fourth dispensation, because the Scriptures speak of "the age to come" (Heb. 6:5). This is the time when the Lord Jesus Christ will return to reign over the earth, otherwise known as the Millennium.

Paul also distinguishes between the present age and an age to come. First he speaks of a dispensation that was committed to him in connection with the truth of the gospel and the church (1 Cor. 9:17; Eph. 3:2; Col. 1:25). That is the present age. But then he also points forward to a future age when (Eph. 1:10) he refers to "the dispensation of the fullness of times." It is apparent from his description of it that it has not yet arrived.

So we know that we are not living in the final age of the world's history.

Dr. C. I. Scofield lists seven dispensations, as follows:

1. Innocence (Gen. 1:28). From Adam's creation up to his fall.

2. Conscience or Moral Responsibility (Gen. 3:7). From the fall to the end of the Flood.

3. Human Government (Gen. 8:15). From the end of the Flood to the call of Abraham.

4. Promise (Gen. 12:1). From the call of Abraham to the giving of the Law.

5. Law (Ex. 19:1). From the giving of the Law to the Day of Pentecost.

6. Church (Acts 2:1). From the Day of Pentecost to the Rapture.

7. Kingdom (Rev. 20:4). The thousand-year reign of Christ.[18]

While it is not important to agree on the exact details, it is very helpful to see that there are different dispensations. The distinction between law and grace is especially important. Otherwise we will take portions of Scripture that apply to other ages and refer them to ourselves. While all Scriptures are profitable for us (2 Tim. 3:16), not all were written directly to us. Passages dealing with other ages have applications for us, but their primary interpretation is for the age for which they were written. We have already noted the dietary restrictions of Leviticus 11. While this prohibition is not binding on Christians today (Mark 7:18, 19), the underlying principle remains — that we should avoid moral and spiritual uncleanness.

God promised the people of Israel that if they obeyed Him, He would make them materially prosperous (Deut. 28:1-6). The emphasis then was on material blessings in earthly places. But this is not true today. God does not promise that He will reward our obedience with financial prosperity. Instead, the blessings of this dispensation are spiritual blessings in the heavenly places (Eph. 1:3).

While there are differences among the various ages, there is one thing that never changes, and that is the gospel. Salvation always has been, is now, and always will be by faith in the Lord. And the basis of salvation for every age is the finished work of Christ on the cross.[19] People in the OT were saved by believing whatever revelation the Lord gave them. Abraham, for example, was saved by believing God when He said that the patriarch's seed would be as numerous as the stars (Gen. 15:5, 6). Abraham probably did not know much, if anything, about what would take place at Calvary centuries later. But the Lord knew. And when Abraham believed God, He put to Abraham's account all the value of the future work of Christ at Calvary.

As someone has said, the OT saints were saved "on credit." That is, they were saved on the basis of the price that the Lord Jesus would pay many years later (that is the meaning of Romans 3:25). We are saved on the basis of the work which Christ accomplished over 1900 years ago. But in both cases salvation is by faith in the Lord.

We must guard against any idea that people in the Dispensation of Law were saved by keeping the law or even by offering animal sacrifices. The law can only condemn; it cannot save (Rom. 3:20). And the blood of bulls and goats cannot put away a single sin (Heb. 10:4). No, God's way of salvation is by faith and faith alone! (See Rom. 5:1.)

Another good point to remember is this: When we speak of the present Church Age as the Age of Grace, we don't imply that God wasn't gracious in past dispensations. We simply mean that God is now testing man under grace rather than under law.

It is also important to realize that the ages do not close with split-second precision. Often there is an overlapping or a transition period. We see this in Acts, for instance. It took time for the new church to throw off some of the trappings of the previous dispensation. And it's possible that there will be a period of time between the Rapture and the Tribulation during which the Man of Sin will be manifested and the temple will be built in Jerusalem.

One final word. Like all good things, the study of dispensations can be abused. There are some Christians who carry dispensationalism to such an extreme that they accept only Paul's Prison Epistles as applicable for the church today! As a result they don't accept baptism or the Lord's supper,[20] since these are not found in the Prison Epistles. They also teach that Peter's gospel message was not the same as Paul's. (See Gal. 1:8, 9 for a refutation of this.) These people are sometimes called ultradispensationalists or Bullingerites (after a teacher named E. W. Bullinger). Their extreme view of dispensations should be rejected.

19:10-20 The people were told to prepare for a revelation from God by washing their clothes and refraining from sexual intercourse. This was designed to teach them the necessity for purity in the presence of God. Mount Sinai was a forbidding place. Neither mankind nor animals were to touch it on penalty of death. A transgressor was not to be followed onto the mount but was to be shot through with an arrow or stoned from a distance. Only Moses and Aaron were allowed to ascend (v. 24), and then only when the ram's horn sounded. The mount was covered with a thick cloud; there were thunderings and lightnings, fire and smoke; the whole mountain quaked greatly. All this spoke of the terrors of meeting God, especially on the basis of lawkeeping.

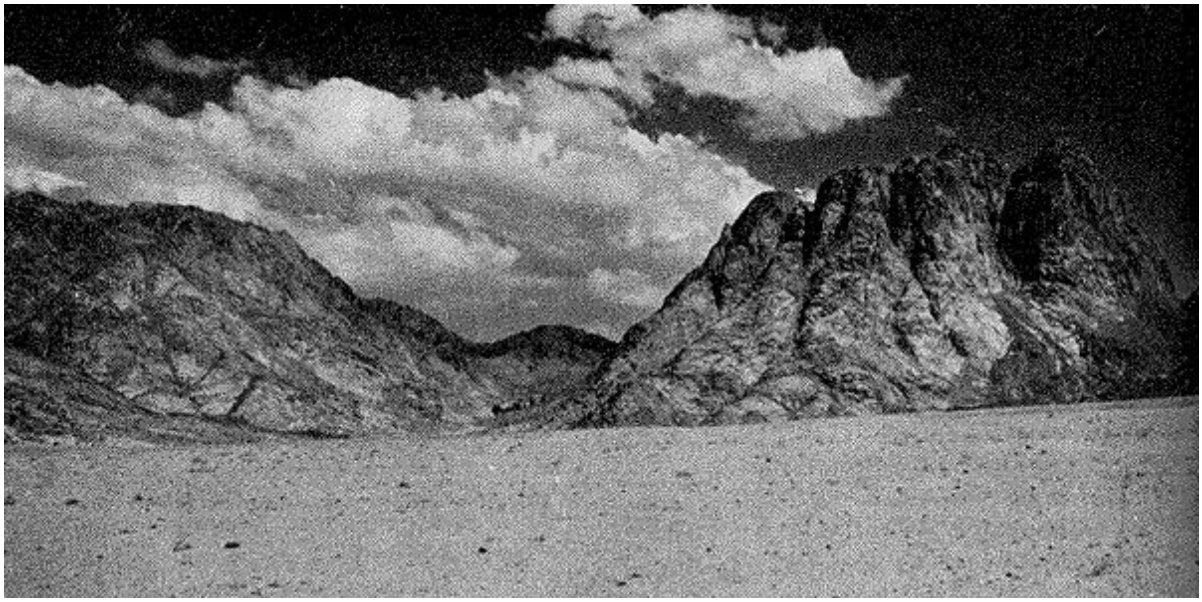
19:21-25 The LORD repeated His warning to Moses that the people should not touch the mount. Moses at first thought it unnecessary to remind the people but later obeyed. The priests in verses 22 and 24 were probably the firstborn sons.



Mount Sinai. Viewed from a trail leading to its summit, Jebel Musa (right), is traditionally considered to be the biblical Mount Horeb, or Sinai. It is located on the southern portion of the Sinai Peninsula between the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba.

B. The Ten Commandments (Chap. 20)

The Ten Commandments were divided by the Lord Jesus into two sections, one covering love to God and the other covering love to one's neighbor (Matt. 22:37-40). Some suggest that the first four commandments teach love to God, while others add the fifth. The expression "The LORD your God" is found in the first five commandments.

I.

20:1-3 Have no other gods. This is a prohibition against the worship of many gods (polytheism) or against the worship of any other god except Jehovah.

II.

20:4-6 Use no carved image. Not only the worship of idols but their manufacture is forbidden. This includes pictures, images, and statues used in worship. It does not, however, include all pictures or statues, since the tabernacle contained carved cherubim. Also, God told Moses to make a serpent of brass (Num. 21:8). The commandment undoubtedly refers to pictures or images of deity.

God is a jealous God—that is, jealous of the worship and love of His people. He visits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generations, through inherited weaknesses, poverty, diseases, and shortened lifespan. But God's mercy endures to thousands (of generations) of those who love Him and keep His commandments.

III.

20:7 Taking God's name ... in vain is forbidden. This means to swear by God's name that a false statement is actually true. It could also include profanity, cursing, minced oaths, or swearing to a promise and failing to fulfill it.

IV.

20:8-11 Remember the Sabbath day. First mentioned in Genesis 2:1-3, and enjoined in connection with the gathering of manna (Ex. 16), the Sabbath was now formally given to the nation of Israel for strict observance. It was a picture of the rest which believers now enjoy in Christ and which a redeemed creation will enjoy in the Millennium. The Sabbath is the seventh day of the week, from sundown on Friday to sundown on Saturday. Nowhere in the NT are Christians commanded to keep the Sabbath.

V.

20:12 Honor father and mother. To honor here means to obey. The verse teaches that a life of obedience to parents is the type of life which, in general, insures length of days. A life of disobedience and sin often leads to premature death. This is the first commandment with a promise attached (Eph. 6:2). It teaches respect for authority.

VI.

20:13 You shall not murder. This refers specifically to murder and not to capital punishment or to manslaughter. The command teaches respect for human life.

VII.

20:14 You shall not commit adultery. This prohibition teaches respect for marriage, and warns against exploiting another person's body. It may cover all forms of unlawful sexual behavior.

VIII.

20:15 You shall not steal. This refers to any act by which a person wrongfully deprives another person of his property. It teaches respect for private property.

IX.

20:16 You shall not bear false witness. This commandment forbids damaging the character of another person by making statements which are not true, and thus possibly causing him to be punished or even executed. It teaches respect for a person's reputation.

X.

20:17 You shall not covet. The tenth commandment passes from acts to thoughts, and it shows that it is sinful to lust after anything that God never intended one to have. Paul states that this commandment produced deep conviction of sin in his life (Rom. 7:7).

20:18-21 After the Ten Commandments were given, the people were terrified by the manifestations of the divine Presence. They were afraid they would die if God spoke to them directly, so Moses became their mediator.

20:22-26 The purpose of the Law of Moses was to show the people their sinfulness. Next, God graciously gave instructions for the erection of an altar, reminding the people that sinners can approach God only on the ground of shed blood. The altar speaks of Christ as the way of approach to God. Man could contribute nothing to the perfection of Christ, either by the tools of personal effort or the steps of human achievement. Priests ascending steps in long, flowing garments might accidentally expose themselves in a manner that would be inappropriate for such a solemn occasion.

C. Miscellaneous Laws (Chaps. 21-24)

1. Laws Regarding Slaves (21:1-11)

21:1-6 Following the giving of the Ten Commandments, God delivered many other miscellaneous laws for the conduct of the children of Israel. A Hebrew could become a slave to pay off a debt, to make restitution for a theft, or by being born to Hebrew slaves. A Hebrew servant could be required to work for six years, but in the seventh year he had to be set free.

If he was married when he became a slave, then his wife was freed with him. But if he married during his servitude, then the wife and her children were the master's property. In such a case, he could choose to remain a slave by having his ear bored to the doorpost, thus voluntarily identifying himself with his master's house. Henceforth he was "earmarked." This is a beautiful picture of Christ, the perfect Servant, who so loved us that He would not go out free, but rather went to the cross of Calvary. In view of what the Savior has done for us, we should be His willing bondslaves, saying in the words of Bishop Moule:

My Master, lead me to the door;
Pierce this now-willing ear once more.
Thy bonds are freedom; let me stay
With Thee to toil, endure, obey.[21]

21:7-11 In the case of a female slave, she could not go out free in the seventh year if her master had taken her as a wife or concubine and was willing to fulfill his responsibilities to her. If he was not willing, she had to be redeemed, but not sold to Gentiles. If he wanted her as a wife for his son, then he had to treat her as he would any daughter-in-law. If the master took another wife, he was still responsible to provide for the slave girl and to give her full marriage rights. The latter probably means nothing more than living accomodations. Otherwise, she must be freed without paying money. The fact that God gave legislation concerning slavery does not mean that He approved it. He was only protecting the civil rights of the enslaved.

2. Laws Regarding Personal Injury (21:12-36)

21:12-14 Verse 12 states the general rule that to kill another person brings the sentence of death upon the offender. An exception is provided in the case of manslaughter; if the death was involuntary, the manslayer could flee to the altar of God, or later to special cities of refuge. But in cases of willful murder, the altar of God provided no safety for the offender.

21:15-17 Parenthood was especially protected by making the striking of one's father or ... mother a crime punishable by death. Kidnapping and cursing one's parents were also capital crimes.

21:18, 19 If a man injured another in a quarrel, he was responsible to pay his loss of ... time at work and also his medical expenses.

21:20, 21 A master could punish a slave, but he did not have the right to kill him. If a servant died immediately after a beating, the master was guilty; but if the slave lived a day or two, the master was not punishable because he obviously did not intend to kill a slave who was worth money to him.

21:22 If a pregnant woman was hit as a result of a fight between two men and she gave birth prematurely, though there was no serious injury, then her husband named the amount of the fine and the judges arbitrated the case.

21:23-25 The general rule concerning personal injury was life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, etc. The penalty should suit the crime, avoiding excessive leniency or extreme severity. In practice, all cases except murder could be settled by paying a fine (see Num. 35:31).

21:26-36 If a man injured his slave's eye or tooth, the slave was allowed to go free. If an ox unexpectedly killed a person, the ox was to be stoned, and his flesh could not be eaten. If the owner knew that the ox was vicious and had been informed of it, then he too was to be put to death. But provision was made for the owner to pay a fine in lieu of his life. The fine would be the same for the death of a son or ... a daughter. For the death of a servant, the fine was thirty shekels of silver, and the ox was to be stoned. Note: Judas betrayed Jesus for the same cost that was claimed for a slave killed by an ox, thus pricing Him at the value of a dead slave. If a man left a pit uncovered, he was responsible for any loss incurred by animals falling into it. If one man's ox killed another man's ox, the value of both animals was divided equally. If the owner of the offending animal knew of its dangerous habits, then he had to pay for the slain animal, but he himself could take the dead animal.

3. Laws Regarding Stealing and Property Damage (22:1-6)

A thief had to make full restitution for what he had stolen, the amount depending on the nature of the theft. If a thief was slain while breaking in at night, his killer was not accountable; he had no way of knowing whether the motive was theft or murder. But to kill a thief during daylight hours brought guilt on the killer. If the thief of verse 1 could not make restitution, then he was sold as a slave. If a stolen animal was found alive, the thief had to restore double. If a farmer allowed an animal to stray into a neighbor's grain field, he had to restore the same amount that was grazed from the best of his own field or vineyard. Anyone who carelessly started a fire that destroyed crops had to make restitution.

4. Laws Regarding Dishonesty (22:7-15)

22:7-13 Verses 7-9 deal with the theft of money or property that was being kept in trust by one person for another. The one who stole it had to pay double. If the thief could not be found, the one holding the money in safekeeping had to appear before the judges to see if he himself was the guilty one. In any case of breach of trust, the judges decided whether the accused or accuser was guilty, then required double payment. If an animal died, was hurt, or was driven away while being held in trust, and if the trustee swore an oath before the LORD that what had happened was beyond his power to prevent, no restitution was necessary. If the animal was stolen through the trustee's lack of watchfulness, he had to make restitution. No restitution was required for a mauled animal if the carcass was produced as evidence.

22:14, 15 If a borrowed animal was injured or killed, the borrower had to make it good. But if the owner was present when it happened, and was therefore able to protect it, no restitution was necessary. No restitution was necessary in the case of a hired animal, since the risk of loss was included in the price.

5. Laws Regarding Seduction (22:16, 17)

If a man seduced an unengaged virgin to sin with him, he was obligated to marry her and to pay the regular dowry. If the father refused to give his daughter in marriage, the man still had to pay the "bride-price" to the father, since the possibility that the daughter would ever marry was now greatly reduced.

6. Laws Regarding Civil and Religious Obligations (22:18-23:19)

22:18-20 Three capital crimes in addition to murder were sorcery or witchcraft, sexual intercourse with an animal, and idolatry.

22:21-24 The Jews were to be compassionate toward strangers in their land, because they too had been strangers in a foreign land. Humane treatment was also to be accorded to widows and fatherless children. The Lord took it upon Himself to enforce this commandment. Men were appointed to punish most other violations, but in this case, God would punish directly.

He hasn't changed in His attitude toward the defenseless. He still cares for widows and orphans, and we as believers should do the same.

22:25-27 No interest was to be charged on money lent to an Israelite, though it could be charged to Gentiles (Deut. 23:20). Clothing taken as a pledge had to be returned before nightfall, since the cloak was used as a blanket.

22:28-31 It was forbidden to revile God or curse a ruler (cf. Acts 23:5). The Lord was to receive His portion, whether of crops or sons or animals. Firstborn animals were to be offered on the eighth day. It was forbidden to eat meat that had been torn by beasts. In such a case, the blood would not have been drained immediately, and to eat blood was a violation of God's law (Lev. 17). Also, there was the danger of infection from various diseases spread by animals (such as rabies), from which God was protecting His people.

23:1-12 In judicial matters, it was forbidden to circulate a false report, to conspire with the wicked to defend the guilty, to take sides with an evil crowd, or to show partiality to the poor. No spite was to be shown to an animal belonging to an enemy. If it was lost, it should be returned to its owner; and if it had fallen down with a heavy load, it should be assisted to its feet. Justice was to be shown to the poor, and the innocent and righteous were not to be condemned through wicked legal tricks. It was forbidden to take a bribe, or to oppress strangers. The seventh year was a sabbath, during which land was to lie fallow (idle). The poor were allowed to take what grew by itself that year. The seventh day was also to provide rest for master, servant, and animal. Note that the God of the OT was merciful and just, in spite of the charges made against Him by unbelieving modern critics.

23:13-17 Jews were forbidden to mention ... other gods (idols) except perhaps by way of condemning them, as the prophets did. Three great feasts were to be kept to Jehovah: (1) The Feast of Unleavened Bread. It was held at the beginning of the year, immediately after the Passover Feast. It speaks of the importance of purging our lives from malice and wickedness. (2) The Feast of Harvest, also called Pentecost and the Feast of Weeks. It speaks of the coming of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost and the formation of the church. (3) The Feast of Ingathering, also called the Feast of Tabernacles. It typifies Israel dwelling securely in the land during the Millennium. Adult males were required to attend these feasts; for others it was voluntary. In the NT we see not only Joseph, but Mary and Jesus the Boy also going up annually to Jerusalem for the Passover Feast (Luke 2:41).

23:18, 19 Leavened bread (leaven symbolizes sin) was not to be used in connection with the blood of God's sacrifice, i.e., the Passover. The fat of an offering was the Lord's because it signified the best part; it was not to be left until the morning, but probably was to be burned. The best of the firstfruits were to be brought to the house of the LORD. An animal was not to be cooked in its mother's milk. This was probably aimed against fertility rites practiced by idolaters. Strict Jews today refrain from cooking meat and milk dishes in the same pan. Also, they refrain from eating meats in cream sauces, etc.[22]

7. Laws Regarding Conquest (23:20-33)

Here God promised to send ... an Angel (the Lord Himself) before the Israelites, to lead them to the Promised Land and to drive out the heathen inhabitants. If the Jews refrained from idolatry and obeyed the Lord, He would do great things for them. Regarding the warning against disobedience, Henry writes:We do well to take heed of provoking our protector and benefactor, because if our defence depart from us, and the streams of his goodness be cut off, we are undone.[23]Their land would extend from the Red Sea to the sea of the Philistines (the Mediterranean Sea) and from the desert (the Negev south of Canaan) to the River (Euphrates).

Notice the command to drive ... out the inhabitants of the land. There were to be no treaties, no idolatry, no intermingling. God had already promised to destroy the wicked Canaanites, but Israel had to cooperate. This enshrines an important spiritual principle: God will give us victory over our enemies (the world, the flesh, and the devil), but He expects us to fight the good fight of faith.

Verse 33 finds its counterpart in 2 Corinthians 6:14-18. Separation from the world has always been God's will for His people. Israel's failure to obey this command led to her downfall. It is still true that "bad company corrupts good morals."

8. Ratification of the Covenant (24:1-8)

24:1, 2 Moses was on Mount Sinai when God spoke to him the laws and ordinances contained in Exodus 20-23. Before Moses left the top of the mountain, God told him to return with Aaron and his two sons, Nadab and Abihu, and with seventy of the elders. However, only Moses was to draw near to the LORD; the others were to remain at a distance. Under law, distance must be maintained between the sinner and God. Under grace we have "boldness to enter the Holiest by the blood of Jesus" (Heb. 10:19). Law says, "They shall not come near." Grace says, "Let us draw near" (Heb. 10:22).

24:3-8 Moses then descended to the people and delivered the law to them. They immediately agreed to keep it, little realizing their powerlessness to do so. To ratify this conditional covenant between God and Israel, Moses first built an altar with twelve pillars (for the twelve tribes of Israel). He then took ... blood from the offerings and sprinkled ... half ... on the altar (representing God's part in the covenant) and half on the people (signifying their determination to keep their part of the agreement).

9. Revelation of God's Glory (24:9-18)

24:9-11 Following this, Moses and the others went back up on Mount Sinai, as instructed in verses 1 and 2. There they saw ... God in His glory. Ordinarily, to see God would be sufficient to kill a person, but it was not so here. They were not destroyed; they saw God, and they ate and drank. In other words, they saw God and lived to eat the peace offering.

There is a seeming paradox in the Bible with regard to the matter of seeing God. On the one hand, there are verses which indicate that it is impossible to see God (Ex. 33:20; John 1:18; 1 Jn. 4:12). On the other hand, there are passages which speak of men seeing God, such as Genesis 32:30; Exodus 24:10; 33:23. The explanation is that while God in His unveiled glory is a consuming fire which would vaporize anyone looking at Him, yet He can reveal Himself in the form of a man, an angel, or a glory cloud (Deut. 5:24) which a person could see and still live.

24:12-18 A different ascent to Mount Sinai is apparently described here. This time Joshua accompanied Moses for part of the distance. In his absence, he delegated Aaron and Hur to serve as judges for the people. For six days Moses waited on the side of the mountain while the glory cloud covered the summit. Then, at God's invitation, he climbed up to the top and entered the cloud, where he was to remain for the next forty days and forty nights. Forty is the number of testing or probation. Here the testing was for the people rather than for Moses. They failed the test by plunging into sin. Thus the Lord revealed through the law what was in the heart of man.

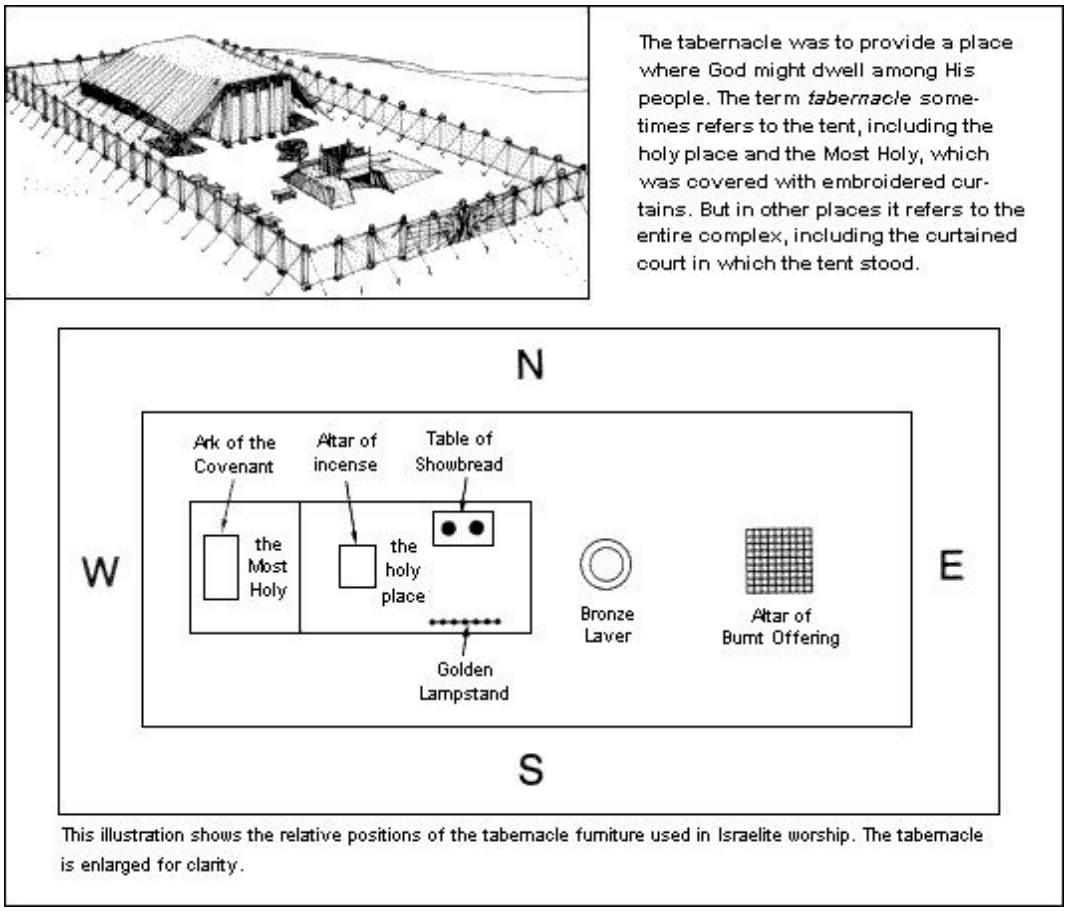
The instructions Moses received during this time are recorded up to 31:18.

X. THE TABERNACLE AND THE PRIESTHOOD (CHAPS. 25-40)

The next seven chapters deal with instructions for building the tabernacle, setting up the priesthood, and related legislation. Fully fifty chapters in the Bible are devoted to the tabernacle, showing its importance in God's sight.

The tabernacle was a tentlike structure which was to be God's dwelling place among His people. Each part of the tabernacle teaches us spiritual lessons concerning the Person and work of Christ and the way of approach to God. The priesthood reminded the people that sin had created distance between God and themselves, and that they could draw near to Him only through these representatives appointed and made fit by Him.



The Plan of the Tabernacle

A. Instructions for Building the Tabernacle (Chaps. 25-27)

1. The Collection of Materials (25:1-9)

Moses was told to take from the people an offering of the materials that would be needed in erecting the tabernacle (sanctuary). The precious metals, fine fabrics, skins, oil, spices, and precious stones were no doubt the payment the Israelites received from the Egyptians when they left Egypt. They had worked—yes, slaved—for these things. Now they were giving them sacrificially. God insisted that the tabernacle be made strictly according to the divine pattern. If this is true of a physical building, how much more important to build up Christ's congregations (the people) according to the divine NT pattern!

2. The Ark of the Covenant (25:10-16)

The ark was a wooden chest, covered inside and out ... with pure gold. On each side were rings of gold through which poles were placed for carrying it. The ark was to contain the Testimony—that is, the two tablets of the Law (v. 16) and later Aaron's rod and a jar of manna (Heb. 9:4).

3. The Mercy Seat (25:17-22)

The lid of the ark was called the mercy seat. It was a solid gold platform supporting two angel-like figures. These cherubim[24] faced one another and had their wings spread upward to meet each other. God manifested Himself in the glory cloud between the two cherubim and above the mercy seat. Cherubim are mentioned in at least thirteen books of the Bible. They are connected primarily with the holiness and righteousness of Jehovah, and are often mentioned in association with the throne of God. They are described in Ezekiel chapters 1 and 10.

4. The Table of Showbread (25:23-30)

The table of showbread was a wooden table covered with pure gold. It had an ornamental molding around the top (a crown), and a handbreadth-wide rim or frame with a second ornamental gold molding. Like the ark, the table was carried by poles placed through rings ... at the lower corners that are at its four legs. On top of the table were placed twelve loaves (v. 30) for the twelve tribes of Israel. Also, there were various dishes, pans, pitchers, and ... bowls for pouring.

5. The Golden Lampstand and Its Accessories (25:31-40)

25:31-39 The lampstand was made of solid gold. It had seven branches or arms at the top, each one holding a small lamp on a swivel with a wick for burning oil. In connection with the lampstand, there were wick-trimmers and trays for holding the pieces that were trimmed off (vv. 38, 39).

25:40 The great single requirement in making these objects was to follow the pattern which God gave on the mountain. There was no room for human improvising. So it is with all spiritual matters: We must follow divine directives and not deviate from the pattern that the Lord in His wisdom has given.

All the furniture of the tabernacle spoke of Christ in glory: the ark symbolized His deity (gold) and humanity (wood). The mercy seat pictured Christ as our mercy seat, or propitiation (Rom. 3:25). The table of showbread represented Christ as the Bread of life. The candlestick portrayed Christ as the Light of the world. The bronze altar (chap. 27) typified Christ as the Burnt Offering, wholly consumed for God. The altar of incense or the golden altar (chap. 30) pictured the fragrance of Christ to God. The laver (chap. 30) symbolized Christ cleansing His people by the washing of water by the Word (cf. Tit. 3:5; John 13:10; Eph. 5:26).

6. The Tabernacle Itself (Chap. 26)

26:1-6 Chapter 26 describes the tabernacle itself. It measured approximately forty-five feet long, fifteen feet wide, and fifteen feet high (assuming a cubit of about 18 inches). The two sides and one end consisted of upright boards, set in sockets and joined together. The other end (the entrance) had pillars.

The first covering, here called the tabernacle, was made of fine woven linen, with artistic designs of cherubim embroidered in blue, purple, and scarlet. It consisted of two sets of five curtains ... coupled together. These two sets were joined by clasps of gold that were apparently attached to fifty ... loops of blue. The total covering measured forty-two by sixty feet. It formed the ceiling and covered the sides to within eighteen inches from the ground.

26:7-13 The next covering, called the tent, was made of goats' hair. A set of five curtains was joined to a set of six curtains by bronze clasps that were connected to fifty loops. The total covering, measuring forty-five by sixty-six feet, overlapped all sides of the tabernacle except the front. There a section was folded back.

26:14 The third covering was made of rams' skins, and the fourth was made of badger skins (also translated seal, porpoise, or dolphin skins).[25] No measurements are given; these coverings were probably the same size as the goats' hair covering.

26:15-30 The upright ... boards that formed three sides of the tabernacle are described in verses 15-25. Each board was fifteen by two-and-one-quarter feet. It was made of acacia wood covered with gold and had two tenons at the bottom to fit into sockets. There were twenty boards on each side and six boards on the rear. Two special boards were made for the back corners. The boards were kept in place by wooden bars, covered with gold, that passed through gold rings on the boards. The middle bar was one continuous piece. Two shorter bars of varying lengths may have been joined together to form one bar at the top, and two others joined to form one bar at the bottom. Some think that the boards were trellised frames.

26:31-37 The tabernacle itself was divided into two rooms—first the holy place, measuring thirty feet by fifteen feet, and then the Most Holy place (the holy of holies), measuring fifteen feet by fifteen feet. These two rooms were separated by a veil made of fine woven linen and embroidered with cherubim. The veil was hung on four pillars. The ark and the mercy seat were to be put in the Most Holy place, whereas the table of showbread and the golden lampstand were to be put in the holy place. The altar of incense (chap. 30) was the only other furniture in the holy place; it was placed in front of the veil. The lampstand was on the south side of the holy place and the table on the north side. The door of the tabernacle was a woven screen, similar to the veil, but hung on five pillars of acacia wood covered with gold, and standing on bronze bases.

7. The Bronze Altar of Burnt Offering (27:1-8)

The altar of burnt offering, also known as the bronze altar, was made of acacia wood covered with bronze. It measured seven-and-a-half feet square and four-and-a-half feet high. Horns protruded from each of its four corners. It was carried by poles attached to the lower sides.

8. The Outer Court, Pillars, and Screen (27:9-19)

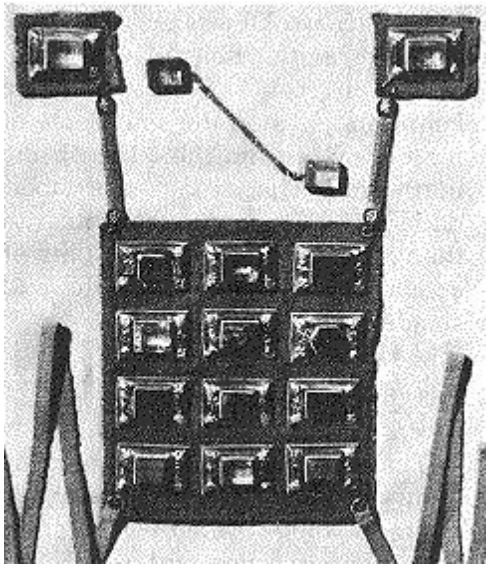
Surrounding the tabernacle itself was a large area known as the court. This was enclosed by woven linen ... hangings stretched between bronze pillars. The enclosure measured 150 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 7.5 feet high. The gate at the east end was thirty feet wide. It had a screen of embroidered linen, similar to the curtains of the tabernacle. Unless otherwise designated, all the utensils of the tabernacle were to be made of bronze.

9. The Anointing Oil (27:20, 21)

Oil for the lampstand was to be pure oil of pressed olives, a symbol of the Holy Spirit. It was to burn continually—that is, every evening, "from evening until morning." The expression "the tabernacle of meeting" or "the tent of meeting" (NASB) is used here of the tent that would be God's dwelling place, but it is used in chapter 33:7 of a provisional tent erected by Moses.

B. The Priesthood (Chaps. 28, 29)

1. The Garments of the Priests (Chap. 28)



This replica of the high priest's breastplate is set with stones representing the 12 tribes of Israel. On each stone the name of the one tribe is engraved.

28:1, 2 Chapter 28 deals with the garments of the high priest and of his sons. These garments, their colors, the jewels, etc., all speak of the various glories of Christ, our Great High Priest. The family of Aaron was the priestly family.

28:3-29 The high priest had two sets of garments: (1) garments of glory and beauty, richly colored and intricately embroidered; (2) plain white linen garments. The former are described here (vv. 2-4). The ephod (vv. 6,7) was similar to an apron, with two sections joined at the shoulders and open at the sides. The intricately woven band (v. 8) was a belt which went around the waist just above the hem of the ephod. The settings (v. 13) were of gold filigree to hold precious stones. On each shoulder was placed an onyx stone engraved with the names of ... six of the tribes of Israel (vv. 9-12). On the front of the ephod rested the breastplate, containing twelve precious stones, each one bearing the name of a tribe. The breastplate was attached to the ephod by gold chains (vv. 13-28). Thus the high priest carried the tribes of Israel before God on his shoulders (v. 12—the place of strength) and over his heart (the place of affection; v. 29).

28:30 The breastplate is called the breastplate of judgment (vv. 15, 29, 30), probably because the Urim and Thummim were in it and were used to determine the judgments of the Lord (Num. 27:21).

The expression "Urim and Thummim" means lights and perfections. We do not know exactly what these were, but we do know (as explained above) that they were connected with the breastplate and that they were used to obtain guidance from the Lord (1 Sam. 28:6).

28:31-35 The robe of the ephod was a blue garment worn underneath the ephod. It extended below the knees. On the hem were small bells and pomegranates, speaking of testimony and fruit. The sound of the bells had to be heard when Aaron entered or left the holy place.

28:36-38 On the headcovering, or turban, the high priest wore a golden plate or miter bearing the words "HOLINESS TO THE LORD," which was always to be on his forehead. It was for the iniquity of the holy things, a reminder that even our most sacred acts are stained with sin. As Archbishop Beveridge once said, "I cannot pray but I sin ... . My repentance needs to be repented of and my tears need to be washed with the blood of my Redeemer."[26]

28:39-43 The woven tunic of checkered work was a linen coat which the high priest wore underneath the blue robe. This had a woven ... sash. Aaron's sons wore plain white tunics, sashes, and hats ... for glory and beauty (v. 40). As underclothing, they wore linen trousers. They were clothed from head to ankles, but there was no covering on their feet. This is because they were on holy ground when they ministered to the Lord (3:5). The word rendered "consecrate" (v. 41) literally means to fill the hand (that is, with offerings).

2. The Consecration of the Priests (Chap. 29)

29:1-9 God ordained Aaron and his sons as the first priests. After that the only way to become a priest was by being born into the priestly tribe and family. In the church the only way to become a priest is by the new birth (Rev. 1:5,6). For man to ordain priests is sheer human presumption.

The ritual described here was carried out in Leviticus 8. The consecration of the priests is somewhat similar to the cleansing of lepers (Lev. 14). In both cases, sacrificial blood was applied to the person himself, teaching the necessity for expiation before sinful man can approach God.

The materials for the offerings are introduced in verses 1-3; detailed instructions are given later concerning their use. The first step in the consecration of the priests was the washing of Aaron and his sons ... with water at the door of the tabernacle (v. 4). Second, Aaron was clothed with the garments described in the previous chapter (vv. 5, 6). Then he was anointed with oil (v. 7). Next, the sons were clothed in their priestly tunics (vv. 8,9).

29:10-21 Three offerings followed: a bull for a sin offering (vv. 10-14); a ram for a burnt offering (vv. 15-18); another ram of consecration (vv. 19-21). Laying hands on the head of a sacrificial victim signified identification with it and indicated that the animal was to die in place of the offerer (v. 10). The blood, of course, was a picture of the blood of Christ, shed for the forgiveness of sins. The fat was considered the choicest part of the animal and was therefore offered to the Lord (v. 13). The first ram was completely burned on the altar (vv. 15-18). This speaks of Christ's complete devotion to God and His being completely offered up to God. The blood of the second ram (the ram of consecration) was to be put ... on the tip of the right ear of Aaron ... and ... his sons, on the thumb of their right hand, upon the big toe of their right foot (v. 20), and sprinkled on their garments (v. 21). This signified the need of cleansing from sin in every area of human life—the ear for obedience to God's Word, the hand for action or service, and the foot for walk or deportment. It might seem strange that the priests' beautiful garments should be sprinkled with blood; atoning blood might not seem attractive in man's eyes, but it is absolutely necessary in the sight of God.

29:22-34 Next, Moses was ordered to fill the priests' hands with the materials necessary for sacrifice and thus authorize them to sacrifice (vv. 22-28). The first offering (vv. 22-25) was to be waved before the LORD and then burned on the altar of burnt offering. The breast of the ram was waved before the LORD, perhaps horizontally, and the shoulder or thigh was heaved before the Lord, doubtless vertically. These two portions were then given to the priests for food (vv. 26-28). The waved breast speaks of God's affection for us, and the heaved shoulder symbolizes His power stretched forth in our behalf. Aaron's garments became the property of his sons after him, since the priesthood was handed down from father to son (vv. 29, 30). The food of the priests and how it was prepared is described in verses 31-34.

29:35-46 The consecration ceremony lasted seven days, with the sacrifices repeated every day and the altar cleansed by blood and anointed with oil (vv. 35-37). From then on, the priests were required to offer on the altar of burnt offering two lambs which were one year old—one lamb ... in the morning and the other in the evening of every day at twilight (vv. 38-42). God then promised to meet with the people at the ... tabernacle, to dwell among them and to be their God (vv. 43-46).

C. Further Instructions Concerning the Tabernacle (Chaps. 30, 31)

1. The Altar of Incense (30:1-10)

The altar of incense was a gold-plated wooden altar which stood in the holy place. It was eighteen inches square and three feet high. It was also known as the golden altar. On this altar, incense was burned both morning and evening, picturing the intercessory work of Christ on our behalf. Although this altar was in the holy place, it was so intimately connected with the holy of holies that the writer to the Hebrews possibly mentions it as being behind the second veil (Heb. 9:4, KJV), although the word in Hebrews can also be translated censer (NKJV).[27] The altar was carried on poles that were placed through rings that were under the molding on opposite sides.

2. The Redemption Money (30:11-16)

God ordered every male Israelite twenty years old and above to pay half a shekel as a ransom for himself. This payment, the same for rich and poor, was levied whenever there was a census and was used to finance the service of the tabernacle. It guaranteed protection against plague (v. 12). At the outset it was used to make silver sockets to support the boards of the tabernacle. Silver speaks of redemption, which is the foundation of our faith. Redemption is needed by all and is available to all on the same terms.

3. The Laver (30:17-21)

The laver of bronze stood between the entrance to the tabernacle of meeting and the altar. It was a basin where the priests could wash their hands and their feet. It was made of the bronze mirrors donated by the women (38:8). No dimensions are given. Any priest who handled holy things before washing was sentenced to death. This is a solemn reminder that we must be spiritually and morally clean before entering any service for the Lord (see Heb. 10:22).

4. The Anointing Oil (30:22-33)

A holy anointing oil was used to anoint the tabernacle, its furniture, and the priests themselves. It was not to be used for any other purpose. Oil in Scripture is often a type of the Holy Spirit. The anointing of the priests signifies the necessity for enduement of the Spirit in all divine service.

5. The Incense (30:34-38)

The incense was a perfume made of various spices that was burned on the golden altar of incense morning and evening. Like the oil, it was not to be imitated or used elsewhere.

6. The Gifted Artisans (31:1-11)

God appointed gifted artisans, Bezalel[28] and Aholiab, to construct the tabernacle ... and all its furniture. They supervised other workers in this holy task (v. 6b). The repetition of "I" in this paragraph shows that with the divine command there is divine enablement. The Lord appoints His workers, endows them with ability and talent, and gives them a work to do for His glory (v. 6). The work is all the Lord's, but He accomplishes it through human instrumentality, then rewards His agents.

7. The Sign of the Sabbath (31:12-18)

31:12-17-17 Keeping the Sabbaths was to be a sign between God and Israel. No work was to be done on the seventh day, not even the building of the tabernacle. Disobedience was punishable by death.

31:18 At this point the Lord gave Moses two tablets of ... stone inscribed with the Law of God—that is, the Ten Commandments (cf. Deut. 10:4).

THE TABERNACLE: GOD'S PICTURE OF CHRIST

Basically the tabernacle speaks of Christ, the Word who became flesh and "tabernacled" among us (John 1:14 Greek).[29]

It can also be used as picturing God's way of salvation and the subsequent life and ministry of the believer.

But although it pictures the way of salvation, it was given to a people who were already in covenant relationship with God. Rather than providing a way of salvation, the tabernacle offered the means by which the people could be cleansed from outward, ritual defilement and thus be able to approach God in worship.

The tabernacle and the services connected with it were copies of things in the heavens (Heb. 8:5; 9:23, 24). This does not mean that there must be a structural or architectural likeness in heaven, but that the tabernacle pictures spiritual realities in heaven. Notice these correspondences:

The earthly sanctuary

(Heb. 9:1-; 5) • The heavenly sanctuary

(Heb. 8:2; 9:11-15)

The Holiest of all

(Heb. 9:3b) • The Holiest, God's presence

(Heb. 10:19)

The veil (Heb. 9:3a) • The veil, Christ's body

(Heb. 10:20)

The blood of animals

(Heb 9:13) • The blood of Christ

(Heb. 9:14)

The altar (Heb. 7:13; Ex. 27:1-8) • Christ, our altar (Heb. 13:10)

The high priest (Heb. 5:1-4) • Christ, our Great High Priest

(Heb. 4:14, 15; 5:5-10; 7:20-28; 10:12)

The sacrifices (Heb. 10:1-4, 11) • Christ, our sacrifice (Heb. 9:23-28; 10:12)

The ark (Heb. 9:4) • The throne of grace (Heb. 4:16)

The altar of incense

(Heb. 9:4, KJV) • The altar of incense in heaven

The Linen Curtains Forming the Outer Court (150 ft. x 75 ft.)

The curtains were made of white, fine-twined linen, symbolizing the perfect righteousness of God. They were 71/2 feet high, forming a barrier that prevented man from seeing over them. This suggests man's failure to reach God's standard of righteousness (Rom. 3:23) and the sinner's inability to see or understand the things of God (1 Cor. 2:14). The curtains were held upright by 56 pillars that stood in bronze sockets and had silver hooks and bands.

The Gate

To enter the court, a person had to go through the door or gate. There was only one way of entrance, just as Christ is the only way to God (John 14:6; Acts 4:12). The gate was 30 feet wide, picturing the sufficiency of Christ for all mankind (John 6:37; Heb. 7:25).

The curtains forming the gate were made of white linen, embroidered with blue, purple, and scarlet. This typifies Christ as presented in the four Gospels:

Purple • Matthew • The King (Matt. 2:2)

Scarlet • Mark • The lowly Servant, suffering for sins, that are likened to scarlet in Isaiah 1:18

White • Luke • The perfect man (Luke 3:22)

Blue • John • The heavenly One (John 3:13)

The Bronze Altar of Burnt Offering (7 1/2 ft. sq., 41/2 ft. high)

The first object in the inner court was the altar. This was the place of sacrifice. It speaks of the cross of Christ at Calvary (Heb. 9:14, 22). This is where the sinner must begin in approaching God. The altar was made of bronze and acacia wood, the incorruptible wood of the wilderness. Bronze speaks of judgment and the wood pictures Christ's sinless, incorruptible humanity. He who knew no sin bore God's judgment against our sins (2 Cor. 5:21).

The altar was hollow, with a grating halfway down, on which the animal was placed. There were four horns overlaid with bronze, one at each corner (Ex. 27:2). Apparently the sacrifice was tied to these horns (Ps. 118:27b). It was not cords or even nails that bound our Savior to the cross, but His everlasting love for us.

When an Israelite brought a burnt offering, he laid his hand on the head of the victim, identifying himself with it, and saying in this way that the animal would die in his place. It would be a substitutionary sacrifice. The animal was slain and its blood poured out, pointing forward to the blood of Christ, without which there is no forgiveness of sins (Heb. 9:22).

All except the skin was burned on the altar. Here, as so often, the type breaks down because Christ was totally devoted to the Father's will at Calvary.

It was a sweet aroma offering, reminding us of God's complete satisfaction with the work of Christ. And it made atonement for the offerer.

The Laver

The laver was made of bronze from the mirrors of the women (Ex. 38:8). J. H. Brown remarks: "They handed over those things that were used for self-gratification, those things that in some measure ministered to the gratification of the flesh." Self-judgment must precede worship (1 Cor. 11:31).

The laver was for the priests. It spoke of the necessity of cleansing for service (Isa. 52:11). The priests were bathed once on entering their office (Lev. 8:6). After that, they were required to wash their hands and feet regularly. One bath—many cleansings. Today all believers are priests (1 Pet. 2:5, 9). We need the bath of regeneration only once (John 3:5; 13:10; Tit. 3:5). But we need to constantly wash our hands (for service) and our feet (for the godly walk) (John 13:10). We do this with the water of the Word (Ps. 119:9-11-11; John 15:3; Eph. 5:26).

The laver may have had an upper basin for washing the hands and a lower one for washing the feet. The Bible does not describe the exact form or size of the laver.

The Tabernacle Itself (15 ft. x 45 ft.)

The structure itself was outwardly plain but inwardly beautiful. Everything inside was covered with gold or was embroidered work. It suggests Christ, who tabernacled among us (John 1:14); He had no beauty outwardly that we should desire Him (Isa. 53:2b), but inwardly He is altogether lovely.

There were four coverings in the following order from the inside out:

Fine embroidered linen • Thre righteousness and beauty of Christ.

Goat's hair • The atonement if Christ, who became our Scapegoat (cf. Lev. 16)

Ram's skins, dyed red • The consecration of Christ (cf. the ram of consescration, Ex. 29:19-22)

Badger skins • These are also translated porpoise skins, dolphin skins, and the hides of sea cows. They protected the tabernacle from the elements, suggesting Christ's guarding his people from outward evil.

The Boards

Some think these were lattice frames rather than solid boards. In any case, they picture believers, forming a unified habitation of God in the Spirit (Eph. 2:22). They were made of acacia wood overlaid with gold, representing our humanity and our position in Christ. God sees us in Him. The boards were 15 feet high and were joined together by five horizontal bars covered with gold (Ex. 26:26-28). The middle one went through the boards, perhaps a type of the Holy Spirit. Each board was held in place by tenons in two silver sockets. Silver speaks of redemption (cf. Ex. 30:15 where the silver shekel was the atonement money). The believer's foundation is the redemptive work of Christ (1 Pet. 1:18, 19).

The Holy Place

The veil leading to the holy place suggests Christ as the way to communion with God (Eph. 2:18; 3:12). There was no chair in the holy place because the priests' work was never completed. Contrast the once-for-all work of Christ (Heb. 10:12).

The Table of Showbread (36 in. long, 18 in. wide, 27 in. high; on the north side)

The table was made of acacia wood overlaid with gold, picturing the humanity and deity of our Lord. There were twelve unleavened loaves on the table, symbolizing God's people as they appear before God in association with Christ. The bread was surrounded by two crowns of gold, just as we are kept secure by the crowned, glorified Christ.

The Lampstand (Weighed 75 lbs. No dimensions given; on the south side)

Made of beaten gold, it had a base and a stem rising from it, out from which rose seven arms with an oil lamp on top of each. It was the only source of light in the tabernacle. It may picture the Holy Spirit in His ministry of glorifying Christ (John 16:14) or it may speak of Christ as the One who is the light of heaven (Rev. 21:23) and the source of all spiritual light (John 8:12). The pure gold speaks of deity.

The lamps burned from evening until morning (Ex. 27:21; 1 Sam. 3:3).

The Altar of Incense (18 in. sq. and 36 in. high; before the veil in the center)

It was made of acacia wood and gold, typifying the humanity and deity of Christ. It pictures the glorified Christ interceding for His people (Heb. 7:24-26; Rev. 8:3, 4). The incense speaks of the fragrance of His Person and work. The fire had to come from the altar of burnt offering, the fragrance of Christ's offering of Himself without spot to God.

The incense was made of stacte, onycha, galbanum, and frankincense—all combining to make one fragrance—the sweet aroma of Christ (Eph. 5:2).

The Most Holy Place

The veil leading to the Most Holy Place speaks of the flesh of Christ (Heb. 10:19-22-22), rent in death at Calvary (Luke 23:45). Whereas only the priests could enter the holy place, and only the high priest could enter the Holiest on only one day of the year, believers now have access to God's presence at any and all times (Heb. 10:19-22).

The Ark (3 3/4 ft. long, 2 1/4 ft. wide and high)

This was a chest of acacia wood plated with gold. It spoke of the throne of God. There are two ways of thinking of its contents, one man-centered and somewhat negative, and one Christ-centered, and very positive:

First, it contained three memorials of rebellion (manna, Ex. 16:2, 3; the law, Ex. 32:19; Aaron's rod, Num. 17:1-13) and thus may picture Christ bearing the curse because of our rebellion.

Or the manna may picture Christ as the Bread of God; the law as that expression of God's holiness which the Lord magnified and made glorious; and Aaron's rod as Christ in resurrection, a Priest of God's own choosing.

The Mercy Seat

The mercy seat was a lid for the ark. On top were two cherubim, made of beaten gold, guardians of God's throne and defenders of His righteousness. They looked down on the blood that was sprinkled before the ark and on the mercy seat. The blood of Christ satisfies God's righteousness and hides all our transgressions from view. Thus a judgment seat becomes a mercy seat. Christ is our Mercy Seat (same word as propitiation, 1 Jn. 2:2). God meets the sinner in Christ.

The Glory Cloud

When the tabernacle was completed, the Lord appeared on the mercy seat in a glory cloud, also known as the Shekinah; from the Hebrew word for dwell. This was a visible symbol of His glory.

D. An Outbreak of Idolatry (Chaps. 32, 33)

1. The Golden Calf (32:1-10')

Impatient at Moses' delay in returning to them, the people asked Aaron to make an idol for them. He meekly complied by converting their golden earrings into a golden molded calf, an act that was expressly forbidden (Ex. 20:4). Then they broke out in revelry, worshiping the idol and eating, drinking, and playing immorally. They professed to be worshiping the LORD (v. 5), but by means of the calf. God had blessed His people with gold when they left Egypt (12:35, 36), but the blessing turned into a curse through the sinful hearts of the people. God informed Moses what was going on at the foot of the mountain (vv. 7, 8) and threatened to destroy this people (vv. 9, 10).

2. The Intercession and Anger of Moses (32:11-35)

32:11-13 In his reply, Moses stands out as one of the great intercessors of the Bible. Notice the strong arguments he uses: The people were the Lord's people (vv. 11, 12). God had cared for them enough to deliver them from Egypt (v. 11). The Egyptians would gloat if God did to His people what the Egyptians had been unable to do (v. 12). God must be true to the covenants He made with the patriarchs (v. 13).

32:14 "So the LORD relented of the harm ... " (v. 14). The word harm means punishment in this context. In response to the intercession of Moses, the Lord turned away from the punishment which He otherwise would have inflicted on His people.

32:15-20 Moses descended the mountain with the two tablets of the Testimony, met Joshua on the way, and came to the people as they were carrying on their sensual, idolatrous feast. In righteous anger, he ... broke the tablets of the law as a witness of what the people had already done. He then ground the golden calf ... to powder, scattered it on the water and made the people drink it (v. 20)—perhaps a suggestion that our sins return to us as a bitter potion.

32:21-24 When Moses asked Aaron what the people had done to deserve this treatment, Aaron explained to him what had happened, implying that the golden calf had come out of the fire rather mysteriously (v. 24). It was only because of the intercession of Moses that the Lord did not kill Aaron (Deut. 9:19, 20).

32:25-29 Some of the people were still carrying on without restraint. When Moses called for loyal followers, the tribe of Levi responded and proceeded to slay with the sword those who were "out of control" (NASB). Even close relatives were not spared (vv. 25-29). Here the broken law brought death to three thousand ... people. At Pentecost the gospel of grace brought salvation to 3,000 people. The heroic loyalty of the Levites may be why theirs was chosen to be the priestly tribe (see v. 29).

32:30-35 Moses returned up the mountain to meet the LORD, thinking that he might make atonement for the people's sin (vv. 30-32). The Lord's answer was twofold: First, He would punish the people who made the calf (He did this by sending a plague—v. 35); second, He would send His Angel to go before Moses as he led the people to the Promised Land. The character of Moses shines out in verse 32—he was willing to die for his people. "Blot me out of Your book" is a figurative way of saying "end my life."[30] God spared Moses but He did not spare His beloved Son. How like our Lord who died, the Just for the unjust!

3. The Repentance of the People (33:1-6)

The Lord refused to accompany the sinful Israelites on their journey to Canaan, lest He be compelled to destroy them on the way. Instead, He would send an Angel as His representative. When the people heard this bad news, they mourned and stripped themselves of their ornaments, such as had been used to make the golden calf, and never wore them from Mount Horeb onward.

4. Moses' Tent of Meeting (33:7-11)

The tent mentioned in verse 7 was not the tabernacle, which had not yet been erected, but a provisional tent pitched by Moses and called here "the tabernacle (tent) of meeting." Individuals who desired to seek the Lord could go there, outside the camp. The camp itself had been defiled by the sin of the people, so the tent was situated outside. When Moses entered the tent, the pillar of cloud descended, indicating God's presence. Verse 11 cannot mean that Moses saw God in His essential being. It simply means that he had direct, face to face, unhindered communion with God. It is worth noting that Joshua, then a young man, did not depart from the tabernacle. Perhaps this was the secret of his later spiritual success.

5. The Prayer of Moses (33:12-23)

33:12-17 Moses asked for God's presence to lead His people to Canaan. Then the Lord graciously promised that His Presence would go with them. Moses insisted that nothing short of this would do. Like Noah, Moses had found grace in the Lord's sight and received his request. "Safety does not consist in the absence of danger but in the presence of God."

33:18-23 Next Moses asked for a sight of God's glory. God replied by promising to reveal Himself as a God of grace and compassion (see Ex. 34:6, 7). Moses could not see God's face ... and live, but he would be permitted to stand on a rock while God's glory passed by, and he would see an appearance of God's back. This is figurative language, of course, since God does not have a body (John 4:24). As Hywel Jones put it, "Moses is to see the afterglow which is a reliable indication of what the full splendor is to be."[31]

No one can see God's face and live (v. 20). This means that no one can look upon the unveiled glory of God; He dwells "in unapproachable light, whom no man has seen or can see" (1 Tim. 6:16). In that sense, no one has seen God at any time (1 Jn. 4:12). How then do we explain passages in the Bible where people saw God and did not die? For example, Hagar (Gen. 16:13); Jacob (Gen. 32:30); Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel (Ex. 24:9-11-11); Gideon (Judg. 6:22,23); Manoah and his wife (Judg. 13:22); Isaiah (Isa. 6:1); Ezekiel (Ezek. 1:26, cf. 10:20); John (Rev. 1:17).

The answer is that these people saw God as represented by the Lord Jesus Christ. Sometimes He appeared as the Angel of the LORD (see Judges 6 for a discussion of this doctrine), sometimes as a Man, and once manifested Himself as a Voice (Ex. 24:9-11; cf. Deut. 4:12). The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, has fully declared God (John 1:18). Christ is the brightness of God's glory and the express image of His Person (Heb. 1:3). That is why He could say, "He who has seen Me has seen the Father" (John 14:9).

E. The Covenant Renewed (34:1-35:3)

34:1-9 Again Moses alone was called up ... to Mount Sinai, this time with two tablets of stone which he himself had prepared. There the Lord revealed Himself as a merciful and gracious God, longsuffering, and abounding in goodness and truth (vv. 6, 7).

Three different words are used in verse 7 for wrongdoing. Iniquity has to do with perverting the ways of the Lord. Transgression means rebellion against God. Sin is literally "offense," primarily by missing the mark which God has set. They all convey the idea of falling short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23). The Israelites should all have died for having broken the law of God, but God spared them in mercy. Moses worshiped the Lord and pled for His presence and grace on the basis of His people's unworthiness (vv. 8, 9).

34:10-17 God then renewed the covenant, promising to do marvels for Israel in driving out the inhabitants of Canaan. He cautioned them against intermingling with the heathen or adopting their idolatrous practices. Asherim were obscene images, or phallic idols, symbols of fertility. Because God had made a covenant with His people, they were not to make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land. It is impossible to be joined to God and to idols at the same time (see 1 Cor. 10:21).

34:18-27 God then repeated instructions concerning the Feast of Unleavened Bread (v. 18); the consecration of the firstborn (vv. 19, 20); the Sabbath (v. 21); the Feast of Weeks and the Feast of Ingathering (v. 22). All males were to appear before the LORD for the three annual feasts mentioned in 23:14-17 (vv. 23,24). Note in verse 24 that God promised to control the wills of the Canaanites so that they would not try to seize the property of the Jewish men when the latter went to Jerusalem three times a year. After repeating other rules (vv. 25, 26), the LORD ordered Moses to write down the words He had just spoken in verses 11-26 (v. 27). Then the Lord Himself wrote ... the Ten Commandments ... on the tablets of stone (v. 28; cf. v. 1 and Deut. 10:1-40-4).

34:28-35 After forty days and forty nights on the mountain, Moses came down with the two tablets in his hand (vv. 28,29a). He was unaware that his face was shining as a result of being in the Lord's presence (vv. 29b, 30). People were afraid to come near him. After delivering the commandments of the Lord to Israel, he put a veil on his face (vv. 31-33). Verse 33 (NKJV) reads "And when Moses had finished speaking ... " instead of "Till ... " (KJV). Paul explains in 2 Corinthians 3:13 that Moses veiled his face so the people would not see the fading glory of the law, the legal dispensation.

35:1-3 Then Moses gathered all the congregation ... together and repeated the law of the Sabbath to them.

F. Preparation of the Tabernacle Furnishings (35:4-38:31)

1. The People's Gifts and the Gifted People (35:4-36:7)

35:4-20 Moses gave instructions for a free-will offering to the LORD consisting of materials for the building of the tabernacle (vv. 4-9). He also called for gifted artisans to make the various parts (vv. 10-19). God had two buildings for worship, the tabernacle and the temple. Both were paid for in advance. God moved the hearts of His people to supply what was needed (vv. 5, 21, 22, 26, 29). Our giving and service should likewise be voluntary and ungrudging.

35:21-36:1 Many of the people responded generously with the treasures they had brought from Egypt (vv. 21-29). Those who had given gold for the calf lost it all. Those who invested in the tabernacle had the joy of seeing their wealth used for the glory of Jehovah.

Moses publicly named Bezalel and Aholiab as the ones whom God had appointed to work in all manner of artistic workmanship. They also had the ability to teach others (35:30-36:1).

36:2-7 The skilled workers began the task of making the sanctuary, but the people brought so much material each morning that Moses had to restrain them from bringing more.

From verse 8 of chapter 36 to the end of chapter 39 we find a detailed account of the construction of the tabernacle and its furnishings. The repetition of so much detail reminds us that God never tires of those things which speak to Him about His beloved Son.

2. The Curtains Covering the Tabernacle (36:8-19)

The inner curtains, made of fine linen, were called "the tabernacle" (v. 8). Next were curtains of goats' hair, "the tent" (v. 14). The curtains of ram skins and badger skins (or possibly seal or porpoise skins) were called "the covering" (v. 19).

3. The Boards for the Three Sides (36:20-30)

These boards were made of acacia wood, the only kind of wood used in the tabernacle. Acacia trees flourished in dry places, were very beautiful, and produced wood that was practically indestructible. Likewise, the Lord Jesus was a root out of dry ground (Isa. 53:2), was morally beautiful, and is the Eternal One.

4. The Bars Which Held the Boards Together (36:31-34)

Four of the bars were visible, one invisible because it passed through the center of the boards. The invisible bar is a good picture of the Holy Spirit, binding believers together into "a holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. 2:21, 22). The four other bars may suggest the life, love, position, and confession that are common to all God's people.

5. The Veil Leading to the Most Holy Place (36:35, 36)

This veil represents the flesh of the Lord Jesus (Heb. 10:20), torn on Calvary in order to open the way of approach to God for us. The cherubim on the veil are thought to represent guardians of the righteous throne of God.

6. The Screen Leading to the Holy Place (36:37, 38)

This screen was made of the same material as the gate of the court and the veil mentioned above, and pictures Christ as the way to God.

7. The Ark of the Covenant (37:1-5)

The ark was a chest made of acacia wood ... overlaid ... with pure gold. It pointed to the humanity and deity of our Lord. It contained the tablets of the Law, a golden jar of manna, and Aaron's rod that budded. If applied to Christ, these things speak of Him as the One who said, "Your law is within my heart" (Ps. 40:8b); as the bread of God come down from heaven (John 6:33); and as the Priest of God's choosing, risen from the dead (Heb. 7:24-26). If applied to the people of Israel, they were all memorials of failure and rebellion.

8. The Mercy Seat (37:6-9)

The mercy seat was God's throne, the place of His dwelling on earth. As the golden cherubim looked down upon it, they did not see the Law (which Israel had broken) or the jar of manna and Aaron's rod, both of which were associated with rebellions by Israel. Rather, they saw the sprinkled blood, which enabled God to be merciful to rebellious sinners. The mercy seat typifies Christ as the One "whom God set forth as a mercy seat" (Rom. 3:25, lit.[32]) ... . The mercy seat was the lid of the ark.

9. The Table of Showbread (37:10-16)

The table of showbread held twelve loaves, "typical of Israel's place before God in the acceptability of Christ, who as the true Aaron maintains them even now before God."[33] The loaves may also speak of God's provision for each of the twelve tribes.

10. The Golden Lampstand and Its Accessories (37:17-24)

Some see the lampstand of pure gold as a type of Christ, the true Light of the world (John 8:12). Others prefer to view it as picturing the Holy Spirit, whose mission is to glorify Christ, since it illuminates all that speaks of Christ in the holy place. Still others see it as typifying Christ in union with believers. The middle shaft is unique because the other six branches come out of it, three branches on each side; yet they are all made of one piece of gold.

11. The Altar of Incense (37:25-28)

The altar of incense speaks of Christ being a perpetual sweet aroma of God. It also suggests the present ministry of the Lord Jesus, interceding for us in heaven.

12. The Anointing Oil and the Incense (37:29)

Oil typifies the Holy Spirit, and the incense speaks of the ever-fragrant perfections of our Lord, bringing delight to His Father.

13. The Altar of Burnt Offering (38:1-7)

The altar of burnt offering represents the cross, where the Lord Jesus offered Himself to God as a complete sacrifice. There can be no access to God apart from His sacrificial death.

14. The Laver (38:8)

The laver speaks of the present ministry of Christ, cleansing His people by the washing of water with the Word (Eph. 5:26). The priests were required to wash their hands and feet before performing any service. So our actions and our walk must be clean before we can serve the Lord effectively. The laver was made from the bronze mirrors of the serving women. Glorification of self gave way to service for God.

15. The Outer Court, Pillars, and Screen (38:9-31)

38:9-20 The outer court around the tabernacle consisted of white linen hangings, fifty-six pillars with bronze sockets and silver hooks, and an embroidered screen at the gate. The white linen speaks of the righteousness which bars the unbelieving sinner from approaching God, but which also separates and protects the believer inside. The only entrance to the court was the gate, made of fine woven linen and embroidered with blue, purple, and scarlet thread. This suggests Christ ("I am the door," John 10:9) here as the only way of approach to God. The fine linen is a picture of His spotless purity; the blue, of His heavenly origin; the purple, of His regal glory; the scarlet, of His suffering for sin.

38:21-23 The names of the skilled workers are repeated. Whenever God has a task to do, He raises up people to do it. For the tabernacle He called and equipped Bezalel and Aholiab. For the building of the temple He used Hiram to supply materials. For the building of the church, he used His chosen workmen, Peter and Paul.

38:24-31 The materials used in building the tabernacle are carefully tabulated. They would be valued in the millions of dollars in today's currency. We too can dedicate our possessions to the work of the Lord, saying in effect, "Take my silver and my gold; not a mite would I withhold."[34]

G. Preparation of the Priests' Garments (Chap. 39)

39:1-7 Now we come to the preparation of the priests' garments. We are struck at the outset by the repetition of the four colors. Some see them as representing the manifold glories of Christ as seen in the four Gospels: purple—Matthew—the King; scarlet—Mark—the suffering servant; white—Luke—the sinless Man; blue—John— the Son of God come down from heaven. The gold threads in the ephod speak of Christ's deity (v. 3). On each shoulder-strap of the ephod was an onyx stone engraved with the names of six of the tribes of Israel.

39:8-21 The breastplate held twelve precious stones, one for each of the twelve tribes (vv. 10-14). So it is with our Great High Priest. The gospel preacher Peter Pell expressed it beautifully. "The strength of His shoulders and the love of His heart are thus bearing the names of God's people before the presence of God."

39:22-26 The robe of the ephod was a blue garment worn under the ephod. On its hem were bells of pure gold and pomegranates of blue, purple, and scarlet. These speak of spiritual fruit and testimony as they are found in our Great High Priest and as they should be reproduced in us.

39:27-29 The linen tunics were the first garments that the priests put on (Lev. 8:7). Then came the garments of glory. God first clothes the repentant sinner with His own righteousness (2 Cor. 5:21). When the Lord Jesus returns, He will clothe His own people in garments of glory (Phil. 3:20, 21). Righteousness must precede glorification.

39:30, 31 The gold plate on the high priest's turban was engraved like a signet with the words "HOLINESS TO THE LORD" so that he might bear the iniquity of the holy things (Ex. 28:38). All that we do is stained with sin, but our worship and service are purged from all imperfection by our Great High Priest before they reach the Father.

39:32-43 When the people finished the work and brought the parts of the tabernacle to Moses, he inspected them and found that all the work had been made exactly according to God's specifications. And Moses blessed the people.

H. Erection of the Tabernacle (Chap. 40)

40:1-8 God commanded that the tabernacle be set up on the first day of the year (vv. 1, 2); this was about a year after the Exodus and eight and a half months after Israel's arrival at Sinai. He also described where each piece of furniture should be placed, as follows:

40:9-17 In verses 9-15, instructions were repeated for anointing ... the tabernacle, its furnishings, and the high priest and his sons. The instructions were carried out on the first day of the first month, almost one year after the Israelites had left Egypt (vv. 16, 17).

40:18-33 So Moses raised up the tabernacle ... This paragraph tells how the great lawgiver carried out all the detailed instructions as the LORD had commanded Moses for each part of the structure itself, as well as for each item of furniture.

Last of all Moses raised up the court all around the tabernacle. Then come the climactic words of completion of an important task well done: So Moses finished the work.

40:34-38 The glory cloud descended on and filled the tabernacle so that Moses was not able to enter. This cloud was to accompany the people on their journeys. They were to move only when the cloud moved. When it stopped, they were to stop also (vv. 34-38). As a member of the tribe of Levi, Moses was apparently qualified to perform priestly functions until Aaron and his sons were invested with this responsibility (Lev. 8).

And so Exodus is the history of God's people during the year between their deliverance from Egypt and the erection of the tabernacle at Mount Sinai. The book is filled with beautiful pictures of Christ and His moral perfections. It is our responsibility to worship this Christ of glory and to live in the light of His holiness.

LEVITICUS

INTRODUCTION

"There is no book, in the whole compass of that inspired Volume which the Holy Ghost has given us, that contains more of the very words of God than Leviticus. It is God that is the direct speaker on almost every page; His gracious words are recorded in the form wherein they were uttered. This consideration cannot fail to send us to the study of it with singular interest and attention."

—Andrew Bonar

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

J. N. Darby once warned of the dire results if believers grow bored with holiness. Holiness is the main theme of Leviticus, and this book certainly is the hardest one for many Christians to read. Of course, if the instructions are merely taken as details of ancient Jewish sacrificial rituals and laws to maintain holiness in everyday life and separation from pagan peoples, the blessing will be limited. Once you see, however, that every detail of the sacrifices pictures the perfection of Christ's person and work, there is much to meditate upon. Further blessing comes from correlating Leviticus with its NT counterpart, the Book of Hebrews.

II. AUTHORSHIP

Twenty of the twenty-seven chapters in Leviticus and about thirty-five other paragraphs start with "And the Lord spoke to Moses, saying ... "or a similar, equivalent expression. Until fairly modern times most people who professed Judaism or Christianity accepted these words at face value. Our Lord Himself refers to Leviticus 13:49—a leper showing himself to the priest and making an offering—as "those things which Moses commanded" (Mark 1:44). Today, however, it is fashionable in many circles to deny or at least to question Mosaic authorship, not only of Leviticus, but of the whole Pentateuch.

Since we believe the traditional view is not only true but important as well, the issue is taken up in some detail in our Introduction to the Pentateuch, which should be read carefully.

III. Date

Accepting the Mosaic authorship of Leviticus and the evidence within the Pentateuch, we suggest that the book was revealed to Moses during the fifty-day period after the tabernacle was set up (Ex. 40:17), and before the Israelites left Sinai (Num. 10:11). The exact year of writing is unknown, but somewhere between 1450 and 1410 B.C. is indicated.

IV. Background and Theme

An easy way to remember the contents of Leviticus is to associate its name with the word "Levites" or "priests," and then realize that the book is a manual for the priests. Exodus ended with the setting up of the tabernacle in the wilderness. Now the priests and Levites need instruction on how to carry out the sacrifices associated with that structure and with some other rituals as well (e.g., cleansing "leprous" houses).

In Exodus we saw Israel delivered from Egypt and set apart as God's special possession. In Leviticus we see how they are to be separated from sin and uncleanness in order to approach God in the sanctuary. Holiness becomes the rule of the camp. Both in the OT and the NT God demands that His people be holy because He is holy. This poses a serious problem, since man by nature and by practice is unholy. The solution lies in blood atonement (Lev. 17:11). In the OT there were animal sacrifices that looked forward to the once-for-all sacrifice of the Lamb of God, as revealed in the NT, especially in Hebrews.

COMMENTARY

I. TYPES OF OFFERINGS (1:1-6:7)

A. The Burnt Offering (Chap. 1)

Leviticus opens with the LORD calling to Moses, speaking to him from the tabernacle of meeting. As Bonar said in our opening quotation, no other book "contains more of the very words of God than Leviticus," which should show that we should study it "with singular interest and attention." At the outset the Lord prescribes the five offerings—burnt, meal, peace, sin, and trespass. The first three were known as sweet-savor offerings, the last two as sin offerings. The first three were voluntary, the last two compulsory.

The first message God has for the children of Israel is that they should bring their offerings to the LORD from their livestock—both from the herd and from the flock.

Chapter 1 deals with the burnt sacrifice (Heb. ʿō¯lā¯h[1]). There were three grades, depending on what the offerer could afford: a bull from the herd (v. 3; cf. v. 5), a male without blemish; a sheep or a goat from the flock (v. 10), a male without blemish; turtledoves or young pigeons (v. 14). All were peaceful creatures; nothing wild was offered on the altar of the Lord.

Peter Pell suggests that the bull speaks of our Lord as the patient, unwearied Laborer, always doing the Father's will in a life of perfect service and a death of perfect sacrifice. The sheep represents the Lord as the meek and lowly One, submissive to God's will in unresisting self-surrender. The goat speaks of Christ as our Substitute. The turtledove points to Him as the heavenly One, and also as the Man of sorrows (mourning dove).[2]

Behold! a spotless Victim dies,
My Surety on the tree;
The Lamb of God, the Sacrifice,
He gave Himself for me!
—Author unknown

Duties of the offerer: He brought the offering to the door of the tabernacle, near the brazen altar (v. 3); he put his hand on the head of the victim (v. 4) (or, "he leaned his hand as if in reliance"); he killed the bull (v. 5) or the sheep or goat (v. 11); he skinned the animal and cut it into its pieces (vv. 6, 12); he washed the entrails and legs with water (vv. 9, 13). In verse 3, the expression "of his own free will" is translated in some versions "to be accepted." Note verse 4.

Duties of the priests: They sprinkled the blood of the animal all around on the altar (vv. 5, 11); they put the fire and the wood on the altar (v. 7) and then placed the parts of the animal in order on the wood (vv. 8, 12). Everything was burned on the altar except the skin (v. 13; 7:8); in the case of the birds, the priest wrung off its head, pressed out its blood at the side of the altar, put the crop (gullet) with its feathers on the east side of the altar, opened the body of the bird without cutting it in pieces, and burned it on the altar. The word for burn is the one used for burning incense; a different word is used in connection with the sin offerings.

Distribution of the offering: All that was burned on the altar belonged to God; the skin was given to the priests (7:8); the offerer received no part of this particular offering.

The person bringing a burnt offering was expressing his complete surrender and devotion to the Lord. We learn elsewhere that this offering was presented on many different occasions. (See a Bible dictionary for details.)

Typically, the burnt offering pictures the offering of Christ without spot to God. On Calvary's altar the Lamb of God was totally consumed by the flames of divine justice. Amelia M. Hull's hymn captures the spirit of this:

I have been at the altar and witnessed the Lamb
Burnt wholly to ashes for me;
And watched its sweet savour ascending on high,
Accepted, O Father, by Thee.

B. The Meal Offering (Chap. 2)

The grain offering (Heb. minha¯h) was of meal flour, or grain.[3]

The offering itself: There were various types of grain offerings, as follows: fine flour, with oil and frankincense poured on it (v. 1). This was not cooked, but a handful of it was burned on the altar (v. 2). There were three different types of bread or cakes: (a) baked in the oven (v. 4); (b) baked in a flat pan (v. 5); (c) cooked in a covered pan (v. 7; the KJV and RSV say "frying pan," but some believe this offering was boiled in water, like a dumpling). There were also kernels of grain representing firstfruits of harvest, roasted in fire (v. 14). Verse 12 refers to a special meal offering (23:15-21) which was not to be burned on the altar because it contained leaven.

No leaven or honey was to be used in any of these meal offerings (v. 11). These implied fermentation and natural sweetness. But salt was to be added, as a sign of the covenant between God and Israel. It was called the salt of the covenant (v. 13), signifying that the covenant was unbreakable. See Numbers 18:19; 2 Chronicles 13:5; Ezekiel 43:24 for other references to "the covenant of salt."

Duties of the offerer: He prepared the offering at home and brought it to the priests (vv. 2, 8).

Duties of the priest: The priest presented the offering at the altar (6:14); he then took a handful of the offering and burned this memorial handful on the altar (vv. 2, 9).

Distribution of the offering: The "memorial handful," burned on the altar with all the frankincense, was the Lord's; the priests were permitted to take all the rest of the offering as food (vv. 3, 10). The officiating priest was entitled to whatever was baked in the oven or cooked in a pot or pan (7:9). Everything mixed with oil and everything dry was to belong to the rest of the priests (7:10); the offerer received no part of this offering.

The person who brought the meal offering acknowledged the bounty of God in providing the good things of life, represented by flour, frankincense, oil (and wine in the case of the drink offering).

Symbolically this offering speaks of the moral perfection of the life of our Savior (fine flour), untainted by evil (no leaven), fragrant to God (frankincense), and filled with the Holy Spirit (oil). The hymn writer expresses it beautifully:

Life, life of love poured out fragrant and holy!

Life, 'mid rude thorns of earth, stainless and sweet!
Life, whence God's face of love, glorious but lowly, Shines forth to bow us, Lord, low at Thy feet!
—F. Allaben

C. The Peace Offering (Chap. 3)

3:1-15 The peace or fellowship offering (Heb. shelem[4]) celebrated peace with God that was established on the basis of the efficacy of the atoning blood. It was a feast of joy, love, and communion.

The offering itself: There were three grades of this offering also: an animal from the herd (oxen or cattle), male or female (vv. 1-5); a lamb from the flock, male or female (vv. 6-11); a goat from the flock, male or female (vv. 12-17).

Duties of the offerer: He presented the animal before the LORD at the gate of the court (vv. 1, 2, 7, 12); he laid his hand on the head of the victim (vv. 2, 8, 13); he killed it at the door of the tabernacle (vv. 2, 8, 13); he removed certain portions of the animal—the fat, the kidneys, the whole fat tail, and the fatty lobe attached to the liver—to be burned on the altar (vv. 3, 4, 9, 10, 14, 15).

Duties of the priests: They sprinkled the blood all around on the altar (vv. 2, 8, 13); they burned the Lord's portion (the fat, etc.) on top of the burnt sacrifice (v. 5).

Distribution of the offering: The Lord's portion, called the food of the offering made by fire (v. 11), was the fat, the kidneys, the caul, and the fat tail; in Leviticus 7:32,33 we learn that the officiating priest received the right thigh after it had been first presented as a heave offering; the other priests received the animal's breast (7:31). This was first presented as a wave offering before the Lord; the offerer received all the rest (7:15-21). This is the only offering in which the offerer received a portion. He probably made a feast for his family and friends as a kind of fellowship meal. Thus the offering promoted peace between fellow Israelites within the covenant.

The person bringing this offering was expressing his joyful gratitude for the peace he enjoyed in fellowship with Jehovah. A person might also present the peace offering in connection with some vow he was making to the Lord, or in thanksgiving for some special favor.

As to its typical (symbolic) meaning, Peter Pell comments:

> The finished work of Christ in relation to the believer is seen in the peace offering. The Lord Jesus is our peace (Eph. 2:14), having made peace through the blood of His cross (Col. 1:20). He preached this peace to those who were afar off and to those who were near (Eph. 2:17), thus breaking down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile. In Christ, God and the sinner meet in peace; the enmity that was ours is gone. God is propitiated, the sinner is reconciled, and both alike are satisfied with Christ and with what He has done.[5]

Lord Adalbert Cecil's hymn exults in what Christ has done for us:

Oh, the peace forever flowing
From God's thoughts of His own Son!
Oh, the peace of simply knowing
On the cross that all was done.
Peace with God! the blood in heaven
Speaks of pardon now to me:
Peace with God! the Lord is ris'n!
Righteousness now counts me free.

3:16, 17 The people of Israel were forbidden to eat fat or blood, since both belonged to the Lord. In addition to its symbolic meaning, this regulation concerning fat was an early form of preventive medicine. Today doctors recommend a reduction in fat intake to reduce the incidence of hypertension, heart disease, strokes, diabetes, and lung disease.

These first three offerings—burnt, meal, and peace—had a place in the public worship of the nation, but they could also be brought to the Lord by an individual at any time on a voluntary basis. The next two offerings were commanded to be brought when someone had sinned. Thus we have the twin concepts of voluntary worship and compulsory atonement set forth in the offerings.

D. The Sin Offering (4:1-5:13)

Chap. 4 The sin offering (Heb., hattã'th[6]) was appointed for a redeemed people. It does not speak of a sinner coming to the Lord for salvation, but of an Israelite, in covenant relationship with the Lord, seeking forgiveness. It has to do with sins committed unconsciously or unintentionally.

The offering itself: There were different grades of offerings, depending upon the person who sinned: The anointed priest—that is, the high priest, if he by sinning brought guilt on the people (v. 3)—brought a young bull without blemish; the whole congregation (v. 13) brought a young bull also; a ruler (v. 22) brought a kid of the goats, a male without blemish; an ordinary person (v. 27) brought a female goat, without blemish (v. 28), or a female sheep, without blemish (v. 32). (The Hebrew wording here indicates full-grown animals.)

Duties of the offerer(s): In general, the offerer brought the animal to the gate of the tabernacle court, presented it to the Lord, laid his hand on its head, killed it, and removed the fat, the kidneys, and the fatty lobe above the liver. The elders acted for the congregation (v. 15). The victim's death was regarded symbolically as the sinner's death.

Duties of the priest: For himself and for the congregation, the high priest carried the blood of the sacrifice into the holy place of the tabernacle, sprinkled it seven times before the veil (vv. 5, 6, 16, 17) and on the horns of the golden altar of incense (vv. 7, 18). Then he poured the rest of the blood at the base of the altar of burnt offering (vv. 7, 18). For a ruler and for common people, a priest sprinkled the blood on the horns of the altar of burnt offering and poured the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar (vv. 25, 30, 34). For all classes, he burned the fat, kidneys, fatty lobe above the liver, and fat tail on the altar of burnt offering (vv. 8-10, 19, 26, 31). In the case of the offering for the high priest or for the whole congregation, all the rest of the animal was taken outside the camp and burned (vv. 11, 12, 21).

Distribution of the offering: The Lord's share was the portion that was burned upon the altar—the fat, kidneys, fatty lobe above the liver, etc. The priest was allowed to eat the flesh of the offerings of a ruler or of a commoner because the blood of these offerings was not taken into the sanctuary (7:30), as in the case of the offerings of the high priest and the congregation (4:5, 6, 16, 17). He could also eat the offerings described in 5:6, 7, 11 for the same reason. No part of the above offerings was set aside for the offerer.

The body of any sin offering whose blood was taken into the holy place was burned outside the camp. So our Lord, through His own blood, entered the holy place once for all (Heb. 9:12) after He had suffered outside the city of Jerusalem. We are admonished to "go forth to Him outside the camp, bearing His reproach" (Heb. 13:13).

Note: The expression "sin through ignorance" seems to mean more than lack of knowledge of the sin. It probably means that the sin was not willful, deliberate, or done in defiance or rebellion. There was no sacrifice for willful sin; the death penalty had to be exacted (Num. 15:30).

The person who brought a sin offering was acknowledging that he had sinned unintentionally through weakness or negligence. He sought forgiveness of sins and ceremonial cleansing.

The sin offering points symbolically to Christ, who was "made sin" for us, though He knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. Some suggest that the sin offering speaks of Christ dealing with what we are, whereas the trespass offering pictures Him dealing with what we have done.

The Holy One who knew no sin,
God made Him sin for us;
The Savior died our souls to win,
Upon the shameful cross.
His precious blood alone availed
To wash our sins away;
Through weakness He o'er hell prevailed,
Through death He won the day.
—Hannah K. Burlingham

5:1-13 The first 13 verses of chapter 5 seem to describe the trespass offering (see v. 6), but it is generally agreed that these verses have to do with two additional grades of sin offering. The reason for not treating them with the trespass offering is that there is no mention of restitution, which was an important part of the trespass offering. (However, it is freely admitted that verses 1-13 are closely linked to both the sin and trespass offerings.)

Instead of dealing with various classes of people, these offerings have to do with differing types of sins: Verse 1 describes a man who has knowledge of a crime, and yet refuses to testify after hearing the high priest or judge put him under oath. As a Jew living under the Law, Jesus testified when the chief priest put Him under oath (Matt. 26:63, 64). Verse 2 deals with the defilement which a Jew contracted by touching a dead body, even if he did not know it at the time. Verse 3 describes the uncleanness contracted by touching a person with leprosy, a running sore, etc. Verse 4 has to do with the making of rash oaths or promises which one later finds he cannot fulfill.

The offering itself: There were three types of offerings for these sins, depending upon the ability of the offerer to pay: a female lamb or goat—as a sin offering (v. 6); two turtledoves or two young pigeons—one as a sin offering and the other as a burnt offering (v. 7); the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour with no oil or frankincense (v. 11). This put the sin offering within reach of the poorest person. Likewise, no one is excluded from forgiveness through Christ. The question arises in verses 11-13, "How can a meal offering serve as a sin offering to make atonement for sin when we know that without the shedding of blood is no remission?" (Heb. 9:22). The answer is that it was offered on top of a fire offering on the altar (which did have blood), and this gave the meal offering the value of a blood sacrifice.

Duties of the offerer: He first of all confessed his guilt (v. 5), then brought his offering to the priest (v. 8).

Duties of the priest: In the case of the female lamb or goat, he offered it in accordance with the instructions for a sin offering in chapter 4. If the offering was two birds, he first offered one bird as a sin offering, wringing its neck, sprinkling some blood on the side of the altar, and draining out the rest at the base of the altar (vv. 8, 9). He next offered the second bird as a burnt offering, burning it completely on the brazen altar (v. 10). If the offering was fine flour, the priest took a handful of it and burned it on the altar of burnt offering. He burned it over other offerings involving the shedding of blood, thus giving it the character of a sin offering (v. 12).

Distribution of the offering: The Lord's portion consisted of whatever was burned on the altar. The priest was entitled to whatever was left (v. 13).

E. The Trespass Offering (5:14-6:7)

The trespass offering (Heb., 'ãshãm[7]) is taken up in 5:14-6:7. The distinctive feature of this offering is that restitution had to be made for the sin committed before the offering was presented (5:16).

There were several types of sin for which an offering had to be made. Trespass against God: Withholding from the Lord that which rightly belonged to Him—tithes and offerings, consecration of firstfruits or of the firstborn, etc. (5:14). Unwittingly committing some act forbidden by the Lord (5:17), and presumably an act that required restitution. "In cases where it was not possible to know whether another had been wronged, the scrupulously devout Israelite would still offer a guilt offering by itself" (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

Trespass against man: Dealing falsely with one's neighbor in a matter of deposit or bargain or robbery or oppression (6:2). Finding a lost article and swearing to a lie about it (6:3). A trespass offering was also required in the case of immorality with a slave girl who was engaged (19:20-22), the cleansing of a leper (14:10-14), and the defilement of a Nazirite (Num. 6:6-12).

The offering itself: A ram without blemish (5:15, 18; 6:6) or a male lamb in the case of a leper (14:12) or a Nazirite (Num. 6:12).

Duties of the offerer: In the case of a trespass against God, he first brought the restitution to the priest, with twenty percent added. Then he brought the animal to the priest at the entrance to the tabernacle court, presented it to the Lord, placed his hand on its head, and killed it. He also removed the fat, fat tail, kidneys, and fatty lobe above the liver. The procedure was the same in the case of a trespass against a neighbor. In both instances, the offerer had to pay the twenty percent penalty, reminding him that sin is unprofitable and costly.

Duties of the priest: He sprinkled the blood around the brazen altar (7:2); he then burned the fat, the fat tail (rump), the kidneys, and the fatty lobe above the liver on the altar (7:3, 4).

Distribution of the offering: The Lord's portion was that which was burned on the altar (7:5). The officiating priest received the skin of the ram (7:8). All the priests shared the meat of the animal as food (7:6). The offerer had no part in the sin or trespass offerings.

As has been mentioned, the person bringing a trespass offering was seeking to make amends for some action of his that had caused loss or damage to someone else.

Symbolically, the trespass offering points to that aspect of the work of Christ by which He restored that which He took not away (Ps. 69:4b). Through man's sin, God was robbed of service, worship, obedience, and glory. And man himself was robbed of life, peace, gladness, and fellowship with God. As our trespass offering, the Lord Jesus not only restored what had been stolen through man's sin, but He added more. For God has received more glory through the finished work of Christ than if sin had never entered the world. And we are better off in Christ than we ever could have been in unfallen Adam.

Aside He threw His most divine array,
And veiled His Godhead in a robe of clay;
And in that garb did wondrous love display,
Restoring what He never took away.

II. LAWS OF THE OFFERINGS (6:8-7:38)

The section from 6:8 to 7:38 presents "the law of the offerings." In many ways, it is very similar to what has gone before. However, it is addressed to the priests whereas the previous instructions were for the children of Israel (1:2).

6:8-13 The law of the burnt offering: Additional details are given here concerning the garments worn by the priest, the manner in which he disposed of the ashes from the burnt offering, and the care he must exercise to see that the fire on the altar never went out. The ashes were first placed at the east side of the altar, and then carried outside the camp to a clean place.

6:14-17 The law of the grain offering: Here we learn that the priests had to eat their portion of the offering within the court of the tabernacle, and that it was not to be leavened because it was most holy to the Lord.

6:18 Any male children of Aaron could eat the grain offering, but they must be holy, that is, ceremonially clean. These priests did not become holy by touching the offerings. Holiness was not imparted by touch, but defilement was (Hag. 2:11-13).[8]

6:19-23 These verses describe a special grain offering which the high priest had to offer morning and evening continually. It was wholly burned by fire.

6:24-30 The law of the sin offering*:* As explained previously, the priest was allowed to eat portions of certain sin offerings (those described in Lev. 4:22-5:13, where the blood was not carried into the sanctuary). The offerings had to be eaten ... in the court of the tabernacle. Notice that this offering was most holy. If a layman touched the flesh of the offering, he must be holy or consecrated and had to cleanse himself from ceremonial defilement just as the priests did, though he could not exercise priestly functions. If any of the blood was sprinkled on a garment, the garment had to be washed—not because it was unclean but so that the most holy blood might not be carried out of the sanctuary into everyday life, and thus be profaned. An earthen vessel used to cook the meat of the sin offering had to be broken because the earthenware, being porous, absorbed some of the blood and might later be used for profane purposes. A bronze pot had to be both scoured and rinsed in water to prevent any portion of the most holy sin offering from ever coming in contact with anything that was common or unclean. The sin offering, like the guilt offering, was to be slain in the place where the burnt offering is killed. This was the north side of the altar (1:11), the place of shadows.

7:1-7 The first seven verses of chapter 7 review the law of the trespass offering, most of which has already been covered in 5:14-6:7.

7:8 Verse 8 refers to the burnt offering and provides that the officiating priest was entitled to the skin of the animal.

7:9, 10 Verse 9 indicates the portion of the grain offering that was to go to the officiating priest, and verse 10 what was to go to the rest of the priests.

7:11-18 The law of the peace offering is given in 7:11-21. There were three types of peace offerings, depending on the motive or purpose of the offering: for ... thanksgiving (v. 12), praising God for some special blessing; for a vow (that is, a votive offering) (v. 16), "in fulfillment of a promise or pledge made to God for the granting of some special request in prayer; for example, preservation on a hazardous journey"[9]; voluntary or freewill (vv. 16,17), "This would appear to be in the nature of a spontaneous expression of praise to God in appreciation of what He has revealed Himself to be."[10] The peace offering itself was a sacrificial animal (chap. 3), but here we learn that it was accompanied by certain cakes or breads. The cakes that were required with a thank offering are listed in verses 12 and 13. The offerer was to bring one of each for a heave offering, and this was given to the officiating priest (v. 14). The flesh of the ... thanksgiving offering was to be eaten the same day (v. 15), whereas the votive offering and the freewill offering could be eaten on the first or second day (v. 16). Anything remaining after two days had to be burned (v. 17); to eat such meat would cause the person to be "cut off," meaning excommunicated or removed from the privileges of the people of Israel. "This shows," John Reid writes, "that communion with God must be fresh and not too far removed from the work of the altar."[11]

7:19-21 If the flesh touched any unclean thing, it could not be eaten but had to be burned. Only persons who were ceremonially clean could eat the clean flesh. Any person who was ceremonially unclean and who ate of the peace offering would be cut off.

The fact that different portions of the peace offering were designated for the Lord, the priests, and the offerer indicates that it was a time of fellowship. But since God can have no fellowship with sin or uncleanness, those who partook of this festive meal had to be clean.

7:22-27 The fat, considered the best portion, belonged to the LORD. It was burned for Him on the altar, and it was not to be eaten (vv. 22-25). Likewise, the blood, being the life of the flesh, belonged to God and was not to be eaten (vv. 26,27). Today many Jews still seek to comply with these dietary laws. In order for meat to be fit for their consumption, or "kosher," the blood must be removed. In avoiding the consumption of fat, many Jewish households will not use soaps which contain animal fats. They believe that even to use such products in washing dishes would be to make the dishes non-kosher. Besides the spiritual reason for not eating fat there is also a medical reason, as Dr. S. I. McMillen points out: In the past few years medical science has awakened to the fact that the eating of animal fat is an important cause of arteriosclerosis. This fat forms the tiny, fatty, cholesterol tumors within the walls of the arteries, which hinder the flow of blood. Now, in this decade, magazines, radio and T.V. are broadcasting the good news that we can reduce the ravages from man's greatest killer by cutting down our intake of animal fats. Happy as we are with the fact that medical science has arrived, we may be amazed to discover that our ultramodern research is about thirty-five hundred years behind the Book of books.[12]

7:28-34 The offerer waved the breast of the peace offerings before the LORD, and it then became the portion of the priests. The right thigh was heaved before the Lord, and then was given to the officiating priest as food for himself and his family.

7:35, 36 These verses repeat that the breast and right thigh were the portion of Aaron and his sons from the day that God first anointed them as priests. As previously suggested, the breast speaks of divine affection and the thigh of divine power.

7:37, 38 This paragraph concludes the section on the laws of the offerings, which began in 6:8. God has devoted much space in His Word to the offerings and their ordinances because they are important to Him. Here in beautiful imagery the Person and work of His Son can be seen in minute detail. Like the different facets of a diamond, these types all reflect the resplendent glory of Him "who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God" (Heb. 9:14). Miss F. T. Wigram expresses her praise in a hymn:

The person of the Christ,
Enfolding every grace,
Once slain, but now alive again,
In heaven demands our praise.

III. CONSECRATION OF THE PRIESTS (CHAP. 8-10)

A. Investiture of the Priests by Moses (Chap. 8)

8:1-5 In Exodus 28 and 29, God gave Moses elaborate instructions for consecrating Aaron and his sons as priests. Now, in Leviticus 8-10, we read how Moses carried out these instructions. He called together the assembly—priests and people—at the door of the tabernacle. It was a very public investiture service.

8:6-9 Moses washed both Aaron and his sons with water. Next Moses dressed Aaron in the complete vestments of the high priest: the tunic, the sash, the robe, the ephod, the band of the ephod, the breastplate, the Urim and the Thummim, the turban and the holy crown. It must have been an impressive sight.

8:10-13 Then Moses ... anointed the tabernacle and all its contents, and sanctified them.

The fact that he poured (not sprinkled) on Aaron's head is a lovely picture of the Holy Spirit being poured out without measure on the Lord Jesus, our Great High Priest.

Next Moses put tunics and sashes, as well as hats (or head-pieces), on Aaron's sons.

8:14-17 As Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the head of the bull for the sin offering, ... Moses killed it. Even the highest religious leaders (then as well as now) are merely sinners who need God's atoning sacrifice as well as the least important member of the community.

8:18-21 Moses likewise brought a ram for a burnt offering for Aaron and his sons and carried out the prescribed rites.

8:22-29 The consecration offering for Aaron and his sons was also called the ram of consecration (or, more literally, the ram of the "fill offering"). It differed from the customary peace offerings as to the application of the blood (vv. 23, 24), and also as to the burning of the right thigh and bread cakes, which ordinarily would have been eaten. Since he officiated, Moses received the breast as his part.

The blood was placed on ... the ear, ... hand, and ... foot of Aaron and his sons, reminding us that Christ's blood should affect our obedience, service, and walk.

8:30-36 Moses ... sprinkled ... Aaron and his sons with some of the blood and some of the anointing oil from the sacrifice. The priests were instructed to eat of the flesh of the peace offering along with the bread.

The above consecration ritual was repeated for seven days, during which they were not allowed to go outside the door of the tabernacle.

In commenting on this chapter, Matthew Henry discerns the one thing that is missing: But after all the ceremonies that were used in their consecration, there was one point of ratification which was reserved to be the honour and establishment of Christ's priesthood, which was this, that they were made priests without an oath, but Christ with an oath (Heb. vii.21), for neither such priests nor their priesthood could continue, but Christ's is a perpetual and unchangeable priesthood.[13]

B. Offerings Presented by Aaron (Chap. 9)

9:1-4 Aaron and his sons took up their official duties on the eighth day. First, they were to offer for themselves a young bull for a sin offering and a ram for a burnt offering. Then they were to offer for the people: a he-goat for a sin offering; a yearling calf and a lamb for a burnt offering; a bull and a ram for peace offerings; a grain offering.

9:5-23 All the congregation drew near to the Lord's presence in front of the tabernacle. When Aaron had fully complied with all the instructions of Moses regarding the sin offering, the burnt offering, the people's offering, the grain offering, the peace offerings, and the wave offering (vv. 5-21), he lifted his hand and blessed the people (vv. 22, 23).

9:24 Then a fire came out from the most holy place of the tabernacle and consumed the burnt offering which was upon the brazen altar. This indicated God's acceptance of the offering. This fire of the Lord was to be kept burning continually on the altar of burnt offering.

C. Nadab and Abihu's Sacrilege (Chap. 10)

10:1-3 Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, each burned incense ... before the LORD with profane fire, perhaps fire that was not taken off the brazen altar. Since the altar speaks of Calvary, it was as if they tried to approach God in some way other than through the atoning work of Christ. Fire went out from the Most Holy Place and devoured them as they stood by the golden altar in the holy place. Moses warned Aaron, in effect, that any complaint would be rebellion against God's righteous dealings.

10:4-7 After Mishael and Elzaphan had carried the corpses from in front of the tabernacle to a place outside the camp, Moses told Aaron and his two remaining sons that they must not mourn but remain within the tabernacle while the the whole house of Israel mourned the flaring forth of God's wrath.

10:8-11 Some have inferred from the injunction against drinking wine or intoxicating drink in the tabernacle that Nadab and Abihu may have been drunk when they offered the strange fire.

10:12-18 Moses commanded Aaron and Eleazar and Ithamar, his remaining sons, to eat ... the grain offering (vv. 12, 13) and the breast of the wave offering (vv. 14, 15). When he looked for the goat that had been used as a sin offering for the people, he found that Eleazar and Ithamar, ... sons of Aaron, had burned the sacrifice instead of eating it in a holy place. (Perhaps they feared God's wrath which had just fallen on their brothers.) The rule was that if the blood of the sin offering was brought into the holy place, then the sacrifice was to be burned (6:30). But if not, it was to be eaten (6:26). Moses reminded them that, in this case, the blood had not been brought inside the holy place; therefore, they should have ... eaten the meat (vv. 16-18).

10:19, 20 In reply to Moses' reprimand, Aaron explained that they had carried out the sin and burnt offerings, as required, but, in view of the Lord's severe chastisement on Nadab and Abihu, he wondered if his eating the sin offering would have been accepted by the LORD. Moses accepted the excuse.

Chapter 10 concludes the section on the priesthood.

IV. THE CLEAN AND THE UNCLEAN (CHAPS. 11-15)

The next five chapters deal with matters of ceremonial cleanness and uncleanness. For the Jews there were acts that were not morally wrong but nevertheless barred them from participating in the rituals of Judaism. Those who became defiled were ritually unfit until they were cleansed. A holy people must be holy in every area of life. God used even food to illustrate the difference between what is clean and unclean.

A. Clean and Unclean Foods (Chap. 11)

11:1-8 A clean animal was one which had hooves that were completely cloven and which chewed the cud. The expression "whatever divides the hoof, having cloven hooves" seems to say the same thing in two different ways. But the words mean that the hoof must be completely divided. Clean animals were oxen, cattle, sheep, goats, deer, etc. Unclean animals were pigs, camels, rock badgers (hyraxes), rabbits, etc. The spiritual application is that Christians should meditate on the Word of God (chew the cud) and have a separated walk (the cloven hoof).

But God was also protecting the health of His people by prohibiting meat that was likely to transmit disease in days when there was little or no refrigeration and the use of antibiotics in animal husbandry was unknown.

11:9-12 A clean fish was one that had both fins and scales. Fish such as mackerel, eels, and shellfish were unclean. Scales are often taken to picture the Christian's armor, protecting him in a hostile world, while the fins typify the divine power which enables him to navigate through the world without being overcome by it.

11:13-19 Birds which preyed on other creatures were unclean—e.g., eagles, hawks, vultures, bats. (Bats are not birds, but the Hebrew word translated birds is broader than the English word, meaning "flying thing.")

11:20-23 Verses 20-23 deal with certain forms of flying insects. Only those which had jointed legs above their feet were clean—namely, locusts, destroying locusts, crickets, and grasshoppers.

11:24-28 Touching the carcass of any of the foregoing unclean creatures rendered a person unclean until evening. Special mention is made of animals which walk on ... paws, such as cats, dogs, lions, tigers, bears, etc.

11:29-38 Other creeping animals are described next—the mole, the mouse, the large lizard, ... the gecko, the monitor lizard, the sand reptile, the sand lizard, and the chameleon. A person touching their carcasses became unclean until evening. If the dead body of one of these creatures fell on any vessel, the utensil had to be washed in water, and it was unclean until evening, except that an earthen vessel had to be broken. Any edible food in the earthen vessel became unclean and could not be eaten. Two exceptions are given—a spring of running water did not become unclean through contact with the body of one of these animals, nor did planting seed used for sowing, if it had not been soaked in water.

11:39, 40 Human contact with the carcass of a clean animal which had died (rather than being slaughtered) or eating such meat unintentionally made a person unclean until evening. His clothes had to be washed.

11:41-47 Verses 41-43 refer to worms, snakes, rodents, and insects. Anyone eating them became ritually unclean. In giving this law concerning clean and unclean creatures, God was teaching lessons concerning His holiness and the necessity for His people to be holy as well (vv. 44-47).

In Mark 7:18, 19, the Lord Jesus declared all foods to be ceremonially clean. And Paul taught that no food should be refused if it is received with thanksgiving (1 Tim. 4:1-5). However, even that would not include foods that are contaminated, culturally unacceptable, or digestively disagreeable to a person.

B. Purification after Childbirth (Chap. 12)

12:1-4 Chapter 12 deals with uncleanness connected with childbirth.A woman giving birth to a boy was unclean for seven days, just as the days of the impurity of her menstruation. On the eighth day, the boy was circumcised (v. 3). The eighth day was the safest as far as blood clotting was concerned. Today the blood clotting problem is solved by injections of vitamin K. She then remained at home for an additional thirty-three days so as not to touch any hallowed thing or enter the sanctuary—i.e., the court surrounding the tabernacle.

12:5 In the case of a baby girl, the mother was unclean for two weeks, and then remained home for an additional sixty-six days.

12:6-8 At the end of the time of purification, the mother was commanded to bring a yearling lamb for a burnt offering and a young pigeon or a turtledove for a sin offering. If she was too poor to afford the lamb, she could bring two turtledoves or two young pigeons—one for the burnt offering and the other for the sin offering. The mother of our Lord brought two birds (Luke 2:22-24), an indication of the poverty into which Jesus was born.

It may seem strange that uncleanness is connected with the birth of a baby, since marriage was instituted before sin entered the world, since the Scriptures teach that marriage is holy, and since God commanded men to reproduce. The uncleanness is probably a reminder that, with the exception of our Lord, we are all brought forth in iniquity and conceived in sin (Ps. 51:5). The extended time of uncleanness in the case of a baby girl was perhaps an intended reminder that man was created before woman, that the woman was created for the man, that the woman is given a place of positional submission (not intrinsic inferiority) to the man, and that the woman was the first to sin.

Williams sees in this legislation the tender care of God in protecting the mother from visitors during a time when her weakness and the danger of infection were greatest.[14]

C. The Diagnosis of Leprosy (Chap. 13)

Chapter 13 has to do with the diagnosis of leprosy, and chapter 14 with its cleansing. Opinion is divided as to the nature of biblical leprosy. Bible lepers were usually mobile, were not deformed, were harmless when completely leprous, and were sometimes cured.

In some ways the priest filled the role of physician, perhaps a subtle reminder of the close connection between the spiritual and the physical. Man is a tripartite being, and what affects one part affects all.

Chapter 13 is admittedly difficult, dealing as it does with technical descriptions of leprous and non-leprous diseases and with "leprosy" in houses and garments. Dr. R. K. Harrison, who has medical training as well as being a Hebrew scholar, points out that there is "no translation that is satisfactory for all the conditions covered by the Hebrew word, but that it should be broad enough to include the disease we call Hansen's disease."[15]

He summarizes the known facts about the Hebrew term and its Greek translation (whence our English terms leprosy, leper, leprous):

> The Hebrew term sa¯ra'at comes from a root meaning "to become diseased in the skin," and is a generic rather than a specific description. In Old Testament usage it was extended to include mould or mildew in fabrics, as well as mineral eruptions on the walls of buildings, and possibly dry rot in the fabric of such structures. In the LXX the Hebrew was rendered by the Greek word lepra, which itself appears to have been rather indefinite in nature and meaning. The Greek medical authors used the word to describe a disease that made the surface of the skin flaky or scaly, while Herodotus mentioned it in connection with an affliction known as leuke¯, a type of cutaneous eruption which seems to have been the same as the Greek elephantiasis, and thus similar to modern clinical leprosy (Hansen's disease).[16]

13:1-3 The opening paragraph describes the priest inspecting a man for the symptoms of biblical leprosy.

13:4-8 Next the proper procedure in questionable cases is detailed. The person was confined for seven days. If the ... spot had not spread, then he was confined for another seven more days. Then if the disease seemed to be checked, the priest pronounced the person clean. If the eruption in the skin had spread after the second examination, then the priest declared him to be unclean.

13:9-11 When the leprosy was old or chronic, the priest pronounced the leper unclean.

13:12, 13 Strangely, when a person had turned white all over, the disease was no longer active, and the priest pronounced the leper clean.

13:14, 15 When raw flesh appeared on a person, the priest pronounced him unclean. It was leprosy.

13:16, 17 In a case of leprosy where the raw flesh had healed and turned white, here again the person was clean.

13:18-23 Three possible diagnoses regarding a boil are next presented. When it is obvious to the priest that the boil is deeper than the skin, and its hair has turned white, he must pronounce the patient unclean (vv. 18-20). When in quarantine the sore spread during a seven-day test period, it was leprous (vv. 21, 22). When it did not spread, the person was pronounced clean (v. 23).

13:24-28 The case of a possibly leprous burn is described. When from its symptoms it was obviously leprous, the priest would pronounce the person unclean (vv. 24, 25). A seven-day period of testing would reveal the condition to be spreading and therefore leprous (vv. 26, 27). Where it is merely a swelling from the burn it was not leprous (v. 28).

13:29-37 The case of a scale of the head or beard is considered next. Where a man or a woman obviously had leprosy from his or her symptoms, the person had to be declared unclean (vv. 29, 30). Where it was not clearly known (vv. 31-37), the person was confined for seven days. If the condition had not spread, the person shaved off his hair and waited for another seven days. If the scale had spread, the person was unclean. If the scale had been checked, the person was clean.

13:38, 39 A man or a woman with white bright spots on the skin of the body was declared ceremonially clean. According to Harrison's semi-technical translation, it was "a mottling that has arisen in the skin."[17]

13:40-44 Ordinary baldness (alopecia) is differentiated from that which was caused by leprosy.

13:45, 46 A leper was a miserable person. He was put outside the camp of Israel and had to wear torn ... clothes and let his head be bare. Whenever people approached, he had to cover his upper lip or mustache and cry, "Unclean! Unclean!" Again we have an early example of preventive medicine. Isolation is an accepted medical procedure to prevent the spread of infection.

13:47-59 The case of "leprosy" in a garment probably refers to some type of mold or mildew on a wool or linen cloth or leather garment. Harrison explains the wisdom of destroying garments so tainted:

> Moulds are fungous growths on dead or decomposing animal or vegetable matter, and occur in patches of various shades.[18]

He goes on to make a spiritual application:The fungous growth affects the entire article by its presence, just as the taint of original sin reaches all areas of the human personality.[19]Jehovah's people must be pure and clean externally as well as internally:

Oh, for a heart to praise my God,

A heart from sin set free;

A heart that's trusting in the blood

So freely shed for me.
A humble, lowly, contrite heart,
Believing, true, and clean,
Which neither death nor life can part
From Him that dwells within.
—Charles Wesley

D. The Cleansing of Leprosy (Chap. 14)

14:1-7 Here is given the ritual for cleansing a leper after he had been healed: First he was inspected by the priest outside the camp. If healed, he offered two living and clean birds, with cedar wood, scarlet, and hyssop. The cedar wood and the hyssop, coming from a lofty tree and a lowly plant, picture the judgment of God on all men and on all that the world contains, from the highest to the lowest things. Scarlet is associated with sins in Isaiah 1:18, so the thought here may be of God's judgment on sins. One bird was killed over running water, and the other with the cedar wood and the scarlet and the hyssop was dipped in the blood of the slain bird. The cleansed leper was sprinkled with the blood seven times and pronounced clean. Then the living bird was allowed to go free.

In many ways, leprosy is a type of sin. It rendered a man unclean, it excluded him from the camp of God and the people of God, it made the victim miserable, etc. This is why there needed to be an application of blood (the blood of Christ) and the running water (the Holy Spirit's regenerating work) in the cleansing of a leper. When a sinner turns to the Lord in repentance and faith today, the death and resurrection of Christ (pictured by the two birds) is reckoned to his account. The blood is applied through the power of the Spirit and, in God's sight, the person is clean.

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee;
Let the water and the blood,
From Thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power.
—Augustus M. Toplady

14:8-20 The cleansed leper washed his clothes, shaved off all his hair, and washed his body (v. 8). Then he was allowed to enter the camp, but he could not enter his own tent for seven more days. Seven days later he again washed and shaved and was pronounced clean (v. 9). On the eighth day, he brought offerings to the LORD (vv. 10, 11): a trespass offering (vv. 12-18);

a sin offering (v. 19); a burnt offering (v. 20). The priest applied the blood to the leper's ear, hand, and foot (v. 14). This speaks of hearing God's Word, of doing God's will, and of walking in God's ways.

14:21-32 If the cleansed leper was too poor to bring all the required animals, then he was permitted to bring two turtledoves or two young pigeons, one for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering, but he still had to bring the lamb for the trespass offering.

A grain offering accompanied the trespass, sin, and burnt offerings in each instance.

14:33-53 Finally, laws for the detection of leprosy ... in a house are given. These would apply when the people finally reached Canaan and dwelt in permanent houses rather than in tents. "Leprosy" in a house was probably some sort of fungus, mildew, or dry rot. The Lord made provision for the house to be emptied before the priest went in so that the contents need not become unclean or be quarantined (vv. 36,38). At first only the affected stones in a house were removed. But if the leprosy continued to break out, the house was torn down (vv. 39-45). In the event that the leprosy was arrested in the house, the priest followed a ritual of cleansing similar to that for a leper (vv. 48-53).

14:54-57 This paragraph is a summary of chapters 13 and 14.

E. Purification after Bodily Secretions (Chap. 15)

15:1-18 Chapter 15 deals with the uncleanness arising from discharges from the human body, either natural or diseased. Verses 1-12 seem to refer to a running discharge from a man, resulting from disease, such as gonorrhea. The ritual for cleansing is given in verses 13-15. Verses 16-18 refer to the emission of semen, involuntary (vv. 16, 17) and voluntary (v. 18).

15:19-33 Verses 19-24 deal with a woman's normal menstrual cycle. This required no offerings. Verses 25-30 describe a discharge of blood from a woman, but not connected with menstruation—therefore abnormal. Verses 31-33 summarize the chapter.

V. THE DAY OF ATONEMENT (CHAP. 16)

The greatest day on the Jewish calendar was the Day of Atonement (Heb., Yôm Kippur), when the high priest went into the Most Holy Place with sacrificial blood to make atonement for himself and for the people. It fell on the tenth day of the seventh month, five days before the Feast of Tabernacles. Although the Day of Atonement is usually listed along with the feasts of Jehovah, it was actually a time of fasting and solemnity (23:27-32).

It will be helpful to remember that in this chapter the Most Holy Place (the "Holy of Holies") is called the Holy Place, and the Holy Place is called the tabernacle of meeting.

16:1-3 The sacrilege of the two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, forms the backdrop for these instructions. A fate similar to theirs would befall the high priest if he entered the Most Holy Place on any day other than the Day of Atonement. And on that day he must carry the blood of a young bull for a sin offering and of a ram as a burnt offering.

16:4-10 The order of events is not easy to follow, but the following is a general outline of the ritual. First the high priest bathed and dressed in white linen ... garments (v. 4). By way of preliminaries, he brought a bullock and a ram to the tabernacle. He would offer these for himself and for his family, the bull for a sin offering and the ram for a burnt offering (v. 3). He brought two ... goats and one ram which he would offer for the people, the goats for a sin offering and the ram for a burnt offering (v. 5). He presented the two goats before the door of the tabernacle and cast lots—one for the LORD and the other lot as a scapegoat (vv. 7, 8). The word translated "scapegoat" is Azazel, meaning "goat of departure."

16:11-22 Then he killed the bull as the sin offering ... for himself and for his house (v. 11). Next he took a censer ... of burning coals with his hands full of sweet incense and carried them into the Most Holy Place. There he poured the incense over the live coals, causing a cloud of incense to cover the mercy seat (vv. 12, 13). He returned to the altar of burnt offering for some blood of the bull, took it into the Most Holy Place, and sprinkled it on top of the mercy seat and in front of it seven times (v. 14). He killed the goat chosen for a sin offering (v. 8), and sprinkled its blood, as he did the blood of the bull, before and on the mercy seat (vv. 9, 15). This made atonement for the Most Holy Place because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel (v. 16). By the sprinkling of blood he also made atonement ... for the tabernacle and for the altar of burnt offering (vv. 18, 19), though the details here are not clear. Atonement started with the Most Holy Place, then worked outward to the Holy Place and finally to the brazen altar (vv. 15-19). After he laid both his hands on the head of the scapegoat (v. 8) and confessed the sins of the people (vv. 10, 20, 21), a chosen man led the goat into the wilderness (vv. 21, 22). The two goats symbolized two different aspects of atonement: "that which meets the character and holiness of God, and that which meets the need of the sinner as to the removal of his sins."[20] Aaron's laying his hands on the head of the live goat pictures the placing of the sins of Israel (and of ourselves) on Christ, to be taken away forever (v. 21).

The hymnwriter has expressed it thus:

My sins were laid on Jesus,
The spotless Lamb of God;
He bore them all and freed me
From the accursed load.
My guilt was borne by Jesus;
He cleansed the crimson stains
In His own blood most precious
And not a spot remains.
—Horatius Bonar, alt.

16:23-33 The high priest bathed in a holy place, perhaps at the laver, then put on his garments of glory and beauty (vv. 23, 24a). Jewish tradition says that the white linen garments were never worn again. The high priest next offered two rams as burnt offerings, one for himself and the other for the people (v. 24b). He burned the fat of the two sin offerings on the altar while their skins, their flesh, and their offal were being burned outside the camp (vv. 25, 27). Even the skin of the burnt offering, which usually went to the priest (7:8), was to be burned. According to the Jewish Talmud, the high priest went into the Holy of Holies after the evening sacrifice to bring out the censer. In the ritual of atonement, the people confessed their sins and refrained from work (v. 29).

From the above it will be seen that the high priest entered the Most Holy Place at least four times. This does not contradict Hebrews 9:7-12, where the thought is that there was only one day in the year when the high priest could enter.

16:34 Despite the solemn ceremonies of this day, its failure to adequately deal with sins was written across it in the words "once a year." "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats could take away sins" (Heb. 10:4). In vivid contrast is the work of Christ, by which human sins are totally removed instead of being merely covered for a year! Isaac Watts expressed it this way:

Not all the blood of beasts
On Jewish altars slain,
Could give the guilty conscience peace,
Or wash away its stain.
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb
Took all our sins away,
A sacrifice of nobler name
And richer blood than they.

VI. LAWS CONCERNING SACRIFICE (CHAP. 17)

17:1-9 Commentators hold differing views on verses 1-9. (1) The passage prohibited the killing of any animals, even for food, without offering them at the tabernacle. (2) It forbade the offering of sacrificial animals in the fields or in any place other than the tabernacle. (3) It prohibited the slaughter of sacrificial animals for food as long as the people were in the wilderness. This was changed when the people reached the Promised Land (Deut. 12:15). Morgan explains:

The Hebrew word [translated 'devils' in KJV and 'goatdemons' in ASV] is literally 'hairy ones.' In Isaiah 13:21 and 34:14 it is rendered 'satyr' in the Authorized Version and 'wild-goats' in the American Standard Version. The satyr was an imaginary being, half-goat, half-man, of demon nature. In Egypt the goat-man, Pan, was worshiped. It would seem as though this word recognized the fact that these people had in Egypt probably worshiped the false god.[21]

17:10-14 The eating of blood was likewise forbidden. The blood was for atonement, not for nourishment. "The life of the flesh is in the blood" (v. 11). The principle behind atonement is life for life. Since the wages of sin is death, symbolized by the shedding of blood, so "without the shedding of blood is no remission." Forgiveness does not come because the penalty of sin is excused, but because it is transferred to a sacrifice whose lifeblood is poured out. Verse 11 is one of the key verses in Leviticus and should be memorized. When an animal was slaughtered, its blood was drained immediately. An animal that died accidentally was unclean if its blood was not drained right away.

17:15, 16 This refers to a person who ignorantly ate the meat of an animal that had not been bled. Provision was made for his cleansing. But if he refused this provision, he was to be punished.

VII. LAWS CONCERNING PERSONAL CONDUCT (CHAPS. 18-22)

A. Laws of Sexual Purity (Chap. 18)

18:1-5 Chapter 18 deals with various forms of unlawful marriages with which the Israelites had become familiar in Egypt but which they were to completely renounce in the land of Canaan.

18:6-18 The expression "to uncover the nakedness" here means to have sexual intercourse. Verse 6 states the general principle. Marriage with a close relative was forbidden, whether mother (v. 7); stepmother (v. 8); sister or half-sister (v. 9); granddaughter (v. 10); the daughter of a stepmother (v. 11); aunt (vv. 12, 13); uncle (v. 14a). Modern medicine confirms that in marriages of blood relatives, the physical or mental weaknesses of the parents are sometimes magnified in the children. But the prohibition extended to in-laws and other relatives-by-marriage as well (vv. 14b-16), sometimes known as relationships of affinity. A reason sometimes given for this latter code is that the term "one flesh" in Genesis 2:24 describes a family relationship that is so close and permanent that even the union of relatives-by-marriage is considered to be incest. A man must not marry a daughter-in-law or step-granddaughter (v. 17) or take a woman as a rival to her sister (v. 18), as in the case of Hannah and Peninnah (1 Sam. 1:1-8). Verse 16 was later amended by Deuteronomy 25:5: If a man died childless, his brother was obliged to marry the widow. This was known as levirate marriage.

18:19-21 Intercourse with a woman was forbidden during menstruation. Adultery with a neighbor's wife was prohibited. Also banned were the terrible practices sometimes connected with the worship of the idol Molech, causing newborn babies to pass through ... fire (2 Kgs. 23:10; Jer. 32:35). Molech was the god of the Ammonites: His idol-image was in the Valley of Hinnom. Francis Schaeffer describes the ritual:

> According to one tradition there was an opening at the back of the brazen idol, and after a fire was made within it, each parent had to come and with his own hands place his firstborn child in the white-hot, outstretched arms of Molech. According to this tradition, the parent was not allowed to show emotion, and drums were beaten so that the baby's cries could not be heard as the baby died in the arms of Molech.[22]

18:22, 23 Sodomy or homosexuality was forbidden, as well as sexual intercourse with an animal. In legislating against homosexuality, God may also have been anticipating the modern AIDS epidemic and seeking to save people from it.

18:24-30 Verses 1-23 tell the people what not to do; verses 24-30 tell them why not to do it. It is no accident that impurity and idolatry are found together in the same chapter (see also chap. 20). A person's morality is the fruit of his theology, his concept of God. The Canaanites were a graphic illustration of the degradation that idolatry produces (vv. 24-27). When the children of Israel took possession of the land, they killed thousands of these people at Jehovah's command. When we consider the moral degradation of the Canaanites, as described in verses 24-30, we can understand why God dealt so harshly with them.

B. Laws of Everyday Life (Chap. 19)

19:1-25 The basis of all holiness is found in the words "I the LORD your God am holy" (v. 2). Various laws for the conduct of the people are here laid down, as follows:

Mother and father were to be revered (v. 3)—the fifth commandment.*

God's Sabbaths were to be observed (v. 3)—the fourth commandment.

Idolatry was prohibited (v. 4)—the second commandment.

Eating of the peace offering on the third day was forbidden (vv. 5-8).

In harvesting a field, the owner was to leave some grain in the corners for the poor and strangers (vv. 9,10). Field crops and grapes are mentioned as examples, not as a complete list.

Stealing, cheating, and lying were forbidden (v. 11)—the eighth commandment.

Swearing by the Name of ... God to a false statement was outlawed (v. 12)—the third commandment.

Defrauding, robbing, or withholding wages were prohibited (v. 13).

Cursing the deaf or causing the blind to stumble were condemned (v. 14). The people were to express their reverence for Jehovah by their respect for one another (25:17). The handicapped (v. 14), the aged (v. 32), and the poor (25:26,43) were all to be treated with kindness by those who feared the Lord.

Showing partiality in judgment was forbidden (v. 15).

Slander and plotting against the life of a neighbor were prohibited (v. 16).

Hatred of one's brother was forbidden: "You shall surely rebuke your neighbor, and not bear sin because of him" (v. 17). Matters should be dealt with openly and frankly lest they become the cause of inward animosity leading to outward sin.

Vengeance or bearing of grudges was prohibited (v. 18). The second part of verse 18, loving your neighbor as yourself, is the summation of the whole law (Gal. 5:14). Jesus said it was the second-greatest command (Mark 12:31). The greatest command is found in Deuteronomy 6:4,5.*

Verse 19 is generally understood to forbid the interbreeding of animals that results in mules. Livestock here means beasts in general.

Also, sowing a field with different kinds of seed, or wearing a garment of mixed linen and wool was forbidden. God is a God of separation, and in these physical examples He was teaching His people to separate themselves from sin and defilement.

If a man had illicit relations with a slave-girl betrothed to another man, both were scourged and he was required to bring a trespass offering (vv. 20-22).

When settled in Canaan, the Israelites were not to pick the fruit of their trees for three years. The fruit of the fourth year was to be offered to the LORD, and in the fifth year the fruit could be eaten (vv. 23-25). Perhaps the fruit of the fourth year went to the Levites or, as one commentator suggests, was eaten before the Lord as part of the second tithe.

19:26-37 Other forbidden practices were: eating of flesh from which the blood had not been drained (v. 26a); practicing witchcraft (v. 26b); trimming the hair in accordance with idolatrous practices (v. 27); making cuttings in one's flesh as an expression of mourning for the dead (v. 28a); making marks on the body as the heathen did (v. 28b); making one's daughter become a prostitute, as was common in pagan worship (v. 29); breaking of the Sabbath (v. 30); consulting mediums or familiar spirits (v. 31). Honor was to be shown to the aged (v. 32), and strangers were to be treated with kindness and hospitality (vv. 33, 34). Honest business practices were enjoined (vv. 35-37).

C. Punishment for Gross Offenses (Chap. 20)

This chapter gives the punishments for some of the offenses listed in chapters 18 and 19. The person who caused a child to go through the fire in an offering to Molech was to be stoned to death (vv. 1-3). If the people failed to kill him, God would destroy him and his family (vv. 4,5). The death penalty was also pronounced against one who consulted mediums and familiar spirits (v. 6); one who cursed his father or his mother (v. 9); an adulterer and an adulteress (v. 10); one who committed incest with his father's wife (v. 11) or daughter-in-law (v. 12); and a sodomite (v. 13).

(Both parties were to be killed in these cases of unlawful intercourse.) In the case of a man having unlawful sexual intercourse with a mother and her daughter, all three offenders were to be burned (v. 14). Sexual perversion between humans and animals was a capital crime; both man and beast were to be slain (vv. 15,16). The death penalty (or, as some think, excommunication) was pronounced against intercourse with a sister or half-sister (v. 17) or with a menstruous woman (v. 18). Intercourse with an aunt called forth the judgment, "they shall bear their guilt," but no details were given (v. 19). Some think it means that they would die childless, as in verse 20, where a man had intercourse with his uncle's wife, and in verse 21, where the offense was with a sister-in-law.

Verse 21 applied only as long as the brother was alive. If he died without leaving a son to carry on his name, his brother was commanded to marry the widow and name the first son after the deceased (Deut. 25:5). Such unions were known as levirate marriages.

The longing of God's heart was to have a holy people, separated from the abominations of the Gentiles and enjoying the blessings of the Promised Land (vv. 22-26). Mediums and people with familiar spirits were to be exterminated by stoning (v. 27).

D. Conduct of the Priests (Chaps. 21, 22)

Chapters 21 and 22, along with 16 and 17, are addressed to Aaron and his sons.

21:1-4 Priests were not to defile themselves by touching the dead ... except in the case of nearest relatives. Even entering the tent of the dead defiled a person for seven days (Num. 19:14). This would disqualify a priest from serving the Lord during that time, so he was forbidden to make himself unclean for any but his nearest relatives. Verse 4 probably means that, because of his high rank, he must not defile himself for any reason except those listed in verses 2 and 3.

21:5-9 Practices of the heathen in defacing their bodies with signs of mourning for the dead were forbidden. The priest was not permitted to marry a woman profaned by harlotry or a divorced ... woman. However, he could marry a widow. A priest's daughter who became a harlot was to be burned to death.

21:10-15 A high priest was not permitted to mourn in the customary ways or leave the sanctuary to show honor to the dead. He was to marry an Israelite virgin, and his married life was to be above reproach.

21:16-24 A physical defect barred a man from the service of the priesthood —blindness, lameness, facial deformities, a deformed limb, foot or hand injuries, hunchbackedness, dwarfism, defective eyes, itching diseases, scabs, or injured reproductive organs. Any son of Aaron who was defective in any of these ways could share the food of the priests, but he could not actively serve as a priest before the Lord (vv. 22,23). The holy food was the priests' share of the peace offerings. The most holy food was their share of other offerings. The priests who offered the sacrifices must be without defect because they portrayed Christ as our unblemished High Priest.

22:1-9 If a priest was ceremonially unclean through leprosy, a running discharge, contact with something defiled by a dead body, eating meat that had not been drained of its blood, or for any other reason, he was not to partake of the food of the priests. That is what is meant by "separate themselves from the holy things" (v. 2). If the priest was a leper or had a running sore, the disqualification probably lasted for a long time. In the other cases mentioned, the following ritual prevailed for the priest: First, he must bathe himself, then wait until the evening, at which time he would be clean again.

22:10-13 In general, strangers, visitors, and hired servants were not permitted to eat the holy food. But a slave who had been purchased by the priest, as well as the slave's children, could eat it. If the priest's daughter got married to an outsider, she was not permitted to eat it, but if she were widowed or divorced and childless, and living with her father, then she could share the food of the priests.

22:14-16 If a man ate some of the holy food unintentionally, he could make restitution by replacing it and adding one-fifth, as in the case of the trespass offering.

22:17-30 Offerings brought to the LORD had to be without blemish (v. 19), whether for burnt offerings (vv. 18-20) or peace offerings (v. 21). Diseased, disabled, or disfigured animals were forbidden (v. 22). A bull or a lamb with an overgrown limb or a stunted limb could be presented for a freewill offering but not for a votive offering (v. 23). Castrated animals or those with damaged reproductive organs were not acceptable (v. 24). Israelites were not to accept any of the above defective animals as an offering from a stranger (v. 25). A sacrificial animal could not be offered until it was at least eight days old (vv. 26,27). A mother animal and her young were not to be killed on the same day (v. 28). The meat of a thanksgiving offering was to be eaten ... on the same day that it was offered (vv. 29, 30).

22:31-33 The final paragraph explains why the Israelites were to keep and perform all these commandments of the LORD. It was because the God who had brought them out of the land of Egypt is holy. Several expressions in this short section stress the message of Leviticus as a whole: "not profane," "holy name," "I will be hallowed," and "I am the LORD who sanctifies."

VIII. THE FEASTS OF THE LORD (CHAP. 23)

A. The Sabbath (23:1-3)

The religious calendar of Israel now becomes the subject of God's legislation. The LORD told the children of Israel through Moses to proclaim the feasts of the LORD as holy convocations.

After six days of labor, the seventh day, or Sabbath, was to be a day of rest from work. This was the only weekly holy day.

B. The Passover (23:4, 5)

The LORD's Passover was held on the fourteenth day of the first month (Nisan, or Abib). It commemorated Israel's redemption from slavery in Egypt. The Passover lamb was a type of Christ, the Lamb of God, our Passover (1 Cor. 5:7), whose blood was shed to redeem us from slavery to sin. He did not die at Creation but in the fullness of time (Gal. 4:4-6).

C. The Feast of Unleavened Bread (23:6-8)

The Feast of Unleavened Bread occurred in connection with the Passover. It extended over a period of seven days, beginning with the day after Passover—i.e., from the fifteenth day of Nisan to the twenty-first. The names of these two feasts are often used interchangeably. During this time the Jews were required to put away all leaven from their households. In Scripture, leaven speaks of sin. The feast pictures a life from which the leaven of malice and wickedness has been put away, and a life which is characterized by "the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (1 Cor. 5:8). There was no lapse between the Passover (our redemption) and the Feast of Unleavened Bread (our obligation to walk in holiness) ... Even today the Jews eat unleavened bread during this feast. The bread is called matzo. The preparation of matzo involves piercing the bread, and in the baking process it becomes striped. This unleavened bread clearly reminds us of the sinless Messiah. He was pierced for us, and by His stripes we are healed.

D. The Feast of Firstfruits (23:9-14)

The presentation of a wave ... sheaf of barley took place the second day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread (on the day after the Sabbath— i.e., the first day of the week). This is known as the Feast of Firstfruits. It marked the beginning of the barley harvest, the first grain of the year. A sheaf of barley was waved before the LORD in thanksgiving for the harvest. A burnt offering and a grain offering were also presented. This first harvest was viewed as the promise of the larger harvest to come. This pictures Christ in resurrection—"Christ ... the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep" (1 Cor. 15:20). His resurrection is the guarantee that all who put their faith in Him will also gain immortality through resurrection.

E. The Feast of Weeks (23:15-22)

23:15-22 The Feast of Weeks (Heb., Sha¯vûôt) or Pentecost (Gk. for "fifty") was held fifty days ... after the Passover Sabbath. It was a harvest festival thanking God for the beginning of the wheat harvest. The firstfruits of the wheat harvest were presented at this time, along with a burnt offering, a new grain offering, drink offerings, and a peace offering. According to Jewish tradition, Moses received the law on this day of the year. The Feast is typical of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, when the church was brought into existence. The wave offering consisted of two ... loaves of bread made from the freshly reaped fine flour. (This was the only offering that was made with leaven.) These loaves represent, in type, the Jews and the Gentiles made into "one new man in [Christ]" (Eph. 2:15).

After Pentecost there was a long interval, about four months, before there was another feast. This span of time may picture the present church age, in which we eagerly await the return of our Savior.

F. The Feast of Trumpets (23:23-25)

The Feast of Trumpets took place on the first day of the ... seventh month. The blowing of trumpets called the sons of Israel together for a solemn holy convocation. At this time there was a period of ten days for self-examination and repentance, leading up to the Day of Atonement. It typifies the time when Israel will be regathered to the land prior to her national repentance. This was the first day of the civil year, today called Rosh Hashanah (Heb. head of the year). Some see this feast as picturing another gathering as well—that is, the gathering of the saints to meet the Lord in the air at the Rapture.

G. The Day of Atonement (23:26-32)

The Day of Atonement (Heb., Yôm Kippur), occurring on the tenth day of the seventh month, has been described in detail in chapter 16. It prefigures the national repentance of Israel, when a believing remnant will turn to the Messiah and be forgiven (Zech. 12:10; 13:1). In almost every verse dealing with the Day of Atonement, God repeats the command to do no work. The only person who was to be active on this day was the high priest. The Lord reinforced the charge by threatening to destroy any person who violated it. This is because the salvation which our High Priest obtained for us was "not on the basis of deeds which we have done" (Titus 3:5). There can be no human works involved in the business of removing our sins. Christ's work and His alone is the source of eternal salvation. To "afflict your souls" (vv. 27,29) means to fast. Even today religious Jews observe the day as a time for fasting and prayer. Although the Day of Atonement is listed among the feasts of Jehovah, it was actually a time for fasting rather than feasting. However, after the sin question was settled, there came a time of rejoicing in the Feast of Tabernacles.

H. The Feast of Tabernacles (23:33-44)

The Feast of Tabernacles (Heb., Sukkôth, "booths") began on the fifteenth day of the seventh month. For seven days the Israelites dwelt in booths (v. 42). It pictured the final rest and final harvest, when Israel will be dwelling securely in the land during the Millennium. This feast is also called the Feast of Ingathering (Ex. 23:16). It was associated with harvesting. In fact several of the feasts mentioned in this chapter have to do with harvesting. The two Sabbaths may picture the Millennium and the Eternal Rest. Moishe and Ceil Rosen describe the tradition:

> The Jewish people built booth-like structures and lived in them during this feast as a reminder of the temporary dwellings the Israelites had in the wilderness. Even today many Jewish people build open-roofed, three-sided huts for this festival. They decorate them with tree boughs and autumn fruits to remind them of harvest.
> Everyone who was able came up to Jerusalem for this harvest festival every year. The Temple worship for the holiday included the ritual pouring of water from the Pool of Siloam, symbolic of the prayers for the winter rains. It was at this time that Jesus cried out," ... If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink" (John 7:37-38).

After Israel's final day of atonement, the Feast of Booths will be celebrated again in Jerusalem (Zech. 14:16).[23]

One of the things the Lord sought to teach His people through the feasts was the close association between the spiritual and the physical aspects of life. Times of bounty and blessing were to be times of rejoicing before the LORD. The Lord was portrayed to them as the One who abundantly provided for their daily needs. Their response as a nation to His goodness found expression in the festivals connected with the harvest.

Notice the repetition of the commandment that the Israelites were to do no servile or customary work on these solemn occasions (vv. 3, 7, 8, 21, 25, 28, 30, 31, 35, 36).

A definite chronological progression can be traced in the Feasts of Jehovah. The Sabbath takes us back to God's rest after creation. The Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread speak to us of Calvary. Next comes the Feast of Firstfruits, pointing to the resurrection of Christ. The Feast of Pentecost typifies the coming of the Holy Spirit. Then looking to the future, the Feast of Trumpets pictures the regathering of Israel. The Day of Atonement foreshadows the time when a remnant of Israel will repent and acknowledge Jesus as Messiah. Finally the Feast of Tabernacles sees Israel enjoying the millennial reign of Christ.

IX. CEREMONIAL AND MORAL LEGISLATION (CHAP. 24)

In chapter 23 the yearly feasts were dealt with. Now the daily and weekly ministries before the Lord are taken up.

24:1-9 Pure oil of pressed olives was to be burned in the gold lampstand before the LORD continually. The twelve cakes were to be set in two rows or piles on the table of showbread, and replaced each Sabbath. The frankincense mentioned in verse 7 belonged to the LORD. It was offered to Jehovah when the old bread was removed and given to the priests for food.

24:10-23 Then there is the abrupt account of a son of an Israelite woman, whose father was an Egyptian, who was stoned to death for cursing God (vv. 10-16, 23). The incident shows that the law was the same for anyone who lived in the camp of Israel, whether he was a full-blooded Jew or not (v. 22). It shows that blasphemy, like murder, was punishable by death (vv. 14, 16, 17, 23). (Verse 16 was probably the law against blasphemy, which the Jews referred to when they said, "We have a law, and according to our law He [the Lord Jesus] ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God" [John 19:7].) It shows that compensation could be made for some other crimes (vv. 18, 21). Finally the incident shows that:

> ... retribution was a basic principle of law; wrongs had to be righted. Softness brought the law into disrepute. The law of retaliation is scoffed at today in the Western world, but thoughtful people will not dismiss it. (a) In ancient society, punishment was often out of all proportion with the wrong done. Retaliatory punishment was thus a great step toward true justice. (b) Furthermore, rehabilitative punishment—the alternative most frequently suggested—suffers from subjectivism. Who is to decide when a man is rehabilitated, ready to rejoin society? The terms may be lenient today, but what of tomorrow? True justice is an eye (and not more) for an eye (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

In verses 1-9 we see a picture of Israel as God intended. In verses 10-16 the cursing man pictures Israel as it actually became, blaspheming the Name and cursing ("His blood be on us, and on our children").

X. THE SABBATICAL YEAR AND THE YEAR OF JUBILEE (Chap. 25)

The legislation in chapters 25-27 was given to Moses on Mount Sinai and not from within the tabernacle (25:1; 26:46; 27:34).

25:1-7 Every seventh year was to be observed as a sabbath. The land was to lie fallow (uncultivated). Food for the people would be provided from the crop that grew of its own accord. The owner was not to harvest it, but leave it for free use by the people.

25:8-17 The fiftieth year was also a sabbath, known as the Year of Jubilee. It began on the Day of Atonement following seven sabbatic-year cycles (forty-nine years). Slaves were to be set free, the land was to lie fallow, and was to revert to its original owner. The price of a slave or a piece of land decreased as the Year of Jubilee approached (vv. 15-17), and all business transactions were supposed to take this fact into account. The words "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof" (v. 10 KJV) are inscribed on the United States Liberty Bell. Believers today may liken the Year of Jubilee to the coming of the Lord. As we get closer to His coming, our material wealth decreases in value. The moment He comes, our money, real estate, and investments will be worthless to us. The moral is to put these things to work for Him today!

25:18-22 With regard to the sabbatic year, the people might wonder how they would have enough food to eat that year and the following year. God promised them that if they were obedient, He would give them sufficient crops during the sixth year to last for three years.

Once every fifty years, there would be two successive years when there would be no sowing or harvesting, that is, when the regular sabbatic year would be followed by the year of jubilee. Presumably the Lord gave enough crops in the forty-eighth year to last for four years.

Some scholars believe that, by inclusive reckoning, the fiftieth year was actually the forty-ninth. At any rate, this is an ancient example of good ecology: conserving the land's fertility by enforced rest. In modern times man has become concerned about preserving our planet's resources. As so often, God's Word is centuries ahead of the times.

25:23-28 Land could be sold, but not permanently, because Jehovah is the Owner. There were three ways in which land could be "redeemed" (revert to its original Jewish owner): The nearest relative could buy it back for the seller (v. 25); the seller (original owner), if he regained financial solvency, could redeem it, paying the purchaser for the years remaining until the Year of Jubilee (vv. 26, 27); otherwise, the land automatically reverted to the original owner in the Year of Jubilee (v. 28).

25:29-34 A house in a walled city was subject to redemption for one year; after that, it became the property of the new owner permanently. Houses in unwalled villages were counted as part of the land and therefore reverted to the original owner in the Year of Jubilee. Houses owned by the Levites in the special cities assigned to them were always subject to being bought back by the Levites. The field assigned to the Levites for common-land was not to be sold.

25:35-38 If an Israelite fell into debt and poverty, his Jewish creditors were not to oppress him. They were not to charge him interest on money or demand additional food for food that was lent.

25:39-46 If an impoverished Israelite sold himself to a Jewish creditor for nonpayment of debt, he was not to be treated as a slave but as a hired servant, and was to be released in the Year of Jubilee, if this came before the end of his six years of service. The Jews were permitted to have slaves from the Gentile nations, and these were considered their own property, to be handed down to their descendants. But Jewish people were not to be slaves themselves.

25:47-54 If a Jew sold himself to a Gentile who happened to be living in the land, the Jew could always be bought back and set free. The redemption price was determined by the number of years remaining until the Year of Jubilee. The relative redeeming the Jew could use him as a hired servant until the Jubilee. If no relative redeemed him, then he automatically went free in the Year of Jubilee.

25:55 This verse is a vivid reminder that the Israelites and their land (v. 23) belonged to the LORD and that He should be recognized as rightful Owner. Neither God's people nor God's land could be sold permanently.

XI. BLESSINGS AND CURSINGS (CHAP. 26)

A. The Blessings for Obedience to God (26:1-13)

Twice as much space is devoted to warning as to blessing in this chapter. Adversity, the promised fruit of disobedience, is a tool which God uses, not to inflict revenge but to lead His people to repentance (vv. 40-42). National chastisement would be increasingly severe until the people confessed their iniquity. Notice the progression in verses 14, 18, 21, 24, and 28.

After warnings against idolatry (v. 1), sabbath-breaking, and irreverence (v. 2), the Lord promised the following blessings to the nation if it would keep His commandments: rain, fertility (v. 4), productivity, security (v. 5), peace, safety (v. 6), victory over enemies (vv. 7, 8), fruitfulness, and the presence of the Lord (vv. 9-13). Knox's version of verse 13 is especially graphic: "Was it not I ... that ... struck the chains from your necks, and gave you the upright carriage of free men?"

B. The Curses for Disobedience to God (26:14-39)

26:14-33 Disobedience would result in terror, disease, conquest by enemies, drought, barrenness, wild beasts, pestilence, invasion, and captivity.

Verse 26 describes famine conditions. Bread would be so scarce that ten women would be able to bake their supply in one oven, ordinarily big enough for only one family's use. Even more severe famine is pictured in verse 29, where cannibalism prevails (see 2 Kgs. 6:29 and Lam. 4:10 for the historical fulfillment of this warning).

26:34-39 Persistent disobedience on Israel's part would result in their being taken captive by a foreign power. The land of Israel would enjoy a period of rest equal to the number of sabbatic years which the people disregarded. This is what happened in the Babylonian captivity. During the years from Saul to the captivity the people had failed to keep the sabbatic years. Thus they spent seventy years in exile, and the land enjoyed its rest (2 Chron. 36:20, 21).

C. Restoration through Confession and Repentance (26:40-46)

The final section of chapter 26 provided a way of recovery through confession and repentance for the disobedient nation. God would not completely forsake His people, but would remember His covenant promises to their ancestors.

XII. VOWS AND TITHES (CHAP. 27)

The last chapter of Leviticus deals with voluntary vows made to the Lord. It seems that in gratitude to the Lord for some blessing, a man could vow to the Lord a person (himself or a member of his family), an animal, a house, or a field. The things vowed were given to the priests (Num. 18:14). Since these gifts were not always of use to the priests, provision was made that the person making the vow could give the priest a sum of money in lieu of the thing vowed.

27:1, 2 A vow of consecration was very special.

27:3-7 If a person was vowed to the Lord, then the redemption price to be paid to the priest was as follows:

A man from 20-60 years old • 50 shekels

A woman from 20-60 years old • 30 shekels

A male from 5-20 years old • 20 shekels

A female from 5-20 years old • 10 shekels

A male from 1 month to 5 years old • 5 shekels

A female from 1 month to 5 years old • 3 shekels

A male 60 years old and above • 15 shekels

A female 60 years and above • 10 shekels

27:8 If a man was too poor to redeem his vow according to this chart, then the priest determined some figure according to his ability.

27:9-13 If the vow was an animal, the following rules applied: A clean animal, suitable for sacrifice, could not be redeemed (v. 9). It was to be offered to the Lord upon the altar (Num. 18:17); nothing could be gained by exchanging one animal for another, because both would then become the Lord's (vv. 10, 33); an unclean animal could be redeemed by paying the value placed on it by the priest, plus one-fifth (vv. 11-13).

27:14, 15 If a man dedicated his house to ... the LORD, he could change his mind and buy it back by paying the priest's estimate of its value, plus one-fifth.

27:16-18 Appraising the value of a field was complicated by the fact that it reverted to the original owner in the Year of Jubilee.

If it was dedicated by its original owner, that is, if he inherited it, then the rules in verses 16-21 applied. It was valued according to the seed sown in it. For example, if a homer of barley seed were sown in it, it would be valued at fifty shekels of silver.

If the field was vowed near or at the Year of Jubilee, then the above appraisal was effective. But if it was dedicated some years after the Year of Jubilee, then the value of the field decreased accordingly. In other words, the field would be worth only 30 shekels if it was vowed 20 years after the Year of Jubilee.

27:19-21 If the field was redeemed, then an added payment of one-fifth was required.

If, after giving the land to the Lord, the owner did not ... redeem it before the Year of Jubilee, or if he secretly sold it to someone else, it could no longer be redeemed but became the possession of the priest at the Year of Jubilee. The land was then "devoted" or "holy" to the LORD.

27:22-25 If a field was dedicated by someone who was not its original owner, that is, by someone who bought it, then verses 22-25 applied. The priest set a value on the property, depending on how many crops could be raised on it before the Year of Jubilee. In that year, the field went back to its original owner.

27:26, 27 The firstborn of a sacrificial animal could not be dedicated to the Lord, because it belonged to Him anyway. The firstborn of an unclean animal could be redeemed by paying the priest's valuation of it, plus one-fifth. Otherwise the priest could sell it.

27:28, 29 Nothing that was under sentence of death or destruction could be redeemed. This is what was meant by a devoted or proscribed thing. Thus a son who cursed his parents could not be redeemed but must be put to death.

It should be noted that there is an important distinction in this chapter between what is consecrated (NASB) or sanctified (KJV) and what is proscribed (NASB) or devoted (NKJV, KJV). Things sanctified by vow—that is, set apart for divine use—could be redeemed. Devoted things were given completely and finally, and could not be redeemed.

27:30, 31 A tithe or tenth of the grain and fruit belonged to the Lord. If the offerer wanted to keep it, he could pay its value plus one-fifth.

27:32, 33 The expression "whatever passes under the rod" refers to the practice of numbering sheep or goats by causing them to pass under the shepherd's rod. Leslie Flynn comments:

> With rod in hand, he [the shepherd] would touch every tenth one. He could in no way contrive to change their order so that a good animal would escape tenth place. If he tried to alter the order, both the real tenth and the attempted switch would be the Lord's.[24]

This first tithe was called the levitical tithe, because it was paid to the Levites (Num. 18:21-24). A second tithe, which apparently is a different one, is prescribed in Deuteronomy 14:22-29.

27:34 The commandments which the LORD commanded Moses in the last verse of Leviticus probably refer to the whole book. After studying the multitude of detailed rituals and blood sacrifices, we can rejoice with Matthew Henry that the carnal ordinances of it ... , but under the sweet and easy institutions of the gospel, which pronounces those the true worshippers that worship the Father in spirit and truth, by Christ only, and in his name, who is our priest, temple, altar, sacrifice, purification, and all. Let us not therefore think that because we are not tied to the ceremonial cleansings, feasts, and oblations, a little care, time, and expense, will serve to honour God with. No, but rather have our hearts more enlarged with free-will offerings to his praise, more inflamed with holy love and joy, and more engaged in seriousness of thought and sincerity of intention. Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, let us draw near with a true heart, and in full assurance of faith, worshipping God with so much the more cheerfulness and humble confidence, still saying, Blessed be God for Jesus Christ![25]

> We are not under the dark shadows of the law, but enjoy the clear light of the gospel, ... that we are not under the heavy yoke of the law, and

INTRODUCTION

"Numbers has a unique contribution to the life of the Christian when the broad sequence of its historical setting is seen as a parallel situation to Christian living. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews makes this significant application, devoting two chapters to it (Heb. 3 and 4)."

—Irving L. Jensen

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

The English name of the fourth book of Moses is a translation of the Septuagint's title, Arithmoi, and obviously is so-called because of the census in chapter 1 and again in chapter 26, as well as the many other numerical data given throughout.

The Hebrew title is much more descriptive of the book as a whole: "In the Wilderness" (Bemidba¯r). The narrative of forty years in the wilderness is full of interesting and well-known stories: the spies visiting Canaan, Korah's rebellion, Aaron's rod that budded, the brass serpent, Balaam and his donkey, and other lesser known events.

It should not be thought that this is merely "Hebrew history." All of these things happened for our spiritual edification. We are to learn from the mistakes of the children of Israel, not repeat them. Consequently Numbers is a very important book.

II. AUTHORSHIP

According to Jewish and Christian teaching, Numbers was written by the great law-giver, Moses. This is widely discounted in liberal circles, but see Introduction to the Pentateuch for a concise defense of the Mosaic authorship.

III. DATE

Rationalistic scholars put the Pentateuch very late in Jewish history, but a date of about 1406 BC is compatible with conservative and believing scholarship. (See Introduction to the Pentateuch for details.)

IV. Background and Theme

The historical backdrop for the Book of Numbers, as its Hebrew title suggests, is the wilderness. The journeys and wanderings depicted here cover about thirty-eight years, from Israel's departure from Mount Sinai till they reached the Plains of Moab, opposite the Promised Land. The wanderings were due to unbelief, hence God gives no itinerary of them. As Scroggie remarks, "The movements of God's people out of His will are not on His calendar."[1]

As Leviticus stresses worship and spiritual position, the theme of Numbers is walk and spiritual progress (or lack of it!). Christians should not think that this book is a dry Jewish history book! It is full of applications to modern Christian experience. It would be pleasant to think that all (or most) Christians advance swiftly from salvation to a full entering into God's promises of victory; observation and experience, however, show how much we resemble the ancient Israelites in complaining, backsliding, and rank unbelief.

The good news is that we do not need to repeat the wanderings of Israel in our spiritual pilgrimage. God has made full provision for spiritual success through faith. (See Believers Bible Commentary, New Testament, especially Romans 6-8.)

COMMENTARY

I. THE LAST DAYS AT SINAI (1:1-10:10)

A. The Census and Arrangement of the Tribes (Chaps. 1, 2)

1:1 As the book of Numbers opens, it is one year and one month after the children of Israel left Egypt and one month after the tabernacle was erected (Ex. 40:17). As noted, the book received its name because the people are numbered twice (chaps. 1, 26). The census mentioned here is not the same as the one recorded in Exodus 30:11-16. They were taken at different times and for different purposes. The second census (Num. 1) was probably based on the earlier census; hence the similar totals.

1:2, 3 The people of Israel were soon to begin their journey from Mount Sinai to the Promised Land. It was essential that they be arranged as orderly marching armies, and for this purpose God commanded that a census should be taken. The census would include all men twenty years old and above—all who were able to go to war.

1:4-17 One man was appointed from every tribe to assist Moses with the census. Their names are given in verses 5-16. Verse 17 reads, "Then Moses and Aaron took these men who had been mentioned by name."

1:18-46 The results of the census were as follows:

TRIBE • REFERENCE • NUMBER

Reuben • vv. 20, 21 • 46, 500

Simeon • vv. 22, 23 • 59, 300

Gad • vv. 24, 25 • 45, 650

Judah • vv. 26, 27 • 74, 600

Issachar • vv. 28, 29 • 54, 400

Zebulun • vv. 30, 31 • 57, 400

Ephraim • vv. 32, 33 • 40, 500

Manasseh • vv. 34, 35 • 32, 200

Benjamin • vv. 36, 37 • 35, 400

Dan • vv. 38, 39 • 62, 700

Asher • vv. 40, 41 • 41, 500

Naphtali • vv. 42, 43 • 53, 400

TOTAL • 603, 350

Notice that Ephraim is larger than Manasseh. This is in accordance with the blessing of Jacob in Genesis 48:19,20. The tribes are listed beginning with Reuben, the firstborn, and his camp (south), then Judah and his camp (east), then Dan and his camp (north), and finally Ephraim and his camp (west).

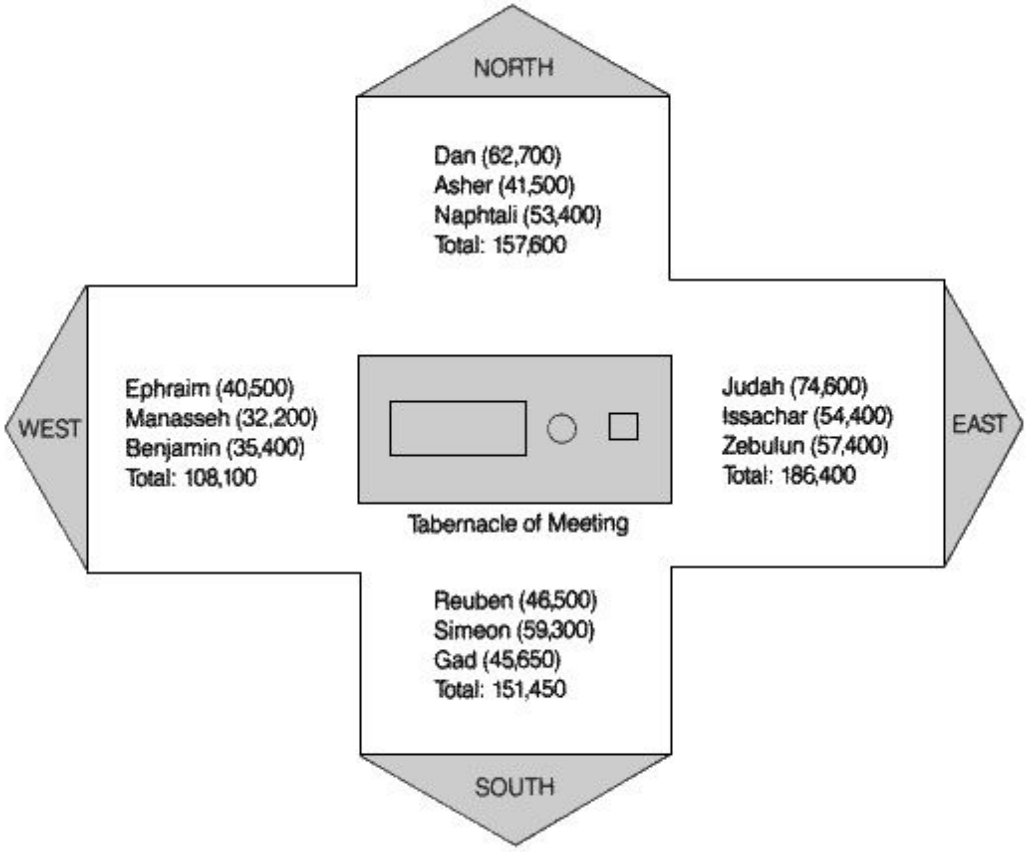
1:47-54 The Levites were not numbered among the men of Israel who were to be warriors (v. 47). They were charged with the setting up and taking down of the tabernacle and with the ministry connected with it. By positioning themselves around the tabernacle, they protected it from desecration and thus protected the people from punishment (v. 53).

2:1, 2 The tribes of Israel were commanded to pitch their tents in the area around the tabernacle (see diagram), three tribes on each side.



Placement of the Tribes in the Israelise Encampment

2:3-16 On the east side, under the flag of Judah, were Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun (vv. 3-9). Each tribe had its own military leader. These tribes totaled one hundred and eighty-six thousand four hundred. On the south side, under the flag of Reuben, were Reuben, Simeon, and Gad (vv. 10-16). The camp of Reuben totaled one hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred and fifty.

2:17-31 On the west side, under the flag of Ephraim, were Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin (vv. 18-24). This camp numbered one hundred and eight thousand one hundred. On the north side, under the flag of Dan, were Dan, Asher, and Naphtali (vv. 25-31). These totaled one hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred. The tribes were to march in the order given—the camp of Judah first, etc. The Levites marched after Gad and before Ephraim (v. 17).

2:32-34 The total number of men of war was six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty (v. 32). The total manpower, including the Levites (3:39), was 625,550. Assuming the men to be a third of the nation, then the total population must have been at least 1,876,650. The number of warriors is a better index of the strength of a church than the number of pewsitters!

B. The Number and Duties of the Levites (Chaps. 3, 4)

Chapters 3 and 4 have to do with the service of the Levites, who were not included in the census of chapters 1 and 2. The tribe of Levi was set aside by God for the service of the sanctuary. Originally, He had selected the firstborn sons to belong to Himself, but later He selected the tribe of Levi in their place for divine service (vv. 12, 13). Levi had three sons—Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. Their descendants were charged with the care of the tabernacle and its fixtures.

3:1-10a The family of Aaron (descended from Kohath) was the priestly family (v. 9). All other Levites served in connection with the tabernacle but were not priests. (The expression "the priests the Levites," found later in the Pentateuch, means the Levitical priests. It does not mean that all Levites were priests but that all priests were descended from Levi.) The priestly family is described in verses 1-4. After Nadab and Abihu had been slain for their sacrilege, Aaron was left with two sons—Eleazar and Ithamar. The Levites were servants of the priests (vv. 5-9). No one but Aaron and his descendants were to serve in the priesthood (v. 10a).

3:10b-13 The mediation of the OT priests could not bring the individual sinner into close communion with God. He had to stay away from the holy things under pain of death (v. 10b). But now the mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Great High Priest, gives us not only access to God but also boldness to enter into His very presence (Heb. 4:16). This drastic change stems from that great event which lies between Numbers and Hebrews—the miracle of Calvary.

3:14-39 The Levites were numbered, not as warriors but as worshipers (v. 15). Each son of Levi was charged with responsibility for certain parts of the tabernacle:

TRIBE • CHARGE • REFERENCE • NUMBER

Gershon • All the curtains, coverings, and hangings of the tabernacle and outer court, except the "veil" which was wrapped around the ark. • vv. 18-26

• 7500

Kohath • The most holy things—the ark, the table of showbread, the utensils, the screen, the altars, the golden lampstand, etc. • vv. 27-32 • 8600

Merari • The boards, the bars, the pillars, the sockets, the pegs, and the cords. • vv. 33-37 • 6200

The Levites were to pitch their tents immediately outside the tabernacle enclosure, with the Gershonites on the west (v. 23), the Kohathites on the south (v. 29), and the families of Merari on the north (v. 35). Moses and Aaron and sons were to camp ... on the east, at the entrance to the tabernacle (vv. 38, 39). (See diagram.)

Levi was the smallest tribe in Israel. The total number of Levites a month old and upward was twenty-two thousand (v. 39). However, the figures recorded in verses 22, 28, and 34 total 22,300. Various explanations of this discrepancy have been given. Williams suggests that the additional 300 were firstborn sons, born since the Exodus, who would naturally be omitted when the Levites were chosen to replace the firstborn of the other tribes.[2]

3:40-51 The meaning of this passage is as follows: the Levites were chosen by God to be His own, instead of all the firstborn sons. There were 22,000 Levites and 22,273 firstborn sons (vv. 39, 43). Thus there weren't enough Levites to compensate for all the firstborn of Israel who would have served under the original plan. The Lord commanded that the additional two hundred and seventy-three firstborn sons could be redeemed (bought back) by the payment of five shekels ... each. This redemption money (273 x 5 = 1365 shekels) was paid to Aaron and his sons (v. 51). It should be noted that the firstborn mentioned in verse 43 might include only those born since the Exodus from Egypt.

4:1-3 The numbering in chapter 4 was to determine the number of Levites who were available for active service in connection with the tabernacle. These were the men from thirty ... to fifty years of age.

4:4-20 Exodus 25:15 says, "The poles shall be in the rings of the ark; they shall not be taken from it." But verse 6 says that the priests "shall insert its poles." A possible solution suggested in Keil and Delitzsch's commentary is that verse 6 might be translated, "adjust its bearing poles."[3]

The duties of the Kohathites are taken up first (vv. 4-20). Aaron and his sons were designated to pack the tabernacle and the sacred vessels (vv. 5-13). The ark (vv. 5, 6), the table of showbread (vv. 7, 8), the golden lampstand (vv. 9, 10), the golden altar (v. 11), the utensils (v. 12), and the bronze altar (vv. 13, 14) were to be draped with a covering of badger skins. The other sons of Kohath were then appointed to carry these covered articles. (The laver isn't mentioned here but they must have carried it also.) They were not allowed to touch or even look on them uncovered, lest they die (vv. 15,17-20). Eleazar the son of Aaron was placed in charge of the tabernacle and its sacred furnishings (v. 16).

The veil between the Holiest and the holy place always hid the ark from view (v. 5). Even when Israel was on the move, the ark was covered by this same veil, which pictured the body of our Lord Jesus Christ. No one except the high priest could look upon the throne of God above the ark until Calvary, when the veil was forever torn in two.

4:21-28 The Gershonites were to carry the curtains of the tabernacle, the tabernacle of meeting, the hangings of the court, and the screens. Ithamar the son of Aaron was in charge of the Gershonites.

4:29-33 The families of the sons of Merari were appointed to carry the boards, bars, pillars, sockets, pegs, and cords.

4:34-49 The results of the census were as follows:

Kohathites • 2750

Gershonites • 2630

Meranites • 3200

TOTAL number of Levites from ages 30-50 • 8580

C. Cleanliness and Confession (5:1-10)

This section deals with precautions the Israelites were to take to keep the camp free from defilement. The reason for the command in verse 3 can be found in Deuteronomy 23:14: God was walking in the midst of the camp.

5:1-4 Lepers, people with running sores, and those who had touched a dead body were to be put ... outside the camp. The camp was composed of the tabernacle area plus that space around it occupied by the tents of Israel.

5:5-10 When a man or woman ... committed any sin against another, he or she was required to confess the sin, to offer a trespass offering, to make restitution, and to add one-fifth part. If the person who was wronged had died or could not be located, and if no near relatives were available, then payment was to be made to the priest.

D. The Law of Jealousy (5:11-31)

5:11-15 This passage describes a lie-detecting ritual known as the trial of jealousy. The purpose of this ceremony was to determine the guilt or innocence of a woman who was suspected of being unfaithful to her husband. The woman was required to drink ... water mixed with dust from the floor of the tabernacle. If she was guilty, it would prove a curse to her, causing swelling of the stomach and rotting of the thigh. If she was innocent, no ill effects would follow. It is obvious from verses 12-14 that the husband did not know whether his wife had been unfaithful. He first was required to bring his wife to the priest, together with a grain offering.

5:16-31 The priest prepared the mixture of water and dust ... in an earthen vessel. He brought her to the altar before the LORD, unbound the hair of her head, and put the meal offering ... in her hands. Then he made her agree to an oath whereby she would be cursed if guilty. After writing the curses in a book and scraping them off into the bitter water, he waved the grain offering before the LORD, burned a handful of it on the altar, and then made the woman drink the water. The statement in verse 24 that he caused the woman to drink the water is repeated in verse 26. She drank only once. If she was guilty, the threatened judgments came upon her, including sterility. If innocent, then she was pronounced clean, was free from punishment, and was able to live a normal married life, bearing children. Verses 29-31 summarize the trial of jealousy.

Jealousy can destroy a marriage, whether it has justifiable grounds or not. This ritual provided a way to settle the issue once for all. The judgment of God would be upon the guilty, and the innocent would be freed from the suspicion of her partner.

Some Bible students believe that this section will have a special application in a coming day, when the nation of Israel will be tried for its unfaithfulness to Jehovah.

E. The Law of the Nazirite (Chap. 6)

6:1-8 The word "Nazirite" comes from a root meaning "to separate." The vow of a Nazirite was a voluntary vow which a man or woman could make for a specified period of time. The Mishna states that a Nazirite vow could last as long as 100 days, but the usual length was thirty days. In some rare cases, people were Nazirites for life—e.g., Samuel, Samson, John the Baptist. The vow contained three provisions: (1) He would neither ... eat nor drink of the fruit of the grapevine—including vinegar, wine, grape juice, grapes or raisins (vv. 2-4); (2) he would not cut his hair (v. 5); (3) he would not go near a dead body (vv. 6-8).

Wine speaks of human joy. Long hair, being a shame for a man, is a sign of humiliation. A dead body causes defilement.

> Thus the Nazirite was, and is, an enigma to the children of this world. To be joyful, he withdrew from joy; to be strong, he became weak; and in order to love his relatives, he 'hated' them (Luke 14:26).[4]

6:9-12 This paragraph describes the procedure to be used when a man broke a vow through unintentional contact with a dead body. First he had to go through the seven-day cleansing process described in Numbers 19. On the seventh day he shaved his head, and on the following day he offered two turtledoves or two young pigeons, one for a sin offering and the other for a burnt offering. He also brought a yearling lamb for a trespass offering. In spite of all the offerings, the days of his original separation were lost, and he had to begin all over again. Thus although a defiled Nazirite could be reconsecrated, the days of his defilement were lost. For us, this means that a backslidden believer can be restored but the time spent out of fellowship with God is wasted.

6:13-21 Here we have the ceremony required when a man came to the close of the time of his vow. Four offerings were brought—burnt, sin, peace, and meal (vv. 14, 15). The Nazirite shaved his ... head and burned the hair in the fire ... under ... the peace offering (v. 18). The priest's part in the ritual is given in verses 16, 17, 19, and 20. Verse 21 refers to a freewill offering which the Nazirite could offer upon completion of his vow.

6:22-27 The closing verses of chapter 6 give the lovely and familiar blessing with which Aaron and his sons were to bless the people. The great evangelist D. L. Moody appreciated it very much:

> Here is a benediction that can go all the world over, and can give all the time without being impoverished. Every heart may utter it: it is the speech of God: every letter may conclude with it; every day may begin with it; every night may be sanctified by it. Here is blessing—keeping—shining—the uplifting upon our poor life of all heaven's glad morning. It is the Lord himself who brings this bar of music from heaven's infinite anthems[5]

F. The Offering of the Princes (Chap. 7)

7:1-9 This chapter takes us back to Exodus 40:17, when the tabernacle had been set up. The leaders of Israel were the heads of the various tribes. Their names were already given in Numbers 1:5-16 and in Numbers 2. They first of all brought an offering of six covered carts and twelve oxen (v. 3). Moses distributed two carts and four oxen ... to the sons of Gershon, and four carts and eight oxen ... to the Merarites to be used in carrying their share of the tabernacle fixtures. No wagons or oxen were given to the Kohathites because they bore the precious burden of the sacred vessels on their shoulders.

7:10-83 The tribal leaders brought offerings on twelve consecutive days for the dedication of the altar. These offerings are described in minute detail, as follows:

1 • Nahshon • Judah • vv. 12-17

2 • Nethanel • Issachar • vv. 18-23

3 • Eliab • Zebulun • vv. 24-29

4 • Elizur • Reuben • vv. 30-35

5 • Shelumiel • Simeon • vv. 36-41

6 • Eliasaph • Gad • vv. 42-47

7 • Elishama • Ephraim • vv. 48-53

8 • Gamaliel • Manasseh • vv. 54-59

9 • Abidan • Benjamin • vv. 60-65

10 • Ahiezer • Dan • vv. 66-71

11 • Pagiel • Asher • vv. 72-77

12 • Ahira • Naphtali • vv. 78-83

7:84-89 The total of all the gifts is given in verses 84-88. God doesn't forget any service that is done for Him. He keeps a careful record. At the close of the offering, Moses went into the Most Holy Place and heard the voice of God speaking to him from above the mercy seat, perhaps expressing satisfaction with the gifts of the leaders (v. 89). Although Moses was of the tribe of Levi, he was not a priest. Yet God made an exception in his case, not only authorizing him to enter the Most Holy Place but commanding him to do so (Ex. 25:21, 22).

G. The Services of the Tabernacle (Chap. 8)

8:1-4 Aaron was instructed to arrange the lamps on the golden lampstand in such a way that the light would be cast in front of the lampstand. If the light speaks of the testimony of the Holy Spirit and the lampstand speaks of Christ, then it is a reminder that the Spirit's ministry is to glorify Christ.

8:5-13 The consecration of the Levites is described next. They were first cleansed by sprinkling with the water of purification (explained in Num. 19), by shaving their bodies with a razor, and by washing their clothes and ... themselves (v. 7). Representatives of the people laid their hands on the heads of the Levites at the door of the tabernacle, and Aaron offered the Levites before the LORD like a wave offering. This reminds us of Romans 12:1, 2, where today's believers are to present their bodies as a living sacrifice to God. Moses then offered a burnt offering and a sin offering.

8:14-22 God repeats that He had chosen the Levites to belong to Himself instead of ... the firstborn whom He had claimed as His own after the Exodus. The Levites were appointed to serve the priests. The consecration of the Levites took place as commanded, and they took up their service in connection with the tabernacle.

8:23-26 The Levites were to serve from twenty-five years of age to fifty (v. 24). In Numbers 4:3, the beginning age was said to be thirty years. Some take the reference in chapter 4 to apply to those who carried the tabernacle through the wilderness. They understand the lower age in chapter 8 to refer to service at the tabernacle after it had been set up in the Promised Land. Others understand the additional five years to be a sort of apprenticeship. Those retiring at fifty years of age no longer did heavy work but were allowed to continue in a kind of supervisory capacity (vv. 25, 26). These verses distinguish between "work" and ministry or attending to needs. The former is heavy work; the latter is overseeing.

Someone has pointed out that the Levites are pictures of Christians, who are redeemed, cleansed, and set apart to serve the Lord, having no inheritance on earth.

H. The Passover, the Cloud, and the Silver Trumpets (9:1-10:10)

9:1-14 God's instructions to keep the Passover (vv. 1-2) preceded the events in chapter 1. Not all the events in Numbers are chronological. The Passover was kept on the fourteenth day of the first month. Special provision was made for those who were ceremonially defiled (perhaps involuntarily), through contact with a human corpse, or were away on a journey, to keep the Passover one month later—on the fourteenth day of the second month (vv. 6-12). But anyone else who failed to keep the Passover was cut off from among his people (v. 13). A stranger (Gentile) was permitted to keep the LORD'S Passover if he so desired, but on the same terms as the Jews (v. 14).

9:15-23 These verses anticipate the next chapters. They describe the glory cloud which covered the tabernacle—the cloud ... by day and the appearance of fire by night. Whenever the cloud lifted off the tabernacle, the people of Israel were to break camp and march forward. When the cloud settled, the people were to stop and pitch their tents. The cloud was, of course, a symbol of God guiding His people. Although the Lord does not lead in such a visible way today—we walk by faith, not by sight—the principle is still valid. Move when the Lord moves, and not before, because "darkness about going is light about staying."

10:1-10 Moses was instructed to make two silver trumpets. These were to be used to: (a) assemble the congregation ... at the door of the tabernacle of meeting (vv. 3, 7); (b) give the signal for marching forward; (c) assemble the leaders (only one trumpet was used for this) (v. 4); (d) sound an alarm in time of war (v. 9); (e) announce certain special days, such as feast days (v. 10).

Different trumpet calls were used for these different purposes. Sounding the advance in verse 5 was the signal to march. The tribes on the east side of the tabernacle set out first. The second sound of advance was the signal for those on the south side to start. Presumably those on the west and north followed in that order. The trumpets were not only for the wilderness march, but were to be used in the land as well (v. 9). Note the words "in your land." God would fulfill His promise made to Abraham. His descendants would be given a land, but their disobedience and faithlessness would delay their entrance for forty years.

II. FROM SINAI TO THE PLAINS OF MOAB (10:11-22:1)

A. Setting out from the Sinai Wilderness (10:11-36)

10:11 Verse 11 marks a definite division in the book. Up to this point, the people had camped at Mount Sinai. From verse 11 to 22:1 is the record of the journey from Mount Sinai to the Plains of Moab, just outside the Promised Land. This journey covered a period of almost forty years. They did not start until the twentieth day because of the celebration of the second Passover (see Num. 9:10, 11).

10:12, 13 The first section of the journey was from Mount Sinai to the Wilderness of Paran. However, there were three stops before they reached this wilderness —Taberah, Kibroth Hattaavah, and Hazeroth. They actually reached the Wilderness of Paran in Numbers 12:16.

10:14-28 The order in which the tribes marched is given next. The leader of each tribe was at its head. The order is the same as in chapter 2, with one exception: in 2:17, it seems that the Levites marched after Gad and before Ephraim. In 10:17, the Gershonites and Merarites are listed after Zebulun, and the Kohathites after Gad. Apparently the Gershonites and Merarites moved on ahead with their equipment so they could have it all set up at the camping site when the Kohathites arrived with the sacred vessels.

10:29-32 Hobab was Moses' brother-in-law. Raguel (same as Reuel and Jethro) was Hobab's father and therefore Moses' father-in-law. Being a Midianite, Hobab was probably very familiar with the wilderness. Perhaps that is why Moses invited him to accompany the Israelites—"You can be our eyes." Many Bible interpreters believe that this invitation showed a lack of faith on Moses' part, since God had already promised to guide.

Another view is held by Kurtz, who suggests,

> The pillar of cloud determined the general route to be taken, the place of encampment, and the length of tarry in each location; yet human prudence was by no means precluded with respect to arranging the encampment so as to combine most advantageously the circumstances of water, pasture, shelter, supply of fuel. In all these particulars, Hobab's experience, and knowledge of the desert, would be exceedingly useful as supplementary to the guidance of the cloud[6]

10:33, 34 The ark of the covenant was wrapped in the veil that separated the Holy Place from the Most Holy (Num. 4:5), and was carried by the Kohathites at the front of the procession. The trip from Sinai to Kadesh Barnea lasted three days. The glory cloud overshadowed the people as the Lord searched out a resting place for them.

10:35, 36 We are not told whether Hobab actually did accompany the Israelites. However, it appears from Judges 1:16 and 4:11 that he did, since his descendants are found among the Israelites. Whenever the ark set out in the morning, Moses called on the LORD for victory. And when at evening it rested, he prayed for the LORD to return to the people of Israel.

B. Rebellion in the Camp (Chap. 11)

11:1-3 The reader is startled by the readiness of the people to complain against God after all He had done for them. A clue to the discontent is found in verse 1—"consumed some in the outskirts of the camp." The malcontents were at a distance from the ark. Fire from God "consumed" in the extremity of the camp, giving the name Taberah ("burning") to the place. The King James and New King James Versions read that the fire consumed some of the complainers. The ASV states only that the fire devoured in the uttermost part of the camp. Either way it was a merciful warning to the people as a whole of a judgment that would be severe.

11:4-9 The second complaining took place right in the midst of the camp, but this time the reason can be found in the expression the mixed multitude or "rabble." Some unbelievers had come out of Egypt with the Israelites, and this mixed multitude was a source of continual grief to the Israelites. Their disaffection spread to the Israelites, causing them to long with intense craving for the food of Egypt and to despise the manna. See Psalm 78:17-33 for God's commentary on this.

How strange that souls whom Jesus feeds
With manna from above
Should grieve Him by their evil deeds,
And sin against His love.
But 'tis a greater marvel still
That He from whom they stray Should bear with their rebellious will,
And wash their sins away.

11:10-15 Moses first cried to the LORD concerning his own inability to take care of such a people alone; then he described the utter impossibility of providing meat for such a multitude. Finally, he asked for death as an escape from such problems.

11:16, 17 The Lord's first reply was to provide for the appointment of seventy ... elders to share the burden of the people with Moses. Many Bible students question whether this was God's best for Moses. They reason that because God gives strength to do whatever He orders, Moses suffered a decrease of divine enablement when his responsibilities decreased.[7] Earlier, Moses had appointed men to act as civil authorities according to his father-in-law's advice (Ex. 18:25; Deut. 1:9-15). Possibly the seventy chosen here were to help bear the spiritual burden. These two distinct appointments should not be confused.

11:18-23 As for the people, God said that they would have plenty of meat to eat. He would send them enough meat to make them sick of it. They would have it for a whole month. Moses questioned the possibility of such an event, but the Lord promised to bring it to pass. On the way to Mount Sinai, God had miraculously provided meat for the children of Israel (Ex. 16:13). Moses should have remembered this and not questioned the ability of the Lord. How quickly we forget the Lord's past mercies when circumstances close in around us!

11:24-30 When the seventy elders were officially installed, the Spirit of the LORD came ... upon them and they prophesied; that is, they spoke direct revelations from God. Even two of the men who had remained in the camp ... prophesied. Joshua apparently thought that this miracle posed a threat to Moses' leadership and sought to restrain them. But Moses showed his largeness of spirit by his noble answer in verse 29.

11:31-35 The promised meat came in the form of a swarm of quail. Verse 31 may mean that the quail flew two cubits off the ground or were piled two cubits deep on the ground. The latter is not impossible; quail that were exhausted by migration have been known to land on a ship in sufficient quantity to sink it.[8] The people went forth to feast on the meat, but many were soon struck by a terrible plague. The place was called Kibroth Hattaavah ("the graves of lust") because the people's craving brought them to the grave. Hazeroth is listed as the next place of encampment (v. 35).

C. Rebellion of Aaron and Miriam (Chap. 12)

12:1, 2 The next sad chapter in the history of Israel concerns two of the leaders of the people, Miriam and Aaron. Though they were Moses' sister and brother, they spoke against him for marrying an Ethiopian woman. At least that was their pretext. But the real reason seems to be given in verse 2: they resented Moses' leadership and wanted to share it—they were jealous. At this time there was no law against marrying an Ethiopian, though when they came to the land, the Israelites were forbidden to marry a non-Jew.

12:3 Moses did not try to vindicate himself but trusted God, who had placed him in the position of leadership. His family (chap. 12), the leaders (chap. 16), and ultimately the whole congregation (16:41, 42) disputed his authority. Yet when the judgment of God fell upon his adversaries, Moses did not gloat but interceded for them. He was indeed very humble, more than all men who were on the face of the earth. The fact that he wrote this about himself does not deny his humility; rather it illustrates 2 Peter 1:21b; he wrote as he was moved by the Holy Spirit.[9]

12:4-8 God summoned Moses, Aaron, and Miriam to the door of the tabernacle of meeting, rebuked Miriam and Aaron, and reminded them that Moses held a position of nearness to God that no other prophet ever held. He might speak to others indirectly, by visions and dreams, but He spoke to Moses directly, face to face. (The word plainly in v. 8 means "directly," i.e., without a go-between.) The form of the LORD means some manifestation or visible representation. Although Miriam herself was a prophetess (Ex. 15:20), the Lord made clear the difference between His relationship with Moses and other prophets. The only other thing recorded about Miriam after this incident is her death (Num. 20:1).

12:9, 10 The LORD was angry with them, and He departed. As punishment for her rebellion, Miriam was smitten with leprosy. Since Aaron was not punished, some suggest that Miriam was the ringleader. They point out that the verb in verse 1 is feminine singular. Others believe that Aaron's punishment was to see his sister become a leper. Aaron was the high priest, and he would have been unable to function on behalf of the people if he had been made leprous. His position might have saved him from the humiliation that Miriam had to go through.

12:11-16 Aaron confessed his sin to Moses and asked that Miriam should not be "like a stillborn child, which comes into the world half decomposed."[10] In response to Moses' intercession, God healed Miriam of the leprosy but insisted that she should go through the usual seven-day period for the cleansing of a leper. The Lord reminded Moses that she would have been barred from the camp as unclean if her father had but spit in her face.

The Arabah. Dervied from a Hebrew word meaning "steppe" or "desert," Arabah is the name given to the southern extension of the Jordan Valley. This depression extends more than 160 km. (100 mi.) from the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Aqaba.

D. Spying out the Promised Land (Chaps. 13, 14)

13:1-20 In this chapter sending out the spies was ordered by the LORD. In Deuteronomy 1:19-22 it was suggested by the people. Doubtless God's instruction was in response to the people's request, even if their attitude was one of unbelief. The names of the twelve spies are given in verses 4-15. Notice particularly Caleb (v. 6) and Hoshea (v. 8). Moses called Hoshea by the name Joshua (v. 16). Moses asked the twelve spies to bring back a complete report concerning the land and its inhabitants (vv. 17-20). First they were to go to the Negev in the South, then to the hill country in the central part of the land.

13:21-29 The spies searched the land from the Wilderness of Zin in the south to Rehob in the north (v. 21). Verses 22-24 describe the spying operation in the South. At Hebron they saw three sons of Anak, who were giants, according to Deuteronomy 2:10, 11. Near Hebron they came to a valley of vineyards. They cut down a large cluster of grapes and, suspending it on a pole ... between two men, carried it back to the camp of Israel, together with pomegranates and figs. The place was called the Valley of Eshcol, meaning "cluster." The majority report of the spies pictured a beautiful land with dangerous inhabitants. The spies doubted the ability of Israel to conquer the inhabitants (in spite of God's promise to drive them out).

13:30-32 Reference to Nephilim (v. 33, Heb.) does not mean that these giants survived the Flood. The Israelites had heard about the Nephilim that lived before the Flood, and they identified these giants with them. Caleb (speaking for Joshua and himself) expressed confidence that Israel would be victorious. But the others flatly denied this. The expression "a land that devours its inhabitants" means that the present inhabitants would destroy any others who tried to settle there.

13:33 Ten of the spies had the wrong perspective. They saw themselves as the inhabitants of Canaan saw them (like grasshoppers). Joshua and Caleb saw Israel from God's point of view, well able to conquer the land. To the ten unbelieving spies the problem of giants was insurmountable. To the two believing spies the presence of giants was insignificant.

14:1-10 All the congregation broke out into bitter complaint against Moses and Aaron, accused the Lord of delivering them from Egypt so they would be slain in the Promised Land, and proposed a new leader who would take them back to Egypt (vv. 1-3). When Joshua ... and Caleb sought to assure the people that they would be victorious against the enemy, the Israelites conspired to stone them (vv. 6-10).

Verses 3 and 4 demonstrate graphically the stupidity of unbelief. Return to Egypt! Return to a land devastated by their God! Return to a land still mourning for its firstborn sons! Return to the land they had plundered on the eve of their exodus! Return by the Red Sea where the Egyptian army had been drowned, pursuing them! And what kind of welcome would Pharaoh give them? Yet this seemed safer than to believe that God would lead them to victory in Canaan. Jehovah had struck Egypt, parted the sea, fed them with bread from heaven, and led them through the wilderness, yet they still could not trust His power to prevail over a few giants! Their actions revealed clearly what they thought about God. They doubted His power; was the Lord really a match for the giants? They had failed to grasp what had been so manifestly revealed to them the past year—namely, the nature and ways of Jehovah. A low concept of God can ruin a person or an entire nation, as is here so painfully illustrated.

14:11-19 The Lord threatened to abandon the Jews and raise up a new nation from Moses' descendants (vv. 11, 12). But Moses interceded for them by reminding the Lord that the Gentile nations would then say that the LORD was not able to bring His people into the Promised Land (vv. 13-19). The honor of God was at stake, and Moses pled that argument with tremendous forcefulness. In Exodus 34:6, 7 the Lord had revealed Himself to Moses. In verse 18 Moses repeats almost verbatim God's description of Himself as the basis of his prayer. How different is the theology of Moses from the theology of the people! His is based on divine revelation; theirs is based on human imagination.

14:20-35 Although God replied that He would not destroy the people, He decreed that of all the men twenty years of age or older who came out of Egypt and who were able to go to war (Num. 26:64, 65; Deut. 2:14), only Joshua and Caleb would enter the Promised Land. The people would wander in the wilderness for forty years, until the unbelieving generation died. The sons had to bear the brunt of their fathers' infidelity (v. 33). However, they would be permitted after forty years to enter the Promised Land. Forty years were specified because the spies had spent forty days in the land on their expedition (v. 34). Forty years here is a round number; it was actually about thirty-eight years. It was forty years from the time Israel left Egypt till they reached Canaan. The people refused the good the Lord wanted to give them, so they had to suffer the evil they chose instead. However, the fact that they were excluded from the land does not mean that they were eternally lost. Many of them were saved through faith in the Lord, even though they suffered His governmental punishment in this life because of their disobedience.

There is a great deal of obscurity concerning the exact route followed by the Israelites during their wilderness wanderings. There is also uncertainty concerning how long they stayed in each place. Some believe, for example, that over thirty-seven years were spent at Kadesh and that one year was spent on a journey south to the shore of the Red Sea, now known as the Gulf of Aqaba. Many of the place names on the route between Sinai and the Plains of Moab are no longer identifiable.

The glory of the LORD in verse 21 refers to His glory as righteous Judge, punishing the disobedient people of Israel. The Israelites had tempted God ten times (v. 22). These temptings were as follows: at the Red Sea (Ex. 14:11, 12), at Marah (Ex. 15:23), in the Wilderness of Sin (Ex. 16:2), two rebellions concerning the manna (Ex. 16:20, 27), at Rephidim (Ex. 17:1), at Horeb (Ex. 32:7), at Taberah (Num. 11:1), at Kibroth Hattaavah (Num. 11:4 ff.), and at Kadesh (the murmuring at the spies' report—Num. 14).

Of the 603,550 men of war who came out of Egypt, only Joshua and Caleb entered the land (vv. 29, 30; Deut. 2:14).

14:36-38 The ten unbelieving spies who brought the evil report were killed by a plague, but Joshua and Caleb escaped it.

14:39-45 Hearing the doom pronounced upon them, the people told Moses that they would obey God and go into the land, probably meaning directly north from Kadesh Barnea (v. 40). But Moses told them that it was too late, that the Lord had departed from them, and that they would be defeated in the attempt. Disregarding Moses' advice, they advanced to the mountaintop and were attacked and driven back by some of the heathen inhabitants of the land (v. 45).

E. Various Legislation (Chap. 15)

15:1, 2 We don't know how much time elapsed between chapters 14 and 15, but the contrast is striking. " ... they certainly shall not see the land" (14:23). "When you have come into the land" (15:2). God's purposes, though sometimes hindered by sin, are never thwarted. He promised the land of Canaan to Abraham, and if one generation of his descendants was too faithless to receive it, He would give it to the next.

15:3-29 The first 29 verses of this chapter describe offerings which were to be brought by the children of Israel when they were settled in the land. Most of these offerings have already been described in minute detail. Special emphasis is given here to unintentional sins committed by the congregation (vv. 22-26) or by an individual (vv. 27-29). Verse 24 mentions two offerings for the congregation, a bull and a goat. However, Leviticus 4 states that the congregation was only to bring a bullock. But Leviticus 4 also says that a leader, when he sinned, was to bring a goat. Possibly the account here in Numbers mentions these offerings together, whereas in Leviticus they are mentioned separately. In verses 20 and 21 we find an oft-repeated command in Scripture: "Of the first ... to the LORD." Whether the firstborn or the firstfruits, the Lord was to have the best of everything. This also served as a reminder to the people that everything they possessed came from, and ultimately belonged to, Jehovah.

15:30-36 There was no offering for the sin of presumption—that is, for willful, defiant rebellion against the word of the Lord. All who committed such a sin were to be cut off (vv. 30, 31). An example of presumptuous sin is given in verses 32-36. A man was found ... gathering sticks on the Sabbath in clear violation of the Law. It was known that he should be put to death (Ex. 31:15), but the mode of execution had never been stated. The Lord now declared that he should be stoned ... to death outside the camp.

15:37-41 The Jews were commanded to make tassels on the corners of their garments and to put a blue thread in the tassels of the corners. Blue is the heavenly color, and it was intended to speak to them of the holiness and obedience which suited them as children of God.

F. Korah's Rebellion (Chaps. 16, 17)

16:1-3 Korah, a cousin of Aaron (Ex. 6:18-21), was a Levite but not a priest. He apparently resented the fact that the family of Aaron should have exclusive right to the priesthood. Dathan, Abiram, and On were of the tribe of Reuben, and they resented Moses' leadership over them. On is not mentioned after verse 1, and it is impossible to know if he shared the doom of the others. Two hundred and fifty of the princes— leaders of Israel—joined in the rebellion against the priesthood and the civil authority (v. 2). They argued that all the people were holy and should not be excluded from offering sacrifices (v. 3).

16:4-11 To settle the matter, Moses ordered Korah and his rebels to appear the following day with censers (vv. 6, 7). The burning of incense was a priestly function; if God did not recognize them as priests, He would show His displeasure.

16:12-15 Dathan and Abiram refused to leave their tents when called by Moses but scolded him for his leadership. These men were referring to the earlier promise (Ex. 3:8) that God would bring them into a "a land flowing with milk and honey," and they were complaining here (with sarcasm) that Moses had instead brought them out of a land flowing with milk and honey (Egypt) and had brought them into a land not flowing with milk and honey (the desert).

The thought of verse 14 may be that, having failed to fulfill his promise, Moses was now trying to blind the people to his failure or to his true intentions. Moses reminded the Lord that he had not demanded tribute from the people, as rulers usually do.

16:16-22 The following day, Korah, Aaron, and the two hundred and fifty rebels appeared before the tabernacle with censers. The congregation of Israel also assembled, perhaps in sympathy with Korah. Then the glory of the LORD appeared to the whole congregation. And the LORD told Moses and Aaron to separate themselves from the congregation before He destroyed them. Because Moses and Aaron interceded, the judgment was not executed.

16:23-35 The scene now changes to the tents where Korah, Dathan, and Abiram lived (v. 24). Moses warned the rest of the people to move away from the vicinity of those tents. Then Moses announced that if these men died a natural death, or were visited by the common fate of all men, then Moses himself would be discredited. But if the LORD miraculously caused the earth to swallow them up, then the people would know that these men had been guilty of rebellion (v. 30). No sooner had he uttered these words than the earth opened up and swallowed Dathan and Abiram and their families [households], who must have joined in their rebellion (vv. 32, 33). There is considerable question as to when Korah died. Some believe that he was swallowed by the earth with Dathan and Abiram (vv. 32, 33). Others suggest that he was destroyed by the same fire that killed the two hundred and fifty rebels (v. 35). It seems from Numbers 26:10 that he was swallowed up along with Dathan and Abiram. Verse 11 of the same chapter shows that his sons were spared. Israel's next great prophet, Samuel, was a descendant of Korah (1 Chron. 6:22-23, 28). ... In verse 30 Sheol means the grave, but it can also mean the disembodied state.

At certain times in history, God has shown His extreme displeasure at certain sins by judging them instantly. He judged Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:24, 25); Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10:1, 2); Miriam (Num. 12:10); Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, plus 250 leaders (this chapter); Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:5, 10). Clearly He does not do this every time these sins are committed, but He does break in on history on selected occasions as a warning to future generations.

16:36-40 The holy ... censers used by the sinners were converted into hammered plates to cover the altar of burnt offering. These were a reminder that only the family of Aaron had priestly privileges. The fire in the censers was scattered abroad.

16:41-50 On the day following these solemn events, the people accused Moses and Aaron of killing God's people. The Lord, in wrath, threatened to destroy them, but Moses and Aaron went before the tabernacle of meeting, no doubt to intercede for them. The Lord then struck the people with a dreadful plague. Only when Aaron rushed into the midst of the congregation with incense and made atonement for the people was the plague ... stopped. But even by then, fourteen thousand seven hundred had perished. The leaders, along with the congregation, had challenged the priesthood of Aaron. Now it was the priestly intercession of Aaron which stopped the plague. Moses and Aaron were not the ones who killed the Lord's people, but the ones who saved them!

17:1-9 In order to emphasize to the people that the priesthood was committed only to the family of Aaron, God commanded that a rod for each tribe of Israel be placed in the tabernacle overnight. The rod of Levi had Aaron's name on it. The right to the priesthood belonged to the rod that blossomed. In the morning, when the rods were examined, it was found that Aaron's rod ... had sprouted with buds, had produced blossoms, and yielded ripe almonds. Aaron's rod pictures the resurrected Christ as the Priest of God's choosing. Just as the almond tree is the first to blossom in the spring, so Christ is the firstfruits of resurrection (1 Cor. 15:20, 23). The golden lampstand in the holy place was "made like almond blossoms, each with its ornamental knob and flower" (Ex. 25:33, 34). It was a priestly function to take care of the lampstand daily. Aaron's rod corresponded in design and fruit to the lampstand, thus signifying that the household of Aaron had been divinely chosen to minister as priests.

17:10-13 From now on, Aaron's rod was to be kept in the ark of the covenant as a token sign against the rebels. After this, the people were seized with terror and feared to go into the general vicinity of the tabernacle.

G. Instructions to the Levites (Chaps. 18, 19)

18:1-7 Chapter 18 is closely linked to the last two verses of the preceding chapter. In order to allay the fears of the people, the Lord repeated the instructions about service at the tabernacle. If these instructions were obeyed, there need be no fear of His wrath. Verse 1 is in two parts. "You and your sons and your father's house with you" refers to all the Levites, including the priests. "You and your sons" refers to the priests alone. The former bore the iniquity related to the sanctuary; the latter bore the iniquity associated with their priesthood. To "bear the iniquity" means to be responsible for any neglect or failure to comply with sacred duties. The Levites were assistants to the priests but were not to enter the tabernacle on priestly service ... lest they die.

18:8-20 The priests were permitted a certain portion of various offerings as compensation (vv. 8-11). They were also entitled to the firstfruits of oil, wine, grain, and fruit (vv. 12, 13), to things devoted to the LORD (v. 14), and to the firstborn. In the case of firstborn sons and unclean animals, the priests received the redemption money in place of the sons or animals. In the case of sacrificial animals, the firstborn was sacrificed to the LORD, and the priests received their portion (vv. 17-19). A covenant of salt (v. 19) means one that is inviolable and permanent. The priests did not receive any land because the Lord was to be their special portion and inheritance (v. 20).

18:21-32 The Levites received tithes from the people, but they in turn were responsible to give a tenth to the priests. This tenth was offered as a heave offering ... to the LORD.

19:1-10 Chapter 19 deals with one of the strongest symbols of cleansing in the OT, the use of the ashes of a red heifer. This offering had to do particularly with removing defilement caused by coming in contact with a dead person. The children of Israel had just rebelled against the Lord at Kadesh. They were now being sent out into the wilderness to die because of their unbelief. Over 600,000 people would die in a thirty-eight year period, or over forty people a day. One can see the need for the ashes of the red heifer, for who could avoid contact with death on such a journey?

The heifer was taken outside the camp and slaughtered (v. 3). Eleazar the priest sprinkled its blood seven times before the tabernacle, and then the heifer was burned, skin and all, together with cedar wood, hyssop and scarlet. These same materials were used in the cleansing of lepers (Lev. 14:4, 6). The priest and the man who burned the heifer were unclean until evening. Then a man who was clean carefully gathered up the ashes and stored them outside the camp for future use (v. 9); then he was unclean until evening.

19:11-19 This paragraph tells how the ashes were to be used. If a person had become ceremonially unclean through touching a dead body or through being in a tent where someone had died, a clean person took some of the ashes and mixed them with running water. The clean person sprinkled the water with hyssop ... on the unclean person or thing on the third day and on the seventh day. On the seventh day the unclean man washed his clothes, bathed himself, and was clean that evening (v. 19).

Williams suggests that the red heifer symbolized Christ: spotless externally and without blemish internally; free from any bondage to sin; and robed with the red earth of manhood.[11] But we must be careful not to press the type too far.

The one historical record of the use of the ashes of a heifer is in Numbers 31. Mantle says that:

> ... the ashes were regarded as a concentration of the essential properties of the sin offering, and could be resorted to at all times with comparatively little trouble and no loss of time. One red heifer availed for centuries. Only six are said to have been required during the whole of Jewish history; for the smallest quantity of the ashes availed to impart the cleansing virtue of the pure spring water.[12]

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews argues that whereas the ashes of a red heifer could do no more than set a person apart from outward, ceremonial defilement, the blood of Christ has infinite power to produce an inward cleansing of the conscience from dead works (Heb. 9:13, 14). An unknown author comments:

> The red heifer is God's provision for inevitable, unavoidable contact with the spiritual death that is around us. It probably has special reference to Israel's bloodguiltiness in connection with the Messiah. It resembles the trespass offering but does not displace it.

Old Testament regulations concerning washing with water, sometimes with running water (Lev. 15:13), are now an accepted medical technique for disinfection.

19:20-22 Punishment was inevitable for an unclean person who did not use the water of purification. Also, God decreed that anyone who touched or sprinkled the water was unclean until evening, and anyone he touched was also unclean for the remainder of the day.

H. The Sin of Moses (20:1-13)

20:1 As this chapter opens, it is forty years since the Israelites left Egypt and thirty-eight years since they sent the spies into the land. The people had wandered for thirty-eight years and had now come back to Kadesh, in the Wilderness of Zin—the very place from which they had sent the spies. They were no closer to the Promised Land than they had been thirty-eight years earlier! Here Miriam died ... and was buried. Over 600,000 people had died during the wasted years between chapters 19 and 20. The bitter fruit of unbelief was harvested in silence for an entire generation.

20:2-9 The people who complained to Moses and Aaron about the lack of water were a new generation, but they acted like their fathers (vv. 2-5). The LORD told Moses to speak to the rock, and it would yield water. He was to take the rod of Aaron which had been deposited in the tabernacle (v. 9; cf. 17:10), though it is "his rod" in verse 11. Aaron's rod was the rod of the priesthood; Moses' rod was the rod of judgment and power.

20:10-13 Once before, at a place called Massah (and Meribah), the people had murmured for water. At that time, the Lord told Moses to strike the rock (Ex. 17:1-7). But now Moses' patience was exhausted. First, he spoke unadvisedly with his lips, calling the people rebels (v. 10). Secondly, he struck the rock twice instead of speaking to it. The rock smitten in Exodus 17 was a type of Christ, stricken at Calvary. But Christ was only to be struck once. After His death, the Holy Spirit would be given, of which the water in verse 11 is a type. Because of the sin of Moses and Aaron in this matter, God decreed that they would not enter the Promised Land. He called the place Meribah, but it is not the same Meribah as in Exodus 17. This is sometimes known as Meribah-Kadesh. G. Campbell Morgan comments:

> By this manifestation of anger, which as we have said was so very natural, the servant of God misrepresented God to the people. His failure was due to the fact that for the moment his faith failed to reach the highest level of activity. He still believed in God, and in His power: but he did not believe in Him to sanctify Him in the eyes of His people. The lesson is indeed a very searching one. Right things may be done in so wrong a way as to produce evil results. There is a hymn in which we may miss the deep meaning, if we are not thoughtful—
> Lord, speak to me that I may speak
> In living echoes of Thy tone.
> That is far more than a prayer that we may be able to deliver the Lord's message. It is rather that we may do so in His tone, with His temper. That is where Moses failed, and for this failure he was excluded from the Land.[13]

I. The Death of Aaron (20:14-29)

20:14-21 The plan for entering the land was not to go directly north from the wilderness but to travel east through the territory of the Edomites, and then north along the east coast of the Dead Sea. The people would then cross the Jordan. But the king of Edom ... refused safe passage to the people of Israel—and this in spite of assurances that the Jews would not eat, drink, or damage any of Edom's supplies. Later in history, Israel under Saul fought against and defeated the Edomites, descendants of Jacob's brother, Esau.

20:22-29 When the people had journeyed from Kadesh ... to Mount Hor, near the border of ... Edom, ... Aaron died and was replaced by Eleazar his son (vv. 22-29). Matthew Henry writes:

> Aaron, though he dies for his transgression, is not put to death as a malefactor, by a plague, or fire from heaven, but dies with ease and in honour. He is not cut off from his people, as the expression usually is concerning those that die by the hand of divine justice, but he is gathered to his people, as one that died in the arms of divine grace. ... Moses, whose hands had first clothed Aaron with his priestly garments, now strips him of them; for, in reverence to the priesthood, it was not fit that he should die in them.[14]

J. The Bronze Serpent (21:1-22:1)

21:1-3 The king of Arad lived in the southern portion of the land of promise. When he heard that the Israelites were encamped in the wilderness and were planning to invade the land, he attacked but was defeated at a place ... called Hormah (vv. 1-3).

21:4-9 The Red Sea (v. 4) does not mean the gulf that the Israelites crossed in their escape from Egypt but the portion of the Red Sea which we know as the Gulf of Aqaba. The Way of the Red Sea, however, may be a route name; the Israelites might not have gone to the Gulf of Aqaba at this time.

Once again the people complained about their living conditions, with the result that God sent fiery serpents among them. Many of the people ... died, and many more were dying. In answer to the intercession of Moses, God commanded that a bronze serpent of brass be lifted on a pole and promised that whoever looked at the bronze serpent would be healed of the snakebite. This incident was used by the Lord Jesus to teach Nicodemus that Christ must be lifted up on a pole (the cross), so that sinners looking to Him by faith might have everlasting life (John 3:1-16).

The serpent later became a stumbling block to the nation and was finally destroyed in the days of Hezekiah (2 Kgs. 18:4).

21:10-20 The journeys of the children of Israel from Mount Hor to the Plains of Moab can no longer be traced exactly. However, the stops are listed in Numbers 21:10 to 22:1. The book of the wars of the LORD (v. 14) was probably a historical record of the early wars of Israel. It is no longer available. At Beer (vv. 16-18) the Lord miraculously provided water when the princes dug ... with their staves in the arid desert.

21:21-26 When Israel came near the country of the Amorites, they sought permission to pass through but were refused. In fact, Sihon, king of the Amorites, declared war on Israel but was thoroughly defeated. This Amorite king, like Pharaoh before him, was hardened by the Lord in order that he and his people might be defeated in battle by Israel (Deut. 2:30). "The iniquity of the Amorites" (Gen. 15:16) was complete, and Israel was the instrument of the judgment by Jehovah.

21:27-30 The proverbial song of verses 27-30 seems to say this: Heshbon had only recently been captured from the Moabites by the Amorites. Now Heshbon has fallen to the people of Israel. If those who conquered this city of Moab have themselves been conquered, then Moab must be a third-class power. Also, this proverb is probably quoted as evidence that the land was fully in the possession of the Amorite king, Sihon, and no longer a Moabite territory. This fact was important to establish because Israel was forbidden to take any land from Moab (Deut. 2:9).

21:31-22:1 The exact route of the Israelites is difficult to reconstruct. It is suggested that they basically moved east from Mount Hor, then north outside the western boundary of Edom to the River Zered. They followed the Zered eastward between Edom and Moab, then north along Moab's eastern boundary to the Arnon, then west to the King's Highway. They conquered Sihon, King of the Amorites, then pushed north to conquer Bashan, the Kingdom of Og. Bashan was rich pastureland east of the Jordan and north of the place where Israel would cross the Jordan into the land. Having conquered Bashan, the Israelites returned to the Plains of Moab ... and camped there across from Jericho (v. 1). These plains had been taken from Moab by the Amorites (Num. 21:26), but the name of Moab lingered on.

From the Wilderness to Canaan

III. EVENTS ON THE PLAINS OF MOAB (22:2-36:13)

A. The Prophet Balaam (22:2-25:18)

1. Balaam Summoned by Balak (22:2-40)

22:2-14 When the Moabites, to the south, heard how the Amorites had been conquered, they became terrified (unnecessarily, see Deut. 2:9). Therefore Balak, the king, sought to hire the prophet Balaam to curse Israel. Though a heathen prophet, Balaam seems to have had some knowledge of the true God. The Lord used him to reveal His mind concerning Israel's separation, justification, beauty, and glory. The first attempt to get Balaam to curse is recorded in verses 7-14. The messengers of Balak came to Balaam with the rewards of divination—that is, with rewards for him if he would successfully pronounce a curse on Israel. But God told him that he must not curse the people because the Lord had blessed them. Balak means "waster." Balaam means "swallower of the people" or "confuser of the people."

22:15-21 Balaam's second try is recorded next. Balaam knew what God's will was, yet he dared to go before the Lord, perhaps in hopes that there would be a change of mind. The Lord told Balaam to go with Balak's men but to do only what the Lord told him. Balaam's reason for going is clearly pointed out in 2 Peter 2:15, 16. He was motivated by his love of "the wages of unrighteousness." He is typical of the "hireling prophet" who prostitutes his God-given ability for money.

22:22-27 The "Angel of the LORD" (v. 22) was Christ in a preincarnate appearance. Three times He stood before Balaam and his donkey to hinder him, because He knew his motives. The first time the donkey saw the Angel and detoured into a field. For this, the poor animal was struck by Balaam. The second time the Angel stood in a narrow path between the vineyards. The terrified donkey crushed Balaam's foot against the wall and again was abused. The third time the Angel confronted them in a narrow pass. The frustrated donkey lay down on the ground and received a third thrashing from Balaam. Even a donkey, the symbol of stubbornness, knew when to quit, but not the stubborn, willful prophet!

22:28-40 The donkey was given the power to speak to Balaam, rebuking him for his inhumane treatment (vv. 28-30). Then Balaam saw the Angel of the LORD with His drawn sword and heard Him explain His mission to hinder Balaam in his disobedience (vv. 31-35). The Angel then permitted the prophet to go to Balak but to speak ... only the word that God gave him (v. 35). After meeting Balaam, Balak offered sacrifices to his god.

2. Balaam's Oracles (22:41-24:25)

22:41-23:12 The next day Balak took Balaam into a high mountain (Pisgah) where he would look down over the tents of Israel. Later, from this same mountain, Moses would take his only look at the Promised Land, and then die (Deut. 34:1, 5). This chapter and the next chapter contain four memorable utterances by Balaam concerning Israel. The first three were preceded by the offering of seven bulls and seven rams as burnt offerings. The first oracle expressed Balaam's inability to curse a people whom God had not cursed. It predicted for Israel a life of separation from the Gentile nations and a numberless posterity. It pictured Israel as a righteous nation whose eventual destiny was something to be coveted (vv. 7-10). Balak's protest against this blessing availed nothing. The prophet had to speak the word of the LORD.

23:13-15 Balak then took Balaam to a different vantage point in hopes that the prophet would see them in a less favorable light (vv. 13, 14).

23:16-26 The second oracle assured Balak that God's original blessing on Israel was unchanged (vv. 18-20). The first part of verse 21 describes the nation's position, not its practice. The people were reckoned righteous through faith. So believers today stand before God in all the perfections of His beloved Son. The Lord was with Israel, and the people could shout because He reigned as King in their midst (v. 21b). He had delivered them from Egypt and given them strength. No evil pronouncement against them would come to pass. Instead, the victories Israel would soon win would cause the nations to say, "Oh, what God has done!" (vv. 22-24). Since Balaam refused to curse the people, Balak ordered him not to bless them either (v. 25), but the prophet protested that he could only do what the LORD said.

23:27-30 A third time Balak tried to wring a curse out of Balaam, this time from the top of Mount Peor.

24:1, 2 Realizing that God was determined to bless Israel, Balaam did not seek to get a message of cursing. He simply looked down over the camp of Israel, and the Spirit of God came upon him, causing him to say things beyond his own wisdom and will.

24:3-9 The third message spoke of the beauty of the tents of Israel and predicted tremendous fruitfulness, widespread prosperity, a glorious kingdom, and crushing power over all foes. Agag (v. 7) was probably a name common to many Amalekites. None would dare to rouse this crouching lion (v. 9). Those who blessed Israel would be blessed, and a curse would only bring cursing. Balaam's prophecy here echoes the covenant given to Abraham: "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee" (Gen. 12:3).

24:10-14 Thoroughly frustrated by now, Balak denounced Balaam for his failure to cooperate. But the prophet reminded him that from the beginning he had said that he could only speak ... the word of the LORD. Before leaving Balak to return to his own home, Balaam offered to tell the king what Israel would do to the Moabite people in days to come.

24:15-19 The fourth oracle concerns a king ("Star" or "Scepter") who would rise in Israel to conquer Moab and all the sons of tumult (v. 17; cf. Jer. 48:45). Edom also would be subjugated by this ruler. This prophecy was partially fulfilled by King David, but will enjoy its complete fulfillment at the second coming of Christ.

24:20-25 Similar promises of doom were uttered by Balaam concerning the Amalekites, the Kenites, Assyria (Asshur), and the people of Eber (vv. 20-24). The Amalekites would be utterly destroyed. The Kenites would be gradually depleted in number until the Assyrians would finally take them captive. Even the Assyrians would be captured by armed forces from Cyprus (Heb. Kittim, which generally means Cyprus, but probably represents Greece here and the forces of Alexander the Great). Eber probably means the non-Jewish descendants of this postdiluvian patriarch.

3. Balaam's Corruption of Israel (Chap. 25)

25:1-3 Although Balaam's name is not mentioned in this chapter, we learn in Numbers 31:16 that he was responsible for the terrible corruption of the children of Israel that is described here. All of Balak's rewards could not induce Balaam to curse Israel, but they finally did persuade him to corrupt Israel by causing some of the people to commit harlotry and idolatry with the women of Moab. Often when Satan cannot succeed in a direct attack, he will succeed in an indirect one.

Balaam's true character emerges here. Up to this point we might think of him as a godly prophet who was loyal to the word of God and an admirer of the people of God. But from Numbers 31:16 and 2 Peter 2:15, 16 we learn that he was a wicked apostate who loved the wages of unrighteousness. Balaam advised Balak how to make the Israelites stumble: get them "to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit sexual immorality" (Rev. 2:14). His advice was heeded. This led to gross idolatry at the shrine of Baal of Peor.

25:4-8a God commanded that all the guilty leaders should be hanged out in the sun. Before the sentence was carried out, a leader of the tribe of

Simeon brought a Midianite woman into the camp of Israel, to take her into his tent (v. 14). Phinehas, the son of the high priest (Eleazar), killed both man and woman with his javelin. Samuel Ridout comments:

> Phinehas, "a mouth of brass," is singularly appropriate to him who was so unyieldingly faithful to God, and by his relentless judgment of sin secured an abiding priesthood for himself and family.[15]

25:8b-13 God sent a plague into the camp of Israel, killing a total of twenty-four thousand of the offenders during the course of the plague (23,000 in one day—1 Cor. 10:8). It was Phinehas' heroic action that stopped ... the plague. Because he was zealous for his God, the LORD decreed that an everlasting priesthood would continue in the family of Phinehas.

25:14, 15 Zimri's position of prominence in his tribe and the fact that the woman was a daughter of a Midianite chief might have stopped the judges from executing judgment upon him, but it did not stop Phinehas. He was jealous for Jehovah's sake.

25:16-18 The LORD ordered Moses to war against the Midianites (who were mingled with the Moabites at this time). This command was carried out in chapter 31.

B. The Second Census (Chap. 26)

26:1-51 Again Moses was instructed to take a census ... of the children of Israel, since they were about to enter the land to war against its inhabitants and to receive their share of the inheritance. There was a decrease of 1,820 people from the first census, as seen in the following numbers:

Tribe	Census (Chap. 1)	Census (Chap. 26)
Reuben (vv. 5-11)	46, 500	43, 730
Simeon (vv. 12-14)	59, 300	22, 200
Gad (vv. 15-18)	45, 650	40, 500
Judah (vv. 19-22)	74, 600	76, 500
Issachar (vv. 23-25)	54, 400	64, 300
Zebulun (vv. 26, 27)	57, 400	60, 500
Joseph (vv 28-37)
—Manasseh (v. 34)	32, 200	52, 700

—Ephraim (v. 37) • 40, 500 • 32, 500

Benjamin (vv. 38-41) • 35, 400 • 45, 600

Dan (vv. 42, 43>) • 62, 700 • 64, 400

Asher (vv. 44-47) • 41, 500 • 53, 400

Noting the decrease in numbers over the long period of time between the 603,550 of chapter 1 and the 601,730 children of Israel here, Moody comments:

> Israel's growth ceased for forty years. So it may be with us as churches, and so forth, if we are unbelieving.[16]

The most striking decrease is seen in the Simeonites, who diminished by almost 37,000. The tribe of Simeon was chiefly involved in the incident at Peor in the previous chapter (Zimri was a leader in that tribe), and perhaps most of the slain were Simeonites. Verse 11 tells us that the sons of Korah did not die with their father.

26:52-56 The land was to be divided according to the number of people in each tribe, and yet according to lot. This can only mean that the size of the tribal territory was determined by the number in the tribe, but the location of the land was determined by lot.

26:57-65 The Levites were numbered separately at twenty-three thousand. Only Joshua and Caleb were included in both censuses. All the other men of war listed in the first census had by now perished in the wilderness. Verses 64 and 65 refer to the men who were able to go to war. Levites and women are excluded, though some of these did die during the thirty-eight year journey.

C. Inheritance Rights of Daughters (27:1-11)

The five daughters of Zelophehad, of the tribe of Manasseh, came to Moses to request property in the distribution of the land even though they had no male in the numbered of Israel, among whom Canaan was to be divided (26:53). Their father had died, but not as one of the guilty companions of Korah. The LORD answered that they should inherit their father's portion.

In general, it was God's will that the land be inherited by sons, then daughters, brothers, uncles, or nearest relatives. In this way it would be permanently kept in a family (vv. 1-11).

D. Joshua, Moses' Successor (27:12-23)

27:12-14 God forewarned Moses that he would die soon, and He instructed Moses to go up to Mount Abarim (actually a chain of mountains east of the Dead Sea). Mount Nebo, where Moses died, was a part of this chain [range].

27:15-23 Moses unselfishly thought of a successor to lead the people, and Joshua the son of Nun was named in his place. The priesthood and later the kingship in Israel was usually passed on from one generation to the next within the same family. However, Moses' successor was not his son but his servant (Ex. 24:13).

E. Offering and Vows (Chaps. 28-30)

Chaps. 28, 29 In these chapters, the people are reminded of the offerings and feasts which were to be observed in the land.

Daily offerings:

> Continual burnt offering, morning and evening, with a grain offering and drink offering included (28:3-8).
> Every day in life, so long as the temple stood, the following sacrifices had to be carried out both morning and evening (Num. 28:3-8).
> Every morning and every evening a one-old male lamb ... without spot or blemish was offered as a burnt offering. Along with it there was offered a grain offering, which consisted of one-tenth of an ephah of fine flour ... mixed with a quarter of a hin of pure oil. Also there was a drink offering, which consisted of a quarter of a hin of wine.
> There was an offering of incense before these offerings in the morning, and after them in the evening. Ever since there was a Jewish temple, and so long as the temple continued to exist, this routine of sacrifice went on. There was a kind of priestly treadmill of sacrifice. Moffatt speaks of "the levitical drudges" who, day in and day out, kept offering these sacrifices. There was no end to this process, and when all was said and done, it still left men conscious of their sin and alienation from God.

Weekly offerings:

Weekly burnt offering, on each Sabbath, with grain offering and drink offering (28:9,10).

Monthly offerings:

Burnt offering on the first day of each month, with grain offering and drink offering (28:11-14).*

Sin offering (28:15).*

Feasts of Jehovah:

Passover—fourteenth day of first month (28:16).*

Feast of Unleavened Bread—fifteenth day to twenty-first day of first month (28:17-25).

Feast of weeks (28:26-31).*

Note: The day of the firstfruits (v. 26) should not be confused with the Feast of Firstfruits (Lev. 23:9-14).

Feast of Trumpets—first day of seventh month (29:1-6).

Day of Atonement—tenth day of seventh month (29:7-11).

Feast of Tabernacles—fifteenth day through twenty-first day of the seventh month (29:12-34). There was a special Sabbath observance on the eighth day (29:35-39).

30:1-5 Chapter 30 contains special instructions about vows. A man making a vow to the LORD must carry it out without fail. If a young woman, still under her father's care, made a vow, and her father heard her, he could speak out against the vow—i.e., forbid it—on the first day, and it would be canceled. If he waited until after the first day or if he did not say anything, the vow was effective and had to be carried out.

30:6-16 Verses 6-8 seem to describe a vow made by a woman before her marriage. Although her husband would not, of course, have heard it on the day it was made, he could overrule it on the day when he first heard about it. Vows made by a widow or a divorced woman were binding (v. 9). Vows made by a married woman could be canceled by the husband ... on the first day (vv. 10-15). This maintained the headship of the husband. If a husband canceled her vow after the first day, he had to bear her guilt—that is, bring the required sacrifice or be punished by the Lord (v. 15).

F. Destruction of the Midianites (Chap. 31)

31:1-11 God commanded Moses to destroy the Midianites for corrupting His people through fornication and idolatry at Baal of Peor. Twelve thousand Israelites marched against the enemy and they killed all the males. Phinehas went to war (v. 6) rather than his father the high priest, possibly because Phinehas had been the one to turn away the wrath of Jehovah by killing Zimri and the Midianite woman (chap. 25). Now he was to lead the armies of the living God to complete the judgment of the Lord on Midian. "All the males" (v. 7) refers to all the Midianite soldiers, and not to all the Midianites in existence, because in the days of Gideon they again become a menace to Israel (Judges 6). Zur (v. 8) was probably the father of Cozbi, the Midianite woman slain in the camp of Israel (25:15). (Either Balaam never made it all the way back to his home or else he had returned to Midian for some reason, for he too was killed.)

31:12-18 Though they had killed all the Midianite soldiers, the children of Israel spared the women and children and proudly brought them back to the camp with a great quantity of spoil. Moses was angry that they would have spared the very ones who caused Israel to sin and commanded that the male children and every woman who had lain with a man should be slain. The young girls were spared, probably for domestic service. This punishment was righteous and necessary to preserve Israel from further corruption.

31:19-54 The warriors and captives were required to undergo the customary seven days of purification (v. 19). Also, the spoil had to be cleansed, either by fire or by washing with water (vv. 21-24). The spoil was divided among the warriors and the whole congregation (vv. 25-47). The men of war were so thankful that not one of their number had perished that they brought a large gift to the LORD (vv. 48-54).

G. The Inheritance of Reuben, Gad, and Half of Manasseh (Chap. 32)

32:1-15 When the children of Reuben and Gad ... saw the rich pasture land east of the Jordan River, they petitioned that they might settle there permanently (vv. 1-5). Moses thought this meant that they did not intend to cross the Jordan and fight against the heathen inhabitants of Canaan with their brethren (vv. 6-15). Their fathers had discouraged the Israelites at Kadesh Barnea from entering the land.

32:16-42 But when Reuben and Gad assured him three times that they intended to fight for the land west of the Jordan (vv. 16-32), Moses granted permission. Gad, Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph acquired the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorite and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan. They built fortified cities and sheepfolds and also took over small towns and villages (vv. 33-42).

Many feel that Reuben and Gad made an unwise choice because, although the land was fertile, the area was exposed to enemy attack. They did not have the protection of the Jordan River. The tribes of Reuben and Gad (and half the tribe of Manasseh which joined them) were the first to be conquered in later years and carried off into captivity. On the other hand, what was to be done with the land east of the Jordan River if none of the children of Israel were to settle in it? God had given this land to them and told them to possess it (Deut. 2:24, 31; 3:2).

Central Canaan's Surroundings

H. Review of the Israelite Encampments (Chap. 33)

33:1-49 The journeys of the children of Israel from Egypt to the Plains of Moab are summarized in this chapter. As mentioned previously, it is impossible to locate all the cities with accuracy today. The chapter may be divided as follows: from Egypt to Mount Sinai (vv. 5-15); from Mount Sinai to Kadesh Barnea (vv. 16-36); from Kadesh Barnea to Mount Hor (vv. 37-40); from Mount Hor to the plains of Moab (vv. 41-49). This list is not complete, as can be seen by comparing it with other lists of camping spots, as in chapter 21.

33:50-56 God's order to the invading army was to completely exterminate the inhabitants of Canaan. This may seem cruel to people today, but actually these people were among the most corrupt, immoral, depraved creatures whom the world has ever known. God patiently dealt with them for over 400 years without any change on their part. He knew that if His people did not kill them, Israel would become infected by their immorality and idolatry. Not only were the Israelites to kill the people, but they were to destroy every trace of idolatry (v. 52).

I. Boundaries of the Promised Land (Chap. 34)

34:1-15 The boundaries of the land which God promised to Israel are given in verses 1-15. In general, the southern boundary extended from the southern tip of the Salt (Dead) Sea to the Brook (not River) of Egypt and to the Mediterranean Sea (vv. 3-5). The western border was the Great (Mediterranean) Sea (v. 6). The northern border stretched from the Mediterranean Sea to Mount Hor (not the one mentioned in the journeys of Israel) to the entrance of Hamath and Hazar Enan (vv. 7-9). The eastern border extended from Hazar Enan south to the Sea of Chinnereth[17] (Galilee), down ... the Jordan River to the Salt (Dead) Sea (vv. 10-12). The nine and one-half tribes were to inherit the above land, since the two and one-half tribes had already been promised the land east of the Jordan (vv. 13-15).

34:16-29 The names of the men who were appointed to divide the land are given in verses 16-29.

J. Cities of the Levites (35:1-5)

Since the tribe of Levi did not inherit with the other tribes, God decreed that forty-eight cities should be set apart for the Levites. It is difficult to understand the measurements given in verses 4 and 5, but it is at least clear that the cities were surrounded by common-land for grazing the livestock. (Perhaps the two thousand cubits mentioned in verse 5 were inclusive of the one thousand cubits already mentioned in verse 4.)

K. Cities of Refuge and Capital Punishment (35:6-34)

35:6-8 Six of the Levite cities were to be designated as cities of refuge. A person who had accidentally killed another could flee to one of these cities and be safe to stand trial. Those tribes which had much territory would donate cities for the Levites accordingly. Those which had little were not expected to give as many cities.

35:9-21 Of the cities of refuge, three were to be on each side of the Jordan River. A manslayer would ordinarily be pursued by a near relative of the victim, known as the avenger. If the manslayer reached a city of refuge, he was safe there until his case came up for trial (v. 12). The cities of refuge did not provide sanctuary for a murderer (vv. 16-19). Crimes committed through hatred or enmity were punishable by death (vv. 20, 21).

35:22-28 If the homicide appeared to be a case of manslaughter, the man would be tried by the congregation (vv. 22-24). If acquitted, the manslayer had to stay in the city of refuge ... until the death of the high priest. He was then allowed to return home (v. 28). If he ventured outside ... the city before the death of the high priest, the avenger of blood could slay him without incurring guilt (vv. 26-28).

The death of the high priest brought freedom to those who had escaped to the cities of refuge. They could no longer be harmed by the avenger of blood. The death of our Great High Priest frees us from the condemning demands of the Law. How foolish this stipulation would be if one failed to see in it a symbol of the work of our Lord at the Cross!

Unger relates some traditional details:

> According to the rabbis, in order to aid the fugitive it was the business of the Sanhedrin to keep the roads leading to the cities of refuge in the best possible repair. No hills were left, every river was bridged, and the road itself was to be at least thirty-two cubits broad. At every turn were guideposts bearing the word Refuge; and two students of the law were appointed to accompany the fleeing man, to pacify, if possible, the avenger, should he overtake the fugitive.[18]

As for the symbolic teaching, the people of Israel are the manslayer, having put the Messiah to death. Yet they did it ignorantly (Acts 3:17). The Lord Jesus prayed, " ... they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34). Just as the manslayer was displaced from his own home and had to live in the city of refuge, so Israel has been living in exile ever since. The nation's complete restoration to its possession will take place, not at the death of the Great High Priest (for He can never die), but when He comes to reign.

35:29-34 Capital punishment was decreed for murderers; there was no escape or satisfaction (vv. 30, 31). A manslayer could not purchase release from a city of refuge (v. 32). Blood that was shed in murder defiled the land, and such blood demanded the death of the murderer (vv. 33, 34). Think of this in connection with the death of Christ!

L. The Inheritance of Daughters Who Marry (Chap. 36)

Representatives of the half-tribe of Manasseh who settled in Gilead, east of the Jordan, came to Moses with a problem (see Num. 27:1-11). If the daughters of Zelophehad ... married men belonging to another tribe, their property would pass to the other tribe. The Year of Jubilee would finalize the transfer to the other tribe (v. 4). The solution was that those women who inherited land should marry in their own tribe, and thus there would be no transfers of land from one tribe to another (vv. 5-11). The daughters of Zelophehad obeyed by marrying in the tribe of Manasseh (vv. 10-12). Verse 13 summarizes the section from chapter 26.

Three things stand out in the book of Numbers:

1. The consistent wickedness and unbelief of the human heart.
2. The holiness of Jehovah, tempered with His mercy.
3. The man of God (Moses) who stands as a mediator and intercessor between the sinful people and a holy God.

The human heart has not changed since Numbers was written. Neither has the holiness or mercy of God. But Moses has been replaced by his Antitype, the Lord Jesus Christ. In Him we have strength to avoid the sins that characterized Israel, and thus avoid the displeasure of God which they incurred. In order to profit from what we have studied we must realize that "these things happened to them as examples, and they were written for our admonition" (1 Cor. 10:11).

DEUTERONOMY

INTRODUCTION

"Deuteronomy is one of the greatest books of the Old Testament. Its influence on the domestic and personal religion of all ages has not been surpassed by any other book in the Bible. It is quoted over eighty times in the New Testament and thus it belongs to a small group of four Old Testament books [Genesis, Deuteronomy, Psalms, and Isaiah] to which the early Christians made frequent reference." .

—J. A. Thompson

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Our Lord Jesus Christ was tempted by Satan for forty days and nights in the wilderness. Three of these temptations are specifically recounted in the Gospels for our spiritual benefit. Not only did Christ use the OT "sword of the Spirit" three times, but each time He used the same part of the "blade"—Deuteronomy! It is likely that this book was one of Jesus' favorites—and it should be one of ours as well. Deuteronomy has been sadly neglected in many quarters, perhaps due to its somewhat inappropriate title in English, which is from the Greek Septuagint. Its meaning, "Second Law," has given some the false idea that the book is merely a recapitulation of material already presented in Exodus through Numbers. God never repeats just to repeat—there is always a different emphasis or new details. So also with Deuteronomy, a marvelous book worthy of careful study.

II. AUTHORSHIP

Moses is the author of Deuteronomy as a whole, though the Lord may have used inspired editors to recount and update some details. The last chapter, which records his death, could have been written by him prophetically, or may have been added by Joshua or someone else.

Liberal criticism says confidently that Deuteronomy is the "Book of the Law" that was found in Josiah's time (c. 620 BC). They maintain that it was actually a "pious fraud" written at that time as if by Moses to unify Jewish worship around a central Jerusalem sanctuary.

Actually there is no such category as a "pious fraud"; if it's a fraud it's not pious, and if it's pious, it's no fraud.

There is also no indication that "the Book of the Law" in 2 Kings 22 does not refer to the whole Pentateuch. Josiah's predecessors, Manasseh and Amon, were both wicked kings. They actually perpetuated idolatry in the very temple of Jehovah where the Law of Moses had apparently been hidden by some godly person or persons.

The rediscovery of God's Word and submission to it always bring revival and recovery, as in the great Protestant Reformation.

For a concise defense of Mosaic authorship, see Introduction to the Pentateuch.

III. Date

Deuteronomy was written largely by 1406 BC, but some material, equally inspired, may have been added after Moses' death, as was noted.

For a more detailed discussion of dating see Introduction to the Pentateuch.

IV. Background and Theme

Deuteronomy is a re-statement (not merely a repetition) of the law for the new generation that had arisen during the wilderness journey. They were about to enter the Promised Land. In order to enjoy God's blessing there, they must know the law and obey it.

The book consists first of all of a spiritual interpretation of Israel's history from Sinai onward (chaps. 1-3). The thought is that those who refuse to learn from history are doomed to relive it. The main section is a review of important features of God's legislation for His people (chaps. 4-26). Then follows a preview of God's purposes of grace and government from Israel's entrance into the land until the second advent of the Messiah (chaps. 27-33). The book closes with the death of Moses and the appointment of Joshua as his successor (chap. 34).

The Apostle Paul reminds us that the book has a message for us as well as for Israel. In commenting on Deuteronomy 25:4, he says that it was written "altogether for our sakes" (1 Cor. 9:10).

The book is rich in exhortation, which can be summed up in the verbs of Deuteronomy 5:1: "Hear ... learn ... keep and do."

COMMENTARY

I. MOSES' FIRST DISCOURSE—APPROACHING THE LAND (CHAPS. 1-4)

A. Introduction (1:1-5)

1:1, 2 As the Book of Deuteronomy opens, the children of Israel are camped on the Plains of Moab, which they had reached in Numbers 22:1. In Deuteronomy 1:1 their location is said to be in the plain opposite Suph. This means that the wilderness, of which the Plains of Moab were an extension, stretched southward to that portion of the Red Sea known as the Gulf of Aqaba. The journey from Horeb (Sinai) by way of Mount Seir to Kadesh Barnea, on the threshold of Canaan, required only eleven days, but now thirty-eight years had passed before the Israelites were ready to enter the Promised Land!

1:3-5 Moses delivered his subsequent discourse to the children of Israel, preparatory to their entering Canaan in the fortieth year after they left Egypt. It was after both Sihon king of the Amorites and Og king of Bashan had been slain (Num. 21).

B. From Horeb to Kadesh (1:6-46)

From Deuteronomy 1:6-3:28 we have a review of the period from Mount Sinai to the Plains of Moab. Since most of this has already been covered in Numbers, we shall simply summarize it here: God's command to march to the Promised Land and possess it (vv. 6-8); the appointment of judges over civil matters (vv. 9-18); the journey from Sinai to Kadesh Barnea (vv. 19-21); the sending of the spies and the subsequent rebellion (vv. 22-46). With the exception of Joshua and Caleb, no soldier who had left Egypt was allowed to enter the land (vv. 34-38).

C. From Kadesh to Heshbon (Chap. 2)

2:1-23 The journey from Kadesh Barnea to the borders of Edom (vv. 1-7) avoided conflict with the Edomites. The journey from the borders of Edom to the Valley of Zered (vv. 8-15) avoided conflict with the Moabites. The LORD commanded the Israelites not to meddle with the Ammonites because He had given this land to these descendants of Lot as a possession (vv. 16-19). God had already dispossessed certain giants[1] whom the Ammonites called Zamzummim, just as He had done for the descendants of Esau by destroying the Horites, the Avim, and the Caphtorim (vv. 20-23).

2:24-37 The rest of chapter 2 details the smashing defeat of Sihon the Amorite, the king of Heshbon. Verse 29a indicates that the descendants of Esau, the Edomites, sold food and water to the Israelites as the latter skirted the country of Edom. But the record in Numbers 20:14-22 suggests that the king of Edom was completely uncooperative. He was staunch in his refusal to assist Israel, but it seems that some of his people sold food and water to the Jews, though this is uncertain. Verses 10-12 and 20-23 were probably added by someone later than Moses, but are nonetheless inspired Scripture.

D. Trans-Jordan Secured (Chap. 3)

3:1-11 Og king of Bashan had sixty cities, all fortified with high walls, gates, and bars, as well as many rural towns. The LORD God also delivered these enemies into the hands of His people. Og is remembered as a giant, with a huge iron bedstead that was nine cubits long and four cubits wide (about thirteen or fourteen feet by six feet). Thompson says this "bedstead" was his final resting place, not his regular bed:

> On his death he was buried in a massive sarcophagus (lit. bedstead, "resting place") made of basalt, called iron here because of its colour. ... According to the record here the sarcophagus could be seen in Rabbah Ammon (the modern Amman) at the time Deuteronomy was committed to writing.[2]

3:12-20 The captured land east of the Jordan was distributed to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manasseh (vv. 12-17). Moses commanded their men of valor to cross over armed to aid their brethren conquer the territory west of the Jordan. Then they could return to their own possession and their wives, little ones, livestock, and the cities they had taken over.

3:21-29 Moses also commanded Joshua to remember past victories and trust God for future ones (vv. 21, 22).

But the LORD was angry with Moses for his disobedience regarding the children of Israel and would not let him cross over Jordan. He did, however, let him view the Promised Land in every direction from the top of Mount Pisgah (vv. 23-29).

E. Exhortation to Obedience (Chap. 4)

Chapter 4 introduces Moses' rehearsal of the law. Here he dealt particularly with the worship of the one true God and with the penalties that would follow any turning to idolatry.

4:1-24 Israel was commanded to obey the statutes and the judgments of the LORD God when they entered Canaan (v. 1). They were not to add to it nor take from it (v. 2). God's punishment of the idolatry practiced at Baal Peor should serve as a constant warning (vv. 3, 4). (Perhaps this particular incident of divine wrath against idolatry is mentioned here because it had taken place just a short time earlier and would be fresh in their minds.) Obedience to the law would cause Israel to be admired as a great nation by the Gentiles (vv. 5-8). Israel should remember from past experiences the blessings of following the Lord (v. 8). They were especially instructed to remember the giving of the Ten Commandments at Mount Sinai (Horeb) (vv. 9-13). At that time, they did not see the form of God; that is, although they might have seen a manifestation of God, they did not see a physical form which could be reproduced by an image or an idol. They were forbidden to make an image of any kind to represent God, or to worship the sun, the moon, or the stars (vv. 14-19). The Israelites were reminded of their deliverance from Egypt, of Moses' disobedience and consequent judgment, and of God's wrath against idolatry (vv. 20-24). "Only take heed to yourself ... lest you forget" (v. 9); "Take careful heed to yourselves ... lest you act corruptly" (vv. 15, 16); "Take heed to yourselves, lest you forget" (v. 23). Moses knew only too well the natural tendency of the human heart, and so he earnestly charged the people to pay close attention.

4:25-40 If the nation in later years should turn to idols, it would be sent away into captivity (vv. 25-28). But even then, if the people repented and turned to the LORD with all their heart, He would restore them (vv. 29-31).

No nation had ever had the privileges of Israel, particularly the miracles connected with the deliverance from Egypt (vv. 32-38). Therefore they should be obedient to Him and thus enjoy His continued blessing (vv. 39, 40). It is a sad fact of Jewish history that the nation was subjected to a purging captivity because of their disobedience and failure to take the warning of Jehovah seriously. God's warnings are not idle words. No man and no nation can set them aside with impunity.

4:41-43 Moses set apart three cities of refuge on the east side of the Jordan— Bezer, Ramoth-Gilead, and Golan (vv. 41-43).

4:44-49 Here begins Moses' second discourse, delivered on the Plains of Moab, east ... of the Jordan. Verse 48 is the only instance where Mount Hermon is called Mount Sion.[3]

II. MOSES' SECOND DISCOURSE—PURITY IN THE LAND (CHAPS. 5-28)

A. Review of the Sinai Covenant (Chap. 5)

5:1-6 Chapter 5 reviews the giving of the Ten Commandments at Mount Sinai (Horeb). In verse 3, supply the word "only" after "fathers." The covenant was made with the fathers, but it was intended for future generations of Israelites as well.

5:7-21 The Ten Commandments

1. No other gods were to be worshiped (v. 7).
2. No carved image was to be made or worshiped (vv.8-10). This commandment does not repeat the first. People might worship mythical beings, or the sun and moon, without the use of idols. Children who thus hate God will suffer the same punishment as their fathers (v. 9).
3. The name of the LORD was not to be taken in vain (v. 11).
4. The Sabbath was to be kept holy (vv. 12-15). A different reason for keeping the Sabbath is given here from the one given in Exodus 20:8-11 (God's rest in creation). The Jews were to remember that they were slaves in Egypt (v. 15). These two reasons are complementary, not contradictory.

5. Parents were to be honored (v. 16).
6. Murder was prohibited (v. 17).
7. Adultery was prohibited (v. 18).
8. Stealing was prohibited (v. 19).
9. Bearing false witness against a neighbor was prohibited (v. 20).
10. Coveting was prohibited (v. 21).

5:22 J. A. Thompson comments on this verse:

> The expression and He added no more is unusual and may indicate that these commandments were such a complete summary of the fundamental requirements of the covenant that no other law needed to be added. All other law was a mere interpretation and expansion of these basic principles. Alternatively, the expression may refer to a particular occasion when the Lord made known precisely these ten laws. Other laws must have been given on other occasions, since the total volume of law known in Israel and originating from God was considerable.[4]

5:23-33 When the law was given, the people were terrified by the manifestations of the divine Presence and feared for their lives. They sent Moses to speak to the Lord and to assure Him that they would do whatever He said. (They did not realize their own sinfulness and powerlessness when they made such a rash vow.) Consequently the rest of the laws and ordinances were given through Moses the mediator. The Ten Words or Ten Commandments appear to have been spoken verbally to the whole nation when they were at Mount Sinai (vv. 30, 31).

In verse 28, the LORD is not commending them for their promise to keep the law, but rather for their expressions of fear and awe (compare 18:16-18). God knew that they did not have a heart to keep His commandments. He wished that they did, so that He could bless them abundantly (vv. 28-33).

B. Warnings Against Disobedience (Chap. 6)

6:1-9 When the people would enter the Promised Land, God wanted them to be in a right moral condition. In order to enjoy the land as He intended, they must be an obedient people. Therefore, Moses gave them practical instruction to fit them for life in Canaan (vv. 1, 2). The Israelites were to bear testimony to the truth that God is the only true God (vv. 3, 4). They were to love Him supremely and keep His Word (vv. 5, 6). The commandments of the Lord were to be taught diligently to their children and to guide them in every department of their lives.

Many Christian parents take this passage as a mandate to teach their own children, not only the faith, but also other so-called secular subjects, rather than sending them to humanistic schools.

In the days of Christ, the Jews actually bound portions of the law to their hands and suspended them between their eyes (v. 8). But doubtless the Lord intended rather that their actions (hand) and desires (eyes) should be controlled by the law.

Verses 4-9 are known as the "Shema" (Heb. for "hear") and were recited daily as a creed by devout Jews along with 11:13-21 and Numbers 15:37-41.

> The Hebrew word for "one" in verse 4 is significant, viewed in the light of the fuller revelation of the New Testament. It stands, not for absolute unity, but for compound unity, and is thus consistent with both the names of God used in this verse. Jehovah (LORD) emphasizes His oneness. Elohim (God) emphasizes His three persons. The same mysterious hints of trinity in unity occur in the very first verse of the Bible, where "Elohim" is followed by a singular verb (created) and in Genesis 1:26, where the plural pronouns us and our are followed by the singular nouns image and likeness (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

6:10-15 When the people would enter the land and enjoy its great prosperity, there was a danger that they would forget the One who gave the law to them or that they would go after other gods. Obedience to the law was not so much a means of gaining favor with Jehovah as it was of showing love to Him. Biblical love is not a warm sentimentality but a calculated pattern of conformity to the revealed will of God. Love is not an option but a necessity for well-being. God's jealousy (zeal for His own glory) would destroy the people if they broke His covenant through disobedience.

6:16 The Lord Jesus quoted this verse in Matthew 4:7 and Luke 4:12 to answer the tempter's suggestion that He throw Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple. At Massah, there was not enough water to drink, and the people questioned that Jehovah was with them (Ex. 17). To doubt God's care and goodness is to tempt Him.

6:17-25 Obedience would bring victory over Israel's foes (vv. 17-19). Future generations were to be instructed in God's deliverance of the people from Egypt and of His giving of the law for their good and blessing (vv. 20-25). Compare verse 25 with Romans 3:21, 22. The law says, "if we are careful to observe"; grace says, "to all and on all those who believe." Today believers are clothed with the righteousness on which the law was based, the righteousness of God (2 Cor. 5:21), and this according to faith, not works (Rom. 4:5).

C. Instructions on Dealing with Idolatrous Nations (Chap. 7)

7:1-5 The people of Israel were strongly warned against mixing with the heathen, idolatrous nations which were then inhabiting Canaan. To punish these seven nations—the Hittites, Girgashites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites—for their unspeakable sin and to preserve Israel from contamination, God decreed that these Gentiles should be utterly exterminated and that every trace of idolatry should be destroyed. Perhaps verse 3 anticipates the failure of the Jews to obey verse 2, because if they destroyed all the inhabitants of the land, obviously there would be no threat of intermarriage.

7:6-11 God had chosen Israel to be a people who were separated to Himself. He did not want them to be like the other nations. He did not ... choose them because of their superior numbers (they were the fewest of all peoples). He chose them simply because He loved them, and He wanted them to obey Him in all things. A thousand generations means forever. The Lord hated the Canaanite nations because of their evil deeds. He loved the nation of Israel not because of any good but simply because He loved them and would keep the oath which He swore to their forefathers. Who can understand the electing grace of a sovereign God!

7:12-26 If God's people would be faithful to Him in the land, He would bless them with numerous children, abundant crops, large herds, health, and victory over their enemies (vv. 12-16). If they were ever tempted to fear their enemies, they should remember God's mighty deliverances in the past, especially the deliverance from Egypt (vv. 17-19). As He had done in the past, He would do for them again, sending the hornet to destroy their foes. The hornet may be literal or a figure of speech for a conquering army (vv. 20-24). He would not destroy their enemies all at once lest the land be overrun with wild beasts (v. 22). (Unpopulated areas become breeding grounds for wild animals, whereas urban areas serve to control their numbers.) Another reason victory was not to be immediate can be found in Judges 2:21-23: God would use the remaining heathen to test Israel. All idols were to be utterly destroyed lest they become a temptation to Israel (vv. 25, 26). The most serious threat to Israel was not the people of Canaan but their idols and the gross immorality associated with these idols. The battles which they needed to prepare for most were spiritual, not physical.

D. Lessons from the Past (8:1-11:7)

Concerning chapters 8 and 9, J. A. Thompson succinctly points out:

> Two important lessons from the past are now referred to. First, the experience of God's care in the wilderness period, when the people of Israel were unable to help themselves, taught them the lesson of humility through the Lord's providential discipline. The memory of that experience should keep them from pride in their own achievements amid the security and prosperity of the new land (8:1-20). Secondly, any success they might enjoy in the coming conquest was not to be interpreted as a mark of divine approval for their own righteousness (9:1-6). In fact, both in the incident of the golden calf (9:7-21) and a number of other incidents (9:22-29), Israel had proved herself stubborn and rebellious.[5]

8:1-5 Again Moses urged the people to obey God, using the loving, preserving care of God as a motive. The Lord had allowed trials to come into their lives to humble them, prove them, and test their obedience. But He also fed them with manna from heaven, and provided clothes that did not wear out and shoes which kept their feet from swelling during the forty years of wilderness wanderings.

God knew what was in the hearts of the people. He was not trying to learn something by testing Israel in the wilderness (v. 2), but He was manifesting to the people themselves their own rebellious nature so that they might more fully appreciate His mercy and grace. Another lesson they were to learn through their wanderings was to fear the Lord.

8:6-20 Moses pled his case not only on the basis of what God had done but on what He was about to do (vv. 6, 7). The blessings of the good land of Canaan are described in detail (vv. 7-9). Prosperity might lead to forgetfulness and forgetfulness to disobedience, so the people were to watch against these perils (vv. 10-20). Faithfulness on God's part was to be met by a corresponding faithfulness on the part of Israel. God was keeping His covenant with the patriarchs (v. 18); the people needed to keep their word to God in return (Ex. 19:8). If the people forgot God's mighty acts on their behalf and attributed their wealth to their own power, Jehovah would destroy them as He destroyed the Gentile nations in Canaan.

9:1-3 Chapter 9 opens with a description of the nations which Israel was soon to face in battle. Israel was not to be afraid, as they had been forty years earlier, because God would fight for them. "He will destroy them ... so you shall drive them out and destroy them quickly." Notice the complementary working of divine sovereignty and human agency. Both were essential for securing the Promised Land.

9:4-7 After ... God had defeated the Canaanite inhabitants of the land, the Israelites were not to boast. Three times the people are warned about attributing success to their own righteousness (vv. 4-6). God would give them the land ... because of the wickedness of the present inhabitants (v. 4), because of His oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (v. 5), and not because of any merit in them. The truth of the matter is that they were stiff-necked (stubborn) (v. 6) as well as provocative and rebellious (v. 7).

9:8-23 Moses cites as an example the people's behavior at Mount Horeb (Sinai) (vv. 8-21). Verses 22 and 23 mention other places where the people sinned: Taberah (Num. 11:3); Massah (Ex. 17:7); Kibroth Hattaavah (Num. 11:34); Kadesh Barnea (Num. 13:31-33). Note how the golden calf was destroyed beyond recovery (v. 21).

9:24-29 At Mount Sinai the intercession of Moses was the only thing that saved the people from the wrath of Jehovah. He did not base his plea on the righteousness of the people (which further shows that they had none) but on possession: "Your people and Your inheritance" (v. 26); promise: "Remember Your servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob" (v. 27); power

(God's power would be ridiculed by the Egyptians): "lest the land from which You brought us should say, 'Because the LORD was not able'" (v. 28).

In verse 1 of chapter 10, the narrative goes back to the events at Mount Sinai and therefore follows verse 29 of chapter 9. The Bible is not always chronological; often the order of events has a spiritual or moral order that is more important than the mere chronological order. A more appropriate place for the chapter division[6] would seem to be after verse 11, because the first 11 verses deal with events at Mount Sinai (the theme taken up in 10:8) while verses 12 and following are an exhortation to obedience based on God's gracious mercy.

10:1-5 This paragraph records the second giving of the law and the deposit of the two tablets in the ark. Verse 3 doesn't mean that Moses personally made the ark, but only that he had it made. A person is often said to do what he orders to be done.

10:6-9 Verses 6 and 7 seem to be an abrupt change at this point. Actually they are a parenthesis, recording events that took place at a later date, as the NKJV indicates. But they bring the reader up to the death of Aaron. (The NKJV puts vv. 6-9 in parentheses, which makes the passage easier to understand.)

Moserah was probably a district where Mount Hor was located, since that is the mountain where Aaron died (Num. 20:25-28). The exact location of Moserah is unknown today. Perhaps this mention of the death of Aaron caused Moses to think of the priesthood, and so he reverted to the choosing of Levi as the priestly tribe (vv. 8, 9). The threefold function of the priesthood is given in verse 8: (1) to bear the ark of the covenant; (2) to stand before the LORD to minister to Him; (3) to bless in His name. Instructions about the priesthood were important for this generation which was about to enter Canaan.

10:10, 11 Moses again reminded them of his second stay on Sinai when for forty days and forty nights he interceded for them. God heard, withheld judgment, and told them to go in and possess the land.

10:12-22 Jehovah's desire for His people was summed up in the words "to fear ... to walk ... to love ... to serve ... to keep" (vv. 12, 13). All of God's commandments were designed for their good (v. 13b). Moses encouraged them to obey God because of His greatness (v. 14), His sovereign choice of Israel as His special people (v. 15), His righteousness and justice (vv. 17-20), and His past favors to the nation (vv. 21, 22). A circumcised heart (v. 16) is one that obeys.

11:1-7 Once more Moses reviewed the past history of Israel in order to draw spiritual lessons from it. In verse 2, Moses is speaking to survivors of the older generation as distinguished from those who were born in the desert. Soldiers who were over twenty when they left Egypt were excluded from entering Canaan (2:14; Josh. 5:6). God delivered His people from Egypt and led them through the wilderness, but He would not tolerate the rebellion of Dathan and Abiram. God's judgment of the idolatrous Egyptians and His vigorous judgment on rebels within the nation itself should serve as lessons on the folly of incurring His displeasure.

E. Rewards for Obedience (11:8-32)

11:8-17 Conversely, the way to prolong their days in the land (v. 9) was to keep every commandment (v. 8). The land which they would enjoy, if obedient, is described in verses 10-12. The expression "watered it by foot" may refer to the use of some pedal device for pumping water or perhaps to the opening of sluices with the foot. Egypt was a barren land made fruitful by irrigation, but the Promised Land enjoyed the special favor of the God of nature (vv. 11, 12). Abundant rain and plentiful harvests would be the reward of obedience (vv. 13-15), but forgetfulness of God or idolatry would be followed by drought and barrenness.

11:18-21 The Word of God was to be the subject of household conversation. It was to be loved and lived. The reward for practicing the Word was that their days would be multiplied in the land, and also like the days of the heavens above the earth (v. 21).

> Latterday Jews took 18b literally, and so wore small pouches with portions of Scripture on their foreheads, and put them on their doorposts (as some still do). But verse 19a suggests the truth intended-the Word on the hand means a pair of hands that will not lend themselves to shoddy or unworthy workmanship; the Word between our eyes represents the control of God over our vision—where we look, and what we covet; the Word on the doorpost signifies home and family life under the constraint of responsibility to God, especially for any young lives entrusted to our care (19) (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

11:22-25 Those who walked in the ways of the Lord would drive out the heathen Canaanites and possess all the land their feet walked on. The rule of possession is given in verse 24. All the land was theirs by promise, but they had to go in and make it their own, just as we have to appropriate the promises of God. The boundaries given in verse 24 have never been realized historically by Israel. It is true that Solomon's kingdom extended from the river (Euphrates) to the border of Egypt (1 Kgs. 4:21), but the Israelites did not actually possess all that territory. Rather, it included states that paid tribute to Solomon but maintained their own internal government. Verse 24, along with many others, will find its fulfillment in the Millennial Reign of the Lord Jesus Christ.

11:26-32 So it was to be a blessing or a curse for Israel—a blessing in the event of obedience, and a curse for disobedience. Two mountains in Canaan represented this truth—Mount Gerizim stood for the blessing, and Mount Ebal for the curse. These two mountains, located near Shechem, had a small valley between them. Half of the tribes were supposed to stand on Gerizim while the priests would pronounce the blessings that would follow obedience. The other six tribes were to stand on Mount Ebal while the priests recited the curses that would flow from disobedience. In each case, the people were to say "Amen!" See Deuteronomy 27:11-26 for details concerning the significance of these two mountains.

The terebinth trees of Moreh are probably those mentioned in Genesis 35:1-4. There, several centuries earlier, Jacob had purged his house of idolatry. Perhaps this reference was intended to impart not only geographical guidance but spiritual guidance as well.

F. Statutes for Worship (Chap. 12)

12:1-3 When they entered the land, the people of God were to destroy all idols and idol shrines, all places where a false worship had been carried on. The wooden images (Heb. ashe¯rîm) were symbols of a female deity. The pillars were symbolic of Baal, the male deity.

12:4-14 God would set apart a place for worship, a place where sacrifices and offerings should be brought. This place was where the tabernacle was pitched at first (Shiloh-Josh. 18:1) and later where the temple was erected (Jerusalem). Only in this appointed place was worship approved. The Christian's center of worship is a Person, the Lord Jesus Christ, the visible manifestation of the invisible Godhead. ... God had overlooked certain irregularities in the wilderness that must not be practiced in the land of Canaan (vv. 8, 9).

12:15-28 In Leviticus 17:3, 4, God had commanded that when any sacrificial animal such as an ox, sheep, or goat was slain, it had to be brought to the tabernacle. Now that the people were about to settle in Canaan, the law must be changed. Henceforth the Jews could kill and eat domestic animals commonly used for sacrifices, just as they would eat the gazelle and the deer (clean animals that were not used for sacrifices). This permission was granted to those who were ceremonially unclean as well as to those who were clean. However, they were repeatedly warned not to eat the blood, because the blood is the life of the flesh, and the life belongs to God.

12:29-32 The Israelites were solemnly warned not even to investigate the idolatrous practices of the heathen, lest they be tempted to introduce these wicked practices into the worship of the true God. Verse 31 refers to the horrible practices associated with the worship of Molech and Chemosh. In the NT, Paul tells us that the motivating force behind idolatry is demonic (1 Cor. 10:20). Should we marvel at the cruelty and degradation of idolatry when we realize its true nature? That the human heart gravitates toward this kind of darkness more readily than it seeks the light of the true God is illustrated by the nation to whom Deuteronomy is addressed. Solomon, Israel's third king, actually did build an altar for Chemosh and Molech right in Jerusalem, the city where the Lord had put His Name (1 Kgs. 11:7).

G. Punishment of False Prophets and Idolaters (Chap. 13)

Individuals or groups which might tempt God's people to practice idolatry were to be stoned to death, whether a prophet (vv. 1-5), a near relative (vv. 6-11), or a community (vv. 12-18). A prophet who encouraged people into idolatry was not to be followed, even if some miracle he predicted came to pass. Such a person was a false prophet, and he must be put to death. Even if a close relative enticed his family to practice idolatry, he too was to be slain.

The corrupt men of verse 13 were base fellows, or "sons of worthlessness" (Heb. belîyya´al). Any such gang which led the people of their city away from God to idols should be killed, together with the inhabitants of that city, and the city should be burned.

The same treatment was to be meted out to an idolatrous Israelite city as to the Canaanite cities—namely, total destruction. God is not partial; He will deal severely with sin, even among His chosen people. But His motives are different. In the case involving a Jewish city His motive would be fatherly discipline, with a view to correction of the nation as a whole.

H. Clean and Unclean Foods (14:1-21)

14:1, 2 These two verses prohibit the idolatrous practice of disfiguring the body in mourning for the dead. The Jews had a higher regard for the body as God's creation than did the Gentiles.

14:3-21a This paragraph reviews the subject of clean and unclean foods, whether animals (vv. 4-8), fishes (vv. 9, 10), flying insects (v. 19), or birds (vv. 11-18, 20). (For exceptions to verse 19, see Lev. 11:21, 22.) A similar list is given in Leviticus 11. The two lists are not identical in every detail, nor are they intended to be. Some animals were unclean for hygienic reasons, and some because they were used in idolatrous rites or venerated by the heathen.

The NT principle concerning foods can be found in Mark 7:15, Romans 14:14, and 1 Timothy 4:3b-5. Gentiles were permitted to eat the flesh of an animal that died by itself, whereas Jews were not (v. 21a). To do so would violate Deuteronomy 12:23 because the blood had not been properly removed from the animal.

14:21b A goat was not to be boiled in the same pan with milk from its mother (v. 21b). (This appears to have been a Canaanite practice. It is forbidden three times in the Pentateuch.) From a natural standpoint, this rule would save the people from the poisoning that is so common when creamed meat dishes spoil. In addition, there is evidence that the calcium value is canceled when both are eaten together. From this restriction the elaborate rabbinical rules about having different sets of dishes for meat and dairy products have evolved.

I. Tithing (14:22-29)

14:22-27 Verses 22-29 deal with the subject of tithes. Some commentators feel that this section does not refer to the first tithe (Lev. 27:30-33), which belonged to God alone, was given to the Levites, and was not to be eaten by the Israelites. Rather it may refer to a secondary tithe, called the festival tithe, part of which the offerer himself ate. Generally speaking, these secondary tithes were to be brought to the place which God appointed as the center for worship. However, if the offerer lived so far from ... the place where God placed His name that he was not able to carry his tithe there, he could exchange the produce for money, carry the money to God's sanctuary, and buy food and drink there to be enjoyed before the LORD. Notice in verse 26 that the Bible does not teach total abstinence. But it does teach moderation, self-control, non-addiction, and abstinence from anything that would cause offense to another. The difference between wine and strong drink is that wine is made from grapes, and strong drink is made from grain, fruit, or honey. For two years the offerer was required to go up with either the tithe or its monetary equivalent.

14:28, 29 In the third year he used the tithe at home to feed the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. Once again we see that the poor and needy are a high priority as far as the LORD is concerned. "He who has pity on the poor lends to the Lord, and He will pay back what he has given" (Prov. 19:17).

J. Treatment of Debtors and Slaves (Chap. 15)

15:1-3 At the end of every seven years, all debts among the children of Israel were to be canceled. The seventh year probably coincided with the sabbatic year. The Jews were not required to cancel debts owed to them by foreigners; this law applied only to debts incurred between Jews. Matthew Henry comments:

> Every seventh year was a year of release, in which the ground rested from being tilled and servants were discharged from their services; and, among other acts of grace, this was one that those who had borrowed money, and had not been able to pay it before, should this year be released from it; and though, if they were able, they were afterwards bound in conscience to repay it, yet thenceforth the creditor should never recover it by law.[7]

Seven is the number of fullness or completeness in Scripture. In the fullness of time, God sent forth His Son and through Him proclaimed remission of sins—a "year of release" not only for the Jews (v. 3) but for all men.

15:4-6 Verse 4 seems to conflict with verse 11. Verse 4 suggests a time when there would be no poor people in the land, whereas verse 11 says that there will always be poor people. Bullinger's note is helpful on this. He suggests that verse 4 means "that there be no poor among you."[8] In other words, they should release their brethren in debt every seven years so that there would be no people in continual poverty. The creditor would not suffer because God would richly bless him. The thought in verse 11 is that there will always be poor people, partly as punishment and partly to teach others compassion in sharing.

15:7-11 The fact that all debts were canceled in the seventh year should not cause a person to refuse to lend money to a poor Israelite as the year of release drew near. To refuse is the base or wicked thought of verse 9. In this connection, the Jewish people have been deservedly well known for caring for their own throughout history. Paul says the same thing in 2 Corinthians 9:7 that Moses says in verse 10: "God loves a cheerful giver." This verse is not only a command but a promise, for God is no man's debtor. "The generous soul will be made rich, and he who waters will also be watered himself" (Prov. 11:25).

15:12-15 A Hebrew slave was also to be released during the seventh year (vv. 12-18). But he was not to be sent away without first providing for him liberally. God provided abundantly for His people when He brought them out of slavery in Egypt (Ex. 12:35,36), and for this reason a freed slave should not ... go out empty-handed. The Lord's desire is for His people to follow His example or, to rephrase the golden rule, "Do unto your brother as the Lord has done unto you."

15:16-18 On the other hand, the slave could refuse freedom and choose to become "a perpetual love servant." He indicated this by having his ear pierced with an awl ... to the door of his master's house. A bondservant was worth twice as much as a hired servant.

15:19-23 Beginning with verse 19 and continuing through 16:17, we have regulations about certain functions which were to be carried out in the place where Jehovah had placed His name:

1. The setting apart of the firstborn animals (15:19-23).
2. The Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread (16:18).
3. The Feast of Weeks, or Pentecost (16:9-12).
4. The Feast of Tabernacles (16:13-17).

The firstborn of clean animals were to be offered to the LORD, and the people were allowed to eat their share but not the blood. The animals had to be without spot or defect—nothing but the best for God.

K. Three Apointed Feasts (Chap. 16)

16:1-8 Chapter 16 reviews the three feasts for which the men in Israel were to go to the central sanctuary each year. As to their purpose, Moody writes,

The holy feasts were (in general) appointed for these ends and uses:—

1. To distinguish the people of God from other nations.
2. To keep afoot the remembrance of the benefits already received.
3. To be a type and figure of benefits yet further to be conferred upon them by Christ.
4. To unite God's people in holy worship.
5. To preserve purity in holy worship prescribed by God.[9]

The Passover and Feast of Unleavened Bread were closely connected. The Passover is described in verses 1, 2, 5-7; the Feast of Unleavened Bread in verses 3, 4, and 8. These feasts were to remind God's people of His redemptive work on their behalf. The Lord's Supper is a weekly remembrance feast for the NT believer, a memorial of Christ our Passover sacrificed for us. The Feast of Unleavened Bread pictures the kind of lives the redeemed should live—full of praise "according to the blessing of the Lord your God" (v. 17) and free from malice and wickedness (1 Cor. 5:8).

The details given concerning the Passover here are different in several respects from the details given in Exodus 12 and 13. For example, what could be offered and where it could be offered are different in each passage.

16:9-12 The Feast of Weeks (Pentecost) began with the firstfruits of the wheat harvest, and is a symbol of the gift of the Holy Spirit. It is not to be confused with the Feast of Firstfruits (barley), which was held on the second day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread. The freewill offering, as in 2 Corinthians 8 and 9, was to be proportionate to the Lord's blessing on the individual's endeavors, in this case his crops.

16:13-15 The Feast of Tabernacles was at the end of the harvest season and looks forward to the time when Israel will be regathered in the land under the rule of Christ.

16:16, 17 Three times a year all the Israelite males were to appear before the LORD with a gift according to each one's ability. Moody indicates the spiritual meaning of the three feasts they had to attend:

> The Passover, Pentecost, and Feast of Tabernacles typify a completed redemption:
> 1. By the passion of the cross: Suffering.
> 2. By the coming of the Holy Spirit: Grace.
> 3. By the final triumph of the coming King: Glory.[10]

16:18-20 Judges must be honest, righteous, and impartial. They should not accept a bribe because a bribe makes a man incapable of judging fairly.

16:21, 22 The wooden image (Heb. ʼashe¯raʼ¯h) was a pole made from a tree, and represented a pagan goddess. Eventually the altar of the Lord would rest in the temple in Jerusalem, where no trees could easily be planted but where an idolatrous symbol could be, and ultimately was, set up (2 Kgs. 23:6).

L. Judges and Kings (Chap. 17)

17:1 Sacrificial animals were to be without blemish. They were a symbol of the sinless, spotless Lamb of God.

17:2-7 A person suspected of idolatry was to be tried. The testimony of two or three witnesses was required. If convicted, he was to be stoned to death.

17:8-13 If legal problems arose which were too hard to be handled by the elders of a city, they were to be taken to the judge. By comparing 17:9 with 17:12 and 19:17, it appears that there was a group of priests and a group of judges who heard these difficult cases. The high priest and the chief judge were the respective leaders, this being implied by the definite articles used in verse 12. This tribunal met at the place where God's sanctuary was located. The decision of this tribunal was final; it was the Supreme Court of Israel. If the accused refused to heed the priest ... or the judge, he was to die (vv. 12, 13).

17:14-20 God anticipated the desire of the people for a king by about 400 years, and He stated the qualifications for such a ruler, as follows: (1) He must be the man of God's choice (v. 15). (2) He must be an Israelite—from among your brethren (v. 15). (3) He must not multiply horses—that is, depend on such natural means for victory over his foes (v. 16). His trust must be in the Lord. (4) He must not cause the people to return to Egypt, thinking that the horses they could get there would save them (v. 16). (5) He must not multiply wives (v. 17). This is not only a prohibition against polygamy and a warning against the danger of wives who would lead him off into idolatry, but also a ban on marriages designed to form political alliances (v. 17). (6) He must not greatly multiply silver and gold, since these might lure him away from dependence on the Lord (v. 17). (7) He must write, read, and obey the law of the Lord, lest he become proud and willful (vv. 18-20). By continually spending time in the law the king was to become a model for the people. (8) He must not be lifted up with pride (v. 20).

Solomon, who ruled Israel in her golden days, violated almost every one of these injunctions—to his own destruction and the ruin of his kingdom (1 Kgs. 10:14-11:10).

M. Priests, Levites, and Prophets (Chap. 18)

18:1-8 Again God's care for the priests and Levites is seen. Because they did not receive a tribal inheritance of land, they were to be supported by the people. Their part in the offerings was the shoulder, the two cheeks (jawbones), the stomach, and the firstfruits of grain, wine, oil, and fleece. Verses 6-8 describe a Levite who sold his home and moved to the place where God had placed His name to serve Him. He was to share in the offerings with the other Levites, and this was in addition to whatever he received from the sale of his inheritance. (Levites could own property even though they did not inherit a tribal possession.)

18:9-14 The Israelites were forbidden to have any contact with anyone who claimed to communicate with the unseen world. Eight means of communication with the spirit world are given. They are called abominations by God. They include: one who practices witchcraft (a witch or a warlock), ... a soothsayer (a seer; a false prophet), ... one who interprets omens (a palm-reader; a fortune-teller; an astrologer), ... a sorcerer (a witchdoctor), ... one who conjures spells (a wizard), ... a medium (spirit medium), ... a spiritist (a séance leader), ... one who calls up the dead (a necromancer). Some of these "professions" overlap.

Tragically, this nearly 3,400 year-old prohibition is just as much needed in "enlightened" modern times as it was long ago. Henry G. Bosch writes:

> Satanism, demons, and the occult are dark, sinister realities, not tricks. One of the signs that we are nearing the close of this age is the widespread interest in witchcraft, astrology, and other forms of the occult. ... Thousands consult their horoscope each day, attend séances, or seek to communicate with deceased loved ones. There's also a great interest in Satanism and demons. The Bible repeatedly warns against such practices (Lev. 19:31; 20:27; 2 Chron. 33:6; Jer. 10:2; Gal. 5:19, 20).
> How urgent and up-to-date are the warnings of Scripture! Let's not play around with something that could become a kiss of death.[11]

To be blameless (v. 13) in regard to these forbidden "communications" means to listen to God's voice alone.

18:15-19 In sharp contrast to the evils of the leaders of the occult, verse 15 presents a beautiful prophecy about Christ, the true Prophet of God (Acts 3:22, 23). Notice the description in verses 15, 18, and 19: (1) a Prophet—that is, one who speaks God's word; (2) from your midst—i.e., truly human; (3) from your brethren— i.e., an Israelite; (4) like me—i.e., like Moses in the sense of being raised up by God; (5) I ... will put My words in His mouth—fullness of inspiration; (6) He shall speak to them all that I command Him—fullness of revelation; (7) all are responsible to listen to Him and obey Him.

This section also teaches that this Prophet would serve as a Mediator between God and man. The people had been so terrified at Mount Sinai that they asked that God would not speak to them directly anymore and that they might not see the fire anymore lest they die. In response to that request, God promised Christ as the Mediator. That this passage held Messianic hope for the Jews can be seen clearly in the Gospels (John 6:14; 7:40).

18:20-22 False prophets could be detected in various ways. We have previously learned that they were false if they sought to lead the people away from the worship of the true God (13:1-5). Here is another means of detection: If a prediction failed to come to pass, that prophet should be put to death, and no one need fear any curse he might pronounce.

N. Criminal Laws (Chap. 19)

19:1-10 Three cities of refuge had already been set up east of the Jordan River. Here Moses reminded the people to set up three cities on the other side, conveniently located so that a manslayer could flee there from the avenger of blood (vv. 1-7). To the previous instruction on this subject is added the provision for three additional cities of refuge, if the people ever possessed the full territory originally promised to them (vv. 8-10). No further mention is made of these three extra cities because Israel has never occupied all the land promised in Genesis 15:18. The three cities west of the Jordan were Kedesh, Hebron, and Shechem (Josh. 20:7).

19:11-13 The city of refuge did not provide safety for a murderer. Even though he fled to one of these cities, the elders were to weigh the evidence and deliver him ... to ... the avenger if he was found guilty.

19:14 A landmark was a stone placed in a field to indicate the boundary of one's land. These could be moved secretly at night to expand one's own farm, at the same time cheating one's neighbor. Why this one verse is placed in the midst of a passage dealing with judicial practice—i.e., cities of refuge and witnesses false and true—is difficult to say, but its position does not obscure its teaching.

19:15-21 The witness of one person was not enough in a legal case. There had to be two or three witnesses. A false witness was to be tried by the priests and the judges (17:8, 9) and punished with the penalty of the crime with which he accused the defendant (vv. 16-21).

The "eye for eye" and "tooth for tooth" principle is called the Lex talionis in Western culture (Latin for "law of retaliation"). It is commonly misrepresented as vindictive, but it is not. This law is not a license for cruelty, but a limit to it. In the context it refers to what kind of penalty could be inflicted upon a false witness.

O. Laws Concerning Warfare (Chap. 20)

20:1-8 Chapter 20 is a manual on warfare for God's people. The priests were charged with encouraging the people as they battled against the enemy. Various classes were exempt from military service: (1) those who had just built a new house; (2) those who had just planted a vineyard and had never partaken of the fruit; (3) those whose marriage had not been consummated; (4) those who were fearful and fainthearted.

> The Jewish writers agree that this liberty to return was allowed only in those wars which they made voluntarily ... not those which were made by the divine command against Amalek and the Canaanites, in which every man was bound to fight.[12]

20:9 Since in any good army there must be organization and rank, the officers appointed captains of the armies to lead the people.

20:10-20 Unlike other nations, Israel was to make distinctions in her warfare under Jehovah's direction. These distinctions were a further reflection of Israel as a holy people under a loving God. War was necessary, but the Lord would control the evil it caused. One has only to study the cruel practices of other nations, such as the Assyrians,[13] to appreciate these guidelines. Instructions are given as to how war was to be waged. Notice the following distinctions:

> 1. Cities ... near and far (10-18). The cities in the land were an immediate danger, totally reprobate and fit for destruction. Cities outside the land but within the rest of the area promised to Abraham were to be approached first with terms of peace. If they refused, only the men were to be killed; the women and children were to be spared. These cities did not pose so great a threat to contaminate Israel as did the ones within Israel's borders.
> 2. Fruitful and unfruitful trees (19,20). The principle here is that Israel was not to practice "desolation warfare." They were to preserve what was useful instead of engaging in wholesale destruction of the land.

P. Various Laws (Chaps. 21-25)

1. Expiation for Unsolved Murder (21:1-9)

If a man was found slain ... in the land, and the slayer could not be located, the elders of the ... nearest ... city were required to make atonement. They brought a heifer ... to a valley with flowing water and killed it there. Washing their hands over the heifer, they protested their innocence of the crime and asked that no guilt of bloodshed should attach to them. Even when individual guilt could not be ascertained, there was still a corporate guilt that needed to be taken care of; the land had to be cleansed from the defilement of blood. This became the responsibility of the nearest ... city.

Someone has called verses 1-9 "God's Great Inquest Over His Son." Israel is bloodguilty in connection with Christ's death and must be cleansed in a righteous way.

2. Female Prisoners of War (21:10-14)

An Israelite was permitted to marry a beautiful woman captured in war after she went through a ceremonial cleansing and separation. (But the passage does not apply to female inhabitants of the land of Canaan.) The marriage was of a probationary nature; he could subsequently let her leave him if he was not pleased with her. However, he could not sell her or treat her brutally.

3. Rights of the Firstborn (21:15-17)

The son of an unloved wife could not be deprived of the birthright, if he was the firstborn. These verses do not prove that God ever approved of bigamy, but simply that He guarded the right of the firstborn even in the case of multiple marriages. Sometimes God sovereignly set aside the firstborn of a family to bless the younger—e.g., Jacob and Esau, Ephraim and Manasseh. However, this was the exception, based on the selective choosing of God, and not the rule, which is stated here.

4. Stubborn and Rebellious Sons (21:18-21)

A rebellious son was to be stoned to death, after having been found guilty by the elders of the city. Compare this with the reception given to the repentant prodigal son in Luke 15.

5. The Bodies of Hanged Criminals (21:22, 23)

This text definitely points forward to Christ. Though innocent Himself, He was hanged on a tree. He was bearing the curse that we deserved. His body was not allowed to remain on the cross overnight (see John 19:31).

To Him who suffered on the tree
Our souls at His soul's price to gain,
Blessing and praise and glory be;
Worthy the Lamb, for He was slain!

To Him enthroned by filial right,
All power in heaven and earth proclaim,
Honor, and majesty, and might;
Worthy the Lamb, for He was slain!
—James Montgomery

6. Nine Laws of Behavior (22:1-12)

22:1-3 Chapter 22 expands upon Leviticus 19:18, describing the general command to "Love your neighbor." Even a man's enemies were to be treated with neighborly concern (Ex. 23:4,5). An Israelite was not allowed to act indifferently toward anything lost by his neighbor (brother). Whether it was an animal, a garment, or anything else, he was obligated to take it to his own house and keep it until it was claimed.

22:4 Israelites were also obligated to assist a neighbor's animal which had fallen.

22:5 Men were not to wear women's clothing, or vice versa. God hates transvestism.

22:6, 7 Young birds could be taken from a bird's nest, but the mother had to be freed, probably so that she could continue reproducing.

22:8 A parapet or railing had to be built around the flat roof of a house to prevent people from falling off. The roof was the place of fellowship. It is important to guard the communion, especially of the young and careless.

22:9-11 The Jews were forbidden to: (1) sow a vineyard with different kinds of seed; (2) plow with an ox (clean) and a donkey (unclean) yoked together; (3) wear clothes made of a mixture of wool and linen. The first prohibition suggests adding to the pure teaching of the Word of God. The second describes the unequal yoke in service. The third speaks of the mixture of righteousness and unrighteousness in the practical life of the believer.

22:12 Jews were supposed to wear tassels on the four corners of their garments as constant reminders to obey the Lord (Num. 15:37-41). The reason for these tassels is given in Numbers 15:37 and following.

7. Offenses Against Chastity (22:13-30)

22:13-21 This paragraph deals with a man who married a girl and then suspected that she was not a virgin. Evidence of ... virginity probably consisted of marks on the linen of the marriage bed after a woman's first sexual experience.[14] If the father and mother could produce evidence of the young woman's virginity, the overly suspicious husband was chastised, fined one hundred shekels of silver, and required to live with her. If, however, the young woman had been immoral before her marriage, then she was to be stoned to death.

22:22-30 The remaining verses of this chapter deal with various types of sexual immorality: (1) Both man and woman ... found in the act of adultery were to be put to death. (2) If a man raped a betrothed ... woman ... in the city, and she did not cry out for help, then both were guilty of adultery and were to be put to death. (3) If a man raped a betrothed woman in a field, where her cries for help could not be heard, then the man was to be killed, but the woman was innocent. (4) A man who had sexual relations with a virgin was required to pay fifty shekels of silver to her father and also to marry her. (5) Verse 30 forbids incest—i.e., sexual relations with a member of the family.

8. Those Barred from Entering the Assembly (23:1-8)

Various persons were barred from entering the assembly of the LORD, that is, from full rights as citizens and worshipers: (1) a man whose reproductive organs were damaged or missing; (2) an illegitimate person—i.e., one born out of wedlock[15]; (3) an Ammonite or Moabite; (4) an Edomite or Egyptian. Verse 4 says that Moab did not "meet the Israelites with food and drink," whereas Deuteronomy 2:29 implies that certain Moabites sold food supplies to the Jews. "To meet ... with bread and water" is an idiomatic expression meaning to give a hospitable reception. This the Moabites did not do.

The eunuch was excluded from the congregation. The illegitimate person, the Moabite, and the Ammonite were barred from the assembly ... to the tenth generation. The Edomite and the Egyptian could enter after three generations. However, there were exceptions to these general rules when individuals sought Jehovah. Among David's mighty men could be found both an Ammonite and a Moabite (1 Chron. 11:39, 46). Some think that the rules of exclusion applied only to males and therefore did not apply to Ruth, for example. Some think that "the tenth generation" is an idiom that means indefinitely.

9. Cleanliness in the Camp (23:9-14)

Verse 9 warns against the temptations that face men who are away from home in military service. (Or perhaps it serves as an introduction to verses 10-14.)

The law on nocturnal emissions shows the sacredness with which the reproduction of life was regarded.

Each soldier was required to carry a shovel with his weapons for sanitation of the camp. All excrement was to be covered immediately with dirt. If all armies down through history had followed this simple regulation, they would have avoided the spread of plagues many times.

10. Social and Religious Laws (23:15-25)

23:15, 16 A foreign slave who had escaped to freedom was not to be delivered up to his master. Thus Israel was to be an asylum for the oppressed.

23:17, 18 Male or female prostitution was not to be tolerated in the land, and money derived from such immoral traffic should never be brought to the house of the LORD in payment of a vow. A "dog" means a male prostitute.

23:19, 20 Jews were not to charge interest on anything they lent to another Jew, though it was permitted for them to charge interest ... to a foreigner. This is a further expansion of the principle already given in Exodus 22:25, which prohibited exacting usury from the poor.

23:21-23 Vows were voluntary. A man did not have to make a vow to the LORD, but once he made it, he was obligated to pay it.

23:24, 25 Travelers were allowed to help themselves to grapes for their current needs, but they were not allowed to put any in a container. Likewise, they were allowed to take grain from a field, but only what they could pick with their hands, not with a sickle. In our Lord's day, His twelve disciples made use of this privilege (Mark 2:23).

11. Divorce and Remarriage (24:1-4)

A man could divorce his wife for uncleanness by writing her a certificate of divorce and giving it to her. She was then free to marry someone else. But if her second husband died or divorced her, the first husband was not allowed to marry her again. Jehovah gave Israel a certificate of divorce (Jer. 3:1-8); yet in a future day He will take her to Himself again, having purged her of her unfaithfulness. Oh, the depths of the riches of the love of God; how low He stoops to love the unlovable!

12. Various Social Laws (24:5-25:4)

24:5 A man who was newly married was not required to go out to war for the first year. This gave him time to cultivate and strengthen the marriage bond and to start a family. If he had to go to war and was killed, his name would be cut off from Israel unless his redeeming relative raised up descendants for him. This "kinsman redeemer"[16] was the nearest relative who was able and willing to marry the widow. The first male born to such a union became the heir of the former husband. This continued the family name and kept the land in the family.

24:6 Since a millstone was a person's means of livelihood, it could not be required as a pledge in a business transaction. To take either the lower or the upper millstone would deprive one of the means of grinding grain.

24:7 A kidnapper or a slave trader was to be put to death.

24:8, 9 Special precautions were to be observed in the event of an outbreak of leprosy, following previous instructions given to the Levites. Miriam is cited as a warning.

24:10-13 A man's house could not be invaded to obtain a pledge from him. If the man was so poor that he gave his clothing as a pledge, it was to be returned to him each night so that he could sleep in it.

24:14, 15 The wages of a hired servant should be paid promptly.

24:16 No man was to be put to death for another person's sin.

24:17-22 Justice was to be shown to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. A field was not to be completely harvested. Gleanings were to be left for the poor and the helpless. The same applied to the harvesting of olive trees and grapes. Ronald Sider comments:

> The memory of their own poverty and oppression in Egypt was to prompt them to leave generous gleanings for the poor sojourner, the widow, and the fatherless.[17]

When John Newton was born again, he printed verse 22 in large letters and hung it over his mantlepiece, where he would be constantly reminded of it.

25:1-3 When an offender was found guilty and was sentenced to be beaten, he was not to receive more than forty blows. The Jews commonly inflicted thirty-nine blows or stripes, lest they miscount and thus transgress this regulation (see 2 Cor. 11:24).

25:4 The ox that trod out the grain was not to be muzzled but rather to be allowed to eat some of the grain. Paul uses this verse in 1 Corinthians 9:9-11 to teach that the man who labors in spiritual things should be taken care of in material things. Thus Paul shows us that there is a spiritual aspect to the law. This does not minimize the literal meaning; it only shows that many times there is a spiritual lesson under the surface. The diligent student will look for and heed this important spiritual lesson.

13. Law of Levirate Marriage (25:5-10)

If an Israelite died and left his widow without a son, there was the danger that his name might perish and his property pass out of the family. Therefore, a brother of the dead man was supposed to marry the widow. This practice of "Levirate" marriages existed in many ancient nations. If the brother would not agree to do this, then the widow went to the elders of the city and announced this fact. He was called before the elders and given an opportunity to confirm his unwillingness. If he persisted in his refusal, the widow removed one of his sandals and spat in his face. From then on he was known by a name of reproach because of his unwillingness to perpetuate his brother's house.

Leviticus 20:21 prohibited a man from marrying his brother's wife; here he is commanded to marry her. The passage in Leviticus no doubt applied when the husband was still living, while Deuteronomy refers to a time when the husband is dead, having left behind no male heir.

14. Three Distinct Laws (25:11-19)

25:11, 12 If a woman interfered by seizing a man immodestly in a fight in which her husband was involved, her offending hand was to be cut off. Her actions might endanger the man's having an heir; thus the severe penalty.

25:13-16 Honest weights and measures were required. Often men had one set of scales for buying and another for selling. This was an abomination to the LORD.

25:17-19 The descendants of Amalek were to be utterly destroyed because of his treachery and cruelty (Ex. 17:8-16). Israel is told not to forget to destroy the Amalekites, but it appears that they did forget. Saul disobeyed the Lord in not exterminating them in his day (1 Sam. 15). In fact, it was not until the days of Hezekiah that "they defeated the rest of the Amalekites who had escaped" (1 Chron. 4:43).

Q. Rituals and Ratifications (Chap. 26)

1. The Ritual for Firstfruits (26:1-11)

After the people were settled in the land, they were supposed to go to God's sanctuary and present the first of all the produce to the priest in joyful recognition of what God had done. Then they were to rehearse the Lord's gracious dealings with them, beginning with their ancestor, Jacob (a wandering Syrian), going on to the slavery in Egypt, God's mighty deliverance, and concluding with their possession of the land flowing with milk and honey. Phillip Keller explains this colorful term:

> In the Scriptures the picture portrayed of the Promised Land, to which God tried so hard to lead Israel from Egypt, was that of a "land flowing with milk and honey." Not only is this figurative language but also essentially scientific terminology. In agricultural terms we speak of a "milk flow" and a "honey flow." By this we mean the peak season of spring and summer, when pastures are at their most productive stages. The livestock that feed on the forage and the bees that visit the blossoms are said to be producing a corresponding "flow" of milk or honey. So a land flowing with milk and honey is a land of rich, green, luxuriant pastures. And when God spoke of such a land for Israel He also foresaw such an abundant life of joy and victory and contentment for His people.[18]

2. The Ritual for the Third Year Tithe (26:12-15)

In addition to the above firstfruits, the Jews were to offer a second tithe, called the festival tithe, which was to be shared with the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow every third year. This tithe was to be distributed to the needy in their own towns. The people then had to testify before the LORD that they had obeyed ... all of the commands concerning the tithe.

3. Ratification of the Covenant (26:16-19)

Because the people had agreed to walk in the ways of the Lord, He in turn acknowledged them as His own special people and promised to exalt them above all other nations. They were a holy people because God had set them apart from the other nations—not because of any intrinsic merit. They were different from any other nation on earth, being the peculiar treasure of Jehovah. Their response to such an honor was supposed to be obedience to His commands.

R. Curses and Blessings (Chaps. 27, 28)

27:1-8 After they crossed the Jordan River into the Promised Land, the Israelites were to raise up a large monument of stones, whitewash it, and write all the words of the law on it. This monument was to be erected on Mount Ebal, together with an altar which was to be made with uncut stones.

27:9, 10 The Jews had been God's people by His choice for some time, but now that they were about to enter the land, they became His people in a special sense. The favor He was showing to them called for loving obedience on their part.

27:11-13 Six tribes were appointed to stand on Mount Gerizim in order to "Amen" the blessings. These six tribes were descendants of Leah and Rachel. The other tribes were to stand on Mount Ebal to confirm the curses. Notice that Ephraim and Manasseh aren't mentioned separately, but instead the tribe of Joseph is listed. Reuben, Israel's firstborn (who lost his birthright), and Zebulun, Leah's youngest, were on Mount Ebal with the sons of the handmaids. The favored tribes were on Mount Gerizim.

27:14-26 The Levites (see v. 9) were to stand in the valley between the two mountains. As they pronounced the curses or blessings, the people were to answer "Amen!" The curses are given in verses 15-26. They have to do with idolatry; disrespect of parents (v. 16); dishonesty in removing boundary lines (v. 17); deceiving the blind (v. 18); taking advantage of the poor and defenseless (v. 19); various forms of incest (vv. 20, 22, 23); bestiality (v. 21); secret murder of one's neighbor; murder of the innocent for a bribe (v. 25); and disobedience to the law of God (v. 26). The historical account of this ceremony can be found in Joshua 8:30 and following. Notice how closely Joshua follows the instructions given by Moses.

It is significant that only the curses are given in Chapter 27. It could not be otherwise because, as Paul reminds us, "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse" (Gal. 3:10). It was not merely that the Israelites would transgress the law, but that they were under the law as a principle.

28:1-14 Verse 1 refers to the end of chapter 26 with the words, "God will set you high above." This gives chapter 27 the appearance of being parenthetical. Many Bible students feel that the blessings pronounced in verses 3-6 were not those addressed to the six tribes on Mount Gerizim, but that this entire chapter is a statement by Moses as to what lay ahead for the children of Israel. The first fourteen verses speak of the blessings that would follow obedience, whereas the last fifty-four verses describe the curses that would fall upon the people if they forsook the Lord. The blessings promised include preeminence among the nations, material prosperity, fruitfulness, fertility, abundance of crops, victory in battle, and success in international trade.

28:15-37 The curses included scarcity, barrenness, crop failure, pestilence, disease, blight, drought, defeat in battle, madness, fright, adversity, calamity, and powerlessness (vv. 15-32). Verses 33-37 predict captivity in a foreign land, and this was fulfilled by the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities.

Israel would become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword among all nations.

28:38-46 The Jews would be cursed with failed crops, vineyards, and olive trees. Their children would go into captivity and locusts would consume their trees and produce. The alien would rise higher and higher and the Israelites would go down lower and lower. There is no contradiction between verses 12 and 44. If obedient, the Jews would become international lenders. If disobedient, they would have to borrow from strangers.

28:47-57 The horrors of a siege by a foreign invader are described in verses 49-57—so fierce that the people would eat one another. This came to pass when Jerusalem was beseiged by the Babylonians and later by the Romans. At both times, cannibalism was widespread. People who were normally refined and sensitive became hostile and cannibalistic.

28:58-68 Plagues and diseases would greatly reduce the population of Israel. The survivors would be scattered throughout the earth, and there they would live in constant fear of persecution. God would even take His people back to Egypt in ships. According to Josephus, the prophecy that Israel would go to Egypt again was partially fulfilled in the time of Titus, when Jews were taken there by ship and sold as slaves. But the name "Egypt" here may mean servitude in general. God had delivered Israel from literal Egyptian slavery in the past, but if she would not love Him and acknowledge His sovereign right to her obedience, if she would not keep herself pure as His wife, if she would not be His peculiar treasure, choosing instead to be like the other nations, then she would be sold back into slavery. But by then she would be so crushed that no one would want her even as a slave.

"To whom much is given, from him much will be required" (Luke 12:48). Israel had been given privileges above all other nations, and therefore her accountability was greater and her punishment more severe.

To meditate on these curses leaves one amazed at the outpouring of Jehovah's wrath. No words are minced, no details are left to the imagination. Moses paints the picture with bold, stark realism. Israel must know what disobedience will bring in order that she may learn to fear this glorious and awesome name, THE LORD YOUR GOD.

III. MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE—COVENANT FOR THE LAND (CHAPS. 29, 30)

A. The Covenant Made in Moab (29:1-21)

29:1 The first verse of chapter 29 may logically belong to the previous chapter, as in the Hebrew Bible. Keil and Delitzsch, however, see it as a "heading" for the addresses of chapters 29 and 30.[19]

29:2-9 The people had broken the covenant which God made with them at Mount Sinai. Now Moses called on them to ratify the covenant contained here in the Book of Deuteronomy made on the plains of Moab, just prior to their entrance into the land. The people lacked an understanding of the Lord and His purposes for them. Jehovah longed to give them a heart to perceive, eyes to see and ears to hear, but they rendered themselves unfit to receive these things through their continual unbelief and disobedience. Israel had enjoyed manna from heaven and water from the rock; she did not depend on the things manufactured by man for her survival (i.e., bread, wine, strong drink). This was in order that she might come to know the Lord her God in all of His faithfulness and love.

As an incentive to keep this covenant, Moses once again reviewed the goodness of God to Israel—the miracles in Egypt, the mighty deliverance, the forty years in the wilderness, the defeat of Sihon ... and Og, and the distribution of the trans-Jordanian land to Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

29:10-21 Moses called on all the people to enter into the sworn covenant with the LORD (vv. 10-13) and reminded them that the covenant applied to their posterity as well (vv. 14, 15). Failure to keep the covenant would result in bitter punishment. Rebels should beware of any temptation to serve the idols of the Gentile nations or to think that they would escape God's anger if they did so (vv. 16-21). Verse 19 in the RSV reads: "One who, when he hears the words of this sworn covenant, blesses himself in his heart saying, 'I shall be safe, though I walk in the stubbornness of my heart.' This would lead to the sweeping away of moist and dry alike." No one would escape.

B. Punishment for Breaking the Covenant (29:22-29)

29:22-28 Generations to come, and foreign nations as well, would be amazed at the desolation of Israel and would ask the reason why the land should have been treated like the cities of the plain—Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboiim. The answer would be given, "Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD God of their fathers ... and served other gods."

29:29 While there are certain secret things that belong to the LORD, especially matters concerning His judgments, Moses reminded the people that their responsibility was clearly revealed—to keep the covenant of the Lord. What this is saying is that revelation brings responsibility. Men are accountable to obey, not to sit in judgment on the word of the Lord. This principle can be found many times in the NT also. "To him who knows to do good [revelation] and does not do it [responsibility], to him it is sin" (Jas. 4:17).

C. Restoration for Returning to the Covenant (Chap. 30)

30:1-10 Chapter 30 anticipates that the people would break the covenant and be carried away into exile. This, of course, is exactly what happened. Even then, God would have compassion and restore them if they would turn to Him in repentance. He would bring them back to the land. In addition to this physical restoration, there would be a spiritual renewal ("the LORD your God will circumcise your heart"—v. 6). The people would then enjoy the blessings of obedience, whereas their enemies would be cursed. The counsels of the Most High will not fail, even though the objects of those counsels do fail. God would fulfill His word to the patriarchs and give their descendants ... the land forever. After the exile, which He knew was inevitable, He would restore them and change them. Such is the working of the unconditional love of the great Lover! Verse 6 touches on a theme developed hundreds of years later by the prophets—namely, the New Covenant (Jer. 32:39ff; Ezek. 36:24ff). This covenant, although revealed in the OT, was not ratified until the death of Christ, for His was the blood of the New Covenant (Luke 22:20).

30:11-14 Moses reminded the people that the covenant was not too hard for them to understand (mysterious), nor was it far off (inaccessible). They were not required to do the impossible to find it. The Lord had brought it to them, and their responsibility was to obey it. These verses are used by Paul in Romans 10:5-8 and are applied to Christ and the gospel. The covenant was not easy to keep, but God had made provision in case of failure. The people were then required to repent and to bring the appointed sacrifices. Since the sacrifices were types of Christ, the lesson is that those who sin should repent and put their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

30:15-20 The people were called on to choose between life and good on the one hand, and death and evil on the other—life for obedience, but death for disobedience. Moses strongly pleaded with them to choose life and ... blessing. The desired response brought good results, including length of ... days and abundant spiritual life, implied by the words "that you may cling to Him." The only alternative was one of cursing.

IV. MOSES' LAST DAYS—DEATH OUTSIDE THE LAND (CHAPS. 31-34)

A. Moses' Replacement (Chap. 31)

31:1-8 Moses was now one hundred and twenty years old. He knew God's decree stating that he would not be allowed to cross the Jordan with the people, but he reminded the people that the LORD would go with them, that Joshua would be their captain, and that victory over their enemies was assured. Moses next encouraged Joshua publicly concerning his new appointment and assured him of the Lord's presence (vv. 7, 8).

31:9-13 The written law was entrusted to the Levites. It was to be kept beside the ark. The two tablets of the Decalogue were placed inside the ark (Ex. 25:16; Heb. 9:4). This copy of the law was placed beside the ark. Every seven years the law was to be read in the presence of all Israel.

The reading of Holy Scripture is sadly neglected even in doctrinally conservative circles today. The following extended but valuable words from C. H. Mackintosh are unfortunately much more true today than a century ago when they were written:

> The Word of God is not loved and studied, either privately or publicly. Trashy literature is devoured in private, and music, ritualistic services, and imposing ceremonies are eagerly sought after in public. Thousands will flock to hear music, and pay for admission, but how few care for a meeting to read the holy Scriptures! These are facts, and facts are powerful arguments. We cannot get over them. There is a growing thirst for religious excitement, and a growing distaste for the calm study of holy Scripture and the spiritual exercises of the Christian assembly. It is perfectly useless to deny it. We cannot shut our eyes to it. The evidence of it meets us on every hand.
> Thank God, there are a few, here and there, who really love the Word of God, and delight to meet, in holy fellowship, for the study of its precious truths. May the Lord increase the number of such, and bless them, "till traveling days are done."[20]

31:14-18 As Moses' death drew near, God called him and Joshua to the tabernacle of meeting and appeared before them in a pillar of cloud. He first revealed to Moses that the Israelites would soon give themselves over to idolatry and suffer God's anger.

31:19-22 Then He commanded Moses to write down a song and teach it to the children of Israel as a witness ... against them in days to come.

31:23 God personally inaugurated Joshua to lead His people into the Promised Land and encouraged him to be brave and strong. Joshua must have been strengthened by these words from Jehovah. He had just heard God speak of a coming national apostasy (v. 16), and he needed to be reassured, rather than discouraged, for the task ahead.

31:24-27 The Book of the Law, i.e., Deuteronomy, committed to the Levites, would also serve as a witness against the Israelites when they forsook the Lord.

31:28-30 Then Moses delivered the following song to the elders of their tribes, and the officers, as God had commanded him.

B. Moses' Song (Chap. 32)

32:1-3 The song may be summarized as follows: The universe is summoned to hear the word of the Lord. It is refreshing and nourishing, like the rain and the dew. In verse 3 (which could serve as a title to the song) Moses speaks of ascribing greatness to their God. The song reveals God's greatness in the context of His historical dealings with His people.

32:4-9 In spite of God's greatness, justice, faithfulness, and holiness, the people of Israel forsook Him and sinned against Him. The glory of Jehovah's attributes is displayed here against the dark backdrop of Israel's perverse wickedness. It was small thanks He received for being their Father and Creator. When the Most High divided the earth among the Gentile nations, He first provided for the needs of His own people. Such was His love and care for them.

32:10-14 The birth and childhood of the nation of Israel are described in verse 10. After the Exodus from Egypt, God guided, instructed, and preserved His people with the love of a mother eagle (v. 11). There was no foreign god who had a part in Israel's preservation. Why then should the nation turn to idolatry and ascribe the goodness of Jehovah to another?

Beginning in verse 13, the song is prophetic. He brought them into the blessings of the Promised Land.

32:15-20 But Jeshurun (a poetic name for the people of Israel meaning "upright people") rebelled against Jehovah by turning to idols. They chose to sacrifice to demons, many times offering up their own children. They even sank to the stupidity of worshiping new gods. Thus they neglected their true Rock; they forgot their true Father. As a result, the LORD hid His face from them. This hiding of His face was fulfilled in their being sold into captivity.

32:21-33 After setting Israel aside, God acted in grace toward the Gentiles, seeking to provoke Israel to jealousy (as in the present Church Age). Israel in the meantime would be scattered and persecuted. The people would not be totally destroyed, though, because Jehovah did not want Israel's enemies to misinterpret the nation's downfall. It was not that their enemies' rock was stronger, but that Israel's Rock had surrendered them to slaughter because of their wickedness.

32:34-43 This section has to do with God's vengeance upon the nations that were used to punish Israel. Vengeance (v. 35) and vindication (v. 36) belong to the Lord. He has sworn by Himself (for there is no one greater) to deal with His adversaries. Notice how completely this judgment will be carried out (vv. 41,42). As a result, God's people and all the nations are to rejoice, because God has avenged Himself and made atonement for His land and His people.

32:44-47 The song thus gives a historical and prophetical outline of the nation of Israel. Having read the song, Moses solemnly urged the people to follow the Lord with the words: "For it is not a futile thing for you, because it is your life ... "

32:48-52 Then the LORD called Moses to the top of Mount Nebo, where he would be allowed to see the land. He would not be allowed to enter Canaan because of his sin at Meribah Kadesh, but would die on ... Mount Nebo and be buried in a valley in Moab (cf. 34:6).

C. Moses' Blessing (Chap. 33)

The Hebrew wording in this chapter is obscure in many places; thus there are various opinions and interpretations offered by different commentators. It is not within the scope of this work to go into detail as to the possible Hebrew renderings; we just suggest a short, prophetical view of each blessing.

33:1-5 As his final official act, Moses the man of God pronounced a blessing on the tribes of Israel. Verses 2-5 celebrate God's loving care for His own people. At Sinai He gave the law. Seir and Mount Paran were on the route from Sinai to Canaan. In poetic language, Moses describes the Lord as King in Jeshurun leading His people on to victory. Then follow the individual blessings:

33:6 Reuben. Situated east of the Jordan River and immediately north of Moab, Reuben would be vulnerable to attack; hence the prayer that the tribe would not become extinct but would be populous.

Simeon is not mentioned. It became closely associated with Judah and may be included in that blessing.

33:7 Judah. This tribe would be a leader in the conquest of Canaan. The Lord is asked to help the warriors and bring them back safely to their people.

33:8-11 Levi. God's Thummim and His Urim belonged to Levi, the tribe criticized by the people at Massah and the waters of Meribah. Levi was also the tribe that took sides with God against its own people when the latter worshiped the golden calf. Levi was set apart to teach the people and to present sacrifices. Moses prays that the LORD will bless his substance, find pleasure in his service, and destroy those who hate him.

33:12 Benjamin. The temple, God's dwelling place on earth, would be located in Benjamin's territory, surrounded by shouldering hills. Therefore Benjamin is pictured as a beloved tribe, enjoying intimate communion with the Lord.

33:13-17 Joseph. The territory of the sons of Joseph would be watered by dew from above and springs from beneath. It would be unusually fruitful, enjoying the goodwill of the One who revealed Himself in the burning bush. Majestic and powerful, Joseph's two sons would conquer nations. Ephraim got the birthright and is therefore assigned ten thousands whereas Manasseh is credited with only thousands.

33:18, 19 Zebulun and Issachar. Successful at home and abroad, they would lead nations to worship at Jerusalem, the mountain of the Lord. These tribes would feast on the abundance of the seas and of the land. Since there is no record of their leading nations to worship, and since both tribes were landlocked in the past, this blessing must look forward to the Millennium.

33:20, 21 Gad. God gave this tribe a large territory east of the Jordan. Gad fought like a lion to capture and preserve it. It was choice pastureland that he chose for himself—a leader's portion. But he also joined with the heads of the people to conquer the land west of the Jordan, thus carrying out the Lord's righteous will.

33:22 Dan is compared to a lion's whelp, ferocious and strong, striking suddenly from ambush. Dan's original territory was in the southwest of Canaan, but the Danites migrated to the northeast and seized additional land adjoining Bashan.

33:23 Naphtali was located in northeast Canaan and extended south to the Sea of Galilee. The tribe was honored with the favor and blessing of the LORD.

33:24, 25 Asher was to be blessed with a numerous posterity, good relations with the other tribes, and a land flowing with olive oil. Iron and bronze seem to be strange materials for sandals. Keil translates it fortresses. F. W. Grant suggests an interesting alternative translation of the last line of verse 25:The moderns against the ancients read "rest" instead of "strength." In these two there would be doubly expressed their abiding security: and though we may not be willing to give up what we are so familiar with, that "as thy days thy strength shall be," it is certainly not unsuited as the close of this wonderful blessing to have "as thy days shall be thy rest."[21]

33:26-29 The closing verses celebrate the greatness of God as He acts in behalf of His people. The God of Jeshurun is unique in the heavens to help. Millions have been fortified by the words in verse 27: "The eternal God is your refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

God's future destruction of Israel's enemies and the promise of safety, peace, prosperity, and victory close the Song of Moses.

D. Moses' Death (Chap. 34)

34:1-8 Even if the death of Moses here was recorded by someone else, this does not affect the fact that the rest of the Pentateuch was written by Moses.[22] After Moses had seen the land, he died on Mount Nebo and was buried by the LORD in a secret grave. Doubtless the reason for the secrecy was to prevent men from making a shrine at the lawgiver's tomb and worshiping him there. Moses was one hundred and twenty years old at the time of his death, but he was still strong, alert, and keen. This statement is not in contradiction with 31:2. The reason Moses could no longer lead the people was not physical but spiritual. God had told him that because of his sin he would not lead the people into Canaan (31:2), even though physically he was able to do so.

34:9 Joshua then assumed his duties as commander-in-chief. Moses had confirmed Joshua as his successor according to the word of the Lord in Numbers 27:18-23. Thus his servant became his successor, a further testimony to Moses' humility.

34:10-12 Of few men could the tribute paid to Moses ever be spoken. Of course, when these closing verses were written, the Messiah had not yet appeared. Verse 10 was true only up to the time of Christ's First Advent.

"And Moses indeed was faithful in all His house as a servant" (Heb. 3:5). Because of his sin he died; his burial place is unknown. But his antitype, the Lord Jesus, "was faithful ... , as a Son over His own house" (Heb. 3:5, 6). It was for our sins that He died; His burial place is empty because He has ascended to the right hand of the Father in heaven. "Therefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our confession, Christ Jesus. ... For this One has been counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as He who built the house has more honor than the house" (Heb. 3:1, 3).

INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORICAL BOOKS

For the millions of people who love a good story, especially a true story, the second main division of the OT is unusually captivating. It picks up the story of God's people where Deuteronomy left off and takes it forward a thousand years to the end of OT history. (The poetical and prophetic books fit into this same framework but they do not advance the story any.)

For those who do not like "history" (by nature or by faulty exposure to dull history teachers) we can only say that this history is unique. First of all Bible history is truly, to use an old saying, "His story" in every sense of the word. It is not a complete account of any period of Hebrew history, but a divinely selected continuous story. Secondly, it is history with a purpose—not merely to instruct or entertain, but to make us better believers. To use the Apostle Paul's words in the NT, these things "were written for our learning" (Rom. 15:4).

While all of these events really occurred, the selection and presentation by God's human writers under His Spirit's inspiration was to make it easy for the meditative reader to see the lessons that God wants us to learn, e.g., from David's life, from the division of the Kingdom, or from the return of the Jewish remnant after the exile.

I. Chronology

The historical books extend from about 1400 B.C. to about 400 B.C., or a full millennium of Hebrew history. This long period divides naturally into three main eras: The Theocratic Period (1405-1043 B.C.), the Monarchical Period (1043-586 B.C. or from Saul to the destruction of Jerusalem), and the Restoration Period (536 to 420 B.C.).

II. The Theocratic Books

Just as a democracy (Greek for people-rule) is supposed to be a government run by the people, so a theocracy is supposed to be a government directly ruled by God. Ancient Israel from Joshua to Saul (1405-1043 B.C.) was such a rule by God.[1]

Three books cover the theocratic era: Joshua, Judges, and Ruth.

A. Joshua

This book continues from the death of Moses and his replacement by Joshua, a military leader who was also a spiritual one. Joshua goes on to challenge the Israelites not only to conquer Palestine but also to follow the Lord. The first half of the book recounts the conquest of the Promised Land and the second half details the division of that land among the twelve tribes of Israel.

B. Judges

Because the Israelites were disobedient to God's orders and left pockets of pagans scattered throughout Palestine, they subsequently experienced wave after wave of Gentile oppressors—seven in all.

The Book of Judges contains some fairly grim—and one or two grisly—stories illustrating what disobedience to God's Word can bring.

C. Ruth

This charming little book does not take place after the time of the Book of Judges but during that spiritually dark era, showing that even at a time of great spiritual decline, the godly remnant can serve God in a beautiful and acceptable way.

III. The Monarchical Books

There are also three books covering the era of the monarchy (1043-586 B.C.), but they have been divided into six books for convenience in all modern versions.

A. Samuel

First and Second Samuel can be summarized in three names: Samuel, Saul, and David. They are named after Samuel, the prophet who anointed Israel's first king, Saul, and also his successor, David, whose trials and successes are recounted in some detail.

B. Kings

Solomon, David's son, though a wise and splendid ruler, lost his spiritual power by marrying hosts of pagan women. His son Rehoboam caused the split of the kingdom into Judah in the south (which had good and evil rulers), and Israel in the north (which had only evil rulers). In 722 B.C. the Northern Kingdom went into captivity, and between 605 and 586 the Southern Kingdom was taken captive.

C. Chronicles

In the Hebrew Bible this is the last book, recounting Jewish history from Adam (merely by genealogies) through the downfall of the Southern Kingdom. Since it is a spiritual retelling of Hebrew history, it stresses positive elements (even omitting David's great sin and totally ignoring the rebellious Northern Kingdom).

IV. The Restoration Books

After the seventy-year exile in Babylon, the nation that was once a theocracy, then a monarchy, became a mere province of world Gentile powers—first of Persia, then of Greece, then of Rome. The period covered is 536-420 B.C.

A. Ezra

In 536 B.C. King Cyrus issued a decree allowing the Jews to return to their homeland. About 50,000 Jews (a very small minority) went back under Zerubbabel to rebuild the temple. Ezra the priest took about 2,000 Jews with him in 458 B.C.

B. Nehemiah

In 444 B.C. Nehemiah obtained permission from the king of Persia to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem around the reconstructed temple. When the walls were finished, Ezra and Nehemiah led a reformation and revival in the Jewish state.

C. Esther

This book is not the last of the three Restoration books chronologically, since the events take place in Persia, between chapters 6 and 7 of Ezra. Perhaps the book is put last because it recounts the lives of those who did not bother to return to the Holy Land when they could have done so. Esther illustrates God working behind the scenes (His name is not even mentioned once) to protect His ancient people from antisemitic persecution, indeed from genocide. The instruments that He used were a beautiful and heroic Jewish queen and her shrewd cousin, Mordecai.

JOSHUA

INTRODUCTION

"The sacred canon here presents us with a book of history and historical art, such as our generation, prolific in writing on history, but nevertheless poor in historical feeling and perception, stands in pressing need of."

—Paulus Cassel

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Joshua is an indispensable bridge between the Books of Moses and the history of Israel in the land of Canaan. Both in the Hebrew book order and the modern Christian order Joshua is the fifth book of the OT. To Christians it is the first of the twelve"historical books" (Joshua through Esther); to Jews it is the first of what they call "the Former Prophets" (Joshua through Ezra-Nehemiah, putting Ruth and Chronicles in the "writings" at the end of the Hebrew OT).

Jensen stresses the book's importance in these words:

> In a real sense Joshua is the climax of a progressive history as well as the commencement of a new experience for Israel. Thus its historical nexus gives it a strategic place in the Old Testament Scriptures.[1]

II. AUTHORSHIP

While the book is anonymous, the ancient tradition that it is largely by Joshua himself, completed after his death by Eleazar the high priest and his son Phinehas, has much to commend it. Joshua contains vivid material, suggesting that the author was an eyewitness. There are also passages in the first person ("I," "we"), such as 5:1, 6. Also the book specifically records that Joshua had some documents written (18:9; 24:26). The fact that Rahab was still alive (6:25) at the time of composition fits well with Joshua's being the main author.

III. Date

The date of Joshua is partly dependent on the date of the Exodus (15th or 13th century B.C.). The facts fit better with the early, more conservative date of the mid-1400's B.C. A date for Joshua between 1400 and 1350 B.C. seems likely for the following reasons: The book has to be earlier than Solomon (cf. 16:10 with 1 Kgs. 9:16) and also before his father David (cf. 15:63 with 2 Sam. 5:5-9). Since Joshua 13:4-6 calls the Phoenicians "Sidonians," it must be before the 1100's B.C. when Tyre subjugated Sidon, and before 1200 B.C. because the Philistines invaded Palestine after that time, yet they are not a problem in Joshua's time.

IV. Background and Theme

Just as Exodus is the story of God leading His people out of Egypt, so Joshua is the story of God leading His people into the Promised Land. He would complete the good work He began despite the unbelief of the nation. As we will see, the people hadn't changed; they were still faithless. Nevertheless, the Word of the Lord would be fulfilled and the seed of Abraham would be planted in the covenant land (Gen. 15:13-16) to take root and grow.

The events of this book follow those recorded in the last chapter of Deuteronomy. The people of Israel were encamped on the Plains of Moab, east of the Jordan River. Moses had died, and Joshua had become commander-in-chief. He was about to lead the people across the Jordan and into the Promised Land. Law, as represented by Moses, cannot lead God's people into their inheritance. Only Christ in resurrection, pictured by Joshua, can do that.

We should pause to review some important facts about Joshua. Moses had changed his name from Hoshea to Joshua (Num. 13:16). He was an Ephraimite (Num. 13:8) and Moses' personal servant (Joshua 1:1). He was early a man engaged in fighting the Lord's battles. He led the Israelites in their first combat against the Amalekites (Ex. 17) and was the only general they had known since Egypt. But what equipped Joshua to replace Moses at the head of the nation was not his military prowess but his spiritual vitality and faith. As a young man he constantly attended the tent of the Lord (Ex. 33:11). He had been on Mount Sinai with Moses (Ex. 32:17). He and Caleb were the only ones who saw the Promised Land with believing eyes when the people had been at Kadesh Barnea thirty-eight years earlier (Num. 14:6-10). Trained by Moses, he was now commissioned by Jehovah, although he was over ninety years of age.

COMMENTARY

I. THE OCCUPATION OF THE PROMISED LAND (CHAPS. 1-12)

A. Preparations for Crossing the Jordan (Chap. 1)

1:1-9 The LORD first delivered a solemn charge to Joshua the son of Nun concerning the task ahead of him. The land had been promised to Israel, but they must possess it, from the Negev at the south to Lebanon in the north, and from the Mediterranean on the west to the River Euphrates on the east (see vv. 3, 4). Joshua must be strong, very courageous, and obedient. Now, as then, we are assured of good success when we fill our hearts and minds with God's Word and obey it (v. 8).

Three times Joshua is told by the Lord to be strong and very courageous (vv. 6, 7, 9). The size and duration of the task ahead, the pressures of leading such an obstinate people, and the absence of his spiritual mentor, Moses, were perhaps heavy on Joshua's mind at this time. But the Lord was not calling him without enabling him. There were good reasons for Joshua to be strong: God's promise (vv. 5, 6), a sure victory; God's Word (vv. 7, 8), a safe guide; God's presence (v. 9), a sustaining power.

T. Austin Sparks writes: The real battle of faith is joined here. Not what we are, but what He is! Not what we feel, but His facts.[2]

1:10-18 The people were to prepare provisions for their journey into the land of Canaan. As for the two and a half tribes which were settling east of the Jordan, the men were reminded by Joshua that they must help in the conquest of the land; then they could return to their families (vv. 12-15). To this they readily agreed (vv. 16-18). Any who turned back would be put to death.

In some hymns, crossing the Jordan is likened to death and the land of Canaan pictures heaven. But there was conflict in Canaan, whereas there is no conflict in heaven. Actually the land of Canaan pictures our present spiritual inheritance. It is all ours, but we must possess it by obeying the Word, claiming the promises, and fighting the good fight of faith.

B. The Spies at Jericho (Chap. 2)

2:1a In preparation for the invasion, Joshua the son of Nun sent out two spies from Acacia Grove to Jericho. This was not an indication of lack of faith on his part; rather, it was a matter of military strategy. They were not to spy out the whole land, as had been done years earlier, but only to look ahead one step at a time.

2:1b-24 The spies found shelter in the house of a harlot named Rahab. As Keil and Delitzsch point out, "Their entering the house of such a person would not excite so much suspicion."[3] It is clear from the narrative that Rahab had heard of the marvelous victories which the LORD had given to the Jewish people (vv. 8-11). She concluded that their God must be the true God, and so she trusted in Him, becoming a true convert. She proved the reality of her faith by protecting the spies, even though it meant betraying her country.

The spies promised to spare Rahab and her family if she hung a scarlet cord in the window of her home and if the household remained indoors during the attack against Jericho (vv. 6-21). The scarlet cord makes us think of a house protected by the blood, as at the original Passover (Ex. 12).

When messengers from the King of Jericho asked Rahab where the spies were, she told them they had already left the city (v. 5). While the men of Jericho searched for them on the road to the Jordan, Rahab sent the spies westward to the mountain. After hiding there for three days, the spies escaped across the Jordan, carrying a confident report to Joshua (vv. 22-24).

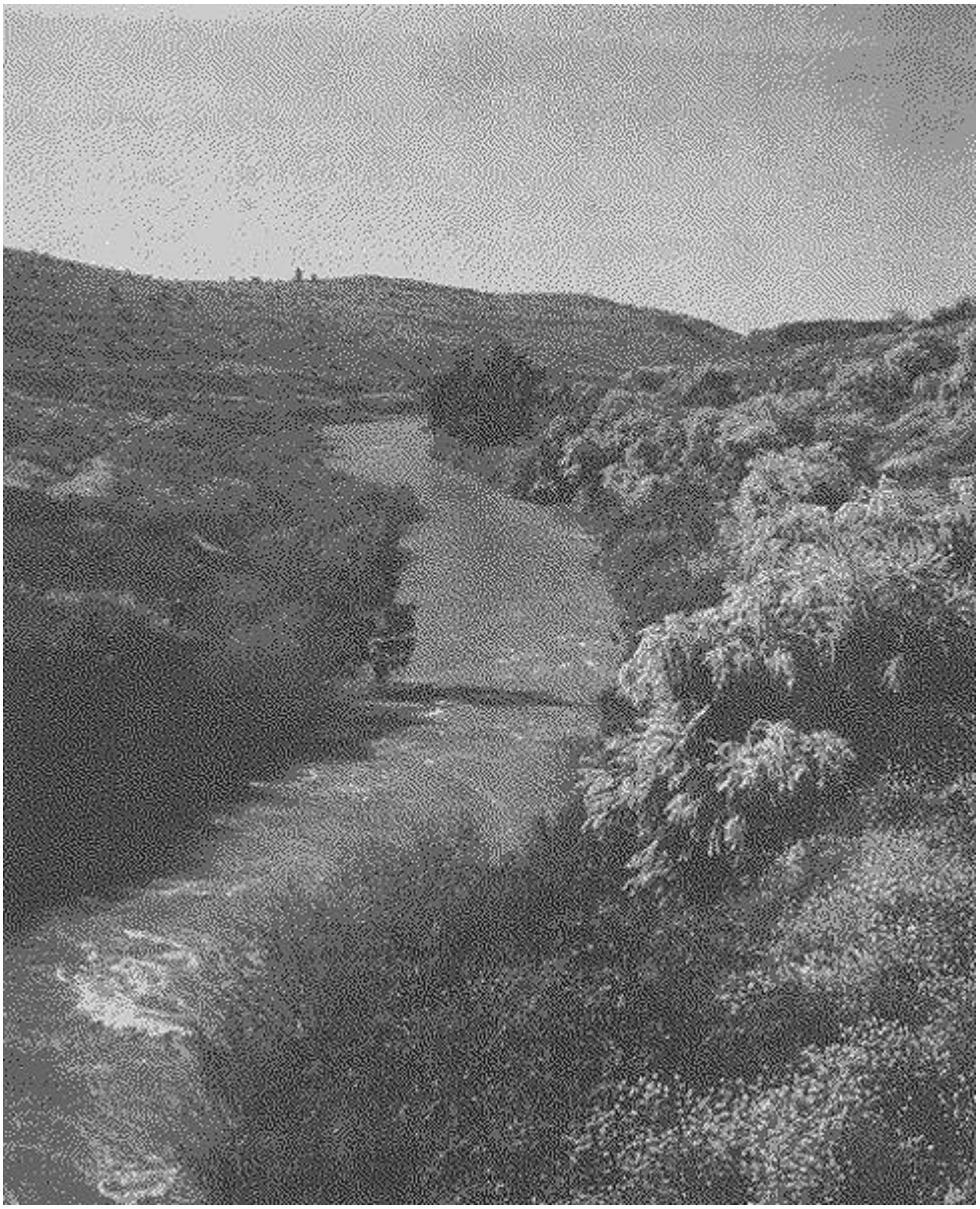
Rahab's "works" and not her "words" justified her (Jas. 2:25). The Bible does not commend her deceit (vv. 4,5) but it does commend her faith (Heb. 11:31). James also calls her deed a work of faith (Jas. 2:25). She risked her life to save the lives of the spies because she believed in the power and sovereignty of their God. So in our Lord's day some outside the commonwealth of Israel showed more faith than those who were eyewitnesses of His glory (Luke 7:2-9). Great faith, wherever it is found, is always rewarded (see chap. 6), for it is pleasing to God (Heb. 11:6).



The Jordan River is neither large nor impressive, but it has become the most famous river in the owrld because of the scriptural events associated with it. This is one of the myriad of bends in the Jordan's path from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea (Photo by Willem Van Gemeren)

C. Crossing the Jordan (3:1-5:1)

3:1-13 The time had come to cross ... the Jordan River, which was now in flood stage. The priests were instructed to go forth, carrying the ark of the covenant. (The Kohathites usually carried the ark, as in Numbers 4:1-15, but the priests were to carry it on this special occasion.) The people were ordered to follow the ark at a distance, but always keeping it in view. The ark speaks of Christ. We should maintain a respectful distance by not irreverently trying to solve mysteries concerning His Person that are too deep for the human mind. Some of the worst heresies in Christian history have arisen because of brazen attempts to do this. But we should always keep Christ in view. This assures us of victory.

3:14-17 When the priests' feet touched the water of the Jordan, a miracle occurred. The river was stopped at the city of Adam, some miles to the north. The waters piled up there in a heap, and whatever water was left in the bed of the river below that point drained into the Salt (Dead) Sea.

Similar stoppages of the Jordan near where Adam no doubt was located took place in 1267, when the river was dammed for ten hours, and in 1927 for twenty-one hours. Both times it was due to earthquakes.[4] However, D. K. Campbell argues that there is much here to suggest not merely perfect timing, but a special miracle:

> Many supernatural elements were brought together: (1) The event came to pass as predicted (3:13, 15). (2) The timing was exact (v. 15). (3) The event took place when the river was at flood stage (v. 15). (4) The wall of water was held in place for many hours, possibly an entire day (v. 16). (5) The soft, wet river bottom became dry at once (v. 17). (6) The water returned immediately as soon as the people had crossed over and the priests came up out of the river (4:18). Centuries later the Prophets Elijah and Elisha crossed the same river on dry ground to the east (2 Kgs. 2:8). Soon thereafter Elisha crossed back over the river on dry ground. If a natural phenomenon is necessary to explain the Israelites' crossing under Joshua, then one would have to conclude that two earthquakes occurred in quick sequence for Elijah and Elisha, which seems a bit presumptuous.[5]

God, represented by the ark, led the people into the Jordan even as He would lead them to victory west of the Jordan. He was demonstrating that His presence, which caused the waters to flee before Israel, was their hope of triumph, and not anything in themselves.

The priests walked to the middle of the riverbed and stayed there while all Israel crossed over on dry ground.

4:1-24 The LORD directed that twelve men (one man from every tribe) should carry one stone apiece out of the bed of the Jordan and erect a memorial marker where Israel first camped west of the Jordan. Accordingly, the monument was set up at Gilgal as a permanent reminder to future generations of God's miraculous stopping of the Jordan so that the Israelites could cross over ... on dry land.

The tribes that received their inheritance east of Jordan—Reuben, Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh—sent armed warriors over to help their brethren occupy the land of Canaan. Although the combined strength of the two and a half tribes was over 100,000 men (see Num. 26), only forty thousand ... crossed the Jordan; the rest probably stayed behind to secure their land and protect their families.

After all the people had crossed over, including the men of the two and a half tribes, and after the twelve stones had been taken out of the Jordan, Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of the Jordan, where the ... priests were standing. Then as soon as the priests marched to the west bank with the ark of the covenant, the waters of the Jordan flowed down again in flood tide.

The stones in the riverbed speak of identification with Christ in death. Those on the west bank speak of identification with Christ in resurrection.

By cutting off the waters of the Jordan, the Lord exalted Joshua in the sight of all Israel as He had earlier exalted Moses. Up to now, Joshua had been a servant, humbly serving in Moses' shadow, learning the ways of God. Now was the time of his exaltation, for "he who humbles himself will be exalted" (Luke 14:11).

The people crossed the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, five days short of a full forty years since the Exodus from Egypt, and just in time to prepare for the Passover (see Ex. 12:2, 3).

5:1 The heathen inhabitants of Canaan were seized with panic when they heard of the miraculous crossing of the Jordan by the Hebrew army.

D. Ceremonies at Gilgal (5:2-12)

5:2-9 This chapter tells about the events that took place at Gilgal, the first encampment Israel made in Canaan. There the men were circumcised (vv. 2-9). There they kept the Passover, the first in Canaan (v. 10). There the manna ceased (vv. 11, 12), and there Joshua met the Commander-in-chief of the host of the Lord's army, Jesus Christ (vv. 13-15).

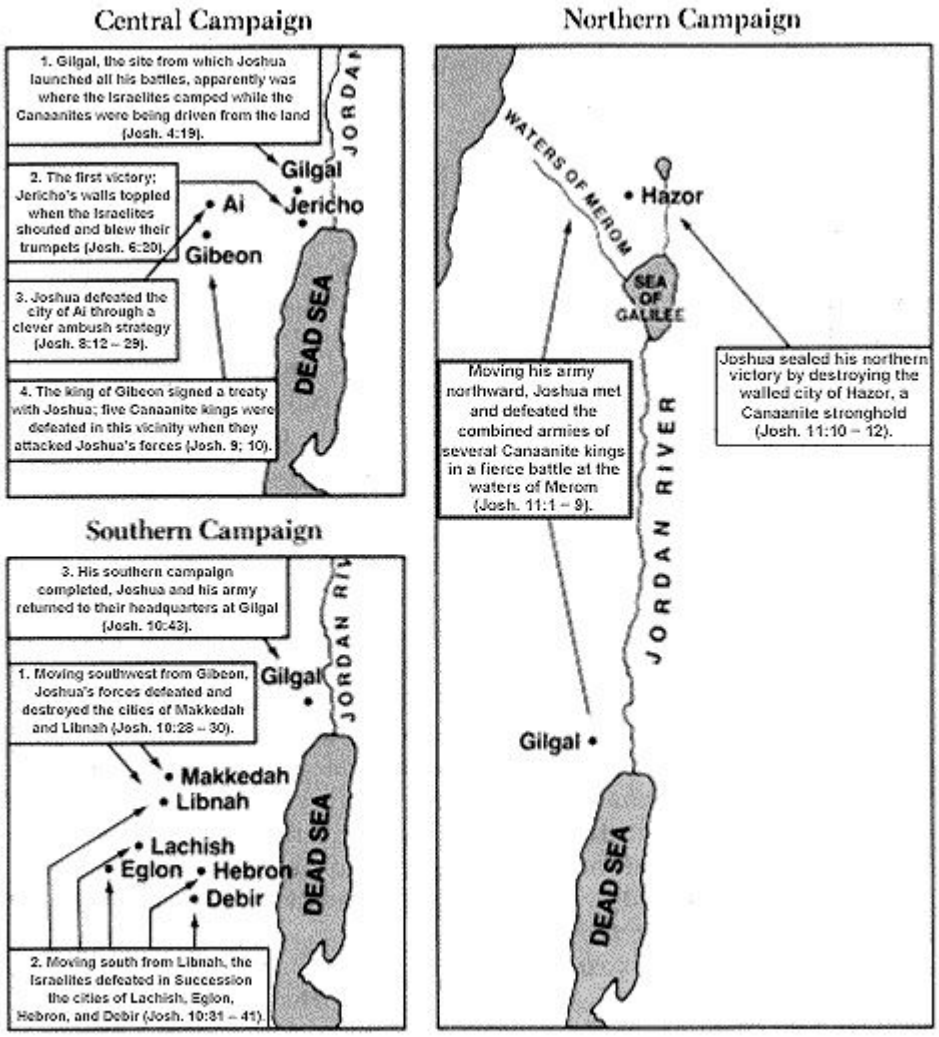
The LORD directed Joshua to renew the rite of circumcision at this time. All the men who came out of Egypt ... had been circumcised, but the men of war had all died in the meantime (Deut. 2:16). For forty years there had been no circumcision. A new generation had arisen during the forty years of wandering, and they now had to undergo this ceremony as a sign of their restoration to the full enjoyment of their covenant blessings. As long as they wandered in the desert, they were ridiculed by the Egyptians for not gaining the Promised Land. But now that they were in the land, the reproach was rolled away (v. 9). The "second time" (v. 2) means the second time that circumcision was practiced by the nation.

5:10 The Passover was kept four days after the Jordan was crossed (on the fourteenth day of the month). Notice Joshua's faith: Although he was in enemy territory, he obeyed God by circumcising his soldiers and by keeping the Passover. These have been called "most unmilitary acts."

Through circumcision and the Passover the Lord was calling His people back to the basics of their relationship with Him. Both of these rites had been neglected in the wilderness.

Circumcision was a sign of the covenant between God and Abraham, and God in His faithfulness was keeping His unconditional promise by giving them the land (Gen. 15:18-21). It was also a picture of self-judgment and putting away the filth of the flesh, vitally necessary to victory. The Passover was a reminder of their redemption. Jehovah had bought them and freed them from slavery in Egypt. In observing the Passover the Jews were obeying the word of the Lord given through Moses at the time of the first Passover forty years earlier (Ex. 13:5). Grace was His motive in calling His people and bringing them out. Faithfulness was His guarantee that He would bring them in.

5:11, 12 The manna speaks of Christ in His Incarnation, the bread that came down from heaven as a provision for our wilderness needs. The produce of the land illustrates Christ in Resurrection, after entering into the blessings of Canaan. We feed on both. The manna ceased on the morning after they first ate the parched grain. "What a wonderful Time-keeper and Supplier God is!"



Joshua's Conquest

E. The Conquest of Jericho (5:13-6:27)

5:13, 14a The "Man" in verse 13 was the Angel of Jehovah—the Lord Jesus in one of His preincarnate appearances. He introduced Himself as Commander of the army of the LORD. Christ does not come merely to help us, and certainly not to harm us; He comes to take full control.

5:14b, 15 Here is conclusive proof that Joshua was in the presence of God, and knew it. Mere angels never accepted worship, but here the Angel of the Lord commands worship, thereby proving His divine nature. Joshua must learn firsthand what Moses had to learn at the beginning of his ministry (Ex. 3)—the holiness and supremacy of the Lord.

6:1-21 The conquest of Canaan was accomplished by three military campaigns —central, southern, and northern. The central campaign, designed to divide and conquer, consisted of two major engagements, one at Jericho and the other at Ai.

Jericho was a fortified city, but her walls and gates served only to keep her inhabitants inside for judgment; they certainly didn't keep Israel out. It was a low city topographically (over 800 feet below sea level) and morally. It was a doomed city because it stood on God's land and its rightful tenants had come to claim their property. Many things in our lives loom out as Jerichos, impeding our progress in possessing our possessions. Perhaps we've been discouraged with the sheer immensity of our trials. If we will only claim the victory the Lord gives and move ahead in faith, with eyes fixed upon God for success, we too will see miracles.

Fear of the Jews had caused Jericho to be barricaded before the invaders arrived. For six days the Israelites marched around the city, once each day, returning at night to Gilgal. On the seventh day ... they marched around it seven times. When the priests blew the rams' horns (trumpets), the Israelites let out a great shout. The walls fell down flat, and the people of God were able to enter the city.

Some Bible students think that the walls descended into the ground like an elevator, allowing the Israelites to walk across the top of the walls into the city. However it happened, it resulted from the faith of God's people (Heb. 11:30). Notice that the ark is mentioned seven times between verses 6 and 12.

Everything in the city was "accursed"—that is, doomed by the LORD to destruction as the firstfruits of Canaan. The inhabitants (except for Rahab and her family) and the livestock were to be destroyed, but the silver, gold, bronze, and iron were to be put into the treasury of the LORD. No one could take anything for himself.

When one realizes the moral perversity of the Canaanites, it is easy to see why God ordered the complete destruction of life within Jericho. Rather than criticize the Lord for administering deserved judgment to the wicked, we should marvel at His grace which preserved Rahab and her family from the same.

6:22-27 The faith that brought the walls down (Heb. 11:30) also brought ... Rahab and her relatives out (Heb. 11:31). The grace of God not only made provision for her safety but also elevated her to a place in the ancestry of David and ultimately of the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:5, 6). Grace not only saves us from destruction but also guarantees our exaltation (Rom. 8:29, 30). Faith is the hand that takes hold of grace.

After Rahab and her family were escorted out safely, the city was burned. Joshua pronounced a curse on anyone who sought to rebuild Jericho as a fortress, prophesying that the man's oldest son would die when the foundation was laid and his youngest son would die when its gates were erected. See 1 Kings 16:34 for the fulfillment of this curse.

F. The Campaign at Ai (7:1-8:29)

Chapter 7 deals with the sin question in Canaan. Even though the people had crossed the Jordan, they were still prone to sin. Here is the story of Israel's defeat at Ai and Israel's victory over sin at Achor.

7:1-5 When Joshua sent spies to Ai, they returned with the confident report that the city was poorly defended and that it would not be necessary to send more than two or three thousand soldiers against it. But when an army of about three thousand men marched on Ai, they met defeat rather than victory.

7:6-10 Many times defeat comes after victory; that's when we least expect it. That's when we feel strongest in ourselves. The people didn't pray before going against Ai, nor did the Lord command them to go, as He had commanded them to take Jericho. Consequently, they learned painfully that all was not well; something had changed. The Canaanites were not any stronger, but Israel was weaker, and the reason was that sin had entered the camp. Although only one man was at fault, the whole nation was guilty (v. 11) and thirty-six men died (v. 5). The LORD told Joshua that this wasn't a time for prayer but a time for action (v. 10).

7:11-26 Joshua learned that the defeat was caused by sin in the camp. Someone had disobeyed the Lord in the conquest of Jericho by looting. We are not told what method was used to find the culprit; perhaps it was by casting lots. At any rate, the field was narrowed first to the tribe, then to the family, then to the household, and then to the man—Achan. He confessed to stealing a Babylonian garment, two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold. He also admitted to burying them in the floor of his tent.

"When I saw ... I coveted ... and took" (v. 21). The story of Achan provides a vivid illustration of James 1:14, 15: "But each one is tempted when he is drawn away by his own desires and enticed. Then, when desire has conceived, it gives birth to sin; and sin, when it is full-grown, brings forth death."

Achan, by taking something that was under the ban, became accursed himself (Deut. 7:26). It may seem harsh that all of Achan's family shared in his fate, but sin is a serious matter. Rahab's faith saved her entire household. Achan's sin condemned his. Besides, they must have been aware of his activities, since the stolen goods were buried under their tent. Perhaps his children even participated in his sin. The lesson God was teaching His people was clear: Sin defiles the whole camp, and it must be totally eradicated whenever it surfaces.

As punishment for his crime, Achan and his household were stoned to death and then burned. Also burned were all his possessions, as well as the stolen goods. H. J. Blair comments:

> By Achan's death, the act of sacrilege was expiated, and the scene of the tragedy, the valley of Achor, became a door of hope as the people set their faces once more to the advance.[6]

8:1-29 On the second attempt, Joshua and his army captured Ai by the strategy of ambush. Although the details of the ambush are difficult to understand clearly, the general plan seems to have been as follows: A company of Israelites went past Ai under cover of darkness and hid on the west side of the city. In the morning, the rest of the soldiers attacked the city from the north. When the men of Ai counterattacked, Joshua and his men purposely retreated, drawing the inhabitants away from their city. Then Joshua stretched out his spear; that was the signal for the men lying in ambush to enter the city and set it on fire. Seeing their city on fire, the men of Ai panicked. It was then easy for the Israelites to trap the Ai soldiers on both sides, and destroy them.

Verse 3 says that thirty thousand ... men were sent to ambush ... the city, while verse 12 speaks of five thousand. There may have been two ambushes. But thirty thousand seems an unnecessarily large number for an ambush. Some believe that thirty thousand should read thirty captains, since the Hebrew word for thousand can also be translated chief. Others believe that thirty thousand is a copyist's error for five thousand. The five thousand men (v. 12) may have been sent to repel any possible attack by the men of Bethel, two miles west of Ai.

The Jews were allowed to keep the livestock and the spoil ... for themselves in this particular engagement. If Achan had only waited, he might have gotten his booty without losing his life over it!

Israel lost thirty-six men in the first battle; this time they lost none as far as the biblical record mentions. Having purged themselves of defilement, they were once again safe in the midst of war. Victory in the Christian life is not the absence of conflict but the presence and protection of God in the midst of conflict.

G. The Confirmation of the Covenant at Shechem (8:30-35)

8:30-35 In obedience to the Word of God (Deut. 27:2-6), Joshua built an altar on Mount Ebal and inscribed upon stones a copy of the Law of Moses. The tribes were assembled, half ... in front of Mount Gerizim, and half ... in front of Mount Ebal. Joshua stood in the valley between them, and he either read ... the blessings and the cursings that are found written in the Book of the Law of Moses or else instructed the Levites to read them (Deut. 27:14). "Persons are often said in Scripture to do that which they only command to be done."[7]

H. The Treaty with the Gibeonites (Chap. 9)

9:1-27 News of the military successes of Israel caused all the kings in Canaan to unite against Joshua and Israel (vv. 1, 2). But the inhabitants of the city of Gibeon and three other cities, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath Jearim (vv. 3, 17) decided that it was futile to oppose the invaders. They knew that the Israelites had been ordered to destroy all the heathen inhabitants of the land. But they also knew that no such orders had been issued concerning nations outside Canaan (Deut. 20:10,15). If they could persuade Joshua and his army that they had come on a long journey ... from a distant country, they would not be killed.

So they disguised themselves in tattered old garments and patched sandals. Also, they brought with them dry and moldy bread and torn ... wineskins. They told Joshua they had come ... from a very far country, and everything about them seemed to support the statement.

The Israelites did not ask counsel of the LORD about the matter, but made a covenant with the Gibeonites. Three days later the scheme was exposed, and there was agitation among the Jews to kill the tricksters. But the rulers decided to honor the treaty by sparing the Gibeonites. However, they would henceforth serve the congregation as woodcutters and water carriers in connection with the service of the altar of the Lord.

Joshua and the princes were wise in keeping their oath, even though they had been deceived in the matter. Later Saul tried to exterminate the Gibeonites and was punished for it (2 Sam. 21).

I. The Southern Campaign (Chap. 10)

10:1-6 Chapter 10 records the southern campaign. When the kings of five Canaanite cities ... heard that the Gibeonites had defected to the Israelites, they realized that this made the central hilly district vulnerable, and so they decided to attack Gibeon. The Gibeonites sent an appeal for military assistance to Joshua.

10:7, 8 Once again Joshua heard those comforting words from the mouth of the LORD, "Do not fear them." He had heard them before the victory at Jericho and before the successful ambush of Ai. They guaranteed triumph despite the size of the opposition.

10:9-11 Assured of victory by the Lord, Joshua engaged the enemy's forces at Gibeon, causing them to flee. Two miracles occurred in the destruction of the enemy. First there was a tremendous hailstorm, which killed more men than the Israelites had slain. But note that they were discriminating hailstones—they killed only the enemies.

10:12-15 Then, at the request of Joshua, the sun and moon "stood still" (or "tarried"), prolonging the hours that the Israelites could continue to pursue and destroy the foe before they could escape to the security of their walled cities. It is literally descriptive language to say that the sun and the moon stood still. We use such language when we say that the sun rose or set.

Various natural explanations have been given as to what actually happened at this time.[8] But it is enough to know that it was a miracle which resulted in an extended day for fighting. Spurgeon says,

> How He did it is no question for us. ... It is not ours to try and soften down miracles, but to glorify God in them.[9]

The book of Jasher (v. 13) may mean "The Book of the Upright." No book of that name can be identified today, and it certainly was not inspired.

The battle was a tremendous undertaking for Israel. They had marched all night and then fought through the longest day in history. They exerted themselves beyond ordinary limits, but still the victory was the Lord's (vv. 10,11). With his usual insight Matthew Henry observes:But why needed Joshua to put himself and his men so much to the stretch? Had not God promised him that without fail He would deliver the enemies into his hand? It is true He had; but God's promises are intended, not to slacken and supersede, but to quicken and encourage our endeavours.[10]

10:16-27 The five kings were trapped in a cave at Makkedah, then slain and hung on five trees, and finally buried in the cave.

10:28-39 Following this, Joshua conquered the Canaanite cities of Makkedah (v. 28), Libnah (vv. 29,30), Lachish (vv. 31,32), Gezer (v. 33), Eglon (vv. 34,35), Hebron (vv. 36,37), and Debir (vv. 38,39). The king of Hebron in verse 37 was a successor to the one slain in verse 26.

10:40-43 This paragraph summarizes the southern campaign.

The destruction referred to in this chapter must be taken generally, as noted by Haley:

> ... Joshua swept over this region in too rapid a manner to depopulate it entirely. ... All whom he pursued he destroyed; but he did not stop to search into every possible hiding place. This was left to be done by each tribe in its own inheritance.[11]

J. The Northern Campaign (Chap. 11)

11:1-9 News of Israel's mounting triumphs caused the kings of the north to confederate. They gathered together at the waters of Merom, north of the Sea of Galilee. Joshua and his army attacked and defeated them. Then, in obedience to the Lord, Joshua hamstrung their horses and burned their chariots. To hamstring means to cut a tendon in the leg, disabling the horse.

11:10-15 The capital city of Hazor was burned; the other cities that stood on their mounds were destroyed but not burned. Perhaps Joshua felt that the cities standing on mounds would be useful to the Israelites who would settle there. The inhabitants of all the cities were killed, and all the spoil was taken by the Israelites. Complete obedience brings complete victory (v. 15).

11:16-20 These verses review Joshua's conquest of the land from Edom (Seir) in the South to Mount Hermon in the northeast and the Valley of Lebanon in the northwest. Gibeon escaped destruction. Jerusalem remained unconquered until the time of David. (The Goshen mentioned in verse 16 was not in Egypt but was an area to the south of Palestine.)

11:21-23 Special mention is made of the fact that the Anakim were destroyed in all the cities except in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod. "The land rested from war" (v. 23) in the sense that the major battles were fought, though there was still a great deal of "mopping up" to be done.

K. Summary of Conquests (Chap. 12)

12:1-6 The first six verses take us back to the victory that God gave Moses over Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan. These victories are considered as part of the total conquest, since the territory was occupied by the two and a half tribes east of the Jordan River.

12:7-24 God had made a promise earlier to Israel before they crossed the Jordan: "He will deliver their kings into your hand, and you will destroy their name from under heaven; no one shall be able to stand against you until you have destroyed them" (Deut. 7:24). Here are thirty-one instances of God's faithfulness (vv. 7-24); Joshua defeated thirty-one ... kings on the west side of the Jordan.

II. THE SETTLEMENT OF THE PROMISED LAND (CHAPS. 13-21)

A. The Lands Yet to Be Possessed (13:1-7)

13:1-6 Joshua was now an old man, and the entire land promised to the Israelites had not as yet been occupied by them. Verses 2-6 describe portions in the southwest and in the northeast that were still inhabited by the heathen. We know also that the land eastward to the Euphrates had been promised to the Jews, but it has never yet been occupied by them.[12]

13:7 The Lord instructed Joshua to divide the land which had already been conquered among the nine tribes and half the tribe of Manasseh.

B. The Allotment of the Land (13:8-19:51)

1. The Allotment to Reuben, Gad and Half of Manasseh

13:8-33 Two and a half tribes had already been assigned land east of the Jordan. It is described as follows: the entire territory occupied by the two and a half tribes (vv. 8-13); Reuben (vv. 15-23); Gad (vv. 24-28); and half the tribe of Manasseh (vv. 29-31).

Levi did not receive a tribal inheritance (v. 14), since that was the priestly tribe, and the LORD was its inheritance in a special way (v. 33).

Dropping Levi from the tribes leaves only eleven tribes. But Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, are included in Joseph's place, and that raises the number to twelve again. The reason Joseph's sons are included is that they were adopted by Jacob as his own sons before his death (Gen. 48:5).

Special mention is made of the fact that Balaam was among those slain in Transjordan (v. 22). The Lord had not forgotten the terrible calamity that this wicked prophet caused His people (see Num. 23-25). "Be sure your sin will find you out" (Num. 32:23).

An interesting problem arises in verse 25. The tribe of Gad possessed some of the land of the Ammonites, which was forbidden in Deuteronomy 2:19. But this land had earlier been taken from the Ammonites by Sihon, king of the Amorites, and made part of his kingdom. So by the time Israel took the land from Sihon, it no longer belonged to the Ammonites.

The Debir mentioned in verse 26 is not the same city mentioned in the previous chapter. This city was east of the Jordan, while the one Joshua conquered was west of the river.

2. The Allotment to Judah (Chaps. 14, 15)

14:1-5 This chapter begins the distribution of the land on the west side of Jordan to the nine tribes and the half-tribe. The LORD had commanded ... Moses that the distribution be made by lot. This probably means that the general location of the tribal portion was determined by lot, but the size of the territory was according to the population of the tribe (Num. 26:53-56).

14:6-15 First in the list of tribes is Judah (14:6-15:63). The men of Judah led the armies of Israel (see Num. 10:14) and were the largest and most powerful tribe, boasting over 76,000 warriors.

Before giving the territorial boundaries, the Spirit of God records the noble request of Caleb for the city of Hebron. Though he was then eighty-five years old, his faith, courage, and strength were unabated. He longed for more spiritual conquests and received Hebron for his inheritance.

Hebron meant not only the city but the country around it as well (v. 12). The city had been conquered earlier by Joshua (10:36,37). It later was given to the priests, but Caleb kept the surrounding region for his inheritance.

Caleb had been spared from the plague that took the lives of the unbelieving spies forty-five years earlier (Num. 14:36-38). He had been preserved during the wilderness wanderings. He had survived several years of war in Canaan. He knew that God would not have kept him alive, promising him a reward for his faith, only to give him over to the Anakim. So what if they were giants? They were on his land, and he would drive them out by the strength of God. He still saw things through the eyes of faith and not as they appeared outwardly. This was the secret of his abiding strength and amazing success. He was not about to retire (although eighty-five years old) until he possessed his possessions.

15:1-12 The boundaries of Judah are described in verses 1-12. It is almost impossible to trace them with exactness at the present time. This may cause some to wonder why all these details are included in the Bible. The answer is, of course, that these details are important in the sight of God. They are inspired and profitable, full of rich spiritual lessons.

15:13-20 Caleb's conquest of Hebron is recorded in verse 14. He offered his daughter, Achsah, to whoever would capture Kirjath Sepher (Debir) (v. 16). Caleb's nephew, Othniel, was the one who took the city and gained the bride (v. 17). He later became the first judge in Israel (Judg. 3:9).

Achsah ... persuaded Othniel to ask her father for a field (v. 18). Her words "since you have given me land" imply that Othniel had done this and obtained the field. Then Achsah requested upper and lower springs to water the land.

Some cities, like Debir and Hebron, had to be taken more than once because of the guerrilla warfare of the Canaanites (see notes on chap. 10). It should also be noted that there was more than one city with the same name (e.g., Debir).

15:21-63 The cities of Judah's territory are listed in verses 21-63. Some of these cities should be familiar to us from our study of the patriarchs: Hebron (v. 54) (also called Kirjath Arba and Mamre) was familiar to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Gen. 13:18; 35:27), and they were all buried there (Gen. 23:17-20). Perhaps this is what made it so precious to the spiritually discerning Caleb. Beersheba (v. 28) means "the well of the oath"; the patriarchs spent much time there. It was a place of renewal, refreshment, and rest (Gen. 21:31; 26:33; 46:1). Jerusalem (v. 63) was held by the Jebusites. It was not until the time of David that they were finally driven out of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:6, 7).

These cities provided a rich heritage for Judah and a powerful stimulus to strengthen their faith. The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob was in the midst of their children to perform His ancient promise.

When we count the cities in verses 21-32, we find that there are thirty-eight, although verse 32 says there are only twenty-nine. Nine of these cities belonged to Simeon, whose inheritance was within the borders of Judah (19:1-9). That leaves twenty-nine ... cities belonging to Judah. There is a similar problem in numbering in verses 33-36; fifteen cities are enumerated, but perhaps Gederah and Gederothaim are two names for the same city, leaving the total of fourteen cities mentioned in verse 36.[13]

Note the last verse especially. The upper part of the city, Mount Zion, was not taken until the time of David. The lower city, Jerusalem, was taken by Judah (Judg. 1:8), then later recaptured by the Jebusites (Judg. 1:21). Jerusalem is listed as belonging to Benjamin (18:28) as well as to Judah; it was located on the border between these two tribes.

3. The Allotment to Joseph (Chaps. 16, 17)

16:1-4 The tribe of Joseph is taken up next. To Joseph had been given the birthright (i.e., the double portion, 1 Chron. 5:1) which Reuben had forfeited (Gen. 49:4). The general boundaries of Joseph's territory are given in verses 1-4. This was, of course, divided between Ephraim and half of the tribe of Manasseh which settled west of the Jordan.

16:5-10 Ephraim's boundaries are described in verses 5-10. Pay particular attention to verse 10. Failure to drive out the Canaanites brought grief to the Israelites in their later history.

17:1-13 The inheritance of Manasseh was partly in Gilead and Bashan, on the east side of the Jordan (v. 1), and partly on the west side (vv. 7-11). The territory west of the Jordan was flanked on the north by six Canaanite fortresses—Beth Shean, Ibleam, Dor, En Dor, Taanach, and Megiddo (vv. 11, 12).

Some of the cities of Ephraim were in the territory of Manasseh, and some of Manasseh's towns were in the territory of Asher ... and Issachar (vv. 7-12).

The daughters of Zelophehad inherited with the sons of Manasseh, as God had commanded Moses (vv. 3, 4) (Num. 27:1-7). This was done to insure that the house of Zelophehad would have a portion even though there were no male heirs. The daughters had to marry within their own tribe so that the land which belonged to Manasseh would not be absorbed by another tribe through intermarriage (Num. 36:1-13).

17:14-18 After Ephraim and Manasseh had received their adjoining allotments west of the Jordan, they complained that they had only one lot (v. 14) and that they were hemmed in by fortresses on the north (v. 16). Joshua turned all their arguments against them. When they said they needed more land because they were a numerous people (v. 14), he told them to use their manpower to clear out the forest in their territory and settle there (v. 15). When they complained that there were Canaanites within their borders who had chariots of iron (v. 16), he assured them that they had superior power to drive out the Canaanites (v. 18). The "one lot" of verse 14 means the combined territories of Ephraim and Manasseh west of the Jordan. When Joshua said, "You shall not have only one lot" (v. 17b), he didn't mean that they would get additional land but that they must occupy all the land that had been given to them.

4. The Allotment to the Rest of the Tribes (Chaps. 18, 19)

18:1 The encampment of Israel now changes from Gilgal to Shiloh. Here the tabernacle is set up, and here it remains until the days of Samuel. The division of the land continues here.

18:2-10 Judah and Joseph had received their inheritance by casting of lots, but there were still seven tribes west of the Jordan which had not been assigned their inheritance. Therefore, Joshua sent a group of men, three from each tribe, to survey the remaining seven tribes by lot.

18:11-28 Benjamin's boundaries are given in verses 11-20, and the cities in verses 21-28. Benjamin's portion was small, but it was choice. It occupied the heart of the land and possessed within its borders the firstfruits of Israel's labors in Canaan.

Gilgal was in Benjamin's territory, the first campsite west of the Jordan. The memorial stones were there to bear witness to the miraculous crossing of the Jordan. There the people kept the first Passover in Canaan, and began feeding on the produce of the land. There the nation was once again circumcised and the reproach of Egypt was rolled away. There was hardly a more historically significant spot in all of Canaan, because no other place taught so many spiritual lessons.

The ruins of Jericho were still visible in Benjamin's land. Her walls, once thought invincible, were now laid low. The portion belonging to Rahab's house remained standing as a testimony to the grace of God, which always responds to faith. A Benjamite could always visit here whenever he needed a fresh reminder that the battle was the Lord's.

Bethel (the house of God) caused the Benjamites to remember the faith of their fathers and the faithfulness of Israel's divine Deliverer (Gen. 28:18-22; 35:1-15).

Jerusalem was destined to be the capital city, but it was not until the son of Jesse came that the Jebusites would be driven from their mountain fortress.

Benjamin's land encompassed many evidences and signs of past, present, and future blessings. What a rich lot fell to Jacob's youngest son!

19:1-9 Simeon's inheritance was in the midst of the inheritance of the tribe of Judah. It seems that Judah's land was so large that the tribe could not occupy its portion, so some was assigned to Simeon. This is a fulfillment of Jacob's prophetic word concerning Simeon, "I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel" (Gen. 49:7).

Beersheba and Sheba (v. 2) probably refer to the same place; hence a total of only thirteen cities as mentioned in verse 6. Some cities were listed in detailing the borders of individual portions although they were not within the land, so sometimes the number of cities given doesn't match the number stated in the text (e.g., vv. 15, 30, 38).

19:10-39 The borders of the remaining six tribes are given next: Zebulun (vv. 10-16); Issachar (vv. 17-23); Asher (vv. 24-31); Naphtali (vv. 32-39); and Dan (vv. 40-48). Dan received some of Judah's cities (cf. v. 41 with 15:33).

19:40-48 The original territory allotted to Dan was in the southwest, bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, and included the cities of Joppa and Ekron (vv. 40-46). Later, when this territory proved too small, some of the tribe migrated to Laish (Leshem) in the northeast and changed the name of the city to Dan (vv. 47, 48; cf. Judg. 18).

19:49-51 Verse 51 brings to an end the division of the country. The cities of refuge had to be set apart (chap. 20) and the Levitical cities had yet to be appointed (chap. 21), but Joshua's work was almost done. He received Timnath Serah, according to the word of the LORD (v. 50).

C. The Cities of Refuge (Chap. 20)

The next step was to set apart six cities of refuge, three on each side of the Jordan River, where a manslayer might flee from the avenger of blood. A manslayer was someone who accidentally killed another person. The avenger of blood was usually a close relative of the slain person who sought to avenge the dead. If the manslayer could flee to a city of refuge, he found sanctuary there until the death of the ... high priest. Then he could return ... to his native city in safety.

THE CITIES OF REFUGE

The cities of refuge are interesting and of theological importance. MacLear gives traditional details about the cities:

Jewish commentators tell us how in later times, in order that the asylum offered to the involuntary homicide might be more secure—(a) the roads leading to the cities of refuge were always kept in thorough repair, and required to be about 32 cubits (about 48 feet) broad; (b) all obstructions were removed that might stay the flier's foot or hinder his speed; (c) no hillock was left, no river was allowed over which there was not a bridge; (d) at every turning there were posts erected bearing the words 'Refuge,' to guide the unhappy man in his flight; (e) when once settled in such a city the manslayer had a convenient habitation assigned to him, and the citizens were to teach him some trade that he might support himself.[14]

These cities picture the nation of Israel and its guilt in connection with the slaying of the Messiah. Christ is the City of Refuge to whom penitent Israel may flee for sanctuary. D. L. Moody noted that "the cities of refuge are a type of Christ, and their names are significant in that connection."[15]

The cities of refuge and the meaning of the names are as follows:

West of Jordan

Kedesh—Holiness

Shechem—Strength

Kirjath-Arba or Hebron—Fellowship

East of Jordan

Ramoth-Gilead—Uplifting

Golan—Happiness

Bezer—Safety

Thus Christ provides every blessing suggested by the names of these cities. A glance at the map will show that the cities of refuge were strategically located so that no point in the land was more than thirty miles from one of them. Moody makes the application:

As the cities of refuge were so situated as to be accessible from every part of the land, so Christ is very accessible to needy sinners (1 John 2:1, 2).[16]

Notice the parallels between the temporal salvation offered the manslayer in the cities of refuge and the eternal salvation offered the sinner in Christ.

The roads to the city were clear and well-marked, just like the way of salvation, so that none would make a mistake and lose his life. The cities were spread throughout the land and easily accessible to all, even as Christ is accessible to all men. Crisis drove people to the city of refuge, and many times a crisis is needed to drive people to the Lord Jesus for refuge. There was no neutral ground for the guilty person—he was either safe in the city or subject to the wrath of the blood avenger. Each individual is either safe in Christ or under the judgment of God (John 3:36).

D. The Levitical Cities (Chap. 21)

21:1-42 Forty-eight cities (v. 41) with their common-lands for pasture, including the cities of refuge, were assigned to the Levites as the Lord had commanded (Num. 35:2-8).

Kohathites:

(a) The sons of Aaron (i.e., the priests)—thirteen cities out of Judah, ... Simeon, and ... Benjamin.

(b) The rest of the Kohathites—ten cities out of Ephraim, ... Dan, and ... the half-tribe of Manasseh.

Gershonites: • thirteen cities out of Issachar, ... Asher, ... Naphtali, and ... the half-tribe of Manasseh.

Merarites: • twelve cities out of Reuben, ... Gad, and ... Zebulun.

Every tribe gave four cities except Judah and Simeon, which gave nine cities between them, and Naphtali, which gave three cities.

The cities of refuge, being cities of the Levites (vv. 13, 21, 27, 32, 36, 38), were scattered throughout all the tribes of Israel to fulfill the prophecy of Jacob (Gen. 49:5-7) and to better facilitate their teaching ministry to the nation.

21:43 This verse must be read in the light of other Scripture. It does not mean that Israel occupied all the land from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates; instead, it means that the land which Joshua divided was in fulfillment of God's promise that He would give them every place that the sole of their feet walked upon (Josh. 1:3).

21:44 Likewise, verse 44 must be interpreted carefully. There were still enemies within the land; not all the Canaanites had been destroyed. But that was not God's fault; He fulfilled His promise by defeating every foe against which the Israelites fought. If there were still undefeated foes and pockets of resistance, it was because Israel did not claim God's promise.

21:45 Note verse 45. The LORD had fulfilled every promise. Not one word failed. What a tribute to God's faithfulness! But Israel did not appropriate every promise.

E. The Altar East of the Jordan (Chap. 22)

22:1-9 When the land west of the Jordan had been divided, Joshua permitted the Reubenites, the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh to return to their territory east of the Jordan, as originally agreed. He also told them to take with them their share of the spoil from the battles they had fought.

It was over seven years since they had left their loved ones to fight the Canaanites. They endured the hardships of combat until the land was secured. We too are called upon by our Commander to endure hardships and fight the good fight of faith to further the kingdom of God on earth (1 Tim. 6:12; 2 Tim. 2:3). This kind of sacrifice is not easy, but it is an essential ingredient in the life that pleases God. Men with fiery zeal are needed on the battlefield today:

Must I be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize, and sailed through bloody seas?
Sure I must fight if I would reign; increase my courage, Lord;
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain, supported by Thy Word
—Isaac Watts

22:10, 11 On the way home these men decided to erect an altar near the banks of the Jordan. When the other nine and a half tribes heard about it, they were highly incensed. They feared that it was a rival altar to the one at Shiloh. They feared too that it might become an idolatrous altar in time to come and that God would punish the entire nation because of it.

22:12-20 Before declaring war on the tribes east of the Jordan, the children of Israel sent a delegation to interview them and offered them land west of the Jordan if they considered their own territory unclean (v. 19).

In dealing with the men who built the altar, Phinehas and the others recalled how Israel had suffered because of the iniquity of Peor (v. 17; cf. Num. 25) and the trespass of Achan (v. 20; cf. chap. 7).

They saw this altar as another threat to their welfare; hence their strong reaction to it. As a people they had learned that sin defiled the whole camp, and that God held the nation responsible for the behavior of its individuals.

22:21-29 Then the men of Reuben, ... Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh explained that this was not an altar of sacrifice at all. It was simply a memorial altar, testifying to future generations that the tribes east of the Jordan were indeed a part of the nation of Israel.

22:30-34 The other tribes were pleased by this explanation, and war was averted. The eastern tribes called the altar Witness, meaning that it was a witness between the tribes on both sides of the Jordan that the LORD is the true God.

F. Joshua's Farewell Address to the Leaders of Israel (Chap. 23)

This is the first of two farewell addresses by Joshua. Here he spoke to the leadership of Israel.

Joshua's command to be both courageous and scriptural (v. 6) echo the words of the Lord to him years earlier (1:7). He had since proven the veracity of them in the crucible of life and was now able to confidently pass them on to the following generation.

He reminded them of the faithfulness of God in fulfilling His promises concerning the land and concerning its heathen inhabitants. God would continue to drive ... out the enemy, but the people would have to be obedient to Him. Above all, they should keep themselves free from the idolatry of the nations or from intermarrying with the Canaanites. Otherwise these pagans would be a continual source of trouble to Israel.

None of God's words had failed (v. 14). This does not mean that all of the land was as yet in Jewish hands, for the Lord Himself had said that He would not drive out the inhabitants all at once but gradually (Deut. 7:22). The fact that not one promise of the Lord's had yet failed was the strong encouragement that Joshua was using to urge the leaders to finish the job he had started. To this exhortation he attached a warning (vv. 5, 16) that Jehovah would be just as faithful in destroying them from off the good land as He would be in destroying the Canaanites, if they forgot their covenant and turned to idols.

The NT parallel to this chapter is 2 Corinthians 6:14-18. Separation is vital for the man of God. We cannot cleave to the Lord and be bound to His enemies at the same time.

G. Joshua's Farewell Address to the People of Israel (24:1-15)

24:1-14 The second farewell message, this one to the people, was delivered at Shechem.

Joshua reviewed the history of the people of God, beginning with Terah and continuing on through the time of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He reminded the people of the mighty deliverance from Egypt, the wilderness wandering, and the victory over the Moabites on the east side of Jordan. Then he recounted their entrance into the Promised Land, their victory at Jericho, and their destruction of kings in Canaan (vv. 2-13). The darkness in verse 7 points back to Exodus 14:19, 20, where the cloud produced light for the Israelites and darkness for the Egyptians.

In this succinct summary of history from Genesis to Joshua, one outstanding fact is evident: the sovereignty of God. Notice how He tells the story: I took (v. 3), I gave (v. 4), I sent (v. 5), I brought (vv. 6-8), I would not listen (v. 10), I delivered (v. 11), I sent (v. 12), I have given (v. 13). Jehovah works according to His eternal purposes, and who can stay His hand? Such a God is to be feared and obeyed (v. 14).

24:15 The choice here was not between the LORD and idols: Joshua assumed that the people had already decided against serving God. So he challenged them to choose between the gods which their ancestors had served in Mesopotamia and the gods of the Amorites that they had found in Canaan. Joshua's noble decision for himself and his household has been an inspiration to succeeding generations of believers: "But as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD."

H. The Covenant Renewed at Shechem

24:16-28 When the people promised to serve Jehovah, Joshua said, "You cannot serve the Lord" (v. 19). This means that they could not serve Jehovah and worship idols too. Joshua doubtless realized that the people would drift into idolatry, because even then they had foreign gods in their tents (v. 23). The people persisted in promising allegiance to their God, so Joshua erected a large stone marker under the oak as a witness of the covenant made by Israel. (The sanctuary of the LORD mentioned in verse 26 does not refer to the tabernacle, which was at Shiloh, but simply to a holy place.)

Regarding the problem of idols, Carl Armerding writes:

> Idolatry seems to have been one of Israel's besetting sins. Their earliest ancestors served other gods, as we have seen (v. 2). When Jacob and his family left Laban, it was Rachel who carried off her father's gods (Gen. 31:30-34). But when they arrived in the land, Jacob ordered his household to put away these "strange gods," and he hid them under an oak tree that was by Shechem (Gen. 35:2,4). And in the same place Joshua urged his generation to put away the gods which their fathers served (v. 14).[17]

I. The Death of Joshua

24:29-33 Joshua ... died at the age of one hundred and ten years and was buried in the city of his inheritance. The people of Israel remained true to the LORD as long as the men of Joshua's generation lived. We do not know who penned the last verses of the book, nor is such knowledge necessary, or else it surely would have been included.

The bones of Joseph, which had been carried out of Egypt by his request, were now buried at Shechem (Gen. 50:24; Ex. 13:19).

Finally, Eleazar the son of Aaron died and was buried in the mountains of Ephraim.

Three burials are mentioned in the last five verses of this book: Joshua's (vv. 29-31), Joseph's (v. 32), and Eleazar's (v. 33). All three were buried in Joseph's territory. All three had served their God and their country well. Joshua and Joseph were great deliverers during their lives, and Eleazar was a deliverer in his death, for he was the high priest and his death set free all who had fled to a city of refuge (20:6). Like the books of Genesis and Deuteronomy, Joshua closes with the toll of the death bell over great and godly men. "God buries His workmen but continues His work."

JUDGES

INTRODUCTION

"There is much in Judges to sadden the heart of the reader; perhaps no book in the Bible witnesses so clearly to our human frailty. But there are also unmistakable signs of the divine compassion and long-suffering ... . As the lives of these lesser-saviours are considered, there may be a realization of the need in modern times of a greater Saviour, of unblemished life, who is able to effect a perfect deliverance, not only in time but for eternity."

—Arthur E. Cundall

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

God bringing strength out of human weakness is uniquely chronicled in this fascinating book. In fact, in a sense, the Book of Judges is a commentary on the three verses, "But God has chosen the foolish things of the world to put to shame the wise, and God has chosen the weak things of the world to put to shame the things which are mighty; and the base things of the world and the things which are despised God has chosen, and the things that are not, to bring to nothing the things that are, that no flesh should glory in His presence" (1 Cor. 1:27-29-29). For example, Ehud was a left-handed Benjamite (3:12-30), the left hand being thought of as weaker than the right. Shamgar used an oxgoad, a rather disreputable weapon, with which to slay 600 enemies (3:31). Deborah was a member of the "weaker sex" (though she herself was not weak!) (4:1-5:31). Barak's 10,000 foot-soldiers were a poor match, humanly speaking, for Sisera's 900 iron chariots (4:10, 13). Jael, also a member of the weaker sex, killed Sisera by driving a tent pin through his skull (4:21). She held the pin with her left hand (5:26, Septuagint). Gideon marched against the enemy with an army which the Lord had reduced from 32,000 to 300 (7:1-8). Barley bread, the food of the poor, suggests poverty and feebleness (7:13). The unconventional weapons of Gideon's army were earthenware pitchers, torches, and trumpets (7:16), and the pitchers had to be smashed (7:19). Abimelech was felled by a woman's hand hurling a piece of millstone (9:53). The name "Tola" means worm (10:1). When we meet Samson's mother, she is a nameless, barren woman (13:2). And Samson killed 1000 Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey (15:15).

II. Authorship

Although Judges is anonymous, the Jewish Talmud and early Christian tradition say that Judges, Ruth, and Samuel were all written by Samuel. This view may be supported by 1 Samuel 10:25, which indicates the prophet was a writer. Also the internal indications of date of writing fit in with Samuel's time at the very least.

III. Date

Judges is best dated in the first half-century of the monarchy (1050-1000 B.C.) for the following reasons:

First of all, the repeated phrase "in those days there was no king in Israel" (17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25) suggests that there was a king at the time of writing.

Second, since 1:21 shows the Jebusites were still in Jerusalem, a date before David captured that city is needed. Finally, Gezer, mentioned in 1:29, was later given to Solomon by Pharaoh as a wedding present, implying a date before that event. Thus Saul's reign or the early years of David's rule seem very likely.

IV. Background and Theme

The book of Judges takes up the history of the nation of Israel after Joshua's generation had died. The people had failed to drive out the heathen inhabitants of Canaan completely. In fact, they had mingled with the pagans and were practicing idolatry. As a result, God repeatedly delivered His people into the hands of Gentile oppressors. This servitude brought the Jews to the place of repentance and contrition. When they cried out to the Lord to deliver them, He raised up judges. It is from these leaders that the book gets its name.

The events in the book span about 325 years, from Othniel to Samson.

The judges were military leaders rather than simply jurists. By heroic deeds of faith they executed God's judgment or overthrew their oppressors, thereby restoring a measure of peace and freedom to the people. Twelve judges were raised up to deliver Israel. Some are given extensive coverage in the book while others are mentioned in only one or two verses. They came from nine different tribes and delivered their people from the Mesopotamians, Moabites, Philistines, Canaanites, Midianites, and Ammonites. No judge ruled over the entire nation until Samuel.

The book of Judges is not strictly chronological. The first two chapters contain introductory material, both historical and prophetical. The record of the judges themselves (chaps. 3-16) is not necessarily chronological. Some of the judges may have been conquering their enemies at the same time but in different sections of the land. This is important to remember, since the number of years mentioned in the book, if added consecutively, totals over 400, which is more time than the Bible allots for this period (Acts 13:19,20; 1 Kgs. 6:1).

The closing chapters (17-21) record events that took place during the time of the judges, but they are placed at the end of the book to give a picture of the religious, moral, and civil corruption in Israel during this period. The character of the times is well-described in the key verse (17:6): "In those days there was no king in Israel, everyone did what was right in his own eyes."

If we believe that every word of God is pure and that all Scripture is profitable, then it follows that Judges contains important spiritual themes and lessons for us. Some of these lessons are hidden in the names of the Gentile oppressors and the judges who delivered Israel. The oppressors picture the powers of this world that seek to bring God's people into bondage. The judges symbolize the means by which we fight the spiritual warfare.

In our comments we have included some practical applications, many taken from old classic works.[1]

There is always a danger of taking the study of types or figures to an extreme. We have tried to avoid any interpretations that are strained or fanciful. Also, it must be admitted that the meanings of some of the names are uncertain. We have given alternative meanings where such are possible.

COMMENTARY

I. REVIEW AND PREVIEW (1:1-3:6)

A. Looking Back (1:1-2:10)

1:1-3 After the death of Joshua (cf. 2:8), the tribe of Judah took the leadership in warring against the Canaanites in the south. In spite of God's promise of victory, Judah sought the assistance of the tribe of Simeon, showing that their faith lacked complete dependence on God's Word.

1:4-7 Their first victory was over the inhabitants of Bezek. After slaying ten thousand men, they cut off the thumbs and big toes of the king, as he had done to his foes. He should have been put to death, as the Lord had commanded (Deut. 7:24), but instead he was only maimed. Then he was taken to Jerusalem, where he later died. This foreshadowed Israel's disobedience in dealing with the heathen in their land. Rather than completely crushing them, the Israelites only crippled them. Such partial obedience was disobedience and would cost the Jews dearly in the days ahead.

1:8 Judah had a measure of success against Jerusalem, putting the city to the torch. But neither Judah nor Benjamin could drive the Jebusites out of their fortress (see commentary on Josh. 15:21-63). This was not done until the time of David (2 Sam. 5:6, 7).

1:9-15 The capture of Hebron is here credited to Judah; Joshua 14 and 15 tell us that Caleb was the one responsible for the conquest of this city. There is no discrepancy here, since Caleb was from the tribe of Judah. These verses (9, 10) probably refer to Caleb's conquest of the city (cf. v. 20) and not to a subsequent expedition after Joshua's death, even as the capture of Kirjath Sepher by Othniel is repeated in verses 11-15, although it took place previously (Josh. 15:16-19).

1:16 The Kenites continued to dwell with the children of Judah, though they never were truly converted.

1:17-21 Other conquests of Judah include Hormah, Gaza, Ashkelon, and Ekron, but the victories were not complete. The inhabitants of the lowland ... had chariots of iron, and Judah did not have the faith to launch an attack against them. They were unwilling to persevere in difficult circumstances. Verse 21 indicates that Judges was written before David took Jerusalem.

1:22-26 Only the two tribes of Joseph are credited with other victories. (These verses perhaps refer to the conquest of Bethel while Joshua was still living [Josh. 12:16], just as the previous verses concerning Hebron and Kirjath Sepher hark back to the days of that great general.) They attacked the city of Bethel, formerly called Luz, and destroyed it. But their mistake was in promising safety to a collaborator. He promptly started building another city by the name of Luz in the land of the Hittites. Unjudged sin survives and has to be met later.

1:27-36 In the rest of the chapter, seven central and northern tribes are named as having failed to drive ... the Canaanites from their territory: Benjamin (v. 21), Manasseh (vv. 27, 28), Ephraim (v. 29), Zebulun (v. 30), Asher (vv. 31, 32), Naphtali (v. 33), and Dan (vv. 34-36).

2:1-5 The Angel of the Lord (the Lord Jesus) rebuked the people at Bochim (weepers) for their disobedience. Verse 1 says that He came up from Gilgal (the place of blessing) to Bochim (the place of weeping). Israel had gone from the place of victory to the place of mourning. They had failed to drive out the Canaanites and to destroy their idolatrous altars. Therefore the Lord would refuse to drive ... out ... the inhabitants of the land, but would instead allow them to harass the Israelites. Verses 1-5 thus give the underlying reason for the oppression which followed. No wonder the people ... wept and called the ... place Bochim!

2:6-10 Verses 6-10 review the close of Joshua's life and the generation that outlived him. In Deuteronomy 6 the Lord gave some specific commands to His people. Failure to obey them led to the sad state of affairs described in verse 10, where a lack of spiritual leadership is seen to result in a corresponding lack of obedience on the part of God's people. The previous generation had not taught their children to fear the LORD and to keep His commandments. The neglect of the fathers led to the apostasy of their sons.

B. Looking Forward (2:11-3:6)

2:11-19 The remaining verses, on the other hand, give a preview of the entire period of the judges. They trace the fourfold cycle which characterized that time:

Sin (vv. 11-13)

Servitude (vv. 14, 15)

Supplication (not stated here, but see 3:9; 3:15; 4:3; etc.)

Salvation (vv. 16-18)

This pattern of behavior has also been described as:

Rebellion

Retribution

Repentance

Rest

This synopsis of Judges (vv. 11-19), as Jensen points out, brings into focus the two divergent truths evident throughout the book:

> (1) the desperate wickedness of the human heart, revealing its ingratitude, stubbornness, rebellion, and folly; (2) God's longsuffering, patience, love and mercy. No book in the Bible brings these two truths into sharper contrast—the utter failure of Israel and the persistent grace of Jehovah![2]

2:20-23 Because Israel persisted in disobedience, God decided to allow the nations to remain in the land as chastisement upon His people (vv. 20-23). Punishment for disobedience was not the only reason the Lord did not drive out all the Canaanites. He left them to test Israel (v. 22; 3:4) and to train succeeding generations for war (3:1, 2). We can gain insight from this as to why the Lord allows believers to go through problems and trials. He wants to know if "they will keep the ways of the LORD ... or not" (v. 22).

3:1-4 The nations that were left as a trial to Israel are listed in verse 3: five lords of the Philistines, all the Canaanites, the Sidonians, and the Hivites who dwelt in Mt. Lebanon.

Now the first cycle begins: sin (vv. 5-7); servitude (v. 8); supplication (v. 9a); salvation (vv. 9b-11).

3:5, 6 Six of the seven pagan nations among whom the Israelites lived are given. To the nations listed in verse 3, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites are added here.The seventh was the Girgashites (Josh. 3:10; 24:11).

Dr. Cohen pinpoints the beginning of each downward cycle concisely:

> The Israelites ignored the warning of Moses (Deut. vii. 3f.) and intermarried with the natives, the consequence being the adoption of their seductive cults.[3]

II. THE TIMES OF THE JUDGES (3:7-16:31)

A. Othniel (3:7-11)

3:7, 8 The people did evil in the sight of the Lord by marrying the heathen and then worshiping their idols. Impurity and immorality (v. 6) lead to idolatry (v. 7). God had warned them earlier of the grave consequences of mingling with the inhabitants of Canaan. They were a holy people and must remain separate from defilement if they would know the blessing of God (Deut. 7:3-6). God punished Israel by delivering the nation into the hand of Chushan-Rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia, for eight years. His name means Cush, man of double wickedness.

3:9-11 In response to the penitent cry of His people, the LORD then raised up ... Othniel, a nephew of Caleb, to deliver them from their enemy and to usher in forty years of peace. Othniel (lion of God) had previously taken Kirjath Sepher (city of the book), turning it into Debir (a living oracle). This is what faith does with God's Word.

B. Ehud (3:12-30)

3:12-14 In the second cycle, Israel was subjugated by Eglon, the king of Moab, for eighteen years.

3:15-30 The military leader whom God gave to Israel at this time was Ehud, ... a left-handed man of the tribe of Benjamin. He was commissioned by the people to take a gift as tribute to King Eglon. He also hid a double-edged ... dagger ... under his clothes. After the gift had been delivered, the king probably felt at ease concerning the attitude of his Jewish subjects. Then Ehud asked for a private audience to discuss a secret message. When all the attendants had been sent away, Ehud assassinated the king and fled. By the time the deed was discovered, Ehud had assembled the men of Israel, marched against Moab, and killed about ten thousand retreating soldiers. Israel then enjoyed rest for eighty years.

When meditation (Gera, v. 15) gives birth to praise (Ehud), the world ruler (Eglon), is doomed by the sharp, two-edged sword (the Bible), even when the Word is used by a left-handed man.

Othniel was from Judah, the mightiest tribe in Israel. Ehud was from Benjamin, now the smallest tribe. God can use the great or the small to gain the victory, since the power is from Him anyway. Men are simply the agents of deliverance, not the originators of it.

C. Shamgar (3:31)

3:31 Only one verse is devoted to this judge. He slew six hundred men of the Philistines with an oxgoad (a sharp, pointed instrument used to prod oxen). This is another of the instances in Judges where God used a "weak thing" to accomplish a mighty victory. A pilgrim (Shamgar) wielding the Word of God (oxgoad—see Eccl. 12:11) can put to rout wanderers (Philistines) among God's people.

D. Deborah and Barak (Chaps. 4, 5)

1. Their Story in Prose (Chap. 4)

4:1-3 The next oppressor was Jabin, king of the Canaanite stronghold of Hazor. The commander of his army was Sisera. With his boasted nine hundred chariots of war he held the Israelites under his domination for twenty years.

4:4-9 God did not raise up a man this time. He raised up a member of the "weaker sex," a prophetess named Deborah. (It is not the norm for a woman to occupy such a place of spiritual authority, but this was a time of declension. She should not be used as an example of the woman's role in the church today, since she is the exception and not the rule. Also, this was Israel, not the church.) Deborah commissioned Barak to go north and attack Sisera's forces, but he refused to go unless she accompanied him. Because of his reluctance to lead he was told that the victory over Sisera would be given to a woman rather than to him.

4:10-16 Deborah took the initiative in calling Barak and ordering him to engage Sisera in battle, as the Lord had commanded. But Barak, not Deborah, is commended for his faith in Hebrews 11:32. Though somewhat hesitant at first, he obeyed the Lord by faith and delivered Israel. (According to the NIV, Hobab in verse 11 should be listed as the "brother-in-law of Moses," not father-in-law, as in the NKJV.)

> Barak openly showed his force of 10,000 on the southern slopes of Mount Tabor. Sisera rose to the bait. He and his chariots crossed the dry Kishon riverbed at the ford just south of Harosheth. They raced southeast along the ancient highway toward Taanach. Israelites from the south, from Ephraim, entered the valley at Jenin (5:14) and joined forces with Barak and his northern troops in the valley below Taanach, south of the Kishon. Deborah called for the attack (14). Footmen against chariots! At the critical moment rain fell, turning the plain into mire, utterly confounding the chariots and horses (5:4). The advantage was now fully with the infantry. ... Barak pressed the attack. Sisera was separated from his men and fled. The leaderless troops, not used to fighting on foot, ran for their base. The rains continued and the Kishon rose to a torrent. Those who were not slain by the Israelites in pursuit were swept away by the Kishon as they tried to cross the ford to Harosheth ... [vv. 10-16; cf. 5:20, 21]. —Daily Notes of the Scripture Union.

4:17-24 Seeking refuge in the tent of Jael, a Kenite, Sisera was given food and lodging. While he slept, Jael hammered a tent peg ... into his temple. As Barak passed by in pursuit, Jael invited him in to see the corpse of his enemy. Thus was Deborah's prophecy of verse 9 fulfilled. God used a mere honeybee (Deborah) to cast down human reason (Jabin), when it exalted itself against the knowledge of God. The judgment came upon the foe like lightning (Barak). Jael (climber) used a tent peg (the witness of her pilgrim life) to bring down the pretensions of the mighty. The hammer speaks of the Word (Jer. 23:29).

2. Their Story in Song (Chap. 5)

5:1-5 The song of Deborah and Barak is a classic of inspired literature. After opening with praise to the LORD, Deborah recalled the Lord's triumphant march when the Israelites left the borders of Edom to move toward the Promised Land. All opposition melted before the majesty of the LORD God of Israel.

5:6, 7 Then she described conditions in the days of Shamgar. The dangers were such that the highways were deserted. Travelers used less direct routes in order to avoid robber bands. The villagers dared not venture out of their homes—that is, until ... Deborah arose.

5:8 Because the people had turned to idols, the land was given over to war and bloodshed, and Israel did not have weapons with which to fight.

5:9-15 But when God raised up Deborah and Barak, some of the rulers of Israel and some of the people stepped forward gallantly to help. There were men from Ephraim, men from Benjamin, men from Machir (the tribe of Manasseh), and men from Zebulun and Issachar.

5:16, 17 And then Deborah remembered those who did not come to help. Reuben had great searchings of heart but stayed among the sheepfolds. Gilead (Gad) did not cross the Jordan to join in the battle. Dan remained in ships, and Asher sat idly at the seashore.

Scripture notes carefully those who fought in the battle and those who stood passively by, unwilling to risk their safety in Jehovah's cause. And so it is today: The Lord knows who is actively confronting the world and the devil and who is sitting back and simply watching. There is a time of reward coming, but it is also a time of loss (1 Cor. 3:10-15).

5:18-22 Zebulun and Naphtali were outstanding, risking their lives for Jehovah without pay (they took no spoils of silver). They were in the thick of the battle against the kings of Canaan. The forces of nature were on their side because they were on the Lord's side.

5:23-27 Meroz was singled out for a curse for failing to come to Jehovah's help. The men of this city remained neutral when help was needed against the foe. But Jael, living in a tent, was blessed for her bravery and cunning in destroying Sisera. Our Lord's mother is the only other woman who is specifically called blessed among women (Luke 1:42).

5:28-31 Sisera's mother, in the meantime, was looking out the window, waiting for her son to return with the spoils of victory. She could not understand his delay. Her wisest ladies assured her that he must be dividing the booty with his men. But Sisera would never return. And let his fate be the same for all ... enemies of Jehovah.

On the other hand, may those who love the Lord be as the rising sun. The chapter closes with the statement that the land had rest for forty years after Sisera's death.

E. Gideon (6:1-8:32)

1. Gideon's Call to Service (Chap. 6)

6:1-6 In the next cycle, the Israelites were oppressed by the Midianites. These were marauding Bedouin bands who conducted raids on Israel's crops, stripping the land like locusts and stealing the livestock. Israel's backsliding resulted in poverty, slavery, and fear. Those whom Israel had once conquered were now her masters. When we turn from the Lord as Christians, old habits enslave and impoverish us as well.

6:7-16 When Israel cried out to the Lord for help, a prophet was first sent to remind them of their idolatry. Then the Angel of the Lord, whom we believe to be the preincarnate Christ (see essay below), appeared to a man of Manasseh named Gideon as he was secretly threshing wheat in a winepress ... to hide it from the Midianites. The Angel told this "mighty man of valor" that God would use him to deliver Israel from Midian. Despite Gideon's protests, the Angel repeated his call to this important task.

THE ANGEL OF THE LORD

The Angel of the Lord (Jehovah) is the Lord Jesus Christ in a preincarnate appearance. A study of the passages in which He is mentioned makes it clear that He is God, and that He is the Second Person of the Trinity.

First, the Scriptures show that He is God. When He appeared to Hagar, she recognized that she was in the presence of God; she referred to Him as "the-God-Who-Sees" (Gen. 16:13). Speaking to Abraham on Mount Moriah, the Angel identified Himself as "the LORD" (Heb. YHWH, or Jehovah; Gen. 22:16). Jacob heard the Angel introduce Himself as the God of Bethel (Gen. 31:11-13). When blessing Joseph, Israel used the names "God" and "the Angel" interchangeably (Gen. 48:15, 16). At the burning bush, it was the "Angel of the LORD" who appeared (Ex. 3:2), but Moses "hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God" (Ex. 3:6). The Lord who went before Israel in a pillar of cloud (Ex. 13:21) was none other than "the Angel of God" (Ex. 14:19). Gideon feared that he would die because, in seeing the Angel of the LORD, he had seen God (Judg. 6:22, 23). The Angel of the LORD told Manoah that His name was Wonderful (Judg. 13:18), one of the names of God (Isa. 9:6). When Jacob struggled with the Angel, he struggled with God (Hos. 12:3, 4). These are convincing proofs that when the Angel of the LORD is referred to in the OT, the reference is to deity.

John F. Walvoord (as quoted by Chafer) gives four arguments to support this:

> "(a) The Second Person is the Visible God of the New Testament. (b) The Angel of Jehovah of the Old Testament No Longer Appears after the Incarnation of Christ. (c) Both the Angel of Jehovah and Christ Are Sent by the Father. (d) The Angel of Jehovah Could Not Be Either the Father Or the Holy Spirit."[4] As for the fourth evidence, Walvoord goes on to explain that the Father and the Spirit are invisible to man and both have the attribute of immateriality. He concludes, "There is not a single valid reason to deny that the Angel of Jehovah is the Second Person, every known fact pointing to His identification as the Christ of the New Testament."

As the Angel of Jehovah, Christ is distinguished from other angels in that He is uncreated. The words translated Angel[5] in both Testaments mean

"messenger"; He is the Messenger of Jehovah. Thus, as Chafer says, He is an "angel" only by office.[6]

6:17-24 Sensing that he was talking to the Lord, Gideon asked for a sign. Then he prepared an offering of a young goat and of unleavened bread. When the Angel ... touched the offering with his staff and it was consumed by fire, Gideon knew he was in the Lord's presence and feared he would die. But the LORD assured him with the words "Peace be with you," and Gideon thereupon built an altar and named the place Jehovah-Shalom (The-Lord-Is-Peace).

6:25-32 That night, in obedience to the Lord, Gideon destroyed an altar which his father had erected to Baal and the wooden image ... beside it, and instead erected another altar to Jehovah. In the morning ... the men of the city were ready to kill him for this bold act. But his father, Joash, intervened, saying that if Baal were truly a god, he should be able to defend himself. Joash decreed that anyone who espoused Baal's cause would be executed. Gideon was nicknamed Jerubbaal, meaning "Let Baal plead (for himself)."

Some people might fault Gideon for tearing down the altar at night because of fear. But we must not lose sight of the fact that he did obey the LORD. His fear did not stop him from being obedient. All of us have fear, and fear in and of itself is not necessarily wrong. But when it keeps us from obeying the Lord, it has become an obstacle to faith and is sin.

6:33-35 At this time the Midianites, the Amalekites and the people of the East gathered together to make war on Israel as they crossed the Jordan and encamped in the valley of Jezreel. The Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon and he assembled an army from the tribes of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali. Abiezer (v. 34) was an ancestor of Gideon. His name is used here (Hebrew text) as a family name (the Abiezrites, NKJV) for his living descendants. See also 8:2.

6:36-40 Before Gideon went into battle, he desired a pledge of victory from God. The first pledge came when dew fell on his fleece of wool but not on the ground around it. The second came the following night, when the dew fell on ... the ground but not on the fleece.

Gideon's fleece is often misunderstood by Christians. There are two things about this incident that we should keep in mind: Gideon was not looking to the fleece for guidance but for confirmation. God had already told him what he was to do. Gideon was just seeking assurance of success. People who talk about putting out a fleece to find the will of the Lord in a certain matter are misapplying the passage. Secondly, Gideon had asked for a supernatural sign, not a natural one. Naturally speaking, what Gideon asked for would never have happened without the direct intervention of God. Today people use things as a "fleece" that could happen naturally, without divine intervention. This, too, is a wrong way to use the story. What we see here is God condescending to a man of weak faith to assure him of victory. God can, and does, give such assurances today in answer to prayer.

2. Gideon's Three Hundred (Chap. 7)

7:1-3 In order that victory against Midian might be clearly divine, the Lord first reduced Gideon's army from 32,000 to ten thousand by sending the fearful and fainthearted home, as the law commanded (Deut. 20:8).

7:4-8 In order to reduce the army still further, God tested the soldiers at the river. Those who took time to get down on their knees for a drink of water were eliminated. Those, on the other hand, who lapped up water like a dog and quickly moved on were kept in the army. These numbered three hundred men.

7:9-14 The LORD then directed Gideon to visit the outskirts of the camp of the Midianites by night. Accompanied by Purah his servant, Gideon went to the outermost part of the enemy's encampment. There he heard a Midianite telling his friend of a dream he had had in which a loaf of barley bread rolled over a Midianite tent, crushing it. The friend understood the dream as meaning that the Israelites would defeat Midian. Barley bread was the food of the common farming people and represented Israel. The tent typified the armies of the Midianites.

7:15-20 Perhaps the thought of his diminishing army rekindled Gideon's fears, and justifiably so. God was asking him to face an army of 135,000 with a force of 300 (8:10)! But this word from the mouth of his enemies strengthened his faith. In response, he first worshiped (v. 15), then warred.

Thus assured of victory, Gideon returned to the camp of Israel and summoned his men to war. After dividing the army into three companies of one hundred each, he armed each man with a trumpet and an earthenware pitcher with a lamp or torch inside. They marched to the fringe of the camp of the Midianites, and then at the appointed signal they all blew the trumpets, broke the earthenware pitchers so that the light of the lamps would be visible, and cried, "The sword of the LORD and of Gideon!"

The divine interpretation of this incident is given in 2 Corinthians 4:7. Our bodies are the earthen vessels. It is only as we are constantly delivered unto death for Jesus' sake that the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shines forth to others.

7:21-25 In confusion and panic, the Midianites began attacking one another, then fled. At first they were chased by men from the tribes of Naphtali, Asher, and all Manasseh. But then all the men of Ephraim were summoned to join in by taking the fords of Jordan and destroying the foe as they sought to escape across the river. The Ephraimites succeeded in capturing and killing two of the princes of Midian: Oreb (raven) and Zeeb (wolf).

There are lessons we can learn about leadership in Gideon's actions. The leader must be thoroughly convinced about what he is doing before he can lead others. He must be a worshiper first of all, giving God His rightful place (v. 15). He must lead by example (v. 17). He must be careful that the credit goes where it belongs—to God first, then to the instruments of His choosing (v. 18).

3. Gideon's Victory over the Philistines (8:1-32)

8:1-3 At first the men of Ephraim were angry with Gideon that they had not been invited to help sooner. But when Gideon reminded them that their capture of the two princes was more illustrious than anything he had done, they were pacified. As explained previously, Abiezer (v. 2) refers to Gideon and his men.

8:4-7 The Jews of Succoth refused to give food to Gideon and his hungry three hundred because they feared reprisal from the Midianites if he were defeated. Gideon threatened to tear (Heb. thresh) their flesh with thorns and briers when the LORD had delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into his hand.

8:8, 9 The men of Penuel answered Gideon's request for food in the negative also. His threat to them was that when he came back in peace he would tear down their tower.

8:10-17 Gideon kept his word. He captured the two Midianite kings and routed the whole army. With the help of a young informer's written list, Gideon taught a lesson to the seventy seven leading men of Succoth. Cohen says:

> This form of punishment "is described in Plato's Republic as one inflicted upon the worst offenders."[7]

The learned Rabbis Kimchi and Rashi saw this as an idiom meaning strike with violence." Others explain that he [Gideon] threatened to throw them naked into a bed of thorns and trample them together, like grain on the threshing-floor.[8]

As for Penuel, Gideon did tear down its tower and he also killed the men of the city.

"A soft answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger" (Prov. 15:1). The first truth is illustrated in verses 1-3 by Gideon's answer to the Ephraimites. The second truth is illustrated in verses 4-17 by the words of the men of Succoth and Penuel.

8:18-21 Zebah and Zalmunna had killed some of Gideon's brothers at Tabor, so he ordered his oldest son, Jether, to slay them. He was afraid to because he was still a youth, ... so Gideon finished the job himself.

8:22, 23 The men of Israel asked Gideon to be their king, so impressed were they by his military exploits. They gave the glory to man instead of to God (cf. 7:2). But Gideon nobly refused for himself and his sons, pointing out that the LORD alone had the right to rule over them.

8:24-27 But, after resisting one temptation, Gideon fell into another. He asked for the golden earrings which the Israelites had taken from the Midianites (also known as Ishmaelites; cf. Ex. 32:1-6). With these Gideon made ... an ephod, the apron-like vestment of the priest. When this was set ... up in Ophrah, it became an object of idolatrous worship and thus a snare to Israel, drawing them away from Shiloh and the tabernacle. "He refused the kingship but wanted the priesthood."

8:28-32 After the conquest of the Midianites, Israel enjoyed quiet for forty years.

Special mention is made of the fact that Gideon ... had many wives, and these bore him seventy sons. Also, he had a concubine ... in Shechem who bore him a son by the name of Abimelech.

Two more characteristics of Gideon's multifaceted personality show themselves in this chapter. His relentless pursuit of the Midianites displayed a thoroughness and completeness in carrying out his orders. Even though he was tired, even though he had already done a great deal, and even though no one would help him, he pressed on until the Ishmaelites were destroyed and their kings were dead at his feet. The Apostle Paul had a similar drive, only it showed itself in spiritual warfare (Phil. 3:12-14).

The second characteristic is a negative one: he requested and accepted golden earrings from the plunder as a reward for defeating the Ishmaelites (v. 24), and this became a snare to Gideon, his family, and his country. Contrast this with Abraham's behavior in Gen. 14:21-24. We should strive under God to emulate Gideon's virtues and avoid his vices.

F. Abimelech's Usurpation (8:33-9:57)

8:33-35 No sooner had Gideon died than Israel turned aside to worship of the Baals. How quickly the Israelites forgot Gideon's heroic national exploits, even to the point of mistreating his descendants and forgetting God's deliverance! But are we much better at remembering the blessings we have received from the Lord or even from our fellow men? To our shame we tend to forget them.

9:1-6 Abimelech (my father was king), a son of Gideon, was not a judge of Israel but a usurper—one who sought to rule Israel without proper authority. To eliminate any threats to his rule, he murdered all his brothers except Jotham, the youngest. Working through worthless and reckless relatives in Shechem, he persuaded the people of that area to recognize him as king. Since Gideon had seventy ... sons (v. 2), and not all were slain, the seventy of verse 5 must be a round number.

9:7-15 The Gospels contain many parables, or stories with a deeper meaning. Here is one of the few OT parables. Jensen comments on it as follows:

> When Jotham heard of Abimelech's coronation, he hurried to the top of Mount Gerizim at a time when the people were gathered in the valley below. From that vantage point his voice could be heard across the valley, and the people listened intently to the strange parable he related. Using the figure of a republic of trees electing a king, he pictured Israel's conduct. He spoke of Gideon and his sons as the olive tree, the fig tree, and the vine, who wisely refused to leave their God-appointed places of usefulness in order to go and reign over the trees. But he likened Abimelech to a bramble, who not only eagerly accepted the invitation but warned that he would destroy the cedars of Lebanon if the trees did not elect him king.[9]

9:16-21 Jotham then announced boldly to the people that if they had done right in destroying his brothers, then they could rejoice in their new ruler. But if not, the men of Shechem and Abimelech would become embroiled in civil war and destroy each other.

9:22-33 This is exactly what happened. Three years later God sent a spirit of ill will between Abimelech and the men of Shechem. God is not the author of evil, but He does allow evil, and even uses it to accomplish His purposes with evil men (cf. 1 Sam. 16:14; 1 Kgs. 22:19-23). The men of Shechem ... robbed those who traveled the trade routes near Shechem, thus depriving Abimelech of the taxes he would ordinarily collect (v. 25). Gaal the son of Ebed used the harvest festival as the occasion to call for a rebellion against Abimelech, saying, "Who is Abimelech, and who are we of Shechem, that we should serve him?" Zebul, Abimelech's puppet-governor of Shechem, secretly notified Abimelech of the conspiracy and advised him to march against the city ... in the morning.

9:34-40 When Gaal ... went ... to the city gate in the morning, he thought he saw people moving down from the tops of the mountains. At first Zebul pretended that what he saw were just shadows, hoping to gain time for Abimelech. Finally Gaal realized that it was actually people, with a second company ... coming from a different direction. Then Zebul challenged him to go out ... and fight the one whose rule he had despised. When Gaal and his band of outlaws engaged the foe, many of his men fell and he was soon chased back into the city.

9:41-44 With Abimelech camped at nearby Arumah, Zebul expelled Gaal and his brothers from Shechem. The next day ... people from Shechem went out into the field to work, or perhaps to take spoil from the fallen men. When Abimelech heard of this, he ... divided his men into three companies and set an ambush. Two companies were to rush upon them and another was to cut off any retreat back into the city. The ambush was successful.

9:45 After a day of fighting, the city fell. The people were all slain and their city was demolished and sown ... with salt. (Sowing with salt makes the ground sterile. Here it was a symbolic action on the part of Abimelech, expressing his determination that the place be forever a barren salt waste.)

9:46-49 Nearby was the tower of Shechem, where there was a temple of the god Berith. The people of the tower hid in a large room of the temple. Abimelech and his men took boughs from the forest of nearby Mount Zalmon and made a huge fire over the stronghold. About a thousand men and women perished in the inferno.

9:50-57 In capturing Thebez, Abimelech met his downfall. As he attacked a ... tower where many of the people had sought refuge, a ... woman dropped an upper millstone on Abimelech's head. Seriously injured, he asked one of his own men to slay him rather than have it said he was slain by a woman. Thus the bramble was devoured, as Jotham had predicted.

Justice has its own way of suiting the punishment to the crime. Abimelech had slain his brothers on a stone (v. 5), and a stone crushed his own proud head. Those who live by violence will die by the same.

G. Tola and Jair (10:1-5)

Tola, of the tribe of Issachar, judged Israel for twenty-three years. He lived in the mountains of Ephraim.

The next judge was Jair, a Gileadite, who ruled for twenty-two years over Israel. Mention is made in passing of his thirty sons, who ruled over thirty towns.

H. Jephthah (10:6-12:7)

1. Israel's Misery (10:6-18)

10:6-9 Again we read the dreary account of how the children of Israel ... forsook the LORD and turned to idolatry. Service to idols brought Israel into slavery to idolaters. The Philistines and Ammonites fought against the Jews who were on the east side of the Jordan, and the Ammonites also crossed over the Jordan to fight against Judah, ... Benjamin, and ... Ephraim.

Israel was powerless before the Philistines and the Ammonites because they abandoned the worship of Jehovah and served the ... gods of these heathen (v. 6).

10:10-16 When the Israelites cried out to the LORD, He refused their pleas at first. He cited several instances of past deliverances and reminded them that after each deliverance they had turned away from Him (v. 13). But when they continued to pray and after they put away their idols, God listened to their cry. Verse 16 gives us some insight into the Lord's great heart of tenderness. Like a father, He was moved by the plight of His wayward children. Their misery called forth His mercy.

10:17, 18 As the chapter closes, the armies of Ammon were camped in Gilead, and Israel had assembled ... in Mizpah. The men of Gilead were seeking a military leader (vv. 17, 18).

2. Jephthah's Defense of Israel (11:1-28)

11:1-3 The man of the hour was Jephthah. He is described as a Gileadite, a mighty man of valor, and the son of a harlot. Having been rejected by his own countrymen, he had wandered off to the land of Tob (probably in Syria), where he became the leader of a band of desperadoes or outlaws.

11:4-11 The elders of Gilead now asked Jephthah to lead the armies of Israel against the Ammonites, promising to recognize him as their head if he defeated the foe.

In some ways Jephthah reminds us of the Lord Jesus: There was a shadow over his birth and he was rejected by his brethren. When they got into bondage they remembered him and called upon him as their savior; and in agreeing to help the Gileadites, Jephthah agreed to be their savior but insisted on being their lord as well.

11:12-28 Jephthah's first action was to send messengers to the king of ... Ammon, giving him an opportunity to explain his aggression. The king complained that Israel had stolen his land from him when the nation marched from Egypt to Canaan. Jephthah explained clearly that this was not so. The Lord had instructed His people not to meddle with the Edomites (Deut. 2:4, 5), the Moabites (Deut. 2:9), or the Ammonites (Deut. 2:19)—all distant relatives of the Jews. Therefore, the Israelites bypassed the land of Edom and the land of Moab. However, when they came to the territory of the Ammonites, it had already been captured by the Amorites, whose king was Sihon. Israel took possession of this land by defeating the Amorites.

When the king of ... Ammon refused to withdraw his claim to the land, Jephthah prepared for war.

3. Jephthah's Vow

11:29-40 Before going into battle, Jephthah made a rash vow that he would devote to the Lord whatever first came out of his doors ... to meet him if he returned home victorious. The LORD gave him victory over the Ammonites, and as he returned to his house his daughter came out to meet him. Jephthah therefore offered her to the Lord.

There is considerable disagreement as to what Jephthah actually did to his daughter. One view is that he killed her and offered her as a burnt offering to the Lord. This is perhaps the most obvious meaning of the text, even though the idea of human sacrifice is repulsive and was never approved by God (Deut. 18:9-14). Only animals were sacrificed; human beings were dedicated, then redeemed by money (Ex. 13:12, 13; Lev. 27:1-8).

The other common view is that Jephthah gave his daughter to be a perpetual virgin in the service of Jehovah. Those holding this viewpoint state that Jephthah's vow was that whatever came forth from the doors of his house ... "shall surely be the LORD's, or I will offer it up for a burnt offering" (v. 31). The idea of perpetual virginity is strongly supported by verses 37, 38, and 39. In any case, the lesson is that we should not make rash promises.

4. Jephthah Slays the Ephraimites (12:1-7)

12:1-4 The men of Ephraim were jealous of Jephthah's victory, complaining that they had not been allowed to share in it. Jephthah reminded them that he had appealed to them in vain for help. The Ephraimites mocked Jephthah's people, the Gileadites, saying that they were nothing but fugitives from Ephraim. (The Ephraimites were troublemakers. They took issue with Gideon when he defeated the Midianites [chap. 8] and now they quarreled with Jephthah without just cause.)

12:5, 6 Jephthah and his men attacked the Ephraimites and cut off their way of escape at the fords of the Jordan. Before anyone was allowed to cross the Jordan, he was forced to say the password, "Shibboleth" (lit. a flowing stream). The Ephraimites could not pronounce this word correctly; they betrayed their identity by saying "Sibboleth."[10] Jephthah killed forty-two thousand men of Ephraim at ... the Jordan—a frightful slaughter of his own countrymen.

This type of infighting among the people of God is a distressing thing to see. The blood of the Ephraimites was now mingled with the blood of the Ammonites. Even the bright spots in Judges are smudged with calamity. Ridout makes a sad observation:

Is it not a fact that ... those who have met and overthrown heresy are those who have then crossed swords with their brethren, and fought over things that were not a vital question of truth?[11]

12:7 Jephthah's service as a judge lasted for six years; then he died and was buried in Gilead. Jephthah is cited in Hebrews 11:32 along with Gideon, Barak, and Samson. All these men had their faults, but they all, at one time or another, demonstrated great faith.

I. Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon (12:8-15)

12:8-10 Ibzan ... judged Israel for seven years. All we know of him is that he was a native of Bethlehem who had thirty sons, all of whom obtained wives from elsewhere (that is, outside his clan).

12:11, 12 Elon was of the tribe of Zebulun. His work as judge lasted for ten years. He was buried at Aijalon.

12:13-15 Abdon the son of Hillel came from the city of Pirathon ... in the mountains of the Amalekites, in the land of Ephraim. He judged Israel for eight years. Special mention is made of his forty sons and thirty grandsons.

J. Samson (Chaps. 13-16)

1. Samson's Godly Heritage (Chap. 13)

13:1-3 For the seventh time in Judges we read: "Again the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the LORD." The cycle begins again; this time the Philistines enslaved Israel for forty years. This was the longest oppression the nation had yet undergone. While the Israelites were being oppressed by the Philistines, the Angel of the LORD (Christ) appeared to the wife of Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, and announced that, though she had been barren, she would become the mother of a son. The barren womb is often a starting place in the purposes of God. He calls life out of death and uses the things that "are not" to confound the things that are.

13:4-7 This son was to be a Nazirite from his mother's womb to the day of his death. He was not to drink ... wine or eat grapes or raisins, nor was his hair to be cut. The mother herself was to abstain from wine or similar drink and from anything unclean.

For the scriptural background of the Nazirite vow, see Numbers 6:2. Ordinarily, Naziriteship was a vow which a person made of his own will. But in Samson's case Naziriteship was to extend from his birth to his death.

13:8-14 Manoah prayed for another visit from the Angel of the Lord and for further instructions. The Angel appeared to the woman again, and she hurriedly brought her husband out to meet this heavenly Visitor. No further instructions were given by the Angel at this time, however.

13:15-18 Then Manoah offered to prepare a meal for the Angel, thinking that he was a mere man. The Angel refused to eat with Manoah merely as one of equal rank. He proposed instead that a kid be offered as a burnt offering ... to the LORD. When Manoah asked the Angel's name, he was told it was Wonderful—one of the names given to the Lord Jesus in Isaiah 9:6.

13:19-23 Then Manoah offered the young goat to the LORD. The Angel ascended to heaven in the flame of the altar, showing clearly that this was an appearance of the LORD Himself. Manoah and his wife then worshiped by falling on their faces—an act that would have been improper if the Angel were less than God. They had seen the LORD, but they would not die as a result, since God had received a burnt offering and a grain offering from them.

13:24, 25 After this the son was born and named Samson (little sun). It soon became obvious that the Spirit of the LORD was working powerfully in his life.

Few men in the Bible exhibit such a contrast of strength and weakness. When we think of Samson, we ordinarily think of his strengths. He killed a lion with his bare hands (Judg. 14:6). He killed thirty Philistines single-handed (14:19). He broke the cords with which the men of Judah had bound him, and slew 1000 Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey (15:14-16). In escaping from a trap which the Philistines had laid for him, he walked away with the gates of Gaza (16:3). Three times he escaped the treachery of Delilah—once by breaking the seven fresh bowstrings that bound him, once by snapping the new ropes as if they were a thread, and once by pulling out the pin that fastened the seven locks of his hair to a loom (16:6-14). Finally, he pulled down the pillars of the house in which the Philistines were being amused by him, killing more in his death than he did in his life (16:30).

But Samson's weaknesses were even more apparent. He had a weakness for women, and was willing to disobey God in order to get a woman who pleased him (14:1-7). He also disobeyed his parents (14:3). He practiced deceit (14:9; 16:7, 11, 13b). He fraternized with thirty Philistines, the enemies of God's people (14:11-18). He gave way to temper and vindictiveness (14:19b; 15:4, 5). He had a cruel streak in his nature (15:4, 5). He consorted with a harlot (16:1, 2). He dallied with evil (16:6-14). He revealed the secret of his strength to the enemy (16:17, 18). He was too cocky and self-confident (16:20b). Last, but not least, he broke his Nazirite vow (14:9).

2. Samson's Feast and Riddle (Chap. 14)

14:1-4 Samson's willfulness soon appeared in his determination to marry a Philistine woman—one of the enemies of Israel. His father and mother sought to dissuade him, but he insisted. Verse 4 does not mean that the LORD approved of Samson's disobedience, but that He permitted it and planned to overrule it for Israel's welfare and for the punishment of the enemy.

14:5-7 En route to Timnah (a Philistine city) with his parents, Samson was threatened by a young lion. The Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him and enabled him to kill the lion unaided. Presumably arrangements for the marriage were made at this time.

14:8, 9 Later, when Samson was returning to Timnath to claim his bride, he found honey ... in the carcass of the lion he had slain and shared it with his father and mother. He didn't tell them that the honey was defiled by contact with a dead body (As a Nazirite he broke part of his vow by touching the dead animal.)

14:10-14 At Timnah, a great wedding feast was arranged, and Samson gave a riddle, offering each of his thirty companions a complete outfit if they could explain it. If not, they would have to give him thirty linen garments and thirty changes of clothing. The riddle was:

Out of the eater came something to eat,

And out of the strong came something sweet.

It referred, of course, to his killing of the lion and to his finding the honey in its carcass.

14:15-18 When the men failed to guess the answer, they persuaded Samson's wife with threats to obtain the answer from him. She did this and explained it to the thirty young men. They came to Samson with the answer and demanded the clothing. Samson then realized that they had collaborated with his wife.

14:19, 20 In order to get the clothing to pay the men, Samson angrily killed thirty ... men of Ashkelon and took their apparel. On the seventh day, when the marriage should have been consummated, he returned home. His wife was given to his companion, his best man.

3. Samson's Reprisals (Chap. 15)

15:1-6 When his father-in-law refused to let Samson have his wife, Samson took personal revenge by tying the tails of three hundred foxes in pairs, putting a lighted torch between each pair of tails, and releasing the animals in the grain fields, vineyards, and olive groves. The Philistines learned the cause of this cruel and wasteful act and retaliated by burning to death Samson's wife and her father.

15:7-13 Samson's answer was to slay a great multitude of Philistines; then he retired to the cleft of the rock of Etam in the territory of Judah. But violence triggers more violence. When the Philistines marched after him, the men of Judah slavishly reminded him that the Philistines were their rulers. To save their own skin they agreed to tie Samson securely and turn him over to the enemy. Samson agreed to this as long as his own countrymen did not attempt to kill him. They had sunk to a vassal mentality, and chose to betray their own countryman and remain loyal to their oppressors rather than to befriend Samson and rid themselves of their chains.

15:14-17 Then follows one of the glorious moments of Samson's career. When he was brought out bound, the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him. With the jawbone of a donkey he proceeded to slay a thousand Philistines. He named the place Ramath Lehi (Jawbone Heights, NKJV marg.). There is a play on words in verse 16, as if to say, "With the jawbone of an ass I have assisinated them," or "With the jawbone of an ass I have piled them in a mass! With the jawbone of an ass I have assailed assailants" (Moffatt).

One wonders why the Lord gave such a great victory through such an unlikely weapon. Samson was forbidden to touch anything that was unclean, and the jawbone was certainly that, being part of a dead animal. But this unusual weapon made it all the more evident that the victory was a supernatural one, given by God through base means. This is an example of the Lord allowing irregularities during a time of extreme crisis which ordinarily would not be permitted.

15:18-20 In response to Samson's prayer for water, God miraculously provided a spring out of "Jawbone Heights." This place was named En Hakkore, Spring of the Caller (NKJV marg.).

It is at this illustrious period in Samson's career that the Spirit of God records his judging of Israel for twenty years.

4. Samson Duped by Delilah (Chap. 16)

16:1-3 Toward the end of his rule, Samson's unbridled lust led him to the house of a harlot in the Philistine city of Gaza. The men of the city thought that at last they had trapped their enemy. But Samson ... arose at midnight and carried off the doors of the gate of the city, as well as the two gateposts, to the top of the hill that faces Hebron, a distance of almost forty miles.

16:4-10 Next Samson fell in love with a Philistine woman named Delilah. When this became known, the lords of the Philistines offered her great reward if she would lure Samson into revealing the secret of his great strength.

On her first attempt, Samson said that if he were bound with seven fresh bowstrings, he would become weak. She thereupon tied him with ... seven fresh bowstrings and suggested that the Philistines were about to pounce on him. But Samson broke the cords as if they were a strand of yarn.

16:11, 12 On the second attempt, Delilah followed Samson's suggestion by binding him with new ropes and warning him that the Philistines were closing in for the kill. But again Samson broke his bonds as if they were thread.

16:13, 14 Still playing with fire, Samson told Delilah that he would be helpless if she wove the seven locks of his hair and then fastened them into the web of the loom. When she woke him up with the warning that the Philistines were about to seize him, he left with the batten and the web.

16:15-20 Finally Samson broke down and revealed to Delilah the secret of his strength. His long hair, while not the source of his power, was the outward indication of his being a Nazirite—his separation to God. It was his relationship to God that made him strong, not his hair. But if his hair were cut off, he would be powerless. Delilah knew now that she had his secret. When he was asleep on her knees, she called in the Philistines. One of them shaved his head, and his strength left him.

C. H. Mackintosh observes:

> The lap of Delilah proved too strong for the heart of Samson, and what a thousand Philistines could not do was done by the ensnaring influence of a single woman.[12]

When Samson ... awoke, he tried to summon his strength, not knowing that the LORD had departed from him.

16:21, 22 The Philistines ... put out Samson's eyes and imprisoned him in Gaza, where he was forced to grind grain. Someone has described this threefold degradation as the "binding, blinding, grinding bondage of sin." But slowly his hair ... began to grow again.

16:23-31 When the lords of the Philistines held a great sacrifice in celebration of their god, Dagon, they brought Samson forth as an exhibit of what their god had done for them. Also, they compelled him to entertain them with his feats. During the feast, Samson took hold of the two middle pillars supporting the temple, called to the Lord for strength, and then pushed down the pillars and demolished the building. All the people were killed. The melancholy record is that Samson killed more in his death ... than he had killed in his life.

Because he consorted with the Philistines so often in his life and found their women irresistible, Samson is now found with the Philistines in his death, a corpse among corpses in the rubble of Dagon's temple. Separation would have earned for him a nobler death. Here we are taught a sober lesson, one we should not take lightly. Loss of separation (sanctification) leads to loss of power and eventual ruin. To yield our members to sin is to pursue self-destruction. Samson's body was removed to the territory of Dan by his relatives and was buried there.

III. RELIGIOUS, MORAL, AND POLITICAL DECAY (CHAPS. 17-21)

This last section of Judges is almost like an appendix to the book. As far as time is concerned, chapters 17-21 do not advance the narrative. Rather, they give frightening glimpses of the low religious, moral, and political state to which Israel had sunk during the period of the judges. The little book of Ruth likewise does not advance the history of the judges in time but, by way of contrast, does give a charming glimpse of the godly remnant during this dark era in Hebrew history.

A. Micah's Religious Establishment (Chap. 17)

17:1-4 The first narrative is one of religious corruption. Micah, a man of Ephraim, had stolen eleven hundred shekels of silver from his mother. She in turn had cursed the thief, not knowing that it was her own son. Apparently he feared the results of the curse, so he returned the silver to her. She then lifted the curse and blessed her son for returning the silver. Now she could use it for its intended purpose. She took two hundred shekels of silver and ordered two idols to be made from them. One was a graven image ... carved from wood and overlaid with silver. The molded image was made entirely of silver.

17:5, 6 Micah put the idols in a shrine with his household gods (teraphim). He also decided to set up a priesthood for his family, so he made an ephod (priestly garment) and consecrated one of his sons to be his priest. This, of course, was contrary to God's law, which forbade an Ephraimite from being a priest. In fact, the whole procedure was contrary to the Mosaic Law.

17:7-13 Sometime later a Levite who lived in Bethlehem, among the people of Judah, went into the hill country of Ephraim looking for a place to stay. (He should have been employed in the service of Jehovah and supported by the tithes of the nation. But since the law was not obeyed he was forced to seek out his own placement.) Micah offered him a position as priest in his family. Though this man was a Levite, he was not of the family of Aaron and therefore not eligible to serve as a priest. However, Micah offered him a salary, food, and clothing, and the Levite agreed to serve. The Levite should have confronted Micah with the fact that all these arrangements were contrary to God's order. Instead, he gave tacit assent by accepting the salary and other fringe benefits, thereby effectively sealing his lips from declaring the full counsels of God.

The word to describe the state of affairs in this chapter is "confusion": Stolen money is used for idols, and the Lord is invoked to bless the thief (v. 2); individual shrines replace worship at the tabernacle; Levites and common people are consecrated as priests; idols are used in the worship of Jehovah. And Micah supposed the Lord would bless him in all of this (v. 13)! This confusion stemmed from the heart of man (v. 6). If the law of God had been observed at this time in Israel, none of these things would have happened. "There is a way that seems right to a man, but its end is the way of death" (Prov. 14:12), as we shall see in the next chapter.

B. Micah and the Danites (Chap. 18)

18:1-6 At about this same time, the people of the tribe of the Danites decided to look for additional territory in which to dwell.

(When verse 1 says that Dan did not have an inheritance, it does not mean that they weren't given any land when Canaan was originally divided [Josh. 19:40-48], but rather that their portion, the smallest of the twelve, was too little for them.) When some of their spies came to the house of Micah in the hill country of Ephraim, they recognized the voice of the young Levite and asked him for assurance of the divine blessing on their plans.

18:7-13 Five men of Dan spied out the northern town of Laish, finding it quiet and secure. What is more, the town had no ties with anyone, that is, they were a peace-loving community with "no treaty of mutual aid with any neighbouring people."[13]

Taking their unprotected condition as a gift from God, six hundred fully armed Danites set out for Laish.

18:14-26 Later, when the five men of Dan were marching north to capture Laish, they entered the house of Micah and seized all the idols. After a mild protest, the Levite gladly obeyed their order to serve the tribe of Dan as a priest rather than to serve just the house of Micah. When Micah and some of his townsmen went out to the Danites to protest this theft of his gods, he was told to keep quiet and was sent home empty-handed.

18:27-31 The Danites then struck the peaceful town of Laish and changed the name of the city to Dan. They set up the carved image there and appointed Jonathan the son of Gershom, the son of *Moses (NKJV marg.) and his sons as priests.

> It is generally admitted that, in Judges, for 'Manasseh' (KJV, NASB) we should read 'Moses'—the name having been disguised by Jewish copyists to prevent supposed disgrace to Moses resulting from the idolatry of his grandson.[14]

Presumably, Jonathan is the name of the Levite previously mentioned. The city of Dan became an idolatrous city from this time onward. It was here that Jeroboam later set up one of the golden calves. It is not known whether the captivity mentioned in verse 30 refers to a Philistine captivity of that area (e.g., 1 Sam. 4:11) or the Assyrian captivity (2 Kgs. 15:29).

Not all the Danites went to Laish (v. 11) or sank into idolatry. Some stayed in their land, between Judah and Ephraim. Samson, the most famous member of this tribe, was from this latter group of Danites.

C. The Levite and His Concubine (Chap. 19)

19:1-12 We now come to a story of incredible moral corruption—the account of the Levite and his concubine. This particular Levite had a concubine who had come from Bethlehem in Judah. She forsook him to return to her home and live as a harlot. He went to her father's house to get her and was entertained there day after day. Each time he tried to leave with his concubine, her father prevailed on him to stay a little longer. Finally he left, on the evening of the fifth day, with his servant, his two saddled donkeys, and his concubine. It was late afternoon when they came to Jebus (that is, Jerusalem), but they did not stop because that city was still inhabited by the heathen Jebusites. George Williams observes:It would have been better for the Levite to have spent the night with the heathen than with the professed children of God, for the latter had already become viler than the former.[15]

19:13-21 At sunset they came to Gibeah, in the territory of Benjamin. No one offered to provide lodging for the caravan, so the Levite relaxed temporarily in the street. Then an old Ephraimite man who was living in Gibeah offered to take the party to his home, and the offer was accepted.

19:22-24 That evening a band of sexual perverts surrounded the house and demanded that the visiting Levite be brought out to them. The only other time we read of such debauched behavior is in the days of Lot (Gen. 19). Unfortunately for the young woman, there were no guardian angels present at Gibeah, as there were in Sodom. Both incidents brought severe consequences on the offenders. The Lord abhors homosexuality. Human depravity can hardly sink lower. The owner sought to satisfy these wicked Benjamites by offering his virgin daughter and the Levite's concubine. Arthur Cundall comments on their conduct as follows:

> In his concern for the accepted conventions of hospitality the old man was willing to shatter a code which, to the modern reader, appears of infinitely more importance, namely, the care and protection of the weak and helpless. Womanhood was but lightly esteemed in the ancient world; indeed it is largely due to the precepts of the Jewish faith, and particularly the enlightenment which has come through the Christian faith, that women enjoy their present position. The old man was willing to sacrifice his own virgin daughter and the Levite's concubine to the distorted lusts of the besiegers, rather than allow any harm to befall his principal guest.[16]

19:25-30 Finally, fearing for his own skin, the cowardly Levite sent his concubine out to them. As a result of their vile and harrowing abuse of her, she died during the night. Without excusing the Benjamites, we might point out that if she hadn't given herself to harlotry beforehand (v. 2) she would not have suffered a harlot's death. Sin mercilessly rewards its followers. The Levite found her body at the doorstep in the morning. He was so enraged that such grossness should be practiced in Israel that he cut her body into twelve pieces ... and sent one part to each of the twelve tribes with an account of what had happened.

The nation of Israel was stunned!

D. The War with Benjamin (Chaps. 20, 21)

20:1-14 Chosen warriors from the tribes of Israel (except Benjamin) gathered together at Mizpah and heard the Levite tell what had happened. They decided to fight against Gibeah, but first they gave the Benjamites an opportunity to deliver up the guilty perverted men to them for punishment. When the Benjamites refused, civil war broke out.

20:15-48 This incident took place not long after the death of Joshua and his generation, for Phinehas was the high priest at the time (v. 28). The tribe of Benjamin had only 26,700 soldiers, against four hundred thousand from the other tribes (vv. 15-17). Yet in the first battle, Benjamin killed twenty-two thousand men (vv. 18-21). In the second encounter, eighteen thousand men of Israel were slain (vv. 22-25). The reason Israel had such a hard time of it, even though their cause was just, was because they themselves were not walking close to the Lord. In verses 18, 23, and 26-28 we can see the nation being forced to humble itself before the Lord until finally success was promised. In the third engagement, the Israelites used the strategy of ambush. They drew the men of Benjamin away from the city of Gibeah, set the city on fire, and then destroyed a total of twenty-five thousand one hundred Benjamites as they fled to the wilderness. Then they burned all of Benjamin's cities and killed the women and children (vv. 29-48).

In three battles Benjamin lost 26,100 men (cf. vv. 15, 47). (We must conclude that they lost 1000 in the first two days.) The slain in verses 35 and 44-46 refer to the casualties in the last battle only. Six hundred survivors took refuge in the rock of Rimmon for four months (v. 47). Were it not for this remnant, the tribe would have been completely wiped out.

21:1-15 Now the eleven tribes of Israel were seized with regret that the tribe of Benjamin was almost annihilated. They did not want this tribe to die out. Yet they had made a rash vow in Mizpah that they would not give their daughters as wives to the men of Benjamin. Their first solution was to fight against Jabesh Gilead, east of Jordan, because its inhabitants had not helped in the war against Benjamin. All the people were killed except four hundred young virgins. These were then taken and given to the men of Benjamin.

21:16-24 But it was evident that further provision must be made if the tribe was to prosper. The men of Israel had vowed that they would not give their daughters to Benjamin, and they would not go back on the vow. So they hit on a scheme to allow the survivors of Benjamin to take wives for themselves from the young women who danced at an annual feast (perhaps the Feast of Tabernacles) in Shiloh. When the men of Shiloh complained, the other tribes explained to them that this was necessary to prevent the loss of one of the tribes of Israel. So Benjamin went back to his land to rebuild for the future.

These last few chapters have given us an intimate look at two tribes in Israel during the early period of the judges. One can imagine what went on unrecorded in the other tribes! And we know that things got worse as time went on! These gruesome stories show how far a people can wander from the Lord. Here we see enough of the fruit of apostasy to revolt us. Better still if what we have read would turn our hearts to seek the Lord our God and to serve Him faithfully all our days.

21:25 Judges closes with the sad theme ringing in our ears: "In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did what was right in his own eyes."

There is one wholesome episode from this dark period, but it is set off by itself so as not to be defiled by too close association with the depravity of Judges. We now turn our attention to the chaste story of Ruth.

RUTH

INTRODUCTION

"The little Book of Ruth, the exposition of which usually follows that of the Book of Judges, consists of only eighty-five verses; but these inclose a garden of roses, as fragrant and full of mystic calyxes, as those which the modern traveller still finds blooming and twining about the solitary ruins of Israel and Moab, this side of Jordan and beyond. The significance and beauty of the brief narrative cannot be highly enough estimated, whether regard be had to the thought that fills it, the historical value which marks it, or the pure and charming form in which it is set forth."

—Paulus Cassel

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

It is noteworthy that of the two books in the Bible named after women, one was a Jewish girl who married a prominent Gentile (Esther and King Ahasuerus) and the other was a Gentile woman who married a prominent Hebrew (Ruth and Boaz). Another significant thing these two women have in common is that both were part of God's redemptive history. God used Esther to save His people from physical destruction and He used Ruth as an important genealogical link in the messianic line, first to David, and ultimately to Christ, who would save His people from their sins. We are told in Matthew 1:5 that Boaz was a descendant of the Gentile Rahab, almost certainly the Rahab of Jericho. Now Ruth, another Gentile, enters the lineage of Christ as Boaz's wife. Both Rahab and Ruth picture God's grace, since both would have been excluded from the commonwealth of Israel because of their ethnic origin.

"The Book of Ruth," as McGee notes, "is essentially a woman's story, and God has set His seal of approval upon it by its inclusion in the divine library."[1]

The charm and beauty of the book is well illustrated in an incident involving Benjamin Franklin, the American statesman and inventor. When serving at the French court he heard some of the aristocrats "putting down" the Bible as being unworthy of reading, lacking in style, and so forth. Though not personally a believer himself, his youth in the American colonies had exposed him to the excellence of the Bible as literature. So he decided to play a little trick on the French. He wrote out Ruth longhand, changing all the proper names to French names. Then he read his manuscript to the assembled elite of France. They all exclaimed on the elegance and simplicity of style of this touching story.

"Charmant! But where did you find this gem of literature, Monsieur Franklin?"

"It comes from that Book you so despise," he answered—"la sainte Bible!" There were some red faces in Paris that night, just as there should be in our own biblically illiterate culture today for neglecting God's Word.

II. Authorship

Jewish tradition says that Samuel is the author of Ruth, though the book is anonymous. Since the book ends with David, the author cannot have been written before his time. Samuel, who anointed David as king, may well have provided the book to show the new monarch's pedigree.

III. Date

Since David's name occurs in 4:17, 22 as the culmination towards which the history of Ruth is leading, it is likely that it was written during or soon after his reign (c. 1011-970 B.C.), or at least after Samuel anointed him king.

Jensen writes:

> It was probably written before Solomon, David's successor on the throne, or the writer probably would have included Solomon's name in the genealogy. So the author was a contemporary of David.[2]

Some, however, have preferred a little later date, partly since a need was felt by the author to explain the custom of removing the sandal in a business transaction (4:7). This suggests a certain time lapse between this practice and the writing of the book of Ruth.

IV. Background and Theme

The events in the book of Ruth took place during the time of Judges (1:1). While most of the nation of Israel was wandering away from the Lord, there was a Gentile maiden named Ruth whose faith shone out with brilliance.

The key word of the book is redeem. Another key word is kinsman (KJV) or relative (NKJV), occurring twelve times. Boaz is a redeeming relative who buys back the land which belonged to Elimelech and raises up posterity to continue the family name. He is a type of Christ, the true Redeeming Relative. Ruth, the Moabitess, pictures the church as the Bride of Christ, redeemed by His wonderful grace.

I. RESIDING IN MOAB (1:1-5)

1:1, 2 As the book opens we meet a Jewish family which left Bethlehem (house of bread) of Judah (praise) because of famine, and settled in the land of Moab, southeast of the Dead Sea. The parents were Elimelech (my God is King) and Naomi (my pleasant one). The sons were Mahlon (sickly) and Chilion (pining). It would have been better to stay in the land and trust God than to emigrate to Moab. Ephrata (root of Ephrathites), the ancient name of Bethlehem, means fruitfulness.

The time of the judges was characterized by moral decline. So it is not surprising to find the land undergoing famine, God's promised chastisement for disobedience. Elimelech should not have left the Promised Land, least of all to settle in Moab. Had he never read Deuteronomy 23:3-6? Why not settle with his Jewish brethren east of the Jordan River? He led his family from the land of the living to the place of death and barrenness (neither Mahlon nor Chilion fathered children).

1:3-5 After Elimelech ... died, his sons married Moabite wives. Mahlon married Ruth (4:10) and Chilion married Orpah. Although Moabites were not specifically named in Deuteronomy 7:1-3 as people whom Israelites should not marry, it is clear from later references that they were included by the law (Ezra 9:1,2; Neh. 13:23-25). The law also specified that Moabites were not allowed to be received into the congregation of the Lord to the tenth generation (Deut. 23:3). Grace overruled in Ruth's case, as we shall see, permitting her descendant, David, to become the king of Israel.

After ten years, Mahlon and Chilion ... died, leaving Naomi with two foreign daughters-in-law, Orpah and Ruth.

II. RETURN TO BETHLEHEM (1:6-22)

1:6-15 Naomi decided to move back to Judah when she heard that there was plenty of food there. Her two daughters-in-law started to accompany her. But when she urged them to return ... to their homes in Moab, reminding them that she had no more sons to offer to them as husbands, Orpah kissed her mother-in-law and went back.

Notice the different attitudes of the three widows: Naomi was a grieving widow, stripped of the earthly joys of husband and family by divine judgment. Orpah, having soberly considered the words of her mother-in-law, proved to be a leaving widow, choosing the easiest and most convenient course. But Ruth was a cleaving widow, clinging to Naomi in spite of the latter's discouragements. When Ruth chose a new life with Naomi, she knew that it wouldn't be easy. There was hard work and poverty ahead since they were without a male provider. There was separation from home and loved ones, too.

1:16, 17 Ruth, however, would not leave Naomi. In one of the noblest utterances by a Gentile in the OT, she showed that she was making a total commitment (to Naomi). She chose Naomi's destination, her dwelling, her people, her God, and even her burial place.

1:18-22 By divine coincidence, it was the beginning of the barley harvest, the season of firstfruits (typifying Christ's Resurrection), when Naomi and Ruth arrived back in Bethlehem. All the city was excited to see Naomi once again and greeted her cordially by name.

She said to them, "Do not call me Naomi (Pleasant); call me Mara (Bitter), for the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me." She had gone out full (i.e., with her husband and sons), but the Lord had brought her back empty (i.e., a widow and childless). So it is with us—we can go out by ourselves into paths of backsliding, but the Lord will bring us back empty, and usually through bitter chastening.

III. RUTH IN THE FIELDS OF BOAZ (CHAP. 2)

2:1-3 Under the law, Israelites were not allowed to strip the fields clean when harvesting. Instead, they were to leave some of the grain as gleanings for the needy, for strangers, for the fatherless, and for widows (Lev. 19:9; 23:22; Deut. 24:19).

Ruth decided to take advantage of this law by going out to the barley fields to gather up some of these gleanings. It was not good luck but divine arrangement that led her to the field owned by Boaz (in him is strength), a wealthy relative of her dead father-in-law.

2:4-12 When Boaz arrived from Bethlehem, he asked the identity of the young woman. Learning that she was Naomi's daughter-in-law, he cordially invited her to continue gleaning in his fields and to share the water provided for his workers. In praising her for the loyal and selfless step that she had taken, Boaz concluded with a little prayer for her:The LORD repay your work, and a full reward be given you by the LORD God of Israel, under whose wings you have come for refuge (v. 12).

Leon Morris comments:

> In due course, the prayer was answered through him who uttered it. He recognizes the religious aspect of Ruth's change of country by saying that she has come to trust (AV) under Yahweh's wings. The imagery is probably that of a tiny bird struggling under the wings of a foster-mother. It gives a vivid picture of trust and security ... .[3]

She marveled that he, a Jew, should show such undeserved favor to a Gentile. But there was a reason! Boaz had, of course, heard of the kindness which Ruth had shown to Naomi, and how she had become a convert to the Jewish faith.

2:13-16 He was so impressed with her that he invited her to eat with his workers, and instructed the reapers to leave extra grain for her on purpose.

2:17 At the end of the day, she beat out what she had gleaned, and she had about an ephah of barley, which was a very generous amount. We must do this in our study of the Word; that is, we must appropriate the precious truths for ourselves and put them into practice.

In Boaz we see illustrated many of the excellencies of Christ. Boaz was a man of great wealth (v. 1). He was compassionate to the stranger, who had no claim on his favors (vv. 8, 9). He knew all about Ruth, even before she met him (v. 11), even as the Lord knows all about us even before we come to know Him. He served Ruth graciously, and all her needs were satisfied (v.

14). He granted her protection and prosperity for the future (vv. 15, 16). In these acts of grace we see a foreshadowing of our blessed Redeeming Relative's mercies to us.

2:18-23 When Ruth brought the grain home and told Naomi all that had happened, the wise old Jewess knew that the Lord's program was unfolding satisfactorily. She knew that Boaz was a close relative of her dead husband and sensed that the Lord was going to work wonderfully for Ruth and for herself. Therefore she encouraged Ruth to continue to glean in the field of Boaz.

Naomi's counsel to stay in the fields of Boaz was prudent. Since he had shown himself gracious, why should Ruth insult him or spurn his protection by going into another's field? We too should not wander from the Lord's promised provision and protection into the fields of worldly pleasures.

IV. RUTH'S REDEEMING RELATIVE (CHAP. 3)

3:1-5 Naomi was anxious that Ruth should find security—that is, a husband and a home. She therefore relinquished her own prior claim to marriage and property, and instead advised Ruth to go down to the threshing floor one night when Boaz was winnowing barley.

> Ruth, being a stranger to Israelite customs, had to be told in detail how she was to make the customary appeal to her kinsman for protection and levirate marriage (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

3:6, 7 So after Boaz had finished his work, eaten his meal, and retired, Ruth lay ... at his feet under a corner of his blanket. This may seem very irregular to us in our culture, but actually it was the accepted practice in that day (see Ezek. 16:8), and there was nothing evil or suggestive about it.

3:8-11 Awakened at midnight, Boaz found Ruth at his feet. Far from rebuking her, he blessed her after she had asked him to act as her redeeming relative. The word wings in 2:12 is the plural of the same word here translated "wing." Boaz had commended Ruth for seeking refuge in Jehovah; how could he refuse her the refuge she sought from him according to Jehovah's laws? Besides, she was a virtuous woman, one of those whose worth is far above jewels (Prov. 31:10). He commended her for her loyalty, saying that her latter kindness (her personal devotion to him) was better than her first (her leaving home and family to be with Naomi).

The Law of Moses required that when a man died childless, a close relative should marry the widow (Deut. 25:5-10), thus perpetuating the family name and keeping the land in the family. It was especially important that when a man died without a son, someone should marry his widow so that a son would be born and the name carried on.

Now Ruth, of course, had been left childless. Since Boaz was a relative of Elimelech, he was eligible to serve as redeeming relative by marrying her. And not only was he eligible; he was willing.

3:12, 13 But there was a legal complication: There was a relative closer than he, and this man had prior claim. If this closer relative did not wish to serve as redeeming relative, then Boaz would. The matter would be settled in the morning.

3:14-18 Ruth stayed at his feet till just before dawn. Boaz filled her shawl with six ephahs of barley. This assured Ruth of his deep love and gave evidence to Naomi that he would follow through on the matter without delay.

Ruth was a noble woman, intrinsically worthy of Boaz's kindnesses. But we were unworthy sinners. Yet the Lord spread His covering over us and took us as we were. He has loaded us with gifts and encouraged us with His promised return to consummate the marriage. Our salvation is settled, a finished work. But entrance into the full bliss of our union awaits the Bridegroom's return.

When Naomi heard all that had taken place, she told Ruth to sit still and wait for the outcome of this complex sequence of events.

> This is often the most difficult part of faith—when no more action can be taken and nothing remains but to wait patiently for God to work out His will. It is at this moment that doubts arise and anxiety creeps in (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

V. REDEMPTION BY BOAZ (4:1-12)

4:1-6 In the morning Boaz went up to the gate of the city, where the elders sat and where legal matters were settled. It so "happened"—another designed coincidence —that the close relative walked by at that very moment. Addressing him as "friend,"[4] and asking him to stop for a while, Boaz stood before the ten ... elders and told the story of Naomi and Ruth. Then he gave the close relative the chance to buy back the land belonging to Elimelech, which had probably been mortgaged when Elimelech went to Moab. Up to this point, the unnamed relative was willing. However, when Boaz told him that whoever bought the land must also marry Ruth the Moabitess, he backed away, explaining that this would ruin his inheritance. He would have to devote time and energy to looking after Ruth's property, thus possibly having to neglect his own. Ultimately, the land would go to Ruth's heirs, not his own.[5]

Commenting on the omission of the nearer relative's name, Matthew Poole writes:

> Doubtless Boaz knew his name, and called him by it; but it is omitted by the holy writer, partly because it was unnecessary to know it; and principally in way of contempt, as is usual, and as a just punishment upon him, that he who would not preserve his brother's name might lose his own.[6]

The closer relative is widely taken to typify the law. Ten witnesses (the Ten Commandments) confirm its inability to redeem the sinner. "The law can't redeem those whom it condemns. It would be against its own purpose."[7] The law could not redeem because it was weak through the flesh (Rom. 8:3).

The refusal of the closer relative freed Boaz, who was next in line, to marry Ruth.

4:7, 8 In those days, all transactions concerning redemption and exchange were confirmed by one of the parties taking off his sandal and handing it to the other. The law actually specified that the widow should take off the sandal of the refusing kinsman and spit in his face (Deut. 25:9). In this case the closer relative simply took off his sandal and gave it to Boaz.

4:9-12 As soon as Boaz received the sandal, he announced that he would purchase Elimelech's property and marry Ruth the Moabitess. The crowd blessed Boaz, wishing him a posterity as numerous as that of Rachel and

Leah. The mention of Perez, the offspring of Tamar by Judah, overlooks the sordid aspects of that story and concentrates on the fact that it was another case of levirate marriage involving an Israelite and a foreigner.

VI. THE ROYAL GENEALOGY OF DAVID TRACED BACK TO OBED (4:13-22)

4:13-16 Boaz married Ruth, and she bore him a son named Obed (servant). Naomi took the baby as her own and became a nurse to him.

4:17-22 Obed later became the ancestor of Jesse, the father of David. Thus the book closes with a short genealogy of David (beloved) which was to become part of a greater genealogy—that of David's great Son, the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. 1). This genealogy is not intended to be complete. Salmon lived at the beginning of the period of the judges, and David was not born until the beginning of the period of the kings, a span of almost 400 years. Names are often deliberately omitted in biblical genealogies.

With this little genealogy ending with David, the reader is prepared for the monarchy and the next books in biblical order, 1 and 2 Samuel.

FIRST SAMUEL

INTRODUCTION

"For sheer interest, I Samuel is unsurpassed. Not only does it recount eventful history; it is eventful history interwoven with the biographies of three colourful personalities—Samuel, Saul, David: and it is around these three that the chapters are grouped."

—J. Sidlow Baxter

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Without 1 and 2 Samuel there would be a gaping hole in the OT Canon. Originally one book, Samuel was first divided into two in the Septuagint translation for convenience. Every version of the OT, including printed Hebrew Bibles, has followed suit ever since.

Untold millions of Jewish and Christian children have been charmed and edified by the stories of Samuel, David and Goliath, David and Jonathan, David's flight from Saul, his kindness to Mephibosheth, and his sorrow over his son Absalom's rebellion and death.

On a more doctrinal level, more mature readers have studied the Davidic Covenant and the dreadful parallels to David's sin with Bathsheba that cropped up among his own children.

First and Second Samuel bridge the gap between the judges and the full establishment of the royal line of David. They hold a unique place in the history of Israel.

II. AUTHORSHIP

While Jewish tradition makes Samuel the author of the book that is now divided into 1 and 2 Samuel, this authorship can only apply to the events during his own lifetime (1:1-25:1).[1] Much of the material in these books takes place after the prophet's demise.

It is possible that one of the young prophets who studied under Samuel wrote the book, incorporating writings of his teacher. Another possibility is that Abiathar, a priest who would be accustomed to keeping close records, compiled the book. He was closely associated with David's career and even spent time in exile with him.

III. Date

The date of the Books of Samuel is impossible to pinpoint. The early part may date from about 1000 B.C. The fact that no reference is made to the captivity of Israel (722 B.C.) certainly demands a date before that event. Some believe that references to "Israel" and "Judah" demand a date after 931 B.C., when the monarchy split into these two parts. Such terms could easily have been used before the political split, however, somewhat as in American history the terms "Yankees" and "Southrons" were used before the secession of 1861.

IV. Background and Theme

First and Second Samuel trace God's dealings with Israel from the twelfth to the early tenth centuries B.C. Samuel (the prophet-judge), Saul (the rejected king), and David (the shepherd-king) are the main characters around which the narrative is framed.

Samuel was raised up by God to end the period of the judges and to inaugurate the era of the kings. He lived in a day that saw the failure of the priesthood (represented by Eli and his sons) and the introduction of the prophetic ministry. Samuel himself was the last of the judges, the first of the prophets of this period (not the first prophet in Scripture—Gen. 20:7), and the man to anoint the first kings of Israel. Although a Levite, he was not of the family of Aaron; yet he served as a priest, apparently with God's approval. His heart was pure and devoted; Eli's was polluted and disobedient.

The theme of Samuel is how God, Israel's true King, at the people's request, delegated royal sovereignty first to Saul, and then to David and his lineage. Eugene Merrill ties the books in nicely with the theme of the whole Bible:

> Also through David's royal house his greater Son, Jesus Christ, eventually became incarnate. Christ perfectly exercised kingship in His own life, and provided in His death and resurrection the basis on which all people who believe can reign with and through Him (2 Sam. 7:12-16; Ps. 89:36-37; Isa. 9:7).[2]

COMMENTARY

I. SAMUEL'S MINISTRY UNTIL THE ANOINTING OF SAUL (CHAPS. 1-9)

A. Samuel's Birth and Childhood (Chap. 1)

1:1-10 First Samuel opens by introducing us to Elkanah and his two wives, Hannah (grace) and Peninnah (pearl). He was a Levite from Ramathaim Zophim in Ephraim; hence the designation Ephraimite in verse 1 (cf. 1 Chron. 6:22-28). As a faithful historical record, the Bible notes the practice of polygamy but never approves it. As was the case with Leah and Rachel, one wife was fruitful while the other was barren. This caused rivalry in the the home because, although Hannah was childless, she was more loved by her husband. When the family traveled to Shiloh ... yearly to celebrate one of the feasts, Hannah would receive a double portion of the peace offering (vv. 3-5). But this drew forth stinging taunts from Peninnah. Year after year her barbs cut deeper and deeper, until finally, in desperation, Hannah took the matter before the LORD at the tabernacle.

1:11-18 Hannah vowed that if God would give her a male child, she would give him back to the LORD. He would be a Nazirite from birth. Bishop Hall counsels:

> The way to obtain any benefit is to devote it in our hearts to the glory of that God of whom we ask it; by this means shall God both please his servant and honor Himself.[3]

The old priest, Eli, saw Hannah's lips moving and supposed her to be drunk. But as soon as she had explained her actions, he perceived her seriousness, blessed her, and sent her on her way in peace. Hannah was concerned about her physical barrenness. We should mourn our spiritual barrenness.

1:19-28 When Hannah's prayer was answered, she named her baby Samuel (heard of God),[4] because he was "asked ... from the LORD." When Samuel was weaned, she took him ... to the house of the LORD and lent him to the LORD in a once-for-all act of dedication. From the outset the boy assisted the priests and ministered before the Lord. The last phrase in verse 28 includes Samuel: He was a worshiper, although very young, because his life was devoted to the service of the LORD.

B. Hannah's Song (2:1-10)

The devotedness of Elkanah's wife and son stands out against the depravity of Eli's family. After giving her son to the Lord, Hannah poured out her heart in thanksgiving. Her words reveal an in-depth knowledge of God, His character, and His deeds. The prayer seems to rebuke Peninnah for the many spiteful things she had said to Hannah, but it prophetically goes beyond this domestic squabble to the triumph of Israel over her foes and to the eventual reign of Christ. Mary's song, often called the Magnificat (Luke 1:46-55), was obviously influenced by her knowledge of Hannah's song.

C. Eli and His Wicked Sons (2:11-36)

2:11-17 The narrative now turns to Eli's wicked sons. They did not know the LORD in the sense that they had not been saved by faith. Three sins are charged to them: They robbed the people of their share of the peace offering, not being satisfied with just the breast and thigh (cf. Lev. 7:28-34). They demanded meat before the fat had been offered to God, thus shirking the law. Third, they wanted to roast the meat instead of boiling it, putting their own carnal appetites first. If anyone tried to protest, they took the meat ... by force. Their sin ... was very great because they treated the Lord's offering with contempt.

2:18-21 In contrast to their wickedness was the devotedness of the child Samuel, and the faithfulness of Samuel's parents to the yearly feasts. Since the firstfruits of Hannah's womb had been dedicated to the Lord, she was blessed with three sons and two daughters. It is a good illustration of our Lord's promise: "Give, and it shall be given to you."

2:22-26 It wasn't until Eli heard reports of immorality that he finally reproved his sons. But it was far too late for his mild verbal reproof to have any effect. They hardened their hearts and so were judicially hardened, like Pharaoh of old, for God had determined to destroy them. During this time

Samuel was quietly growing, his purity and goodness pleasing both ... the LORD and men. If we remember that these events took place during the time of the judges, it is not surprising that the priesthood failed to escape the moral decadence of the period.

2:27-36 The Lord's rebuke of Eli was as harsh as Eli's rebuke of his sons had been soft. An unnamed man of God appeared and announced the doom of Eli's priestly ... house. The prophet began by reviewing God's call to Aaron's family to be His priest, and His generous allowance of sacrificial meats for their sustenance. He then rebuked Eli for allowing his sons' appetites to have priority over the claims of God (v. 29). The Lord's previous promise of the perpetuity of the priesthood assumed that the priests would be men of good character. But because of the wickedness of Eli and his house, they would no longer be allowed to function in the priestly service; no member of his family would reach old age; the sanctuary at Shiloh would fall into decay; and Eli's posterity would be a grief and a shame. Furthermore, both ... Hophni and Phinehas would die on the same day as a sign that all these judgments would come to pass.

The doom of Eli's house was fulfilled in: The murder of Ahimelech and all his sons (except Abiathar) by Saul (v. 31; 22:16-20); the expulsion of Abiathar from the priesthood by Solomon (vv. 32, 33; 1 Kgs. 2:27); and the death of Hophni and Phinehas (v. 34; 4:11). Eli was from the house of Ithamar, and when Abiathar was later removed by Solomon, the priesthood was restored to the house of Eleazar, where it should have been all along. Phinehas, the son of Eli, is not to be confused with Phinehas, the grandson of Aaron (Num. 25:7, 8).

The faithful priest promised in verse 35 is Zadok, of the house of Eleazar, who ministered in the days of David and Solomon. His priesthood will endure, even during the Millennial Reign of Christ (Ezek. 44:15). But the descendants of Eli would desire the priest's office not in order to serve the Lord, but simply to get something to eat (v. 36). Many see a Messianic allusion in the faithful priest of verse 35, partly in light of the word forever.

D. Samuel's Call (Chap. 3)

3:1-3 At the time that Samuel was serving the LORD in the tabernacle at Shiloh, the word of the LORD was rare; that is, the Lord very seldom spoke in visions to men. Williams sees in the first three verses a picture of Israel's moral condition.

> Night reigned; the lamp of God was going out in the Temple; the High Priest's eyes were grown dim so that he could not clearly see; and both he and Samuel were asleep.[5]

The lamp of God refers to the lampstand, whose light was extinguished at sunrise.

3:4-9 One night, shortly before morning, Samuel heard a voice calling him. He thought it was Eli, but the priest had not called. Samuel did not yet know the LORD in the sense that he had never previously received a direct, personal revelation from Him (v. 7). After Samuel heard the voice two more times, Eli realized that the LORD was calling Samuel. The old priest told the boy to say, "Speak, LORD, for Your servant hears," if he heard the voice again.

3:10-14 When the LORD ... called the fourth time, Samuel replied, "Speak, for Your servant hears," apparently leaving out the word "Lord." The Lord's message confirmed the judgment spoken earlier against Eli and his house, and the judgment may have included the defeat of Israel and the capture of the ark. The father was as much to blame as the sons, because he did not restrain them or turn them from their sins. They should have been put to death for their sacrilege instead of just being scolded. Sacrifice could not atone for their iniquity; their doom was sealed and was confirmed to Eli in the mouth of two witnesses: The man of God (chap. 2) and the boy prophet, Samuel (v. 14).

3:15-18 At first Samuel was afraid to tell Eli what the Lord had said, but under a solemn oath he revealed to the priest the impending judgment. Eli took the news submissively. Surely he realized God's justice in the sentence. Could God have struck down the sons of Aaron for their impiety (Lev. 10) but leave Hophni and Phinehas unjudged?

3:19-21 It soon became known in all Israel from Dan to Beersheba that the LORD was with ... Samuel, and all Israel recognized in the young lad a true prophet of the LORD.

E. The Ark of God (Chaps. 4-7)

1. The Ark Captured (Chap. 4)

4:1-4 The next three chapters follow the ark of the covenant of the LORD on a journey into and back out of enemy territory. God would defend His honor in the midst of the Philistines (chap. 5), but He would not defend the Israelites when He was in their midst because they had ceased to honor Him. When they went out to battle against the Philistines at Ebenezer, they lost four thousand men. In an effort to turn the tide, the elders had the ark of the covenant brought from Shiloh ... into the camp.

4:5-11 The Israelites rejoiced greatly when they saw the ark, and the Philistines feared greatly because they knew the reputation of Jehovah. But they encouraged themselves and drew near to the battle once more. To their amazement, Israel ... fled, thirty thousand foot soldiers were slain, the priests Hophni and Phinehas were killed, and the ark itself was captured!

4:12-22 When a runner went back to Shiloh and informed Eli that the ark had been captured, the old priest fell ... backward ... off his magistrate's seat, broke his neck, and died. The bad news caused Phinehas' wife to go into labor, and she died in childbirth. Hearing of the death of her father-in-law and her husband did not seem to affect her as much as the news that the ark had fallen into the hands of the Philistines. As she died, she named her son Ichabod, (inglorious), saying, "The glory has departed."

2. The Ark's Power (Chap. 5)

5:1-5 The Philistines ... brought ... the ark of God ... from Ebenezer to Ashdod and set it in the temple of Dagon, the national god of the Philistines. Dagon was supposed to be the father of Baal, another idol we meet often in Scripture. The Philistines ... set ... the ark beside the image of Dagon, thinking them equal. But when they returned to the temple in the morning, they found that the Lord had caused Dagon to topple to the foot of the ark. Not perceiving the significance of this event, they once again set up Dagon by the ark. But the next morning there was no doubt as to who was the stronger, for Dagon's head and hands had been broken off. If Dagon were a real god, he could have defended himself. His followers should have faced the facts. Instead, they made a superstitious rule about walking on the threshold. Dagon did not fare well in confrontation with the God of Israel. Samson had destroyed his temple in Gaza, God giving him the strength to pull the entire building down on the noblemen of Philistia (Judg. 16). Now

Jehovah Himself maimed the image of Dagon, demonstrating that there is no wisdom (head) or power (hands) to be found in idols.

5:6-9 Not only their idol but the people of Ashdod themselves began to feel the displeasure of the LORD, suffering confusion, swellings or tumors, and death. In desperation the Philistines decided to move the ark ... to Gath, another of their great cities. Here again the men were struck with tumors.

5:10-12 When the ark was sent ... to Ekron, the people were extremely frightened, their fears being justified by a deadly destruction that killed many. The men who did not die broke out with tumors. They begged that the ark be sent back to Israel.

3. The Ark Restored (Chaps. 6, 7)

6:1-6 In seven short months ... the Philistines had gained a proper fear of the ark. They wanted to return it to Israel, but in the proper way so as to avoid further judgment. The heathen priests and ... diviners were consulted. They suggested returning the ark with a guilt or trespass offering of five golden tumors and five golden rats. It was common among these people to appease their gods and make indemnity with an offering of whatever had caused destruction among them. The reference to rats leads Bible students to think that the plague that afflicted the cities was the bubonic plague carried by fleas on rats. The priests further reminded them of Egypt's fate at the hands of Jehovah, and urged them not to harden their hearts as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened theirs, but to make every effort to return the ark ... to its proper place.

6:7-12 To make sure that the things which had happened to them were judgments of Jehovah, and not mere chance, the Philistine priests arranged the details of the return trip in a way that would evidence divine intervention. The two milk cows that were used to pull the cart had young calves and it would violate all natural instincts if they left their calves behind. The cows had never been yoked, yet they pulled well in a yoke together, turning aside neither to the right hand nor the left. Without being guided, the cows headed straight toward Beth Shemesh, in the territory of Judah!

6:13-18 The men of Beth Shemesh were reaping when the ark drew near. What a sight—two unattended cows bringing the ark of God back to Israel! Great rejoicing broke out. The cart was used to make a fire, and the cows were offered as a burnt offering to the LORD. The ark and the chest containing the trespass offering were placed on top of a large stone.

There is a spiritual parallel in the story of the cows of Beth Shemesh. Christian missionaries leave home and family and carry the message of the Lord to wherever the Lord guides them, turning neither to the right nor to the left. Unbelievers rejoice when they hear about the Lord. The missionaries are prepared for service or for sacrifice.

6:19-21 But the men of Beth Shemesh did not treat the ark of the LORD as holy; they had looked into the ark. As a result, God struck fifty thousand and seventy of them. Fearful of having the ark remain in their midst, the people sent messengers to the men of Kirjath Jearim, and asked them to take the ark. (It is doubtful that there were 50,070 men at Beth Shemesh. Josephus,[6] Keil and Delitzsch[7] and many other authorities say that the text should simply read seventy men, since the 50,000 is lacking in many Hebrew manuscripts.)

7:1-6 The ark was brought to the house of Abinadab in Kirjath Jearim, where it remained for twenty years. Then Samuel came forward and urged the people to return to the LORD so that God could deliver them from their Philistine oppressors. Idols were thrown away and the nation gathered to Samuel at Mizpah. There they fasted and repented before Jehovah. Their repentance was symbolized by pouring out ... water on the ground.

7:7-14 Hearing that the Israelites were at Mizpah, and supposing that a revolt was in the making, the Philistines attacked. The Hebrews, unprepared for war, were terrified. When they pleaded with Samuel to intercede for them, he offered a whole burnt offering (which it seems Levites could do—1 Chron. 23:26-31), and prayed. God subsequently routed the enemy miraculously with loud thunder, and Israel won the day. In gratitude Samuel ... set ... up ... a stone as a monument and named it "Ebenezer" (stone of help). Verse 13 refers only to a temporary victory, as is clear from the last part of the verse and from 9:16. Some land was also recovered at this time, and Israel enjoyed peace with her neighbors for a while.

7:15-17 After this, Samuel became a circuit judge, traveling through the cities of Israel and administering justice according to the law of the Lord. He lived in Ramah, his father's home, and built an altar ... there. We aren't told why he didn't return to the Lord's altar, now at Nob, nor why he allowed the ark to remain in Abinadab's house. But these were days of irregularities, many things being practiced which God allowed even though they weren't according to His original design.

Chapter 7 is a study in revival. God first raised up a man, Samuel, who called the people to repentance, confession, and cleansing. Intercession was made through the blood of a lamb (a type of Calvary's Lamb), and then there was victory. These are the steps to individual as well as national revival.

F. A King Demanded and Chosen (Chaps. 8, 9)

8:1-5 In his old age, Samuel tried to have his two sons succeed him as judges. But they were wicked men who accepted bribes and perverted justice. Like Eli before him, Samuel did not turn his sons from their evil ways, and so his house was rejected also. The elders of Israel refused to accept Joel and Abijah; they wanted a king instead, like the other nations.

8:6-18 It was God's intention, of course, that He Himself should be the King of Israel. His people were to be holy, and not like any other nation on earth. But they didn't want to be different; they wanted to conform to the world. Samuel was grieved by such a request, but the LORD told him to do as they said. After all, they had not rejected the prophet, but the LORD. In agreeing to their wishes, Samuel was to protest solemnly and to forewarn them as to the behavior of the king they would get. In brief, the king would enrich himself by impoverishing the people, would draft their young men and women for military and domestic duties, and would make virtual slaves of them. It was true that God had made provisions for the rule of kings in the law (Deut. 17:14-20), but His perfect will was that He Himself should be their King (8:7; 12:12). These laws in Deuteronomy were meant to curb the evil that was sure to follow.

8:19-22 When the people persisted in their demand, despite the warning, the Lord again told Samuel to do as they asked and make them a king. The prophet then sent the people home. Soon they would have their king.

9:1-14 Now Saul, the son of Kish (a Benjamite), enters the picture. While searching for his father's donkeys, he and his servant decided to inquire as to the animals' whereabouts from a man of God in a nearby city. With a small gift in hand, they approached the city and found out from some young women that the seer they were looking for would make an appearance that very day at a religious festival. As they hurried along, they met the man they sought. Little did Saul realize that the prophet was also looking for him!

9:15-21 On the preceding day the LORD had promised to direct Samuel to the man who was to be king. Now it was revealed to him that Saul was the man. But the prophet did not tell Saul immediately. First he invited him to a feast. The high place (i.e., a place set apart for worship) was usually connected with the worship of idols, but in this case it was for the worship of Jehovah. Samuel then told the tall, handsome Benjamite that he would have some important news for him in the morning. Apparently without being told of Saul's mission, Samuel told him that the donkeys had been found, and that he was not to be anxious. What were a few donkeys, anyway? He was soon to possess "all that is desirable in Israel." Saul took this statement with apparent modesty. Benjamin was certainly the smallest ... tribe in Israel. In the past their numbers had been reduced to 600 because of their wickedness (Judg. 20).

9:22-27 At the banquet Saul was given the place of honor and was served the choicest cut of meat. In the evening Samuel had a long talk with him. The next day Samuel detained Saul as he was leaving the city and revealed the word of God to him.

II. SAUL'S REIGN UNTIL HIS REJECTION (CHAPS. 10-15)

A. Anointing and Confirmation (Chaps. 10, 11)

10:1-6 Privately Samuel anointed Saul as ruler of Israel by pouring oil ... on his head. The priesthood had been inaugurated with anointing (Lev. 8:12), and now the first king was anointed in the same manner. A public ceremony would follow later. Three signs were then given to confirm the word of the Lord to Saul: (1) Two men would meet him at Rachel's tomb and tell him that his father's donkeys had been found; (2) three men would meet him at the oak of Tabor, en route to Bethel, and would give him two loaves of bread; (3) when he would come to "the hill of God" and would meet a group of prophets, ... the Spirit of the LORD would come upon him and he would prophesy.

10:7-9 After all these signs occurred, Saul was to go to Gilgal and wait seven days for Samuel to come and to offer sacrifices. All the signs in verses 2-6 took place that same day; the events in Gilgal occurred later (13:7-15).

It should not be concluded from verse 9 that Saul was genuinely converted. Actually, he was a man after the flesh, as his later history so evidently demonstrates. He was equipped for his official position as ruler of God's people by the Spirit even though he did not know God in a personal, saving way. In other words, he was God's man officially even though we believe he was not a true believer.[8]

10:10-16 The prophets were dedicated and zealous men, and it surprised the people to see Saul prophesying ... among them. This gave rise to the proverb: "Is Saul also among the prophets?" It became a common saying expressing surprise that Saul should engage in an activity that was so out-of-character for him. Saul's uncle (not his father, as we would expect) quizzed him about his discussion with Samuel. Saul mentioned his visit with Samuel but did not disclose that he had been privately anointed as king.

10:17-19 Meanwhile, Samuel assembled the people ... at Mizpah to announce the appointment of a king. Before making the actual announcement, he once again reminded them that their demand for a king was a rejection of the God who brought them out of Egypt and into the Promised Land. When Saul was selected he was hiding either because of modesty or fear. Matthew Henry gives four reasons why Saul might have been afraid:

> (1) Because he was conscious to himself of unfitness for so great a trust. ... (2) Because it would expose him to the envy of his neighbors that were ill-affected towards him. (3) Because he understood, by what Samuel had said, that the people sinned in asking a king, and it was in anger that God granted their request. (4) Because the affairs of Israel were at this time in a bad posture; the Philistines were strong, the Ammonites threatening: and he must be bold indeed that will set sail in a storm.[9]

10:20-27 Saul was brought forth and presented to the people as their king. A better physical specimen could scarcely be found in all Israel. Several valiant men attached themselves to Saul and accompanied him to his home in Gibeah, but not everyone was solidly behind the new monarch. Saul wisely held his peace in front of these rebels who despised him.

11:1-5 Jabesh Gilead was a city on the east side of the Jordan River in the territory belonging to Gad. When the Ammonites, the neighbors to the southeast, besieged the city, the inhabitants asked for terms of surrender. But Nahash wanted to maim them and make them a reproach in Israel by gouging out their right eyes. Surprisingly, the Ammonites allowed the elders of Jabesh to send for help. Perhaps Nahash was not fully prepared, or was not afraid that the rest of Israel would help Jabesh. Messengers were sent to Gibeah, where Saul was still working in the field. It was high time to assert himself as Israel's new king!

11:6-11 With the vividly threatening object lesson of a chopped up yoke of oxen, Saul summoned the nation to arms. The fear of the LORD came on the people. Israel and Judah combined mustered 330,000 strong at Bezek and marched all night to Jabesh, where they thoroughly routed the Ammonites.

11:12-15 Flushed with victory, the people wanted to kill those who formerly had not accepted Saul's rule. But Saul wisely stopped them. The fact that the LORD had given the victory was enough for him. Samuel then called a solemn assembly at Gilgal, and Saul's kingdom was renewed on a nationwide scale. There was no opposition this time. Gilgal speaks of spiritual renewal (Josh. 5:9).

B. Rebuke and Charge to the People (Chap. 12)

12:1-13 After the ceremony to renew the kingdom at Gilgal, Samuel spoke to all Israel. He first of all reminded them of his righteous rule as judge. No one could charge him with injustice. But in asking for a king, Israel had rejected this rule and God's sway over them. The Lord had been gracious in the past, raising up deliverers when they were needed. "Bedan" in verse 11 probably refers to Barak (NKJV marg., LXX and Syriac versions).[10] Samuel placed himself in the line of deliverers that began with Moses. But Israel was ungrateful for these past mercies and cried out for a king. The Lord working through His judges wasn't enough for them, so He gave them Saul.

12:14-18 In demanding a king, they committed a great sin. But if they would obey ... the LORD, even now He would bless them. If ... not, they would experience His wrath. As solemn proof, Samuel prayed down a great thunderstorm, an obvious sign from God because such a storm was unseasonal during the wheat harvest and too well-timed to be a fluke of nature.

12:19-25 Stark fear gripped the people and they implored Samuel to pray for them. His prayer had brought down judgment; it could also bring down mercy. To this he replied with another appeal to follow the LORD; that was the way to avoid judgment. As for him, he couldn't stop praying for them; to do so would have been sin. This important statement shows that prayerlessness is sin and not just carelessness.

C. Disobedience and Rejection (Chaps. 13-15)

1. Saul's Sinful Sacrifice (Chap. 13)

13:1 There are obvious difficulties with verse 1, as can readily be seen by reading the verse in different versions. The KJV andNKJV read: "Saul reigned one year; and when he had reigned two years over Israel ... " The ERV says: "Saul was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years over Israel ... " The RSV states: "Saul was ... years old when he began to reign, and he reigned ... two years over Israel." The NASB: "Saul was forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty-two years over Israel." Some manuscripts of the Septuagint simply omit the problem verse altogether! The most likely explanation for this confusion is that some letters were dropped out of the Hebrew text by careless copyists in later centuries.[11] We do know that Saul was a mature man when he came to power because his son Jonathan was old enough to go to war.

13:2-5 Saul had established a standing army of three thousand men. Jonathan took his detachment and successfully attacked the Philistine garrison ... in Geba, north of Jerusalem. This incited the Philistines to prepare a huge army for all-out war. (Some translations, following the Syriac and some manuscripts of the Septuagint, read 3,000 chariots in verse 5, a more likely number to accommodate the six thousand horsemen.)[12]

13:6-9 The Hebrews responded to the challenge with great cowardice; some even fled across the Jordan. They had been under the yoke for so long that breaking free seemed almost impossible; the Philistines possessed every advantage. As Saul waited for Samuel at Gilgal (see 10:8), more and more men were missing at each roll call. The seventh day began, but still Samuel failed to appear. With his forces diminishing and with war impending, Saul was moved by expediency to offer the burnt offering himself, even though he had no authority to do so, not being a Levite. Even if Samuel was late, that did not justify Saul's intruding into the priestly office.

13:10-14 Arriving immediately afterward, Samuel realized what Saul had done. What appeared to be valid excuses did not change the fact that Saul had disobeyed God. For this he would lose the kingdom. God had already found another man, one after His own heart. This was the first of several sins in Saul's life which resulted in his losing the throne of Israel. The others were: his rash vow (chap. 14); sparing Agag and the best of the spoil in the battle with the Amalekites (chap. 15); the murder of Ahimelech and eighty-four other priests (chap. 22); his repeated attempts on David's life (chaps. 18-26); and consulting the witch at En Dor (chap. 28).

13:15-23 Saul took his six hundred men and joined Jonathan at Gibeah. The Philistines, encamped a short distance away at Michmash, began sending out raiders to the north, west, and east, and Israel seemed helpless to halt them. The Philistines had been in such complete control for so long that they had removed every blacksmith from Israel. The Hebrews had to come to them to get their farm implements sharpened. Only a few men had swords. Things looked grim indeed.

2. Saul's Rash Vows (Chap. 14)

14:1-15 Seeing his father's inactivity, Jonathan slipped away with his armorbearer to attack the Philistines. This was not a brash stunt or a foolish suicide mission. Jonathan was looking to God to provide a great victory. It did not matter that there were only two of them. Jonathan's confidence was: "For nothing restrains the LORD from saving by many or by few." Jonathan's faith would be rewarded. God showed him that he would have success when the Philistines would invite him up, perhaps thinking he was a deserter. As soon as the Philistines said "Come up to us," ... Jonathan climbed up to their garrison, and soon laid twenty of their number in the dust. As the survivors fled, God sent an earthquake which caused great confusion in the Philistine camp. The faith evidenced by Jonathan (v. 6) and his armorbearer (v. 7) was all God needed to deal with the Philistines. Too bad that Saul's foolishness lessened the fruits of victory!

14:16-23 Saul's watchmen noticed the confusion and reported it to him. When the roll was called, Jonathan and his armorbearer were missing. Saul promptly called for Ahijah the priest to bring the ark so that he could inquire of the Lord. (The NKJV margin, following the Septuagint, reads ephod for ark.[13] The ark was probably still at Kirjath Jearim.) But Saul quickly changed his mind when the tumultuous noise among the enemy increased; he told the priest to withdraw his hand—i.e., to stop seeking the Lord's will (v. 19). He rallied his forces, convinced that he did not need divine guidance to know that the Lord was delivering the Philistines into his hands. Others also noticed that God was fighting for Israel. Those Hebrews who had previously defected turned on their Philistine masters, and even the men ... who had been hiding in the mountains of Ephraim found new courage to join the battle. Everyone wants to fight when victory is almost won, but where are the Jonathans to make the initial confrontation?

14:24-30 To ensure speedy success, Saul had rashly forbidden his soldiers under oath to eat anything until evening, when the battle was over. He sealed his order with a curse. Hunger caused his men to become fatigued and thus put them at a disadvantage. Not knowing of his father's edict, Jonathan ate some honey to regain his strength. When he was told about the curse, he mourned that Israel's triumph was to be hindered by such a stupid order.

14:31-42 Saul's restriction not only angered Jonathan, but it endangered the people as well. When the fighting was over, they rushed on the spoil, killed the livestock, and ate it without draining the blood, in violation of Leviticus 17:10-14 and Deuteronomy 12:23-25. When Saul heard this, he rebuked them and set up a large stone where animals were to be brought and slain properly. He also built an altar, his first. In his zeal, Saul wanted to pursue the Philistines into the night, so he again talked to the priest about consulting God. But God did not answer him. This led Saul to believe that there was sin in the camp. As was done in such cases, the lot was brought out, and to Saul's surprise, Jonathan was taken, that is, shown to be the guilty one by the way the lot came out.

14:43-46 Jonathan explained what had happened, and Saul, to save face, ordered him put to death. But the people showed more sense than did their king. Hadn't Jonathan ... worked with God to bring this great victory? How could God be displeased with him for breaking Saul's curse, when He had used him so mightily in battle? No, Jonathan would not die. Thus the hero was spared an undeserved death. But while Saul was engaged in such unnecessary nonsense, the Philistines fled. For the second time his lack of wisdom had diminished his victory.

14:47-52 Verses 47 and 48 summarize some of Saul's military victories. The next three verses give details concerning his family. The last verse is a fulfillment of Samuel's prediction that the king would draft Israel's valiant sons into military service (1 Sam. 8:11).

3. Saul's Incomplete Obedience (Chap. 15)

15:1-3 Saul was on a downward slide and accelerating as he neared the bottom. No matter what he was given to do, he came short of complete obedience. In this chapter he was commanded by God to destroy the Amalekites—the nation that had mercilessly ambushed the Hebrew stragglers when they had left Egypt ... on the way to Canaan (Deut. 25:17-19). The order was very clear; everything that breathed was to be destroyed; it was devoted to God. God's longsuffering had put up with the people of Amalek for years, but His word against them had not changed (Ex. 17:14-16; Num. 24:20). They were to be blotted out as punishment for their sin.

15:4-12 Saul gathered an army and marched south to a city of Amalek. Before attacking, he warned the Kenites to escape because these nomadic Midianites had shown kindness to ... Israel during the Exodus. This action showed that Saul was not just interested in carnage; rather, he was executing the vengeance of the Lord on a wicked people. He thoroughly defeated the Amalekites and put everything to the sword except the king and the best of the spoil. (A remnant, probably living elsewhere, also survived—see 30:1-6; 2 Sam. 8:12; 1 Chron. 4:43.) Miles away, the LORD informed Samuel of Saul's disobedience. This greatly disturbed Samuel and drove him to spend the night in prayer. By morning it was clear what he must do.

15:13-35 On the way to Gilgal, Saul stopped and built a monument, celebrating his victory. But Samuel saw things differently and challenged Saul for disobeying. Saul was never short of excuses, but the noise of his failure reached the prophet's ears and left Saul's excuses hanging in midair. Rejected*! Saul had heard that before (13:14). It came again with stunning force. Saul was constantly redefining the Lord's commands, doing what seemed best to him rather than what God said was best. He made a show of repentance and pleaded with Samuel not to abandon him. He even tore the prophet's robe when he tried to leave. This too was a sign that the kingdom would be torn ... from Saul and given ... to another man.

After accompanying Saul to worship the LORD, Samuel called for Agag to be brought forth. Thinking that he might be spared, Agag came to him cautiously saying, "Surely the bitterness of death is past" (v. 32). Samuel then hacked him in pieces with the sword. The aged judge carried a burden the rest of his life because of Saul's failure. In one sense even God regretted that He had made Saul king over Israel.

We should memorize verse 22. It is one of the classics in the Word of God. Obedience first, last, and always. It is the watchword of those who would serve and please the Lord. Erdmann comments:

> In the following words: To obey is better than sacrifice, the thought takes a new turn: apart from what alone is well-pleasing to God, only an obedient disposition of mind is in itself something good, the offering, without such a disposition, is not a good thing, has no moral value. ... So disobedience and the thence-resulting rebellion and defiant self-dependence is similar in essence to, stands on the same moral plane with the outward wickedness of witchcraft, that is, "divination in the service of anti-godly demonic powers" (Keil), and of idolatry.[14]

Verses 29 and 35 seem to be contradictory. The first says that God does not change His mind or relent, while the second says that He regretted making Saul king. Verse 29 describes God in His essential character. He is unchanging and unchangeable, the immutable One. Verse 35 means that a change in Saul's conduct required a corresponding change in God's plans and purposes for him. To be consistent with His attributes, God must bless obedience and punish disobedience.

III. DAVID'S LIFE UNTIL THE DEATH OF SAUL (CHAPS. 16-30)

A. Anointing by Samuel (16:1-13)

16:1-3 While Samuel was still grieving over Saul, the LORD told him bluntly to face the fact that Saul was rejected; God had chosen another man to rule His people. Samuel was to go to Bethlehem and anoint ... one of the sons of Jesse to be king. Secrecy is not the same as deceit. God was not telling Samuel to lie about his intentions in Bethlehem; he really did offer a sacrifice there. But the anointing of the new king was a secret affair, not to be made public for many years.

16:4-13 When Samuel came to Bethlehem, the elders ... trembled. After inviting Jesse and his sons ... to the sacrificial feast, he looked over the men one by one, confident that the next king was before him. But none was the Lord's choice. Samuel should have learned from his experience with Saul that the outward man is not nearly as important as the inner man (13:14). God judges the heart (v. 7). The principle of verse 7 has always been true: People do judge by looks, dress, and outward things. But today the mass media encourage this faulty outlook by using glamorous people in advertisements, television, and printed matter to such an extent that ordinary-looking people don't seem as satisfactory as they should. Saul was tall, dark, and handsome. Actually, David was good-looking, too (v. 12), but still looked too young for major service. Unfortunately the church, especially on television, has often emphasized, not spirituality, but superficial glamor—with disastrous results when these TV idols fall.

David had to be brought to the feast. He was so insignificant in his father's eyes that Jesse was sure the prophet wouldn't be interested in him. But the LORD was very interested in the shepherd boy, and Samuel, obeying God's voice, anointed ... David. From that point onward the Spirit of the LORD came powerfully upon David and left Saul. It would be years before David wore Saul's crown, but from this day forward the kingdom was secure for David.

B. Ministering to Saul (16:14-23)

About this time Saul became afflicted with a form of mental disorder caused by an evil spirit. The expression "a distressing spirit from the LORD" is explained by the fact that what God permits He is often said to do. Dr. Rendle Short analyzes the king's problem as follows:

> King Saul would now be diagnosed as a typical example of manic-depressive insanity. The periods of intense gloom with occasional outbreaks of homicidal violence for no particular reason, the delusion that people were plotting against him ... are unmistakable.[15]

Saul's servants suggested that the king find someone gifted in music to calm him. David's name was suggested, and Saul sent for him. Verse 18 shows that David had already made quite a name for himself, even before he faced Goliath. Now his music seemed to lift the king out of his depression. Saul liked him so well that he made David his personal armorbearer.

C. Defeating Goliath (Chap. 17)

17:1-11 The Philistines gathered their armies for battle near the Valley of Elah, southwest of Jerusalem and not far from Gath. Saul and his army assembled nearby, with the Valley of Elah between them. A champion by the name of Goliath came out of the Philistine camp daily for forty days, defying the armies of Israel to send him a worthy opponent. There were no volunteers. This giant was about nine feet nine inches tall and wore at least 175 pounds of armor. His iron spearhead alone weighed over fifteen pounds. The heavy weapons were no problem for Goliath, since he himself must have weighed somewhere between 600 and 750 pounds (possibly more, depending on his build). This gave him many times the strength of a normal man.

17:12-30 On one occasion, when David was bringing supplies to his three oldest brothers at the battlefront, he heard the taunts of the giant and saw the fear on the faces of the Hebrew soldiers. He asked what would be done for the man who silenced this swaggering brute. Eliab, his oldest brother, rebuked him, probably to mask his own cowardice, but David persisted in checking into the prizes that awaited the man who would kill the giant.

17:31-40 Saul soon got word that a young man had been found to fight for Israel, and David was brought before him. When Saul saw David, he had understandable doubts about the lad's ability. But David had known the power of God working through him when he defended his flock against the lion and the bear. He had proved God in private; now he could rely on God in public. Seeing his courage and determination, Saul gave him his own armor, but David discarded it because it was a hindrance to him. Instead, he went forth armed with five smooth stones, a sling, a staff, and the power of the living God!

17:41-54 When Goliath saw David, who was probably around twenty at this time, he was incensed that Israel should insult him by sending out what in his eyes was a mere child to fight him. But David had no trace of fear as he responded to the giant's curses. He had complete faith that the Lord would give him the victory. As Goliath moved toward him, David ... slung the first stone, hitting him in his forehead. The giant fell forward on his face. David then used the Philistine's own sword to kill him and cut off his head. When the Philistines saw this, they fled, with Israel in hot pursuit.

17:55-58 These verses[16] seem to present a problem: It is strange that Saul did not recognize David when he had already appointed him as his armorbearer (16:21). However, it should be noted that it does not say that Saul did not know who this young hero was; it simply says that he asked, "Whose son is this?" Saul could have easily forgotten David's family background. Williams comments:

> Saul, having promised exemption of taxation to the family of the victor, and the hand of his daughter in marriage with a handsome dowry, naturally asks Abner for information respecting David's father and his position in society ... .[17]

This seems to be confirmed by the fact that David later expressed his unworthiness to be the king's son-in-law (18:18). Michael Griffiths makes a good application:

> Both Jonathan (chap. 14) and David initiated action on a small front just where they were, but what they did led to great victories. There is a need for us alike to take the field locally. We cannot hope to take on the whole of the enemy force, but we do not have to do so. There is a work for Jesus ready at your "front." We are called to be bold and to take the initiative where we are. God will take care of the rest when, as a result of our action, the battle spreads along the whole front.[18]

D. Marrying Michal (Chap. 18)

18:1-5 A deep and lasting friendship sprang up between Jonathan and David. They were kindred souls, each possessing that rare quality of true courage. Jonathan was the legitimate successor to his father's throne, but in giving his robe ... to David he indicated that he was willing to forgo his right in order to see David crowned instead.

18:6-16 As David continued to win battle after battle, Saul became extremely jealous. When he heard the songs of the women ascribing to David greater exploits than to himself, he became livid with rage. God sometimes uses evil to chastise evil; that is why he allowed Saul to be tormented by a distressing spirit (v. 10). Twice the king tried to personally kill David, but both times David escaped. Then Saul made him ... captain over a thousand soldiers, perhaps hoping that David would be killed while fighting the Philistines. (It appears that he had formerly held a larger command.) But the LORD was with David, and his exploits attracted the attention of all Israel.

18:17-30 The king's daughter had been promised to the man who would kill the Philistine giant, so Merab, Saul's older daughter, was offered to David. However, more victories would have to be won first. Saul hoped David would be killed in the process. When David expressed his social unworthiness to be a son-in-law to the king, Merab ... was given to another man, which was perhaps Saul's way of trying to humiliate David. But Saul's younger daughter, Michal, loved David, and Saul agreed to give her to him, provided he produced a dowry of one hundred Philistine foreskins. Again Saul hoped to kill David by the hand of the Philistines. But David was not to be eliminated so easily. He returned with the bizarre dowry in double measure and won Michal as his bride. As continual military success made it clear that the LORD was with David, Saul's hatred and fear of him continued to grow.

E. Fleeing from Saul (Chaps. 19-26)

1. Jonathan's Loyalty (Chaps. 19, 20)

19:1-7 When Jonathan realized that his father intended to murder David, he advised David to hide ... in the field while he sought to pacify the king. In reasoning with Saul about David, Jonathan reminded him of David's bravery, loyalty, and success against Israel's enemy. He had done nothing worthy of death. Saul was temporarily conciliated and David was restored to his position in the royal court.

19:8-10 But when war broke out again, David once more distinguished himself, and Saul's jealousy was kindled afresh. The distressing spirit returned and Saul sought to pin David to the wall with his spear. This was the third time Saul missed. David barely escaped with his life.

19:11-17 That same night King Saul sent messengers to kill David at his house. Michal knew of the plot and helped him escape by putting the household image in his bed. (The idol probably belonged to her, since David was never an idolater.) When Saul sent the men to seize David, her subterfuge was discovered.

19:18-23 But by then David had escaped. He fled to Ramah to see Samuel. Men of God go to other men of God in time of trouble. Three times Saul's messengers failed to catch David because, when they came near the prophets who were with Samuel, they themselves began to prophesy under the control of the Spirit of God. Later, when Saul himself went after David, he too was gripped by the power of God. This divine overpowering, however, was not the same thing as conversion.

19:24 Once again the people repeated the proverb about Saul being among the prophets (10:11, 12). His fluctuating behavior must have been puzzling to them. The word "naked" does not mean absolutely nude. It simply means that Saul took off his outer garments, the symbol of his royalty. While God held Saul prostrate on the ground all that day and all that night, David escaped (20:1).

Verse 24 does not contradict 15:34, 35, which says, "Samuel came no more to see Saul." Here it was Saul who came to the prophet, and that unintentionally and quite unexpectedly.

20:1-3 After leaving Naioth, David came to Jonathan and tried to find out why Saul was so intent on his destruction. Apparently Jonathan knew nothing of his father's continued attempts on David's life. David explained that the king would not share his plans with Jonathan because of the friendship that existed between him and David.

20:4-9 A test was proposed that would make it plain whether David was in danger or not. Instead of taking his place at the royal table for the monthly feast, David would remain absent. If Saul inquired as to his absence, Jonathan would explain that he had gone to the yearly sacrifice at Bethlehem. (This might have been true, even though the trip is not recorded in Scripture. If it was a lie, it is simply recorded as a fact that is not approved by God.) If Saul didn't object, this would show that David was safe; but if the king became angry because David had once again slipped out of his hands, then Jonathan would know that David was in grave peril.

20:10-17 Jonathan promised to go ... into the field on the third day and let David know how things had gone by means of a prearranged sign. Perhaps sensing what the outcome would be, Jonathan asked David to show the loyal love of the LORD to him and to his house when he rose to power. It is clear from verses 14-17 that Jonathan believed that David would yet be king; but he reaffirmed his love to David even though he realized the throne rights, vested in him, would be David's. What unselfish devotion!

20:18-23 These verses detail the sign by which David would be notified as to the king's attitude. Jonathan would come to the field and shoot some arrows near a rock where David would be hiding. The directions he called to the lad who would fetch the arrows would tell David to flee for his life or to return to the court in safety. We might wonder why Jonathan arranged all this play-acting to communicate with David when he later went and talked with David directly anyway. At this time, however, he might not have known that he would be able to contact David without being seen.

20:24-34 On the first night of the feast, Saul said nothing about David's absence, reasoning to himself that David was probably ceremonially unclean. But on the second day, when he quizzed Jonathan about David's whereabouts and found that he had gone to Bethlehem, Saul flew into a rage, accusing Jonathan of befriending the man who would rob him and his mother of honor. His language was rough and his manner even rougher as he tried to pin his own son to the wall, transferring his hatred for David momentarily to Jonathan.

20:35-42 On the morning of the third day, the appropriate sign was given and David's fears were confirmed. The men wept in each other's arms; they must now travel separate paths, no longer to enjoy each other's companionship. David went into hiding, a necessary part of God's plan to prepare him for the throne. Jonathan went back to the royal court, remaining loyal to his father, yet knowing deep inside that he would not be Israel's next king. Should he have gone with David? Was he right in remaining loyal to his father, even though the Lord had rejected Saul from being king?

2. Ahimelech's Kindness to David (Chap. 21)

Even great men have feet of clay. David is no exception. This sad chapter records his lies before the tabernacle, now situated in Nob (vv. 1-9), and his pretended lunacy before the Philistines (vv. 10-15).

21:1-6 David had gone to Samuel (chap. 19) and to Jonathan (chap. 20), and now he comes to the high priest in his flight from Saul. Ahimelech was afraid of David, and wondered why he was traveling alone. (He did have a few companions with him who were waiting elsewhere—v. 2; Matt. 12:3.) David lied by saying that he was on a secret mission for the king. Then David asked for some bread. But all that was available was showbread, the holy bread used in the tabernacle for worship. The priest offered it to David, provided that his men were not ceremonially unclean through having sexual relations within the past few days. David said that his men were not only clean, but that they were holy (set apart) by virtue of their special mission. Shakespeare was right: "Oh what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive!" The showbread that had just been taken from the holy place was given to David.

In Matthew 12:3, 4, the Lord Jesus approved this unlawful use of the showbread, presumably because there was sin in Israel and David represented the cause of righteousness. If David had had his rightful place on the throne, there would have been no need for him to be begging bread. The law, which forbade the profane use of the bread, was not intended to forbid a work of mercy such as this.

21:7-9 Doeg, a servant of Saul, was detained before the LORD in Nob at the time. Though an Edomite, he had converted to the Hebrew religion, and was detained by a vow, by uncleanness, or by some other ceremonial requirement. He naturally observed Ahimelech's collaboration with David and carried the report back to Saul. Meanwhile, David made a second request, this time for weapons. Again he lied, saying that he was on an urgent mission for the king. Goliath's sword was produced and David eagerly took it, exclaiming that there was none other like it. He had trusted in the Lord to slay the giant, only to lapse into confidence in the sword of his slain enemy.

21:10-15 Then David left Israel and fled to the city of Gath, Goliath's hometown. Here he, the anointed king of Israel, sought refuge among the enemies of God's people. When the Philistines became suspicious of him, he was forced to act the madman to save his life. DeRothschild notes that David knew well "that the insane were held inviolable, as smitten but protected by the Deity."[19] And so the psalmist of Israel stood drooling in his beard as he scribbled on the doors of the gate. Because of the callousness of God's people and David's own lapse of faith, he was reduced to this disgraceful behavior.

But David learned some valuable lessons through this ordeal. Before going on to the next chapter, read Psalm 34, which was written about this time. In this psalm we gain new insight into David's character. He possessed a remarkable resilience which enabled him to grow in his knowledge of God despite his failures.

3. David's Escape and Saul's Slaughter of the Priests (Chap. 22)

22:1, 2 When David returned to Israel, he found shelter in the cave of Adullam, in the territory of Judah, southwest of Bethlehem. This became a place for all who were distressed, discontented, and in debt. David here is a type of Christ in His present rejection, calling the downhearted to Himself for salvation. In a short time, a small army of about four hundred men had gathered at Adullam; later it would expand to six hundred men. In the world these men were misfits, but under David they became mighty men of valor (2 Sam. 23).

22:3-5 David's parents had joined him too. Because of concern for their welfare, he traveled to ... Moab to make arrangements for them to stay there while he was in hiding. Though David was a descendant of Ruth, a Moabitess (Ruth 4:17), he was wrong in putting confidence in the Lord's enemies. (Tradition says that the Moabites eventually killed David's parents.) Soon after David returned, the prophet Gad told him to leave Adullam, so he went to the forest of Hereth, also in Judah.

22:6-8 In Gibeah, in the land of Benjamin, Saul was ranting to the Benjamites and to his servants against David. He asked them if David would reward them as generously as he had done. David, after all, was not from their tribe. Saul accused them of concealing from him plots against his life. By now he was completely paranoid and irrational. He saw everyone as being against him, even his own son.

22:9-15 Doeg the Edomite, wanting to make the most of his opportunity to impress the king, told Saul how Ahimelech the priest had helped David by giving him provisions and inquiring of the LORD for him. The priest and his family were promptly summoned to the king and charged with treason. In reply, Ahimelech cited David's loyalty to the king and his own innocence in helping a man whom he believed to be faithful to Saul. He pointed out that this was not the first time he had inquired of the Lord for David. As for Saul's accusation that David was rebelling against him and lying in wait for him, Ahimelech said he knew nothing at all about it.

22:16-19 Saul's actions prove that he was quite insane by now. When his guards refused to kill the priests of the LORD, Doeg, a Gentile "dog" in the true sense of the word, fell on them swiftly, little caring that they were priests, and slew eighty-five of them. As if that was not enough, he also attacked Nob, Ahimelech's city, and killed all the inhabitants and livestock.

22:20-23 Only Abiathar survived; he fled to David and told him what had taken place. Then he stayed with David and served as high priest until he was justly removed from office by Solomon (1 Kgs. 2:27). In one sense the death of the priests was the result of David's lying and scheming (v. 22). In another sense it was the judgment of God upon the house of Eli (2:31-36; 3:11-14). But Saul himself must bear the major share of the blame for the massacre, since he ordered it.

Prophet (Gad), priest (Abiathar), and king (David), all in exile together, picture Christ today as He waits until His enemies are made His footstool and His throne is set up on earth.

4. Keilah's Betrayal (Chap. 23)

23:1-5 News came to David that the city of Keilah, south of Adullam, was under attack by the Philistines. Guided by the LORD, he fought against the enemy, saved the town, and captured a large amount of livestock.

23:6-12 When Saul heard that David was in Keilah, he decided to trap him there. But David found out about the plot and asked the LORD for guidance as to his next move. Would he be safe in Keilah? Would the inhabitants turn him over to Saul despite the favor he had shown them? Through the ephod which Abiathar had brought, and more particularly through the Urim and Thummim, God revealed that when Saul would come, the ungrateful people would indeed betray David.

23:13-18 So David and his men fled to the Wilderness of Ziph, southeast of Hebron. But even there they were relentlessly pursued. It was there that Jonathan found David and encouraged him in the Lord. What a needed ministry today! The church would greatly benefit if there were more encouragers around. Only those who have experienced the power of a strengthening word spoken in season know the blessing it brings to the soul. Jonathan's love for David was self-abasing. He reassured David that God would fulfill His purpose for him, despite Saul. A man who has a friend like Jonathan is fortunate. Why he failed to stay with David, and always returned home, is an enigma.[20]

23:19-29 The Ziphites also betrayed David, sending news to Saul as to his whereabouts and promising to deliver the fugitive into the king's hand. When David heard that Saul was coming, he fled to the Wilderness of Maon with Saul in hot pursuit. Just when it seemed that he would be surrounded, the Philistines attacked Israel and Saul was forced to abandon the chase. Unwittingly, Israel's enemy served as an ally to Israel's rejected king. The son of Jesse then traveled to En Gedi, on the western shore of the Dead Sea.

5. Saul Spared (Chap. 24)

24:1-7 After the Philistine threat had been dealt with, Saul ... returned to hunt for David. He traced him to the rocky cliffs at En Gedi. While there, the king entered one of the caves for a rest stop. The cave he chose was not empty. Farther in, the man he ruthlessly hunted was restraining his men from taking the monarch's life! They thought God had delivered Saul over to them. But David knew of no command from God to take the kingdom by force. He was content to await God's time and method. Even when he cut off a corner of the king's robe, his conscience bothered him. He did not take lightly the fact that Saul had been anointed as Israel's king. God must remove this king; David was to respect him until the Lord removed him.

24:8-15 After Saul left, David ... went out of the cave and called after him. Bowing to the king, David told him that the slanderous reports to which he had listened were untrue. That very day David could have taken his life, but he did not because Saul was the LORD's anointed. The portion of the robe in David's hand was evidence of his kindness. A wicked man might want to avenge himself, but David had no such desire. He asked Saul why he should conduct such a relentless campaign against one who was as harmless and insignificant as a dead dog and a flea.

24:16-22 Temporarily moved to tears by David's words, Saul acknowledged the righteousness of David's behavior and his own wickedness. Surprisingly, he admitted that David would one day be king in Israel, and he made David take a solemn oath that he would deal kindly with his family. Then Saul left peaceably. But the respite David enjoyed was short. Saul soon forgot his kindness.

In David's words to Saul, he twice called on the LORD to act as Judge. He was content to leave his case in the hands of God rather than do what might seem right to the natural man. One of the things Peter remembered about our Lord was that "when He was reviled, [He] did not revile in return; when He suffered, He did not threaten, but committed Himself to Him who judges righteously" (1 Pet. 2:23). May God enable us to be as trustingly calm in the face of adversity!

6. Nabal's Folly (Chap. 25)

25:1-9 The death of Samuel brought to a close the period of the judges. The nation had now become a monarchy. David's descendants would occupy

Israel's throne forever, Christ being the fulfillment of the promise. The deep respect in which Samuel was held is indicated by the grief that swept across the nation when he died.

After the prophet's death, David ... went down to the Wilderness of Paran, in the southern part of Judah, perhaps to get further away from Saul and his murderous schemes. The Carmel mentioned in verse 2 was not the Mount Carmel which is in the north, but a town near Maon. Nabal was shearing his sheep there, and David, according to custom, sent some young men to ask for a gift in return for the protection he had provided for Nabal's flocks.

25:10-13 But Nabal answered David's servants in such a selfish and rude manner that David became enraged and started toward Carmel with about four hundred men to punish Nabal and his household.

25:14-22 Nabal's beautiful and discerning wife, Abigail, learned of the danger that her husband's ill-advised behavior had brought upon them. She quickly gathered a large supply of foodstuffs and went out to meet David. As David approached Carmel, he was rehearsing to himself the good he had shown Nabal and the contempt Nabal had shown him.

25:23-31 When Abigail met David, she prostrated herself at his feet and delivered a masterful and successful plea. She first admitted that her husband was true to his name (Nabal means fool or cad). When David's men had come earlier, she had not known about it. As she asked for forgiveness, she reminded him that the LORD had restrained him from ... bloodshed and that God would punish his enemies—even Nabal. She had real spiritual insight into who David was, the anointed of the Lord, and praised him sincerely for fighting the battles of the LORD. How much better it would be when he became king if he did not have to look back on a time when he had stretched out his own hand and avenged himself instead of leaving his enemies to the vengeance of the Lord!

25:32-35 David was deeply impressed by these words of diplomacy and thanked her for preventing him from destroying Nabal. The Lord knows how to bring the right people into our lives to direct us and warn us. We should be thankful that He does. Abigail's advice was effective; her generous gift was accepted. David left Nabal with the Lord. God wasn't long in acting. Some might argue that Abigail violated God's order by not consulting her husband and by usurping authority over him. Yet the Bible does not suggest that she acted wrongly. On the contrary, she probably saved Nabal and his household from destruction by her emergency action.

25:36-44 When Abigail returned home, Nabal ... was very drunk. She waited until the next day to tell him what had happened. When he heard the news, he was probably seized with paralysis, a stroke, or a heart attack. Ten days later he died, leaving behind all the possessions he had selfishly hoarded to himself. Hearing of Nabal's death, David soon sent a proposal of marriage to Abigail, which she accepted with great humility. David had also acquired another wife, Ahinoam, since he had gone into hiding. Meanwhile, Michal, his first wife, had been given to another man.

In this story we see afresh that whoever exalts himself will be humbled (Nabal was killed by God), and she who humbles herself will be exalted (Abigail became the wife of the king) (Luke 14:11).

7. Saul Spared a Second Time (Chap. 26)

26:1-4 Once again the Ziphites reported David's whereabouts to Saul (cf. 23:19). Saul promptly gathered a force five times larger than David's meager band and went down to the Wilderness of Ziph. We are not told what happened to incite Saul anew. When the two men had last parted, they seemed somewhat reconciled (chap. 24). Maybe evil men had stirred up the king's hatred afresh (see v. 19).

26:5-12 David spied out Saul's camp, and in the evening he and his relative, Abishai, penetrated the camp and came to where Saul was sleeping. An unnatural slumber from the Lord made this possible. Abishai wanted to strike the king with a quick blow, but David forbade any such action because, although Saul was a wicked man, he was the LORD's anointed. It was the Lord's responsibility to deal with him. David took Saul's spear and jug of water and left.

26:13-16 When David was safely outside the camp, he raised his voice and taunted Abner for his carelessness in guarding the king. Such negligence was worthy of death. The jug and spear which David had taken told of Saul's second deliverance from death at his hand.

26:17-20 What still puzzled David was why King Saul pursued him so untiringly when he had proven that he meant him no harm. If the Lord had stirred ... up Saul against David, then David could satisfy Him by presenting a sacrificial offering. But if ... men had incited Saul's hostility, then they should be cursed because they were driving David away from the only sanctuary where he could worship God. The expression "Go, serve other gods" (v. 19b) was what these evil men were saying by their actions, if not by their words. David asked that he might not die "away from the presence of the Lord," i.e., in a foreign land (v. 20, NASB). Saul was hunting a flea as ... one hunts a partridge in the mountains.

26:21-25 Saul apparently repented when he realized that David had spared his life again. He acknowledged that David was more righteous than he, for he sought David's life without cause, whereas David spared his life, though he could have killed the king in self-defense. David made a final appeal to the LORD to take note of his righteousness. Then Saul responded to David with a blessing and a prophecy of future greatness for his "son David."[21] David went on his way, and Saul returned to his city.

F. Living in Philistia (Chaps. 27-30)

1. Ziklag Acquired (Chap. 27)

27:1-4 The pressure of constantly running from place to place one step ahead of death finally took its toll on David. In spite of the Lord's miraculous care for him, David's faith wavered. He lost sight of the fact that he was the anointed king of Israel. Would God appoint him king and then allow him to be killed before he could reign? Would God deliver him from the hand of Goliath only to deliver him into the hand of Saul? No, but circumstances have a way of distorting one's outlook. Present danger often obscures the promises of God. David fled to the land of the Philistines again and contacted Achish, ... king of Gath. It had been a long time since he was here last, and Achish was probably aware that he was a fugitive. This heathen king welcomed him warmly, seeing in him a valiant warrior and an ally against Israel. This is not necessarily the same Achish that David met in 21:10, since "Achish" was a royal name among the Philistines.[22] When Saul heard that David had fled the country, he stopped hunting for him.

27:5-7 The last time David had been in Gath (chap. 21), the servants of Achish had been suspicious of him and had tried to have him killed. David had not forgotten this. With a show of modesty, he now refused to dwell in the capital city and asked for a city of his own. He was given Ziklag, a city close to Israel's border that originally belonged to ... Judah (Josh. 15:31).

27:8-12 During his sixteen-month stay with the Philistines, David made raids against the Geshurites, the Girzites, and the Amalekites. These people were heathen inhabitants of Canaan whose destruction had been ordered by God (Ex. 17:14; Josh. 13:13; 1 Sam. 15:2, 3). Even in exile, David was fighting the Lord's battles. This presents quite a paradox: He could trust the Lord to preserve him for victory over Israel's enemies, but he could not trust Him for protection from Saul!

2. Saul's Doom Foretold (Chap. 28)

28:1, 2 Now David's position became extremely difficult. The Philistines were going to war against Israel, and David was ordered by the king to join them. To this he seemed to agree, although his words in verse 2 are capable of two meanings—"You will know what your servant can do to assist you" or "You will know what your servant can do to double-cross you!" Achish chose the first meaning and made David a member of his personal bodyguard.

28:3-8 The rival armies gathered in the northwest of Israel at the plain of Esdraelon (the valley of Armageddon). The Philistines encamped ... at Shunem, and Israel ... at Gilboa. When Saul failed to get any response from the LORD, either by dreams or by Urim or by the prophets, he sought out a spirit medium. Earlier he had ordered all the mediums in Israel killed or exiled, according to the law. Now when a medium was located in the nearby town of En Dor, Saul disguised himself and ... went to her to seek counsel from the dead.

28:9, 10 The medium's first concern was for her own safety. She reminded her visitor of the king's edict against mediums and ... spiritists. How Saul could promise protection in the name of the LORD, who had decreed the death of such persons, or how the medium could be assured of safety by an oath sworn to that God, is an enigma.

28:11-14 Commentators are disagreed as to what actually happened next. Some feel that an evil spirit impersonated Samuel, while others believe that God interrupted the séance unexpectedly by allowing the real Samuel to appear. The latter is preferred for the following reasons: The medium was startled by the sudden appearance of Samuel in place of the familiar spirits with whom she was used to dealing. Also, the text specifies that it was Samuel. Finally, the spirit prophesied accurately what would happen the following day.

28:15-19 Saul told Samuel why he had summoned him from the realm of the dead. Samuel's rebuke must have cut the king deeply. Did he think Samuel could help him when the God whom Samuel served remained silent? Instead, Samuel confirmed Saul's deepest fears. The kingdom would be taken from him and given to David, as he had been told earlier. The Philistines would defeat Israel the next day, and Saul ... and his sons would join Samuel in death. This does not mean that they shared the same eternal destiny. If we judge them by their fruits, it would appear that Saul was an unbeliever whereas Jonathan was a man of faith.

28:20-25 All Saul's sins would be visited on him before another nightfall. With difficulty he was prevailed upon to eat something before he went on his way. The fatted calf was killed, but not for the purpose of celebrating. Shrouded in gloomy silence, the condemned man ate his final meal before disappearing into the night.

3. David Discharged by Achish (Chap. 29)

29:1-5 As the Philistines gathered together for battle, David and his men joined them, marching with Achish ... at the rear of the column. Some of the princes of the Philistines wisely objected to David's presence. They realized that he might turn on them during the battle. How could he better reconcile himself to King Saul than by producing a row of Philistine heads? Was this not the David who had been praised as the killer of more Philistines than Saul himself?

29:6-11 Their arguments were reasonable, so Achish requested David to return to Ziklag. David's answer seems unworthy of a man of God. He protested that he should be allowed to enter the fight against "the enemies of my lord the king"—even though these enemies were his own people. David had lied to Achish before (chap. 27), and this was probably another attempt to deceive the Philistines. If, as seems unlikely, he actually intended to fight against Israel, God prevented it and saved him from the shame of killing his fellow Israelites and strengthening the arm of the Philistines against them. David would not be allowed to use Goliath's sword against Israel.

4. Amalekites Defeated (Chap. 30)

30:1-6 While David had been marching north with the armies of Achish, the Amalekites had raided Ziklag and taken ... the women and children captive. Thus when David returned he found only the smoldering remains of his city. Was this possibly a judgment of God upon him for joining the Philistines? If so, David showed his great insight into the character of God, because he went to Him for comfort when everything and everyone was against him. He knew there was no one to turn to for strength in such an overwhelming crisis except the LORD, of whom it is said, "He has torn, but He will heal us; He has stricken, but He will bind us up" (Hos. 6:1).

30:7-15 After inquiring of the Lord, David went out after the Amalekites, assured of success. Two hundred of his men (one third) could travel no farther than the Brook Besor because they were emotionally drained from their recent loss and physically exhausted from their three-day march to Ziklag. David left them there and went south with the remaining four hundred men, tired yet pursuing. In a short while they found an ailing Egyptian in the field who had been left ... behind by his Amalekite ... master to die. He was given food and water and soon regained a measure of strength. In return for promised safety, he led David to the Amalekite camp.

30:16-25 The last thing the drunken Amalekites expected was a surprise guest at their victory celebration. David sprang like a leopard on the revelers and completely overpowered the much larger force. Only four hundred young men ... escaped the sword, riding off on camels. The Hebrew captives were freed unharmed and an immense amount of spoil was taken, all in less than twenty-four hours. David was given the sheep and cattle captured from the Amalekites as his portion; but some of his men didn't want to share the rest of the spoil with their comrades who had stayed behind at Besor. David made ... an ordinance that those who "stayed by the stuff" would share equally with those who went out to the battle (see also Num. 31:27).

30:26-31 David divided his spoil into gifts for various friends back in Judah. These presents were sent to all the places where he was accustomed to rove. They evidenced that God had prospered him against his enemies. He might also have been trying to cement his friendships to gain support in his struggle against Saul, not realizing that Saul was now dead.

IV. SAUL'S DEATH (CHAP. 31)

31:1-6 Whereas David enjoyed success in battle, Saul met defeat. The Israelites were pushed back and the king's three sons were slain. Saul himself was severely wounded by the archers. As he lay dying on Mount Gilboa, he begged his armorbearer to kill him, lest the Philistines find him alive and abuse him. But the man was ... afraid to strike the king, so Saul took his own life, falling on ... a sword. Shortly thereafter, his armorbearer did the same.

31:7-13 Israel now became totally demoralized, and they retreated before the invading army. When the Philistines came to strip the dead and found Saul and his three sons among the fallen, they cut off Saul's head and sent word throughout their land. His body and the bodies of his sons were taken to Beth Shan and hung on the city's wall. When the men of Jabesh Gilead heard of this, they marched the ten miles to recover the bodies. The remains were given a proper burial under the tamarisk tree at Jabesh. These men had not forgotten how Saul had saved them from the Ammonites in his first major battle as king (chap. 11). Cremation was not generally practiced in Israel. Perhaps it was used here because the bodies had been so mutilated. Also, it would prevent the Philistines from the possibility of ever dishonoring the bodies still further.

God's judgment on Saul was now complete (see notes on 1 Chron. 10). Many times Saul had tried to arrange for David to be killed by the Philistines, but he himself was the one to eventually fall before them. David received the throne as appointed by God. Saul received the just recompense of his deeds, according to the justice of the Lord to which David often committed him.

SECOND SAMUEL

"David the king is the great figure of this Book; and, when walking in the Light, presents a rich type of Messiah the King. The first part of the Book records the victories which accompanied his life of faith and conflict; the second part relates the defeats he suffered when prosperity had seduced him from the path of faith and had opened the door to self-will."

COMMENTARY

I. DAVID'S RISE TO POWER (CHAPS. 1-10)

A. Lament over Saul and Jonathan (Chap. 1)

1:1-16 First Samuel 29 records how the Lord kept David out of the battle in which Saul and Jonathan lost their lives. Instead, he was busy fighting the Amalekites, who had raided Ziklag (1 Sam. 30). After he had returned to Ziklag, a messenger came to him from the north with news of Saul's death. The messenger wore torn ... clothes and had dust on his head—symbols of mourning. He told how he had found Saul, leaning wounded on his spear as the enemy's forces drew near. He said that Saul asked him, an Amalekite, to administer the death blow, and that he complied with the king's request. This account of Saul's death is obviously in conflict with the one in 1 Samuel 31, where Saul is said to have committed suicide. The most reasonable explanation is that the Amalekite's account was a lie. He thought that David would be pleased to meet Saul's slayer and would reward him handsomely. Instead, David mourned deeply all that day, and then at evening he ordered the execution of the Amalekite because he had slain the Lord's anointed.

The Amalekites were the inveterate enemies of Israel (Ex. 17). One reason Saul lost the kingdom was because he had failed to thoroughly execute the Lord's wrath on them (1 Sam. 15). Some Amalekites had recently been killed by David and his men for their plunder of Ziklag. So when this Amalekite arrived in camp and announced that he had killed Saul, it is little wonder that he received the sword and not a reward.

1:17, 18 It was surely a mark of greatness on David's part that instead of rejoicing over Saul's death, he wept bitterly.

O. von Gerlach sees a parallel between David and Christ here:

> The only deep mourning for Saul, with the exception of that of the Jabeshites (1 Sam. xxxi. 11), proceeded from the man whom he had hated and persecuted for so many years even to the time of his death;

just as David's successor wept over the fall of Jerusalem, even when it was about to destroy Himself.[1]

David also composed a moving lamentation entitled "The Song of the Bow." The Book of Jasher, or the "Book of the Upright," was probably a collection of poems concerning great men of the nation of Israel (see also Josh. 10:13). As far as is known, it is no longer in existence and certainly is not part of inspired Scripture.

1:19-27 David's stirring ode laments the death of Saul and Jonathan—the beauty of Israel. In majestic poetry, it cautions against letting the cities of the Philistines know of the death of the king and his sons lest they rejoice. The mountains of Gilboa, where Saul died, are called upon to suffer drought and barrenness. There the shield of Saul was cast down unanointed with oil (v. 21); that is, it was discarded and no longer oiled for battle. Tribute is paid to the bravery of Saul and of Jonathan (v. 22) and their personal virtues. They were together in their death as they had been in their lives (v. 23), but this should not be pressed to include their eternal destiny. Those who benefited from Saul's reign are called on to weep (v. 24). The poem closes with a loving eulogy of Jonathan, David's close friend. The refrain "How the mighty have fallen" (vv. 19, 25, 27) has become part of our language.

B. Coronation as King of Judah (2:1-7)

2:1-7 With Saul dead and Israel without a king, David sought guidance from the LORD and was directed to go to Hebron, one of the cities of Judah. There the men of Judah ... anointed him as their king. When they informed him how the men of Jabesh Gilead had kindly buried Saul, David immediately sent a message of thanks to them and rather indirectly invited them to recognize him as king, as the men of Judah had done.

C. Conflict with Saul's House (2:8-4:12)

2:8-11 But not all the tribes of Israel wanted to recognize David as their monarch. Abner, the commander-in-chief of the late Saul and also his uncle, took Saul's only surviving son, Ishbosheth, and proclaimed him king. For seven years and six months ... David reigned over the lone tribe of Judah, with Hebron as his capital. However, it was for only two of these years that Ishbosheth ... reigned over the other eleven tribes. It may have taken Abner five years to push the Philistines back out of Israel and establish Ishbosheth on his father's throne.

David had never asserted his right to the throne. Neither did he do so now. Rather, he chose to leave the matter in the hands of the Lord. If Jehovah had anointed him as king, Jehovah would subdue his enemies and bring him into the possession of his kingdom. The Lord Jesus similarly awaits the Father's timing to reign over the entire globe. His dominion is recognized only by a minority of mankind now, but there is an appointed day in which every knee will bow and every tongue will confess that Jesus Christ is Lord (Phil. 2:10, 11).

2:12-17 In the course of time, Abner, the son of Ner, the captain of the army of Israel (the 11 tribes) met Joab, the son of Zeruiah, the military leader of David's soldiers, at Gibeon. Seated at opposite sides of a pool, they decided to let some of their young men engage in a contest to determine who was militarily superior. When Abner suggested that the young men should arise and hold a contest, he did not expect that they would play. It was a military engagement. The twelve Benjamites fought the twelve men of Judah, and they destroyed each other. Since the result was inconclusive, a very fierce battle broke out between the rest of the men, with the result that Abner's men ... were beaten and fled in disarray.

2:18-23 One of Joab's brothers, the swift-footed Asahel, chased Abner with the intent to kill him. At first Abner tried to persuade Asahel to be satisfied with capturing one of the young men. It seems that Abner realized that he could easily kill Asahel, but he did not want to do it because it would further antagonize Joab. When Asahel would not listen to Abner's second plea to stop pursuing him, Abner turned on him in self-defense and killed him with the blunt end of his spear.

2:24-32 Joab and his other brother, Abishai, continued to chase until they came to the hill of Ammah. There Abner pled with Joab to stop this needless civil war. Joab's reply may be understood in two ways. First, it may mean that if Abner had not issued the original challenge (in verse 14), then the young men would have gone home peaceably. Or it may mean, as in the NIV, that if Abner had not called for a truce, then the young men would have continued chasing their brethren until morning. In any case, Joab agreed to stop fighting. Abner and his men ... crossed over ... to Mahanaim, on the east side of the Jordan River where Ishbosheth had his capital. He had lost three hundred and sixty men. Joab and his soldiers returned to Hebron, with only nineteen men ... missing.

3:1-5 During David's seven-and-a-half years at Hebron, his kingdom grew stronger while Saul's house, ruled by Ishbosheth, grew weaker. David's family also grew larger. When he first came to Hebron, he had two wives, Ahinoam and Abigail. Contrary to God's will, he married four more—Maacah, Haggith, Abital, and Eglah. By these six wives he had six sons, three of whom were to be a grief to him—Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah. (He had other sons later.)

3:6-11 While professedly serving Ishbosheth, Abner was actually strengthening his own political position because he saw the balance of power shifting to David. Ishbosheth accused Abner of having relations with Rizpah, a concubine of Saul, and probably interpreted this as an indication that Abner wanted to seize control of the eleven tribes. Whether Abner was guilty of this we do not know; he denied it vigorously and disrespectfully, and announced that he would transfer his allegiance and that of the tribes of Israel to David. Ishbosheth was powerless to resist. "Am I a dog's head that belongs to Judah?" (v. 8) means "Am I a worthless, contemptible traitor who has been loyal to Judah in the past?"

3:12-16 Abner now sent messengers ... to David, offering to turn over all Israel to him. Before David would agree to Abner's proposal, he demanded that Michal, Saul's daughter, be returned to him, hoping thereby to strengthen his claim to Saul's kingdom. Ishbosheth meekly assented and Michal was brought to David—to the great grief of her husband, Paltiel. David's personal life thus became further entangled, and another dark chapter was written in his biography.

3:17-21 Abner then went to the tribe of Benjamin and to the other tribes that had followed Ishbosheth and told them that David was God's promised means of saving them from the oppression of the Philistines. Since their response was apparently favorable, he visited David and expressed his readiness to gather all Israel together in a great expression of allegiance.

3:22-30 While Abner was leaving David to carry out this plan, Joab returned to the royal house and heard of the day's events. After rebuking the king for so foolishly entertaining a spy, he secretly sent out soldiers to bring Abner back. As soon as Abner ... returned to Hebron, Joab pretended he wanted a private interview near the gate, but his real purpose was to kill Abner in revenge, which he did by stabbing him in the stomach, thus avenging his brother Asahel's death and eliminating a potential rival as commander-in-chief. Joab seemed unconcerned that Hebron was a city of refuge, where Abner was at least entitled to a trial (Num. 35:22-25). The expression "one ... who leans on a staff" (v. 29) may mean a cripple. In the NASB it is rendered "one who takes hold of a distaff" (that is, an effeminate man). The RSV similarly translates "one who holds a spindle," meaning unfit for war or heavy work.

3:31-39 David proclaimed a great time of mourning for Abner but took no action against Joab for murdering him. It grieved the king that Abner should have died so ingloriously, since his courage and power deserved a more honorable death. The thought in verse 33 may be, "Did Abner die like an inexperienced fool, who knew not how to defend himself?" And the intended answer is "No, he fell victim to a deceitful, wicked plot."[2] The people knew by the king's sorrow that Joab had acted independently. In fact, David publicly expressed his displeasure at the cruelty of the sons of Zeruiah (Joab and Abishai) and called on the Lord to punish them. In chapter 3 we have seen God using the sin and intrigue of men to give the united kingdom to David. He makes even the wrath of men to praise Him (Ps. 76:10).

4:1-7 Abner's death weakened the kingdom of Ishbosheth still further. As soon as the army had lost its powerful leader, two rebels rose up—Baanah and ... Rechab—and assassinated the king. They were able to do this by entering the house while Ishbosheth was taking his siesta. They pretended that they had come to pick up some wheat. The RSV of verse 6, following the Septuagint, reads, "And behold, the doorkeeper of the house had been cleaning wheat, but she grew drowsy and slept; so Rechab and Baanah his brother slipped in." This left only one male heir to the throne of Saul, a crippled lad by the name of Mephibosheth.

4:8-12 Rechab and Baanah brought the head of Ishbosheth to David in hopes of winning his favor. These wicked men tried to suggest that the LORD had prompted their action. But David knew better than that! God would not lead men to break His law in order to enthrone His king. God was well able to fulfill His promises to David without enlisting the aid of murderers. David told them that they were more guilty than the one who claimed to have murdered Saul, and ordered them to be slain immediately. Their bodies were exposed to the shame of public display, while the head of Ishbosheth was honorably buried in the tomb of Abner.

Jerusalem: David's City. David took the fortress called Jebus and renamed it the "City of David." This established his kingship militarily and politically. He then established his religious leadership by moving the ark of the covenant to the City of David. Solomon later expanded northward to Mt. Moriah and built the temple and the royal palace.

D. Coronation as King over All Israel (Chap. 5)

5:1-5 With words of loyalty and allegiance, the eleven tribes of Israel now joined Judah in acknowledging David as rightful king. Those who came are enumerated in 1 Chronicles 12:23-40. Thus began a reign over the united nation that was to last thirty-three years. In all, David's reign lasted forty years.

Verse 3 records David's third anointing. He was first anointed by the prophet Samuel (1 Sam. 16:13). Then he was anointed as king over the house of Judah in Hebron (2:4). Now he was finally anointed as rightful king by the entire nation.

5:6-10 One of King David's first military acts was to capture the fortress on Mount Zion from the Jebusites. These heathen warriors considered their city so invincible that it could be defended by the lame and the blind. David detected a weak point in the city's water system; he ordered his men to climb up through an underground watercourse which the Jebusites used to bring water to the city from a fountain below. The strategy was successful, and Jebus became Jerusalem, also called the City of David, the capital of the nation of Israel. The latter part of verse 8 looks back to the Jebusite taunt in verse 6, which later became a common saying: "The blind and the lame shall not come into the house." The Millo was a part of the fortification of the ancient city. (The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 11 reveals that Joab led the successful attack on the city and thus secured his place as commander of David's forces.)

5:11-16 Hiram, the Gentile king of Tyre, sent materials and workmen to build a palace for David in Jerusalem. David took more concubines and wives while at Jerusalem, in violation of Deuteronomy 17:17, and additional sons and daughters were born to him. The royal line of the Messiah is traced through Solomon. There are two other lists of the sons born to David in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 3:5-8; 14:3-7), with minor variations (mostly in spelling) among the three lists.

5:17-21 Disturbed by news of Israel's unity and strong central government, the Philistines decided to attack. They gathered their forces at the Valley of Rephaim, south of Jerusalem. Assured of victory by the Lord, David attacked the foe and defeated them. He called the place Baal Perazim, meaning Baal is broken (NKJV marg.) or the master of breakthrough (NASB marg.). The Lord had made breaches in the ranks of the enemy there. The images which the Philistines abandoned were seized by David (v. 21) and burned (1 Chron. 14:12) so as not to become stumbling blocks to future generations.

5:22-25 Sometime later, the Philistines returned to this same Valley of Rephaim and threatened Israel. This time the LORD told David to circle around behind the enemy forces, opposite some mulberry trees. When he heard the sound of marching in the tops of the mulberry trees, he would know that the LORD was marching against the Philistines. The result was that David destroyed the foe from Geba to Gezer. Geba probably should read Gibeon (NKJV marg., LXX, and 1 Chron. 14:16.)[3] Note that David did not assume that God's guidance for one battle (v. 19) would be the same for the next (v. 23). We must constantly seek God's will in everything. God's strategy in the first battle was direct assault; in the second, ambush.

E. The Ark Brought to Jerusalem (Chap. 6)

The events in chapter 6 did not take place immediately after those recorded in chapter 5. Second Samuel does not always follow a strict chronological order.

6:1-7 The last time we read about the ark of God was in 1 Samuel 7:1, 2. It had been sent back by the Philistines and was placed in the house of Abinadab in Kirjath Jearim. Many years passed. Then David decided to bring it to Jerusalem, in order that the city might be the religious as well as the political capital. So he took thirty thousand ... men ... of Israel to Baale Judah (the same as Kirjath Jearim) to get it. God had instructed that the ark was to be carried on poles, supported on the shoulders of the Kohathites (Num. 7:9). Instead, David made a new cart and with great jubilation brought ... the ark ... to the threshing floor of Nachon (called Chidon in 1 Chron. 13:9). There the oxen stumbled, and the ark was in danger of falling off the cart. So Uzzah, a son of Abinadab, steadied the ark with his hand. Since it was forbidden for even the priests to touch the ark (Num. 4:15), Uzzah was instantly struck dead by the Lord.

It has frequently been asked why God struck Uzzah for touching the ark when the Philistines often touched it without being destroyed. The answer seems to be that "the nearer a man is to God, the more solemnly and speedily he will be judged for any evil." Judgment must begin at the house of God.

> Was God's action too severe? We feel free to judge God because we lack a sense of His awesome holiness and majesty. The Ark was as close to a visible representation of God Himself as men would see until Jesus. Uzzah disregarded this. His death was a lasting lesson to the Israelites to take seriously the glory of their God. Do our language and our actions demonstrate that we mean it when we pray "Hallowed be Thy Name"? (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

6:8-11 David protested to the LORD against this solemn judgment and temporarily abandoned his plan to bring the ark ... into the City. Rather, he had it placed in the house of Obed-Edom, probably near Jerusalem.

The LORD greatly blessed the household of Obed-Edom during the three months ... the ark was in his house.

6:12-15 Hearing of this blessing, King David decided to bring the ark of God to Jerusalem. The account in 1 Chronicles 15:13-15 tells us that during these three months David investigated the Scriptures to see how the ark was to be transported. The new cart was abandoned and the Levites carried the ark on their shoulders. After the bearers moved forward cautiously for six paces to make sure the Lord wasn't still displeased, David sacrificed oxen and fatted sheep. Then, with dancing in the streets, the ark was brought to a temporary tent in the City of David. (It is likely that Psalm 68 was written at this time.) The king himself was so elated that he danced before the LORD with all his might. David was wearing a linen ephod instead of his customary royal clothes.

6:16-23 His wife, Michal, looked through a window and saw him dressed in an ephod, acting in a manner which she considered unworthy of a king. When he returned home, she falsely accused him of indecently dancing in public. ("Uncovering" in verse 20 must be understood in the light of verse 14.) He answered that his dancing was an expression of his joy in the Lord and intimated that he did not intend to stifle his enthusiasm for the things of God. He would let himself be even more despised by men and humble in his own sight, but he would be held in honor by the "slave girls" Michal had spoken of. Because of her critical attitude, Michal suffered the reproach of bearing no children to the day of her death. This is a needed reminder that a critical spirit stifles fruitfulness.

F. God's Covenant with David (Chap. 7)

7:1-5 David felt that it was unsuitable for him to be dwelling in his fine home while the ark of God was kept inside tent curtains. So he notified Nathan the prophet of his intention to build a house for the ark. Nathan at first approved, apparently because he acted without consulting the Lord. Then the word of the LORD came to him, informing him that David would not be allowed to build a temple for Jehovah.

7:6-11 The LORD reminded Nathan that He had dwelt in a tent from the time of the Exodus from Egypt. The tent was suitable for the people of Israel as long as they were on the move. The time had now come for a settled temple.

7:12-15 Then the LORD revealed to Nathan an unconditional covenant which He would make with David. This covenant promised that David would have a son (Solomon) who would build the temple; that this son's throne would be established forever; that when he would sin, God would correct him, but His mercy would not cease.

7:16, 17 It further promised that David's house, his kingdom, and his throne would be established forever, and that his own descendants would sit upon the throne. David's dynasty has been interrupted since the Babylonian captivity, but it will be restored when Christ, the Seed of David, returns to reign over all the earth. Jensen elaborates:

> David wanted to build a temple for God, but Solomon was given the privilege. Undoubtedly the character of David's life work for God was fighting, not building. But even by this fighting he was clearing the way for another to lay the foundation of that house of worship which his heart had so fondly desired to build. After the warring was over, Solomon erected the temple from materials which David had prepared. David represents Christ in His suffering and victory over the great enemy. Solomon represents Christ in His glory after the suffering and the conflicts are finished. The church, which is the true temple of God, having Christ for its chief cornerstone, will be manifested in the last day. Now in the church's days of suffering and conflict the materials are being prepared for this glorious building for God.[4]

7:18-29 Deeply moved by God's covenant of grace, David went in the temporary tent and offered the prayer of thanksgiving recorded here. In it, says Blaikie,

> He expresses wonder at the past, at God's selecting one obscure in family and obscure in person; he wonders at the present: How is it Thou hast brought me thus far? and still more he wonders at the future, the provision made for the stability of his house in all time coming.[5]

"And this is the custom ('law' in margin) of man, O Lord GOD" (v. 19b NASB) means that God had treated David with the same love and condescension that He commanded men to show to one another.

G. Defeat of Israel's Enemies (Chap. 8)

8:1, 2 David's policy as king was to purge out of the kingdom the heathen inhabitants who rebelled against his rule. This policy resulted in the enlargement of the territory of Israel.

For example, he defeated ... the Philistines and seized Metheg Ammah—i.e., Gath (1 Chron. 18:1). He had once played the part of a madman in Gath (1 Sam. 21:10-15); now he would serve as king there. Also, he conquered the Moabites and used a measuring line to select two-thirds to be put to death. Moab must have shown treachery to Israel.

8:3-8 David's next victory was in the area of Syria. He defeated Hadadezer, king of a country named Zobah, between Hamath and Damascus, capturing one thousand chariots, seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand foot soldiers.

David also hamstrung all of the chariot horses, except ... enough of them for one hundred chariots.[6] This means that a tendon in the leg was cut, making the animals unfit for warfare. When the Syrians of Damascus came to help Hadadezer, ... David destroyed twenty-two thousand of them and made the Syrians his vassals. Then David returned to Jerusalem with the bronze and the shields of gold which he had captured from Hadadezer.

8:9-12 Toi, the neighboring king of Hamath congratulated David for his military triumph over Hadadezer and sent gifts of silver, ... gold, and ... bronze. These precious metals, together with all the other silver and gold David had won in his wars, were dedicated ... to the LORD and later used in the temple.

8:13 There is an apparent discrepancy here. It says that David killed eighteen thousand Syrians in the Valley of Salt. But 1 Chronicles 18:12 says that Abishai killed eighteen thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt. It is true that in some Hebrew manuscripts, as well as in the ancient LXX and Syriac versions, "Edomites" is also found here in 2 Samuel 8:13.[7]

But the fact that David made himself a name from the victory in 2 Samuel and Abishai is credited with the glory in 1 Chronicles is unusual. First Chronicles is usually very laudatory of David. Perhaps, as so often happens in war, the "top brass," in this case David, got credit for the victory as "commander-in-chief." But the actual direct leading of the battle was under Abishai, and even the chronicler, who seeks to emphasize the Davidic line, was led of the Holy Spirit to draw attention to the leader in the field. To further complicate things, the superscription to Psalm 60 states that "Joab [Abishai's brother] killed twelve thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt."[8]

Eugene Merrill makes the following suggestion:

> Perhaps this difference is explainable by noting that the entire campaign was under Abishai's direct command, and that Joab was responsible (with the soldiers in his contingency) for killing two thirds of the Edomites.[9]

8:14 The fact that David put garrisons throughout all Edom and made all the Edomites become his servants probably is further support for the marginal reading "Edomites" in verse 13, and all manuscripts of the parallel passage in Chronicles.

8:15-18 So David's kingdom and power were greatly enlarged, and he ruled with justice and equity. Some of his chief officers are listed in verses 16-18: Joab—commander-in-chief of the army; Jehoshaphat—recorder; Zadok and Ahimelech (perhaps a copyist's error for Abiathar, see below) —priests; Seraiah—scribe or secretary; Benaiah—in charge of David's bodyguards; David's sons—chief ministers. There is a textual problem in verse 17. There and in 1 Chronicles 18:16 and 24:6 Ahimelech is listed as the son of Abiathar, but in 1 Samuel 22:20 Abiathar is said to be "the son of Ahimelech." The simplest solution is that in the verses listing Ahimelech as the son of Abiathar, a copyist may have transposed the names.

However, there is another possibility based on an OT custom by which every other generation had the same name, that is, grandsons were named after their grandfathers. Thus, at any given time the priestly colleague of Zadok would be either Abiathar or Ahimelech. Abiathar and Ahimelech functioned as fellow-priests as Annas and Caiaphas apparently did in the time of our Lord (Luke 3:2).

When Saul killed Ahimelech and his sons at Nob, Abiathar was the only survivor. When David became king, he appointed Abiathar as high priest but did not depose Zadok.

H. Compassion Shown to Mephibosheth (Chap. 9)

9:1-13 David remembered his covenant with Jonathan (1 Sam. 20:14-17) to show him kindness and wanted some opportunity to fulfill it. Ziba, a servant of the late King Saul, reported that a crippled son of Jonathan was living in Lo Debar, on the east side of the Jordan River. David had him brought to Jerusalem, ordered that the family property be returned to him, and arranged for him to eat at the royal table. Ziba and his sons were appointed to serve Mephibosheth.

Mephibosheth is a picture of an unconverted soul living in a barren land (Lo Debar may mean no pasture[10]) and sold under sin (Machir means sold —v. 4). He was an outcast from the fallen house of Saul. He was unable to come to the king to beg for mercy, being lame in both his feet. But the gracious sovereign sought him out in order to bless him. Once found, Mephibosheth was given great riches and a place of fellowship at the king's table. The parallels to salvation are obvious. Like Mephibosheth, we were helpless (unable to come to God); our condition was hopeless (being part of a fallen race). But by grace we became objects of divine favor. We have been elevated to a place in the family of God and made joint-heirs with Christ.

Love so amazing, so divine,

Demands my heart, my life, my all!

I. Further Conquests (Chap. 10)

10:1-5 Apparently Nahash, the king of the Ammonites, had done David a favor at one time. This was the same Nahash whom Saul defeated early in his reign (1 Sam. 11). Nahash might have helped David when he was a fugitive, since Saul was their mutual enemy for a time. Now David desired to repay that loyalty, so he sent messengers to Hanun the son of Nahash, who was crowned king when his father died. The princes of ... Ammon suspected David's men of being spies, and so Hanun ordered them to be subjected to personal insults and indignities. David was angered when he saw his humiliated messengers.

10:6-8 As soon as the Ammonites learned of this, they prepared for war against Israel by hiring the Syrians from the north (see 1 Chron. 19). Thus David's men, under Joab, faced two armies—the Syrians and the Ammonites.

John Haley gives the following explanation of the apparent inconsistencies between verse 6 and 1 Chronicles 19:6, 7:

> Bethrehob was one of the little kingdoms of Mesopotamia, as also were Maacah, Zobah, and Tob petty monarchies of Syria. Thus the names and numbers agree as follows:[11]

2 Samuel

Syrians of Beth Rehob and Zobah • 20, 000

Syrians of Tob • 12, 000

Syrians of Maacah • 1, 000

1Chronicles

Syrians from Zobah, etc. • 322, 000

10:9-14 Joab divided his men into two groups. He himself commanded some of Israel's best soldiers in a drive against the Syrians. His brother ... Abishai led the rest of the Israelites against ... Ammon. Both generals agreed to send help should the other be threatened. The Syrians ... fled as Joab and his men attacked in the open field. Then the frightened Ammonites retreated into their city (probably Rabbah).

10:15-19 Shortly thereafter the Syrians reorganized their forces and solicited aid from other Syrian states. They marched as far as Helam, east of the Jordan (exact location unknown), where David's army met and defeated them. The Israelites destroyed seven hundred charioteers and forty thousand horsemen. (In 1 Chron. 19:18 the losses are stated as "seven thousand charioteers and forty thousand foot soldiers." Williams suggests that there was a cavalry brigade of 40,000 men with 700 light chariots, and an infantry brigade of 40,000 with 7,000 heavy chariots.)[12] This battle convinced the Syrians of David's power, so they made peace with Israel and refused to help the Ammonites anymore.

II. DAVID'S FALL (CHAPS. 11, 12)

A. Crimes Against Bathsheba and Uriah (Chap. 11)

11:1-5 David's notorious moral lapse was occasioned, writes the venerable commentator Matthew Henry, by three things: (1) "Neglect of his business"; (2) "Love of ease and the indulgence of a slothful temper"; (3) "A wandering eye."[13] Instead of going to battle against the Ammonites in the spring of the year, ... David sent Joab against them while he himself remained idly at home. Times of idleness are often times of greatest temptation. One evening ... he looked out from the roof of his palace and saw a ... beautiful ... woman bathing. Inquiry revealed that she was Bathsheba, ... the wife of Uriah, one of David's mighty warriors. David sent for her and committed adultery with her. She purified herself from her ceremonial defilement, then returned to her house. When she found out she was pregnant, she sent the news to David.

11:6-13 The king then plotted to hide his sin. First he called Uriah back from the war, pretending that he wanted to hear of the progress of Joab and the army. After Uriah had answered his questions, David instructed him to return home, hoping that he would have intercourse with Bathsheba. Then when the baby was born, Uriah would think that it was his own child. But Uriah upset David's plans. Instead of returning home, he slept at the door of the king's house; he did not feel he could enjoy the comforts of home as long as his nation was at war. In desperation David ... made Uriah drunk, but the faithful soldier still refused to go home. Uriah's loyalty and faithfulness stand in marked contrast to the king's treachery.

11:14-17 Then David stooped to his lowest act of infamy. He ordered Uriah to carry a letter to Joab—a letter which contained Uriah's death sentence. The king ordered Joab to put Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, where death would be inevitable. Then Uriah would not be alive to disown the baby that would be born. Joab directed the battle so that Uriah would be sure to be killed. He ordered his troops to advance, then called both flanks to withdraw. As Uriah and his men in the center moved forward, they were easy targets for the Ammonites on the wall. Militarily it was ridiculous, but it succeeded in eliminating Uriah as well as many other loyal servants of David.

11:18-21 When Joab sent news back to David, he knew the king would be angered by the military defeat. David would say, "Why did you approach so near to the city? Didn't you remember how Abimelech, the son of Gideon (Jerubbesheth) was killed when he did this very thing?" (see Judg. 9:50-55.) So Joab instructed the messenger to forestall the king's wrath by adding, "Your servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also." This would make David forget about the military reverses of the day.

11:22-25 The messenger reported to David as instructed. Then he was told to carry back a message to Joab, saying that military reverses are inevitable and that Uriah's death should not cause grief because in warfare the sword devours indiscriminately. Thus David hypocritically tried to hide his deep guilt "with a fatalistic comment about the inevitability and capriciousness of death."

After the customary time of mourning, David sent for Bathsheba to become his wife. Sometime later, the baby was born.

> That the Scriptures report this incident from the life of David is an indicator of their faithfulness. They give us an honest and uncut view of God's people the way they really were, warts and all (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

B. Confession to the Lord (Chap. 12)

12:1-9 It is generally believed that about a year elapsed between chapters 11 and 12. During that time the hand of the LORD was heavy upon David; his spiritual struggle is described in Psalms 32 and 51. The prophet Nathan ... came to him with this parable, asking David's judgment on the matter: "A rich man with many sheep was unwilling to use any of his own animals as food when a visitor called on him. Instead, he took the one little ewe lamb belonging to a poor man and slaughtered it. "David could judge sin in others more easily than in himself. He angrily declared that the man should restore fourfold and deserved to die for his sin. Nathan fearlessly pointed the accusing finger at David, saying, in effect, "You are the man who did it. God dealt graciously with you, making you king, enriching you, giving you everything that your heart could desire. But you took Bathsheba from her husband and then killed him to cover your crime."

12:10-14 The king's solemn sentence was then pronounced: His children would be a grief to him. His family would be torn by bloody conflict. His wives would be stolen from him and violated publicly (see 2 Sam. 16:22). His sinful deed would become a matter of general knowledge. David then came to the place of repentance and confessed his sin as being against the LORD. Morgan comments:

> Note the "also" in verse 13. A man puts away his own sin when in sincerity he confesses it. That makes it possible for God also to put it away.[14]

Nathan immediately assured him that the penalty of his sin was remitted —he would not die. But the consequences of his sin would follow him. Actually, he would have to restore fourfold (Ex. 22:1), as he himself had decreed concerning the rich man in the parable: The baby would die; Amnon would be murdered (chap. 13); Absalom would be slain (chap. 18); Adonijah would be executed (1 Kgs. 2).

12:15-23 When the baby became ill, David prostrated himself in prayer and fasting. He was deeply grieved. But when he learned that the baby had died, he arose and ate, explaining that the baby could not return, but that he, David, would one day join the baby when he died. Verse 23 has been a source of great comfort to believing parents who have lost infants and young children.

Matthew Henry comments:

> Godly parents have great reason to hope concerning their children that die in infancy that it is well with their souls in the other world; for the promise is to us and to our seed, which shall be performed to those that do not put a bar in their own door, as infants do not.[15]

We can be confident that children who die before they reach the age of accountability go to heaven because Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 19:14).

That David possessed a deep understanding of God's character is evident by the way he responded to God's judgment. Before the blow fell he prayed, knowing that Jehovah was a God of mercy. After the blow fell he worshiped, knowing that Jehovah was a God of righteousness. He forgot the things that were behind, accepted the divine discipline, and looked ahead to the future. He did not despair because he knew that God would yet bless him. He was right.

12:24, 25 Bathsheba gave birth to another son, Solomon, who was destined to succeed his father as king. Through the prophet Nathan, God gave the child the additional name of Jedidiah (beloved of Jehovah).

12:26-30 Now the narrative returns to the attack against Rabbah interrupted at 11:1 by David's sin. It seems that Joab had captured all but one portion of the city, perhaps the fortress on the top. (Josephus[16] and the NKJV say that Joab captured the city's water supply, making surrender imminent.) Then he called for David to come and finish the job, thus giving him complete credit for the victory. It was a striking act of selflessness on Joab's part. Joab was at best an unpredictable person. At times he seemed to show a real strength of character. But his overall behavior was that of a clever, ruthless, wicked schemer. David succeeded in capturing Rabbah and was rewarded with a crown ... of gold weighing a talent, plus much other booty.

12:31 Bible scholars are disagreed as to whether the last verse describes cruel punishment to which David subjected the people of Ammon (KJV rendering)[17] or whether it simply describes menial agricultural work or industrial servitude (NJKV rendering). The latter seems more typical of David's way of dealing with his enemies.

III. DAVID'S TROUBLES (CHAPS. 13-20)

A. Rape of Tamar by Amnon (13:1-19)

13:1-14 Absalom was David's son by Maacah, whereas Amnon was a son by Ahinoam; thus they were half-brothers. Amnon lusted after Tamar, the lovely full sister of Absalom, and therefore his own half-sister. He did not see how he could get near her because of her secluded life and her purity. Then Jonadab (David's nephew—v. 3) suggested a solution. By pretending sickness, Amnon lured her into his bedroom to nurse him and then forcibly raped her.

13:15-19 After the crime was committed, he hated her more than ... he had ever loved her, as is so often the case. Lust and hatred are closely related. He tried to get rid of her, but she would not leave. So he finally had her expelled by force, hoping that "out of sight" would be "out of mind." She wore the symbol of mourning, and this alerted Absalom to what had happened.

B. Absalom's Revenge on Amnon, and Absalom's Flight (13:20-39)

13:20 Absalom comforted Tamar as if he did not think it was very serious, but actually he was already plotting revenge against Amnon.

Disgraced and unwanted for marriage, through no fault of her own, Tamar remained desolate in her brother Absalom's house. This probably means that she lived and died unwed. Lust hurts the innocent as well as the guilty.

13:21 Though David was very angry, he did not punish Amnon as he should have done—probably because his own sin was so fresh in everyone's mind.

> He knew his duty, but his hands were tied. This is what willful sin does in robbing us of moral freedom, liberty of speech and testimony (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

The fact that Amnon was his firstborn (1 Chron. 3:1) and the natural successor to the throne might also have influenced David.

13:22-29 Absalom waited his time for vengeance. It came after two full years. A great celebration was planned, as always, at the time of sheepshearing near Bethel. Absalom's urgent invitation failed to attract his father, probably because David wanted to spare his son heavy expense. But it did succeed in bringing all the king's sons, and most important of all, Amnon, who as the eldest son represented his absent father. At a predetermined signal, Absalom's servants killed Amnon. The rest of the princes fled back toward Jerusalem in panic.

13:30-36 In the meantime, news reached David that Absalom had killed all of his sons! Again David was plunged into mourning. Jonadab corrected the false report with the information that it was only Amnon who was dead, and that Absalom had plotted his death since the day that Tamar was violated. Shortly thereafter David's sons returned to Jerusalem with great lamentation, confirming Jonadab's report that they were still alive.

13:37-39 Absalom fled for his life to Geshur, in Syria, where his mother had lived, and where Talmai, his maternal grandfather, was king. Absalom lived in Geshur for three years. Amnon was older than Absalom and until his death was next in line to the throne. With Amnon dead, Absalom had visions of himself on the throne. King David longed to see Absalom again, after his grief over Amnon's death had subsided with the passing of time.

13:37-39 Absalom fled for his life to Geshur, in Syria, where his mother had lived, and where Talmai, his maternal grandfather, was king. Absalom lived in Geshur for three years. Amnon was older than Absalom and until his death was next in line to the throne. With Amnon dead, Absalom had visions of himself on the throne. King David longed to see Absalom again, after his grief over Amnon's death had subsided with the passing of time.

C. Absalom's Return to Jerusalem (Chap. 14)

14:1 Joab realized that the king longed to have Absalom back in Jerusalem. But the people knew that Absalom was guilty of murder and should be executed. Thus the fear of public disapproval kept David from bringing Absalom back.

14:2-7 So Joab sent a woman from Tekoa (near Bethlehem) to David with a family situation similar to David's. Pretending to be in deep mourning, she told how one of her sons had killed the other. Now her family was demanding the death of her only heir. This would completely wipe out the family name from the earth.

14:8-13 At first the king told her to return home and await an answer, hoping perhaps to avoid guilt in exonerating the murderer. But she wanted an answer immediately so she could trap David by his own decision. She offered to assume any guilt which his decision might involve. King David made another general statement, promising her security. Then she asked him pointblank for assurance that her son would not be killed. As soon as he gave this, she had him trapped. If the king would grant this pardon to her son, why would he not restore his own banished son, Absalom?

> The woman's pretended situation is roughly analogous to David's. One son is dead, and his relatives are calling for the death of the guilty one, as retributive revenge (v. 7). David's decision showed mercy and suspended the usual blood-vengeance that often, in the Middle East, continued through many generations. But the woman presses on to apply the story to David and Absalom, and again, as with Nathan, David is caught in the web of his own moral wisdom. He is bound to restore, with protection, the banished and fearful Absalom (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

14:14 The woman apparently meant to suggest that, like water spilled on the ground, what was past (i.e., the death of Amnon) could not be gathered up again, so why dwell on that. Possibly also, that life is too short to be wasted in a prolonged quarrel.[18] The last part of verse 14 seems to mean that God does not immediately destroy an offender (as David should well know) but ... devises means by which the sinner might be forgiven and restored. If God acts in this manner, why should not the king do so too?

14:15-23 The woman said that she came to the king expecting such Godlike clemency. She had obtained it for her own son, and now she was pleading for his son. The king suspected that Joab had engineered the plot, and the woman freely admitted it. King David weakly ordered Joab to bring Absalom back to Jerusalem in spite of the fact that Absalom was unrepentant. It was most unrighteous for David to do this, and he was to pay for it dearly.

14:24-33 For two full years ... Absalom lived in Jerusalem without being permitted into his father's presence. (His natural good looks and luxurious growth of hair are mentioned as factors that would aid him in stealing the hearts of the people of Israel.) After two years Absalom tried to contact Joab for permission to see the king. Joab refused to come to him twice, so Absalom ordered his field of barley to be burned. This brought Joab to his door quickly! Absalom's request for an audience with his father was granted, and the two were reunited.

It had been seven years since Tamar had been raped and five years since the murder of Amnon. For five years Absalom had not seen his father. Though David had forgiven him and brought him back to Jerusalem instead of executing him, he had refused to forget what had happened. But when the two men finally met, Absalom received a complete pardon. He then took the favor his father had shown him and used it as a platform from which to launch a revolution (chaps. 15-18). David spared his son's life, but in response Absalom schemed his father's death.

Joab's actions in all this seemed designed to obtain David's favor and also the favor of Absalom, who was next in line as king.

D. Absalom's Revolt and David's Flight (15:1-18)

15:1-6 Up to this point Absalom had concealed his desire to be king. But now he traveled about with an impressive entourage. Also he went boldly up to the city gate (where legal matters were settled) and acted as if he were the only one in Israel who was genuinely interested in the welfare of the people. He practically accused his father of failure to provide adequate legal aid and said that if he were king, the people would receive the justice they deserved. He courted the favor of people from the various cities of Israel.

15:7-12 After four years[19] (according to LXX mss., Syriac, Josephus, NKJV marg.) Absalom received permission to go to Hebron, ostensibly to fulfill a vow he had made while in exile. Hebron was probably disaffected because David had moved his capital from there to Jerusalem. Also, Hebron was the place of Absalom's birth. The two hundred men who accompanied Absalom did not know that his real purpose was to announce the formation of a new government, with himself as king! Ahithophel, one of David's counselors and Bathsheba's grandfather (cf. 11:3 with 23:34), defected to Absalom, and many of the people joined Absalom in his conspiracy to usurp the throne. Perhaps Ahithophel wanted to get even with David for the latter's sin with his granddaughter.

15:13-18 On hearing the news, David decided that the situation was serious and that he should abandon Jerusalem, so he gathered his household together immediately and fled to the outskirts of the city. But the king left ten ... concubines behind to keep the house.

E. David's Friends and Foes (15:19-16:14)

15:19-22 Among those who went with David was a group of Philistines who had left Gath with him. One of these was Ittai the Gittite. When he started out to follow, the king urged him to return. After all, he was not a Jew; he was an exile; he had only recently joined the ranks; and David's cause was at best uncertain. But Ittai would not be dissuaded. He resolutely determined to accompany the king, no matter what the cost might be. David rewarded the loyalty of this Gentile by permitting him and his followers to accompany him into exile. Ittai ... said: " ... surely in whatever place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also your servant will be." Believers should have the same devotion to the King of kings during His rejection as Ittai had to David in his.

15:23 They crossed over the Brook Kidron, east of Jerusalem, and headed for the Jordan Valley. Nearly a thousand years later David's Greater Son would retrace his steps, Himself a rejected King (John 18:1). David crossed the Kidron and fled to save his life. Jesus crossed the valley and prayed in Gethsemane, en route to giving His life a ransom for many.

15:24-29 Zadok and Abiathar, the priests, came out of the city with the ark, intending to follow David into exile. But he sent them back with the hope that the LORD would allow him to return. Also, he told the priests that they could be more help to him right in Jerusalem (as a sort of fifth-column among Absalom's men). He would go as far as the west bank of the Jordan and await word ... from them as to the progress of Absalom's rebellion.

Rather than becoming bitter at his enforced exile, David submitted meekly to what God had allowed. According to its title, Psalm 3 was composed at this time. In this psalm we find that David's trust in the Lord was unshaken as the storm broke over him.

15:30-37 David ascended the Mount of Olives with his faithful followers in deep mourning, praying that God would defeat whatever counsel that Ahithophel might give to Absalom. At the summit of the Mount of Olives, the king was met by Hushai the Archite. David asked him to return to Jerusalem and pretend loyalty to Absalom. In this way he might be able to counteract whatever advice Ahithophel might offer. He could relay any important news to Zadok and Abiathar the priests, who in turn would send their two sons with reports to David. Hushai reached Jerusalem just as Absalom was arriving to take over the government.

16:1-4 After David passed the summit of Olivet, Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth ... met him with a large supply of food and wine, plus two donkeys. When David asked about Mephibosheth, Ziba falsely reported (see 19:27) that the son of Jonathan had stayed in Jerusalem in hopes that the kingdom would return to the house of Saul and thus to him as the next in line. David believed this lie and ordered that Mephibosheth's property should become Ziba's.

16:5-14 At Bahurim, on the road to Jericho, a descendant of Saul named Shimei came out and cursed David fiercely, charging him with the blood of Saul's house. Abishai, one of David's officers, wanted to kill Shimei on the spot, but the king would not allow it. He suggested that the LORD may have ordered him to curse. He pointed out that, after all, a member of Saul's house had more cause to seek his life than his own son, Absalom. Also, perhaps David remembered the death of Uriah and realized that Shimei's accusations were not entirely without foundation. And David hoped that Shimei's excessive hostility might move God to have mercy. As David and his men headed for the Jordan, Shimei followed them, cursing and throwing dust and stones. Finally the exiled king reached the river, where he and his party refreshed themselves.

F. Absalom's Counselors (16:15-17:23)

16:15-19 The scene now switches back to Jerusalem, where Absalom had just arrived. Hushai made a loud and vigorous display of loyalty to Absalom. At first he was suspected, but finally he was accepted by the usurper.

16:20-23 Ahithophel's first counsel to Absalom was that he should go in to the ten concubines David had left behind in Jerusalem. Such an act, disgraceful in itself, would be an unspeakable insult to David, would make reconciliation out of the question, and would constitute a direct claim to the throne. Absalom accepted the advice by going in to the royal harem, in the sight of all Israel, thus fulfilling Nathan's prophecy in 12:11, 12.

Ahithophel's counsel was highly respected in those days. Absalom followed it unquestioningly, as his father had done. But when we remember that Ahithophel was Bathsheba's grandfather, we can see how the desire for revenge might determine his particular counsel.

17:1-4 Having been successful in his first counsel, Ahithophel next advised Absalom to muster twelve thousand men, overtake David, kill him unexpectedly, and bring his followers back to Jerusalem.

17:5-14 Absalom was pleased but decided to call Hushai for his advice. This was the opportunity Hushai had been waiting for. He said that this second bit of advice by Ahithophel was not good "at this time." After all, David and his men were enraged by the insurrection, and they would fight fiercely. And David was too wise to spend the night with his troops; he would be hiding in a cave somewhere. If Ahithophel's first attack was not successful, then panic would spread throughout the nation, and Absalom's cause would be lost. Hushai had an alternative plan, which seemed to indicate his loyalty to Absalom but which in reality was designed to provide additional time for David to escape and to include the possibility of Absalom's death. He suggested a general mobilization of all the armies of Israel, led by Absalom. Such an army would be invincible. David would be attacked, and escape would be impossible. Absalom decided that Hushai's advice was best, so he rejected Ahithophel's plan, as David had prayed (15:31).

17:15-17 Hushai immediately sent word to Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and instructed them to notify David to cross the Jordan and escape to safety. The priests sent the message by a female servant to their sons who were waiting at En Rogel, at the outskirts of the city.

17:18-22 Nevertheless a lad saw this secret meeting and reported the spies to Absalom. Accordingly, the two sons of the priests, Jonathan and Ahimaaz, hid in a well (dry cistern) at Bahurim until the search parties had passed. Then they escaped and carried the news to David. David crossed ... the Jordan, putting this natural barrier between his forces and those of Absalom. Then David marched to Mahanaim, a city in the land of Gilead.

17:23 Ahithophel became despondent because his advice had been rejected, and because he perceived that David would be victorious. He returned to his house, set his household in order, and hanged himself. Both in life and in death he was a "type" of Judas Iscariot.

G. Absalom's Death and David's Lament (17:24-19:8)

17:24-26 Absalom pursued his father across the Jordan to Gilead, having appointed Amasa as commander of his forces. Amasa's father was an Ishmaelite by birth (1 Chron. 2:17) but an Israelite by religion. He was David's nephew and a first cousin of Joab.

17:27-29 While David was encamped at Mahanaim, three men came to him with necessary, nonperishable provisions for him and his people; they were Shobi, Machir, and Barzillai.

Shobi was a son of Nahash, the deceased king of the Ammonites. His brother Hanun had rejected David's goodwill and suffered for it (chap. 10). But Shobi, although by birth an alien, cared more for Israel's king than most of the Jews did. Likewise, many Gentiles have received Him who was rejected by "His own" (John 1:11).

Machir had cared for Mephibosheth for many years, until David brought the latter to Jerusalem (9:3-5). He ministered to those in need, whether a lame prince or a dethroned king. Those who give of their substance to aid the cause of Christ through hospitality will have their kindnesses returned a hundredfold when He returns in glory.

Barzillai helped sustain David the entire time he stayed in Mahanaim. He was a very wealthy man and his support meant a lot to the king (19:31-39). On his deathbed, David told Solomon to elevate the sons of Barzillai to places in the royal court (1 Kgs. 2:7). Christ won't forget those who have ministered to Him; they will be given positions of honor in His kingdom.

18:1-5 David divided his army into three companies, with Joab, Abishai, and Ittai as the three generals. The king wanted to participate in the coming battle, but the people persuaded him to remain in the city and send help if needed. As the soldiers marched out of the city, David gave public orders to his generals to deal gently for his sake with ... Absalom.

18:6-9 The battle was fought in the woods of Ephraim, east of the Jordan and near Mahanaim. There were twenty thousand fatalities that day among Absalom's troops, largely the result of the dense forest which trapped the soldiers. David's army was victorious. As Absalom was fleeing through the forest, he was caught by his head in a huge terebinth tree, ... and the mule ... went on without him. It is a sort of poetic justice that the same part of his body of which he was so proud became the means of his downfall.

18:10-15 The messenger who reported Absalom's helpless position to Joab was rebuked for not killing the rebel. He carefully explained that no amount of money would induce him to violate the king's instructions. Besides, if he killed Absalom, the news would get back to the king, and Joab would not come to his defense. Joab considered all this talk a waste of time. He plunged three spears through Absalom's heart, then let his ten armorbearers administer the coup de grâce. All this was against the king's command, but it was best for the kingdom. David had consistently refused to punish his sons for their crimes, so the task fell to someone else.

18:16-18 As soon as the deed was done, Joab wisely called a halt to the fighting, since his major objective had been accomplished. Absalom's body was thrown into a large pit and covered with a very large heap of stones. This was in marked contrast to the monument which he had erected for himself in the King's Valley, probably near Jerusalem. Absalom had three sons (14:27), but they must have died young and left him without an heir.

Consequently, he had built Absalom's monument to preserve his name for posterity.

18:19-23 Ahimaaz wanted to carry the news to David, but Joab did not want him to. It seems that Ahimaaz had a reputation for being a bearer of good news (v. 27b), and it would have been out of character for him to bring the news of Absalom's death. So Joab sent a Cushite as the official messenger. But after he left, Ahimaaz persuaded Joab to let him go also, even if he would receive no reward for the errand. He succeeded in overtaking the Cushite by taking a quicker route.

18:24-30 David was on the lookout for news from the battle. The watchman reported one runner approaching, then another. When David heard that the first resembled Ahimaaz, he prepared himself for good news because Ahimaaz had always brought welcome messages in the past. Drawing near, Ahimaaz ceremoniously announced that the LORD had smitten the rebel army. But when David asked about Absalom, Ahimaaz's courage failed, and he gave a vague answer about seeing a great tumult but not knowing the details.

18:31-33 By then the Cushite had arrived. He announced that David's enemies had been defeated. The inevitable question from the king about Absalom brought the blunt reply that all David's enemies should be like that young man—in other words, dead. This news plunged David into very deep mourning. His pathetic lament is recorded in verse 33. This was one of the greatest griefs of his life, and it is doubtful that he ever forgave Joab for it.

19:1-8 So great was the king's sorrow that the people felt ashamed and guilty. They acted as if they were victims rather than victors. Joab was impatient with all this and delivered a stern rebuke to the king. He complained that David seemed more interested in his enemies than in his faithful followers, and that he was ungrateful to those who had saved his life. He warned that if David did not immediately show a kindly interest in his people, they would forsake him that night. David complied by taking a position by the gate of the city and talking to the people.

H. David's Return from Exile (19:9-43)

19:9, 10 In the meantime confusion reigned in the land of Israel. All the people were quarreling among themselves. King David, who had saved them from ... the Philistines, was in exile, they reasoned, and Absalom, their self-appointed ruler, was dead. A movement thus began to restore David to his throne. "Why do you say nothing about bringing back the king?" is an appropriate question for a sleeping church today.

19:11-15 When David heard that the ten tribes of Israel were talking about restoring him to the throne, he sent two priests to the elders of Judah, asking why they, his blood relatives, were the last to bring him back as king. Judah had supported Absalom heavily in the rebellion, and doubtless some resentment or fear lingered.

David decided to remove Joab as commander in chief (probably because Joab had killed Absalom) and to appoint Amasa to take his place. Amasa, a nephew of David, had only recently been Absalom's general. To outsiders it must have looked like David punished loyalty and rewarded rebellion, a government policy unlikely to produce political stability. But these moves won the hearts of all the men of Judah over to David's side, and they sent a unanimous "welcome home" message to him.

19:16-23 Shimei, who had cursed David previously, and Ziba, who had slandered Mephibosheth, came rushing down to the Jordan River to meet the returning monarch. Shimei's profuse apology was probably insincere; his great desire was to escape punishment now that David was in power again. In the enthusiasm of the moment, the king overruled Abishai's desire to kill Shimei, and instead promised him amnesty. But David did not forget Shimei's curses. He later ordered Solomon to deal ruthlessly with the foulmouthed Benjamite (1 Kgs. 2:8, 9).

19:24-30 Mephibosheth also came ... to meet the king. It was obvious from his appearance that he had mourned David's exile from the day it began. He had been truly loyal to the king, in spite of Ziba's false charges against him. The king spoke rather roughly to him for not accompanying him into exile. Mephibosheth explained that he had asked his servant Ziba to saddle a donkey, and when Ziba had failed to do it, Mephibosheth was helpless, being a cripple. He stated frankly that Ziba had slandered him but that injustice did not matter as long as the king had returned. When David rather unfairly ruled that Ziba and Mephibosheth should divide the land between them, the crippled son of Jonathan revealed the true loyalty of his heart: "Rather, let him take it all, inasmuch as my lord the king has come back in peace to his own house."

19:31-39 Barzillai, the eighty-year-old ... Gileadite, was another true friend to David. He had provided the king with supplies at Mahanaim. Now he accompanied him to the Jordan. David invited him to go with him to Jerusalem, promising him that he would be well cared for. But Barzillai refused to go on the grounds of his short life expectancy, his inability to discern between what was pleasant and unpleasant, his loss of taste, and his deafness. He would only be a further burden to ... the king if he went. So he agreed to accompany David a little way past the Jordan and then return to his own city. His suggestion that Chimham (perhaps his son) should go with David was readily accepted.

19:40-43 By now a great procession had formed—all the people of Judah ... and half the men of the other tribes—to bring the king back to Jerusalem.

Internal strife broke out because Judah had taken such a prominent place in the restoration of the king (i.e., bringing him across the Jordan) without inviting the ten tribes to participate. Judah explained that David was their close relative and that they had not profited in any way above the others by taking the lead. The ten tribes argued that they had ten times as much right to participate as Judah. The fierceness of Judah's words was an indication of the serious trouble that lay ahead.

I. Sheba's Rebellion and Death (Chap. 20)

20:1, 2 A wicked rebel named Sheba, of the tribe of Benjamin (and possibly related to Saul), took the words of Judah (19:42) and turned them into the basis for a rebellion. The men of Judah had claimed David as their own. Sheba now defiantly announced that the ten tribes had no part in David and were seceding. Only the tribe of Judah was left to David. Later events indicate that Sheba had a relatively small following. The expression "every man of Israel" must be understood in a restricted sense, involving only the dissident men of the ten tribes.

20:3 On reaching Jerusalem, the king found the ten ... concubines whom he had left there, who had been dishonorably treated by Absalom. David arranged for them to be kept in a house in seclusion for the rest of their lives, as if in widowhood.

20:4-7 By now Joab had been demoted, and Amasa, Absalom's rebel commander, was in charge of David's army. The king ordered him to assemble the soldiers of Judah ... within three days to pursue and capture the rebel leader, Sheba. For some unexplained reason, Amasa did not complete the job within the time given, so David ordered Abishai to take command and set out with chosen men to prevent Sheba from getting established in fortified cities. Joab was among those who went with Abishai.

20:8-10a As they reached a large stone marker in Gibeon, Amasa came to meet them. Joab, ... dressed in a soldier's battle armor, advanced to meet Amasa, and as he did so his sword dropped to the ground. It seems that he did this purposefully. He then picked up his sword and moved toward his unsuspecting cousin. With a great show of friendliness, Joab grabbed Amasa's beard as if to kiss him, then killed him with one thrust of the sword.

20:10b-13 When Joab and Abishai began to pursue Sheba, their followers were immobilized by the sight of Amasa wallowing in his blood on the highway. Not until his body was removed did Joab's men follow him.

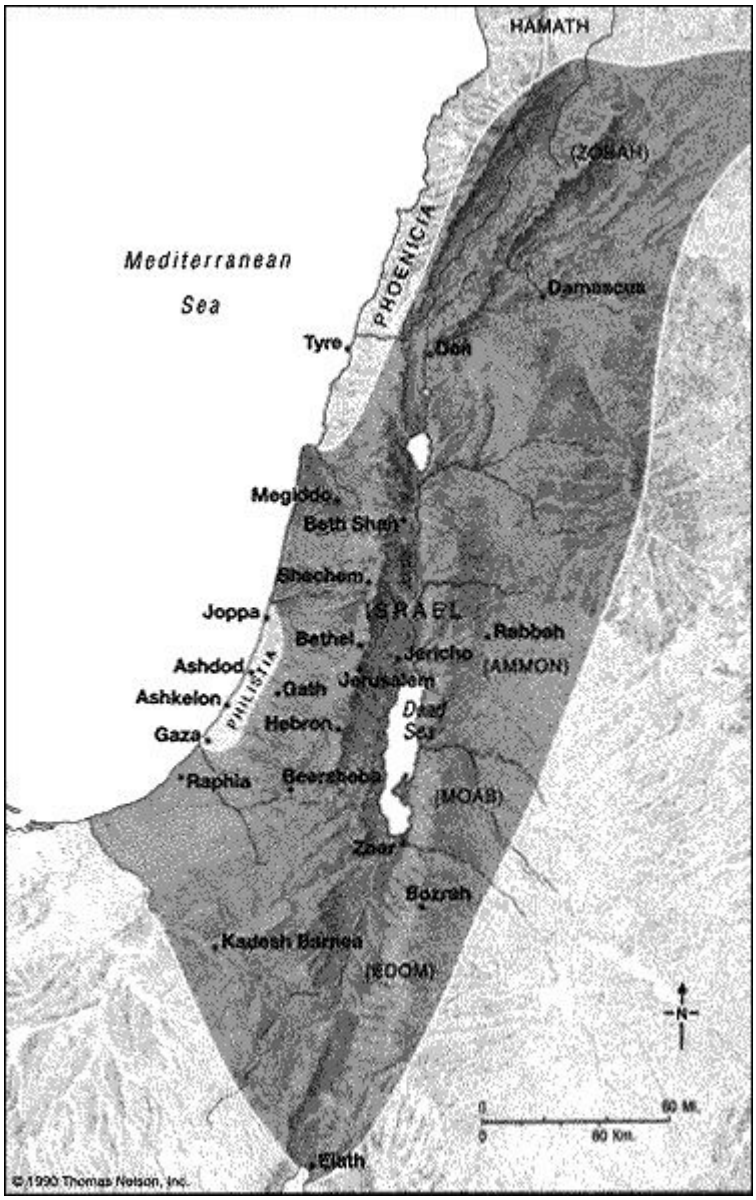
20:14-22 The hunt for Sheba led to the far north, to the city of Abel of Beth Maachah. This was located north of the waters of Merom. It was a city famous for its wise people. As Joab laid siege to the city, a wise woman called down to him and asked him why he was going to destroy a mother ... city in Israel (i.e., an important city) that had always been proverbial for its wisdom. When Joab explained that he was simply after the rebel leader, Sheba, who was hiding inside, she agreed to have him killed and his head ... thrown over the wall as proof that he was dead. As soon as this was done, Joab blew the trumpet and returned to ... Jerusalem, his mission accomplished. Sheba's revolt probably did not last more than a week.

20:23-26 David had demoted Joab, appointing first Amasa (19:13) and then Abishai (20:6) in his place. But Joab had regained his position as commander-in-chief.

The list of the king's important officials in verses 23-26 is largely the same as that in 8:15-18. Joab headed the army; Benaiah was in charge of David's bodyguard; Jehoshaphat ... was the recorder; Sheva (same as Seraiah) was the scribe or stenographer; Zadok and Abiathar were the priests. (Zadok and Ahimelech were the priests in the earlier list.) The only other differences were that Adoram was in charge of revenue and Ira the Jairite was David's priest (or chief minister), whereas David's sons had been mentioned in chapter 8.



The Davidic Kingdom. David's military exploits sucessfully incorporated into the Israelite kingdom the powers of Edom, Moab, Ammon, and Zobah.

IV. APPENDIX (CHAPS. 21-24)

The remainder of 2 Samuel is really an appendix highlighting various incidents in the reign of David, though not in chronological order. (The chronological order continues again in 1 Kings 1.)

A. The Famine and Its Termination (Chap. 21)

21:1 The first event was the famine, which lasted for three years. When David inquired of the LORD as to the cause, he was told that it was because ... Saul had broken the covenant with the Gibeonites. These heathen inhabitants of the land had tricked Joshua into making a treaty with them. Saul had broken the treaty by trying to destroy the Gibeonites, a fact not mentioned previously in the OT. The term "bloodthirsty house" may imply that Saul's descendants had an active part in the slaughter of the Gibeonites, in which case their punishment (vv. 2-9) was just. It may seem harsh that the nation should suffer for the crime of a man now dead, but centuries earlier Israel had sworn a solemn oath to the Gibeonites (Josh. 9:19, 20), and the famine came because that oath had been broken. Time does not dull God's memory or His sense of justice.

21:2-9 David approached the Gibeonites to find out what they would accept as satisfaction for Saul's offense. They explained that they didn't want any of Saul's silver or gold, and that they had no right to put any man to death in Israel. Nothing would do but the execution of seven of Saul's male descendants, and David consented to this. The seven sons were: the two sons of Rizpah—Armoni and Mephibosheth (not Mephibosheth the son of Jonathan)—and the five sons of Saul's daughter Merab (v. 8, NKJV marg.). Two reasons for rejecting "Michal" as the proper reading here are that Michal was married to Palti, not Adriel (see 1 Sam. 25:44), and she was childless (2 Sam. 6:23). The Barzillai mentioned here is not the same man who later helped David when he fled from Absalom (17:27).

21:10 Rizpah, Saul's loyal concubine, set up a watch by the bodies, day and night, so that neither vultures nor wild beasts could touch them. She kept this vigil from the beginning of harvest until God sent rain and thus ended the famine which had led to these deaths.

21:11-14 When David heard of her devotion, he took steps to give decent burial to these seven bodies and also to the bones of Saul and of Jonathan, which had been buried in Jabesh Gilead. The bones of Saul and Jonathan were laid to rest in the tomb of Kish in Benjamin.

21:15-22 This passage describes various battles against Philistine giants. In the first one, David was almost slain by Ishbi-Benob, but Abishai rescued him and killed ... the Philistine. From then on the people would not let David ... go out with them to battle. In the second battle, at Gob (or Gezer), another son of a giant was slain by Sibbechai. In the third battle, Elhanan ... killed the brother of Goliath the Gittite, named Lahmi —cf. 1 Chron. 20:5. The fourth battle resulted in the death of a giant who had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot. Pliny mentions certain six-fingered (sedigiti) Romans, and this peculiarity is hereditary in some families.[20]

B. David's Thanksgiving Psalm (Chap. 22)

22:1-51 With the words of this song David praises the LORD for deliverance from his enemies and for the innumerable blessings which had been showered upon him. It was probably penned after David had firmly established himself on the throne. Saul was dead, the kingdom was united under his leadership, and Israel's foes were beaten back. The words are found, with some variations, in Psalm 18 and are quoted in the NT as applying to the Messiah (v. 3, "in whom I will trust," cf. Heb. 2:13; v. 50, cf. Rom. 15:9).

Looking at it as a Messianic psalm, we may outline it as follows:

1. Praise to God for hearing and answering prayer (vv. 2-4)
2. Death closing in on the Savior (vv. 5-7a).
3. God warring against the hosts of hell as they seek unsuccessfully to prevent the resurrection (vv. 7b-20).
4. Reasons why God raised Messiah from the dead (vv. 21-30).
5. The Messiah's Second Advent, in which He destroys His enemies (vv. 31-43).
6. The glorious kingdom of the Messiah (vv. 44-51).

For a detailed exposition see commentary on Psalm 18.

C. David's Mighty Men (Chap. 23)

23:1-7 The first seven verses give the very beautiful last words of David—that is, his last inspired utterance in song. He describes the ideal ruler, the Messiah, whose reign shall be a glorious dawn, a morning without clouds after a long stormy night.[21] David realized that he did not fit the description, but he took comfort in the fact that God's covenant assured him that the Messiah would be descended from him. Verses 6 and 7 describe Christ's judgment on the sons of rebellion when He returns to set up His kingdom.

23:8-12 A catalog of David's mighty men is given in verses 8-39. It is significant that Joab is not honored in this list, probably because he killed Absalom (not to mention Abner and Amasa!). This register is near the end of David's reign, while the parallel list in 1 Chronicles 11:11-47 is placed at the beginning. Although not identical, there are great similarities between the two rosters. More information about these men and their exploits can be found in the commentary on 1 Chronicles 11.

The first three mighty men were:

1. Josheb-Basshebeth, also called Adino the Eznite—he slew eight hundred men at one time. (1 Chron. says three hundred, but that number is probably a copyist's error.)
2. Eleazar—he fought off the Philistines when his fellow soldiers had retreated. They returned only to strip the slain. When the battle was over, his hand was so weary (probably cramped) that he could not unclasp his fingers from the sword.
3. Shammah—he stood alone against the Philistines when the men of Israel had fled. Standing in a field ... of lentils, he fought off the enemy and gained a great victory.

23:13-17 The three unnamed mighty men referred to here came to David when he was in the cave of Adullam, and when Bethlehem was in the hands of the Philistines. David expressed a longing for a drink of the water from the well of Bethlehem. At the risk of their lives, these men broke through the lines of the Philistines and brought some water back to David. He was so overcome by this sacrifice that he poured it out as an offering to the LORD; he did not feel that he could drink it. Williams comments:

Those who live close to Jesus hear the longings of His heart for draughts of love from Africa and India and China; and, like these mighty men, they turn their backs on home and wealth, and risk or lay down their lives to win for Christ the affection and service of nations held as hopelessly in the power of Satan as the well of Bethlehem was in the hand of the Philistine.[22]

23:18-23 Two more of David's illustrious heroes were:

1. Abishai—he killed three hundred men and was commander of the three mentioned in verse 16, though not one of them.

2. Benaiah—he killed two lion-like heroes of Moab. He also ... killed a lion in ... a pit on a snowy day, and an Egyptian who was better-armed than he.

23:24-39 The final mighty men of David—the thirty (or thirty-seven) are given in verses 24-39.

Some numbers in this chapter need to be explained, such as the thirty chiefs (vv. 13, 24), the thirty-seven (v. 39), etc. The thirty may have been an elite military group, but counting all those who had served in it at one time or another, the total was thirty-seven. There were three in the first group: Josheb-Basshebeth (or Adino), Eleazar, and Shammah (vv. 8-12). Two were in the second group: Abishai and Benaiah (vv. 18-23). In the third group (vv. 24-39), the number "thirty" may have been a technical term, like "the twelve" for the apostles, even if one or more were not always there. It could also be quite literal, but the extra men beyond thirty may have been replacements for those who died in battle, such as Uriah the Hittite, the last valiant man in the list and Bathsheba's husband.

The Lord Jesus has His mighty men (and women!) too. He takes note of them just as surely as David took note of those who valiantly served him. Whatever our rank, let us fight the good fight of faith:

Soldiers of Christ, arise,

And put your armor on,

Strong in the strength which God supplies,

Through His eternal Son.

Stand, then, in His great might,

With all His strength endued;
But take, to arm you for the fight,
The panoply of God.

D. David's Census and Its Consequences (Chap. 24)

William Crockett suggests that the events recorded here took place some time after David captured Jerusalem (chap. 5) but before he brought the ark into the holy city (chap. 6).[23]

24:1 It would appear that God in His anger told David to take a census of Israel and Judah. But we learn from 1 Chronicles 21:1 that it was Satan who moved David to do this. Satan precipitated it, David performed it (because of the pride of his heart), and God permitted it. The Septuagint rendering of verse 1 reads "and Satan moved David" rather than "and He moved David."

24:2-9 When the king ordered Joab to begin the numbering, David's military commander demonstrated better judgment than he did. He realized that the purpose of the census was to cater to David's pride, and he urged the king to desist, but in vain. Obedient to David, Joab and his men went throughout the land, numbering the people; they found that there were eight hundred thousand soldiers in Israel and five hundred thousand in Judah.

Exodus 30:12,13 commanded that a half-shekel ransom be collected when a census was taken. There is no record of David's doing so. Pride motivated him to number the people. The census might cause him to depend on the size of his army and not on the arm of the Lord.

24:10-14 After the census was finished, the king was convicted of his sin, and cried out to the LORD for forgiveness. God sent the prophet Gad to him, offering any one of three punishments: (1) seven years of famine ... in the land; (2) three months of pursuit by his enemies; (3) three days of pestilence or plague. David chose to fall into the hand of the LORD, and not into man's.

24:15-25 The LORD sent three days of plague, killing seventy thousand men. The destroying angel was about to destroy the city of Jerusalem when God stopped him at the threshing floor of Araunah (also called Ornan). David asked the Lord why He was destroying the people of Israel when it was David and his house who were guilty. God's reply, given through Gad, was for David to build an altar ... on the threshing floor of Araunah. So David the king immediately began to arrange with Araunah the Jebusite for the purchase of the site. Although he was a Gentile, Araunah offered not only the threshing floor without charge but also oxen for sacrifices and the threshing implements for firewood. The king's noble answer was, "nor will I offer burnt offerings to the LORD my God with that which costs me nothing."

Finally David bought the threshing floor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver. (1 Chron. 21:25 says that David paid 600 shekels of gold for the place, but this undoubtedly included the property surrounding the threshing floor.) The plague stopped when burnt offerings were offered on the altar (v. 25).

The threshing floor of Araunah, on Mount Moriah, was probably the very same spot where Abraham offered Isaac. It later became the site of Solomon's temple and then of Herod's temple in the time of Christ. Today it is occupied by a Moslem shrine—the Dome of the Rock. It will probably be the location of the temple in the Tribulation and finally of the millennial temple.

The Scriptures are completely honest in their treatment of the heroes of the faith. David had his faults and they are mentioned alongside his faith. We have followed David from the flock, through exile, into exaltation. Few men walked closer to God; few men fell deeper into sin. But through it all he was sustained by the Lord. We have all benefited from the experiences that David passed through, because he recorded them in his psalms.

Matthew Henry remarks on David as he appears in Samuel and how he appears in Psalms:

> Many things in his history are very instructive; but for the hero who is the subject of it, though in many instances he appears here very great, and very good, and very much the favourite of heaven; yet it must be confessed that his honour shines brighter in his Psalms than in his Annals.[24]

The words of Psalm 40 fitly summarize David's life:

I waited patiently for the LORD, and He inclined to me, and heard my cry. He also brought me up out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and He set my feet upon a rock, and established my steps. He has put a new song in my mouth—praise to our God; many will see it and fear, and will trust in the LORD (Ps. 40:1-3).

FIRST KINGS

INTRODUCTION

"The history of the nation is recorded from the close of the reign of David to the middle of the reign of Ahaziah. In its highest glory under Solomon, the kingdom foreshadows the millennial kingdom of our Lord. The prosperity of the nation rises or falls according to the character of the ruler and his people, illustrating for us the important principle that obedience is the condition of blessing."

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

The importance of Kings, which was originally only one book, can be seen from a historical perspective in that it spans 400 years of the history of Israel, from the reign of Solomon to the Babylonian Captivity. It records the reigns, not only of Judah (as does Chronicles), but also of the apostate nation called "Israel" or "Ephraim" in the North. However, it is not a mere history book; Kings gives a spiritual analysis of the kings as to whether they served the Lord or idols—or were half-hearted in their loyalty to God.

Perhaps most helpful of all to most Bible readers are the exciting yet edifying ministries of the prophets Elijah and his successor Elisha.

An important lesson of Kings is that God rewards loyalty and punishes apostasy. Hezekiah and Josiah are the clearest examples of the former (2 Kgs. 18:3; 22:2). The obvious examples of the latter—on a national scale—are the exiles, first of the Northern Kingdom (722 B.C.) and then of the Southern (586 B.C.).

II. AUTHORSHIP

The human author of Kings is unknown. A great deal of the book is apparently compiled from records, but with the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Some have suggested a priestly author, but one wonders what suitable priestly writers would have been available in the apostate Northern Kingdom. A prophetic author seems more likely. The final editor of the book is thought possibly to be Ezra if it was a priest and Ezekiel or Jeremiah if it was a prophet.

III. Date

Second Kings ends on the positive conciliatory note of Babylonian King Evil-merodach's kindly elevation of King Jehoiachin of Judah after thirty-seven years of prison (c. 560 B.C.). An even more encouraging historical event that is conspicuous by its absence is the beginning of the return of the Jews to Palestine (536 B.C.). Since it is unlikely that such a patriotic writer as the author of Kings would neglect to mention this return if it had already started, it seems that the date Kings was finished would be between 560 and 536 B.C.

IV. Background and Themes

The two prominent groups mentioned in Kings are the kings and the prophets. The judgment passed on a king stemmed directly from his obedience or disobedience to the Lord. The prophet's ministry was always one of calling the wandering nation back to Jehovah.

O. J. Gibson summarizes the book as follows:

> Two chronological lines of kings are interwoven in the account. Israel, with ten tribes, is sometimes called the northern kingdom because its land was to the north of Jerusalem. From its first ruler, Jeroboam, to its destruction and captivity by Assyria, it was continuously in disobedience and idolatry before God. The so-called southern kingdom of Judah, centering in Jerusalem, was far from faithful to God, but yet maintained a semblance of obedience among a faithful minority. The most glorious period of the time was that of Solomon's reign. The building of the Temple and its dedication receive more attention than any other period, indicating its importance in God's eyes. Solomon's reign, ending with departure and judgment, is a solemn warning of what will happen when divine privileges and honor are abused and His Word flouted. Only when every appeal of grace had been exhausted by persistent disobedience did God, not heathendom, destroy first the northern and then the southern kingdom.[1]

COMMENTARY

I. THE LAST DAYS OF DAVID (1:1-2:11)

A. Adonijah's Attempt to Seize the Throne (1:1-38)

1:1-4 David was now seventy years old and in declining health. He was about to pass off the stage of history. The proposal of his servants in verse 2 seems at first glance both puzzling and shocking. However, this practice was accepted at that time as being of value in the case of an illness like David's. It was not an act of doubtful morality and would not create a public scandal. One thing we can be sure of is that David did not "know" (in the sense of having sexual intercourse with) Abishag (v. 4b). And it seems probable from chapter 2 that she was considered a legal wife of David because Solomon interpreted Adonijah's later request for her as a claim to the throne (2:21,22).

1:5-10 Adonijah was apparently David's oldest surviving son (2:22) and thus considered himself next in line for the throne. Amnon and Absalom were both dead. Chileab was probably dead as well (2 Sam. 3:2-4). Before his father died, Adonijah proclaimed himself as king, prepared a great entourage, and enlisted the support of Joab and Abiathar. Being a very good-looking man, he won a great following. Verse 6a indicates that David was an indulgent father and Adonijah a spoiled son. When Adonijah ... sacrificed a great many animals near En Rogel, he ... invited to the feast all except those whom he knew to be loyal to his father—Nathan the prophet, Benaiah, the mighty men of David, and Solomon.

1:11-38 God had told David before Solomon was born that Solomon would be Israel's next king (1 Chron. 22:9, 10). Nathan had a desire to see the word of the Lord fulfilled. Being concerned about the threat of Adonijah, he skillfully brought the issue to David's attention. Coached by Nathan, Bathsheba appeared before the ailing king and notified him of the plot. She also reminded him of a promise he had previously made (though unrecorded) that Solomon, her son, would be the next king. Just as she finished requesting that he publicly announce Solomon as his successor, Nathan arrived and Bathsheba withdrew. Nathan repeated the news concerning Adonijah's plot to seize the kingdom and asked if this was the king's desire. When David called for Bathsheba, Nathan withdrew. David reassured Bathsheba that Solomon would indeed be his successor. Then he instructed Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah to take ... Solomon ... to Gihon, a spring located outside the city, on the king's own mule and to anoint him as king.

B. Solomon's Anointing at Gihon (1:39-53)

Since it is widely held that Solomon had a two-year co-regency with his father, for which he would have had to be anointed, this was a second anointing that recognized him as sole ruler. This public anointing by Zadok the priest caused great rejoicing among David's followers, but consternation among Adonijah and those who were feasting with him. When the latter heard that Solomon was now sitting on the royal throne and that David was grateful to the Lord for this, they realized that Adonijah's plot was a failure. Adonijah fled to the tabernacle and took hold of the horns of the altar, an act which was supposed to grant him safety from punishment. Solomon decreed that Adonijah would be spared if found worthy, but punished if caught in any future wickedness. Then he sent Adonijah home.

C. David's Final Charge to Solomon (2:1-11)

If David in exile typifies Christ in His rejection during this age of grace, Solomon typifies Him as the King reigning in millennial glory. When He returns to set up His kingdom, His first act will be to destroy His foes and to purge out of His kingdom everything that offends. We see this pictured in chapter 2.

Just before his death, David delivered a solemn charge to Solomon, urging him to be obedient to the LORD and instructing him to take appropriate action concerning certain men: Joab should be slain for murdering Abner ... and Amasa; the sons of Barzillai should be shown kindness because of their father's kindness to David when he was fleeing from Absalom; Shimei should be slain eventually because he cursed David, but Solomon could work out the details. The expression " ... shed the blood of war in peacetime" (v. 5b) reads in the NIV, "shedding their blood in peacetime as if in battle."

After a reign of forty years, David died and was buried in Jerusalem.

II. THE GOLDEN REIGN OF KING SOLOMON (2:12-11:43)

A. Solomon's Purge of the Opposition (2:12-46)

2:12-25 Solomon sat on the throne, and his kingdom was firmly established. Adonijah was grieved that he had been deprived of the throne, although he had to admit that it was Solomon's by the will of God (v. 15b). Whether innocently or insidiously, he made a petition of King Solomon through Bathsheba that Abishag, David's nurse, might be given to him for a wife. Solomon looked upon this as being the next thing to asking for ... the kingdom itself, so he ordered Benaiah to execute Adonijah.

2:26-34 The king also expelled Abiathar from the priesthood, doubtless because he had supported Adonijah in his abortive plot. This was in partial fulfillment of God's judgment on the house of Eli (see 1 Sam. 2:31-35). When Joab heard of Abiathar's dismissal, he fled to the ... horns of the altar for refuge. Benaiah ordered him to leave the altar, but Joab refused, expressing the determination to die there. Benaiah executed him quickly and had him buried in his own house in the wilderness. The deaths of Abner and Amasa were finally avenged. The altar of God gave no protection to anyone who broke the law of God.

2:35 Benaiah was appointed commander of the army, and Zadok succeeded Abiathar as priest. Benaiah had served David since the days of Saul. He was a man of great valor and the captain of David's personal bodyguard (2 Sam. 20:23). His unfailing courage was surpassed only by his undying loyalty to the house of David. Courage and loyalty should also characterize those who serve David's greater Son, the Lord Jesus Christ.

2:36-46 Solomon did not order Shimei's execution immediately. Rather, he put him under a sort of house arrest, forbidding him to leave the city. After three years ... Shimei left Jerusalem ... to seek ... two escaped slaves ... in Gath. In so doing he broke the oath that Solomon had made him swear earlier, and he demonstrated that he was no more faithful to Solomon than he had been to David. When he returned, the king commanded Benaiah to put him to death.

Thus Solomon made his kingdom secure by aggressively removing all whose hearts were not with him. Thereafter his reign was one of peace. The Christian will know the peace of God as he puts out of his life the things which oppose the reign of Christ within.

B. The Wisdom of Solomon (Chap. 3)

3:1 Solomon married the daughter of the Pharaoh who was then in power in Egypt. Perhaps this shows that his trust was in political alliances. The marriage, although politically expedient, was spiritually disastrous as well as forbidden by the law. From this point onward, Solomon's harem grew until it contained hundreds of foreign women. Solomon thus linked himself with many foreign powers but alienated himself from the Lord (11:1-8).

3:2-4 High places were here used for the worship of the LORD. This was not strictly in accordance with the law; God was supposed to be worshiped only in the place which He designated. But it is here excused on the ground that there was no official house, since Shiloh had been destroyed by the Philistines about 1050 B.C. when the ark was carried away (1 Sam. 4). After the temple was built, high places continued to be used, but for idolatrous worship. Although the ark was in Jerusalem at this time, the tabernacle was in Gibeon (1 Chron. 21:29), about six miles away. It was there that the king offered a thousand burnt offerings, probably at the outset of his reign.

3:5-15 God appeared to Solomon ... at Gibeon and asked him what he would like most of all. The king requested an understanding heart for the great task of judging and ruling the people of Israel. The request pleased the LORD, and it was granted—together with riches and honor, and also long life, if Solomon would walk in obedience to God. Today God offers to everyone the greatest gift for which one could possibly ask—the Lord Jesus Christ, "in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. 2:3).

3:16-28 The remainder of chapter 3 gives an example of the king's great wisdom. Two ... harlots were quarreling over which one was the mother of a baby. When Solomon threatened to divide the baby with a sword into two equal parts, the true mother was revealed by her desire to spare the child even if she didn't get the baby for herself. Such wisdom caused Solomon to be greatly feared and respected in all Israel.

C. Solomon's Administrators (4:1-19)

4:1-6 These verses list Solomon's high officials, or cabinet: Azariah, a grandson of Zadok, who seems to have succeeded him as high priest; Elihoreph and Ahijah, secretaries of state; Jehoshaphat, recorder or chronicler; Benaiah, commander of the army; Zadok and Abiathar, the priests; Azariah—over the officers; Zabud—the friend of Solomon; Ahishar, in charge of the palace; Adoniram, in charge of the labor force (tribute). The name "Abiathar" in verse 4 presents a difficulty if it is the same one Solomon dismissed in 2:27. Perhaps he was dismissed after this period. Or perhaps he still retained the title of priest though no longer exercising priestly functions. It may, however, have been another Abiathar (see 2 Sam. 8:15-18). Matthew Poole comments:

> Some say that here is mention made of all Solomon's chief officers, both such as now were, and such as had been, and such as were afterwards, as they gather from verses 11 and 15, where two persons are named who married two of Solomon's daughters, which could not be till many years after this time.[2]

4:7-19 Solomon divided the land of Israel into twelve sections and put a governor in charge of each area to collect food from the people. Each division of the land with its officer in charge was responsible for supplying the royal board one month out of the year. Judah is not mentioned.

Solomon's Empire: The Twelve Districts

D. Solomon in All His Splendor (4:20-34)

4:20, 21 The kingdom under Solomon reached out to the River Euphrates, to the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt (vv.21, 24). Much of this territory consisted of kingdoms that paid tribute to Solomon but were not considered part of Israel. Therefore Solomon's kingdom was not the complete fulfillment of the Palestinian covenant (Gen. 15:18-21).

4:22-28 The magnificence of Solomon's reign is described: his vast food supply, his thousands of horses, etc. But we must remember that in order to support such lavishness, it was necessary to tax the people very heavily. Also, we need to remember that Solomon's accumulation of horses was a violation of God's order (Deut. 17:16). (On the apparent contradiction between verse 26 and 2 Chron. 9:25, see the notes on that chapter.)

4:29-34 The king's wisdom is again referred to. He was wiser than any other. The sages mentioned in verse 31 were the sons of Zerah (1 Chron. 2:6), Mahol (dancer) being simply an appellation. Ethan was the author of Psalm 89; Heman wrote Psalm 88. We know nothing about the other men. Solomon spoke three thousand proverbs, only a portion of which are preserved in the book of Proverbs. His songs numbered one thousand and five, the best being the Song of Songs. Verse 33 means that his wide knowledge of many sciences enabled him to use object lessons from nature in expounding his wisdom. People traveled from afar to hear him.

E. Solomon's Temple (Chaps. 5-7)

1. Solomon's Agreement with King Hiram (Chap. 5)

5:1-12 Hiram was a Gentile king of Tyre, and as such he controlled vast timber resources in Lebanon. He had been very friendly to David and now wished to show that same friendliness to Solomon. It was therefore arranged that he should provide lumber with which Solomon could build a temple for the LORD. Solomon would send workers north to Lebanon to assist in the cutting operation. The logs would then be taken to the Mediterranean Sea, floated in rafts down to a point near Joppa, and then transported inland to Jerusalem. As payment for the timber, Solomon provided Hiram's household with food supplies year by year.

5:13-18 In order to obtain the manpower for this gigantic task of cutting lumber, Solomon drafted thirty thousand men of Israel, requiring them to go to Lebanon ... in shifts of ten thousand each month. In addition to these men, the king had eighty thousand Canaanite slaves (Gebalites) working in the quarries of Israel, preparing stones for the temple (cf. v. 15; 2 Chron. 2:17, 18). He also had seventy thousand who carried burdens.

> Solomon's massive building operations involved a great force of slave labor (cf. 9:15-22). But even this proved inadequate, and he was compelled to draft native Israelites (probably excluding Judah), not as slave laborers but as forced laborers. The Israelites, with their tradition for sturdy independence, bitterly resented this, and it became a major cause of the division of the kingdom (12:4). How necessary it is to have divine wisdom in all matters, and not to ride roughshod over the sensitivities and welfare of others! (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

(See the notes on problems in 2 Chron. 2 for an explanation of the numerical discrepancies between these two chapters.)

2. Description and Construction of the Temple (Chap. 6)

6:1 In verse 1, the work of building the temple is said to have been started 480 years after the exodus from Egypt. If Solomon began the construction in 967/66 B.C., this would date the exodus at 1446/47 B.C. It is not possible, however, to fix these dates with absolute certainty. There is much dispute among scholars on this subject, but 1446 B.C. is very close to the early date of the exodus.

6:2-6 Details concerning the plan of the temple are given in chapter 6. They are at times technical and involved, making it difficult to get the exact picture. However, we do know that the temple was built somewhat as follows. It was 90 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 45 feet high (v. 2). It was divided into two rooms. The first room was the sanctuary, measuring 60 feet long by 30 feet wide by 45 feet high (vv. 2, 17). Latticed windows, probably near the top, provided light and an escape for smoke (v. 4). The second room was the inner sanctuary, 30 feet long by 30 feet wide by 30 feet high. The vestibule added 30 more feet to the length at the east or front end and was elevated 15 feet above ground level. On the north, west, and south sides of the temple were three stories of side chambers, or rooms, for the priests. These were against the wall of the temple but were not an integral part of it.

6:7-10 All the lumber and stone for the temple was finished at the quarry to exact specifications so that when brought to Jerusalem, the pieces could be fitted together without iron tools (v. 7). Thus the temple was erected silently, just as the living temple of God is being built today. Verses 8 and 10 describe the doorway to the side chambers and the height of each story (7 1/2 feet). Verse 9 describes the roof of the whole temple.

6:11-22 The word of the LORD graciously came to Solomon during the construction, promising to confirm the Davidic Covenant and that God would dwell in the temple among the children of Israel if the king would be obedient (vv. 11-13). The interior of the building was lined with cedar boards, completely overlaid ... with pure gold; no stone was seen. These stones, so skillfully and precisely cut, were not even visible. Spurgeon makes a spiritual application:

> Even the foundation stones were not rugged and rough, but hewn and costly. God would have everything which is done for him done well. He careth not so much for that which meets the eye of man, he delights himself with the beauty of those living stones of his spiritual temple which are hidden away from observation.[3]

6:23-28 Standing on either side of the ark, in the inner sanctuary, were two carved cherubim, overlaid ... with gold. Their outstretched wings reached from one wall to the other. These are not the same as the cherubim on the mercy seat (Ex. 25:18; 37:9).

6:29, 30 Nothing but gold was visible inside the temple.

6:31-35 The folding or sliding doors leading to the inner sanctuary are described in verses 31 and 32. The rooms were also separated by a veil which hung inside the doors of the inner sanctuary—2 Chron. 3:14. The main doors leading to the sanctuary are described in verses 33-35.

6:36 In front of the temple was the inner court of the priests. There was a low wall between it and the outer court. This wall consisted of three rows of hewn stone and a row of cedar beams.

In the inner court were a huge brazen altar for sacrifices, a huge laver used by the priests for cleansing, and ten smaller lavers (chap. 7). The outer court was for the people of Israel.

6:37, 38 The temple was begun in the fourth year of Solomon's reign and was finished ... seven years later.

3. The Construction of Other Buildings (7:1-12)

7:1 The narrative now turns to the construction of Solomon's own house and other royal buildings included in the great court.

Solomon's house, or the royal palace, took thirteen years to build. It was located slightly southeast of the temple and just outside the wall of the inner court. Some think that the fact that it took six years longer to build the palace than the temple indicates a greater concern for Solomon's ego than for God's glory. On the other hand, perhaps the temple took only seven years because of Solomon's zeal for God to be given a place, and his thousands of laborers built a "holy temple" (for the LORD) at a greater speed.

7:2-12 The House of the Forest of Lebanon (vv. 2-5) was at the southern portion of the great court. Its outstanding feature was the large number of cedar pillars in it. Perhaps this accounted for its name. We do not know definitely the function of this building, but we surmise from 1 Kings 10:17 that it was an armory. Immediately north of the House of the Forest of Lebanon was the Hall (or Porch) of Pillars (v. 6). It was probably the entrance to the Hall of Judgment and the throne room (v. 7). Adjoining the royal palace was the House of Pharaoh's daughter, where it is likely that the royal harem lived (v. 8). All the buildings were made of costly stone blocks cut to exact measurements. Also, the wall around the great court was made of three rows of stone blocks covered by cedar beams.

Another perspective of these verses sees the House of the Forest of Lebanon, the Hall of Pillars, and the Hall of the Throne (the Hall of Judgment) as all part of the palace. The hall made for Pharaoh's daughter adjoined the royal residence.

4. Furnishings of the Temple (7:13-51)

7:13, 14 Huram (spelled Hiram in Heb. and KJV) was not the same as the king of Tyre. He was a master workman of Jewish lineage who lived in Tyre.

7:15-22 Next two huge pillars of bronze which stood at the entrance of the temple are described. One was named Jachin (He shall establish) and the other Boaz (in Him is strength). At the top of each pillar was a bowl-like capital, highly ornamental. Although the physical details of these pillars are given, we are not told the spiritual significance behind them. Someone has well observed that the pillars of God's living temple today are believers of holy character (Gal. 2:9). Revelation 3:12 is God's promise that those who overcome will be made pillars in His heavenly temple for all eternity.

7:23-26 The Sea of cast bronze was the huge laver which stood in the inner court. It was a large basin, supported by twelve bronze oxen and placed between the temple and the altar, but to the south (2 Chron. 4:10). It supplied water for the priests to wash their hands and feet.

7:27-39 In addition to the large laver, there were ten smaller lavers resting on four-wheeled carts or stands. No mention is made of the bronze altar until 8:64, although it too was in the inner court.

7:40-47 Huram supervised the construction of all the burnished bronze work in connection with the temple area, including the pots, the shovels, and the bowls of the temple itself. The bronze articles were cast in clay, in much the same manner as is done today (v. 46).

7:48-50 The furnishings of the holy place included the golden altar of incense, the table of gold, ten golden tables of showbread (2 Chron. 4:8), ten golden lampstands of pure gold, and the golden utensils.

7:51 David had made elaborate preparations for the temple that he was not allowed to build. Solomon brought these treasures into the temple for use and safekeeping.

Differences between this chapter and 2 Chronicles 2-4 are discussed in the notes on 2 Chronicles.

F. Dedication of the Temple (Chap. 8)

8:1-5 With the temple completed, the next step was to bring ... the ark of the covenant from the section of Jerusalem known as the City of David, or Zion, to the temple on Mount Moriah. This probably took place almost a year after the building was completed (cf. v. 2 with 1 Kgs. 6:37, 38).

Just before the Feast of Tabernacles, a great national holiday took place, and the ark, the tabernacle, and the holy furnishings were brought to the temple by the priests and the Levites. This was accompanied by the sacrifice of a great number of sheep and oxen.

8:6-9 The ark was put in the Most Holy Place. In some way that we do not understand, the ends of the poles were visible from the holy place, but they could not be seen from outside, on the porch. The poles were not removed, as stated in the KJV (v. 8). At this time the only items in the ark were the two tablets of stone, containing the Ten Commandments. We are not told what happened to the pot of manna or to Aaron's rod that budded (Heb. 9:4).

8:10, 11 As soon as the ark (typical of Christ) was given its proper place, the glory cloud, signifying the divine Presence, filled the temple. The priests were not able to carry on their duties because the glory of the LORD filled the house.

8:12, 13 When all was finished, Solomon addressed the LORD. God had said that He would dwell in thick darkness. Now Solomon had built Him an exalted house with a Most Holy Place that had no illumination except the glory of God Himself.

With his usual spiritual insight, Matthew Henry comments:

> He showed himself ready to hear the prayer Solomon was now about to make; and not only so, but took up his residence in this house, that all his praying people might there be encouraged to make their applications to him. But the glory of God appeared in a cloud, a dark cloud, to signify, (1.) The darkness of that dispensation in comparison with the light of the gospel, by which, with open face, we behold, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. (2.) The darkness of our present state in comparison with the vision of God, which will be the happiness of heaven, where the divine glory is unveiled. Now we only say what he is not, but then we shall see him as he is.[4]

8:14-21 Next the king turned to the people in blessing. He traced the fulfillment of God's promise to David concerning the temple and expressed his satisfaction that the ark of the covenant now had a settled abode.

8:22-26 The prayer of dedication is recorded in verses 22-53. After extolling God for keeping His covenant with David concerning the temple, he asked Him to fulfill another covenant that He had made with David—the promise that there would never fail to be a descendant of David to sit ... on the throne.

8:27-30 Although Solomon realized that no temple on earth was adequate to contain the great God, yet he asked that the LORD might recognize this temple and that when he or any of the people of Israel addressed God there, He might hear and forgive.

8:31-53 Then the king listed various specific cases in which the Lord's answer was especially desired.

1. In lawsuits where oaths were taken, presumably because no definite evidence was available, God was asked to punish the guilty and reward the innocent (vv. 31, 32).

2. When defeat came to Israel's army because of sin, God was asked to forgive and restore them to their land when they confessed their sin (vv. 33, 34).
3. In times of drought, God was asked to send rain ... when the people humbled themselves before Him in repentance (vv. 35, 36).
4. If famine or pestilence, or blight or mildew, or insect plagues, or enemy siege, or any other calamity should befall them, God was requested to honor any prayers that were made to Him toward the temple and to forgive ... the land (vv. 37-40).
5. If a Gentile converted to Judaism and prayed to God, then He was asked to answer the prayer of such a proselyte (vv. 41-43).
6. Prayers for victory in battle were anticipated by Solomon, and he asked the Lord to be mindful of all such supplications (vv. 44, 45).
7. Speaking prophetically, Solomon next envisioned the time when Israel might be carried into captivity because of sin. He asked the Lord to listen to their prayer of repentance and cause their captors to be merciful to them; after all, the Israelites were His people, whom He had delivered out of Egypt. These verses found fulfillment in the Babylonian captivity and in the subsequent return under the decree of Cyrus (vv. 46-53).

8:54-61 After praying to God, Solomon ... blessed the people by pouring out an eloquent request for God's presence, and for power to be loyal to Him and to be a witness for Him among the nations of the earth.

> Solomon's benediction, like the rest of his prayer, shows an immense appreciation of great spiritual truths: 1. God is utterly reliable. "Not one word has failed" (56)—what a testimony! 2. The past guarantees the future (57). Since God is unchanging (cf. Heb. 13:8), we can build upon the fact that what He has shown Himself to be in times past He will be to us (cf. Josh. 1:5). 3. Man needs God's help in the life of discipleship (58), a truth which Jeremiah knew and for which he gave the reason (see Jer. 10:23; 17:9). Even the impulse of man's free will comes from God—a paradox indeed! Compare the activity of the Holy Spirit in John 16:8-11. 4. We stand in daily need of the assistance of God ("as each day requires," 59). But then, He neither slumbers nor sleeps (Psa. 121:4)! 5. God's care for His children is never for their selfish enjoyment, but that others might come to know Him (60). 6. In view of all this, can we give less than our absolute loyalty and obedience to Him (61)? (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

This prayer is also recorded in 2 Chronicles 6 (see notes), with the only differences being: In 2 Chronicles Solomon ended his prayer with three requests (2 Chron. 6:40-42), omitted in 1 Kings; in 1 Kings Solomon blessed the people (vv. 54-61). This is omitted in 2 Chronicles.

8:62-65 Of the great number of animals that were sacrificed, some were used as food for the huge throng that had assembled (v. 65). Since the bronze altar was not large enough to receive all the burnt offerings, etc., Solomon consecrated a place in the middle of the court where the rest could be offered to the Lord. This great celebration was characterized by joy and worship and thanksgiving. Of the thousands of animals slain, not one was offered as a sin or trespass offering.

At this same time, Solomon held the Feast of Tabernacles with Israelites who had come from as far as the entrance of Hamath, near Dan, in the north and from the Brook of Egypt in the south. The Feast of Dedication and the Feast of Tabernacles together lasted for fourteen days.

8:66 Then the people returned to their homes joyful and glad of heart. Second Chronicles 7:9 says that a solemn assembly was held on the "eighth day," while verse 66 says that the people were sent away on the "eighth day." John Haley harmonizes these two accounts as follows:

The feast of tabernacles began on the fifteenth and ended on the twenty-second of the month, closing with a "holy convocation" on the "eighth day" (Lev. 23:33-39), at the end of which Solomon dismissed the people; the dismissal taking effect the next morning, the twenty-third (2 Chron. 7:10).[5]

G. Solomon's Fame (Chaps. 9, 10)

1. His Covenant from God (9:1-9)

9:1-5 God's answer to Solomon's prayer was that He would accept the temple as His house and would put His name there forever. Although Solomon's temple has long since ceased to exist, God will yet dwell in a temple in Jerusalem when the Lord Jesus returns to set up His worldwide kingdom. In the meantime, God dwells in the temple of the believer's body and of the church.

9:6-9 As for Solomon's family, God promised that Solomon and his sons would always have descendants to sit on the throne if they would be obedient. But if they departed from the living God and turned to idolatry, then He would send the people into exile, destroy the temple, and make Israel ... a proverb and a byword among the Gentiles. The temple would become a heap of ruins, and visitors would be astonished at its desolation.

2. His Gifts to Hiram (9:10-14)

With regard to this paragraph, some commentators suggest that Solomon had borrowed one hundred and twenty talents of gold from Hiram (v. 14) in order to finance his elaborate building program, and had given twenty cities ... of Galilee to Hiram as security. It was because of Hiram's previous help (v. 11a) that Solomon felt free to request the loan. When Hiram saw the cities, he was dissatisfied and called them the land of Cabul (meaning displeasing, dirty, or rubbish; lit. Good for Nothing, NKJV marg.). It appears from 2 Chronicles 8:2 that Solomon may have redeemed the cities by paying off the loan.

3. His Subjects and Sacrifices (9:15-25)

9:15-23 Verses 15-22 give the account (rather than "reason," as in KJV and NKJV) of the forced labor which Solomon used in his construction program. Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer were three cities which Solomon fortified for defense purposes. Hazor was in the north and protected the northern door to Palestine. Megiddo was:

> ... an important city of north-central Palestine, overlooking the Plain of Esdraelon. It dominated the intersection of important trade routes and served as the key to the defense of the Jordan Valley (from the south) and the Central Plain (from the north).[6]

Gezer was situated west of Jerusalem on a main trade route from the interior to the coastal land of Philistia. All the Gentile captives listed in verse 20 were forced laborers. The children of Israel were not reduced to bondage. There were five hundred and fifty supervisors established over Solomon's work.

9:24 The "Millo" which Solomon built was some type of fortification for Jerusalem. It was undertaken after the palace for Pharaoh's daughter was completed.

9:25 Solomon sacrificed to the LORD ... three times a year at the three major feasts: Unleavened Bread, Weeks (Pentecost), and Tabernacles (2 Chron. 8:13).

4. His Navy (9:26-28)

King Solomon had a fleet of ships at Ezion Geber, ... on the Gulf of Aqaba, near Elath. Hiram sent some of his servants with the fleet ... to Ophir (exact location unknown—some say southern Arabia, some India, and others Africa). They ... brought ... four hundred and twenty talents of gold ... to King Solomon.

5. His Visit from the Queen of Sheba (10:1-13)

The purpose of chapter 10 is to emphasize Solomon's glory. From drinking vessels to sailing vessels, from an ivory throne to handcrafted chariots, he possessed everything the human heart could desire in quantities that stagger the imagination. The queen of Sheba, that daughter of opulence, was completely overwhelmed by Solomon's wisdom and by the splendor of his kingdom. This was in fulfillment of the Lord's promise, to which Solomon owed everything (3:11-13).

The queen of Sheba (probably Saba, in the southern Arabian peninsula) came ... to test Solomon's wisdom by plying him with hard questions, but he was able to answer them all (v. 3a). When she saw the magnificence of his kingdom, she had to acknowledge that the glowing reports she had heard were only partial. She presented him with gifts of gold and spices in great ... abundance and then received gifts from him in return before going back to her own country.

6. His Riches (10:14-29)

10:14, 15 Hiram's help brought not only gold from Ophir for Solomon but also great amounts of almug wood and precious stones. Solomon was a genius in trade relationships.

10:16-22 Gold was so plentiful that Solomon even used it for making shields to hang in the House of the Forest of Lebanon. His ivory ... throne was overlaid ... with pure gold. At each side of the throne was a large carved lion. Also on each side of the six steps leading to the throne was a lion. Silver was considered as of relatively minor value in the days of Solomon. Solomon's merchant ships brought not only gold and silver, but such exotic items as ivory, apes, and monkeys.[7]

10:23-25 Solomon's riches and wisdom brought him worldwide fame, and gifts poured in to him from admirers who came to visit him.

10:26-29 Mention is made of the fact that Solomon invested heavily in horses and chariots. Keveh[8] (probably Cilicia) was famous for its horses. Solomon not only acquired chariots and horsemen and horses for national defense but also exported them to other countries.

Although not mentioned here, the luxury of Solomon's reign required heavy taxation to support it. This was to lead to the disruption of the kingdom (12:3-15).

"The taxation," writes J. R. Lumly, "must have been crushing, and with all this oriental splendor and luxury, there was rottenness within. Solomon was the Jewish Louis XIV."[9]

This multiplication of riches and horses violated God's Word (Deut. 17:16,17).

H. Solomon's Failures and Death (Chap. 11)

11:1-3 Deuteronomy 17:17 forbade the king of Israel to marry heathen wives. The extent to which Solomon disobeyed this important command is shocking. The result was exactly as predicted: His wives turned him to idolatry.

11:4-8 Verse 4 means that King David's heart had been wholly true to the LORD his God as far as keeping himself from idolatry was concerned, but Solomon did not follow his father in this matter. He built idolatrous shrines on the Mount of Olives, east of Jerusalem.

11:9-13 God had appeared to Solomon twice—in Gibeon (3:5) and in Jerusalem at the dedication of the temple (9:2). Now He announced that, because of Solomon's idolatry, the kingdom would be torn away from him and given to one of his servants. However, it would not happen during Solomon's lifetime, and not all twelve tribes would be taken from the house of David. One tribe (Benjamin; Judah is taken for granted—12:23) would be given to Solomon's son.

11:14-22 Three of Solomon's adversaries are now described. The first was Hadad, an Edomite prince who had escaped to Egypt as a little child when Joab was killing all the males in Edom. He was treated well by the Pharaoh and was even given the sister of Queen Tahpenes as his wife. When Hadad heard ... that David ... and Joab were dead, he obtained the Pharaoh's reluctant permission to return to Edom. From there he began military operations against Solomon from the south.

11:23-25 The second adversary was Rezon, who had escaped when David killed those of Zobah. He then became the leader of a band of raiders. Later he set up an independent kingdom at Damascus, and became a military peril to Solomon from the north. Damascus had worn the yoke of Israel ever since David had captured the city and stationed troops there (2 Sam. 8:5, 6).

Losing Damascus, Syria's chief city-state, was especially significant because the kingdom of Syria would prove to be a thorn in Israel's flesh for centuries to come.

11:26-28 The third adversary was the servant of Solomon whom God had mentioned in verse 11: Jeroboam the son of Nebat, of the tribe of Ephraim. Solomon had given him a position of responsibility in the building of the Millo. Perhaps this power gave Jeroboam the desire to reign over all Israel.

11:29-39 One day Jeroboam met a prophet named Ahijah. When they were alone in the field, Ahijah took hold of his own new garment ... and tore it into twelve pieces. He gave ten pieces ... to Jeroboam as a sign that God would give him command over ten tribes of Israel. He also explained to Jeroboam that one tribe (Benjamin) would be left for Solomon's son (Judah understood—12:23) and that the kingdom would not be divided until after Solomon's death. If Jeroboam would obey the Lord, he would be assured of the Lord's blessing and help. Notice the limitations which God put on Jeroboam: He was to have ten tribes, not the whole kingdom; he was to come to power only after Solomon's death; God would make him an enduring house only if he would obey the Lord and wholly follow Him.

11:40 Apparently Jeroboam rebelled while Solomon was still alive, so he had to flee to Egypt to escape the king's wrath. He remained there until Solomon's death. Instead of facing his sin and repenting, Solomon tried to thwart the word of God by doing away with Jeroboam. It was foolish to fight against Jeroboam, though, since he was now the divinely appointed heir of the northern tribes. Saul had been unsuccessful in his attempts to kill his successor, David. Solomon was likewise unsuccessful in his attempts to murder Jeroboam.

The tribes over which Jeroboam would rule would be: Reuben, Dan, Naphtali, Gad, Asher, Issachar, Zebulun, Ephraim, Manasseh, and portions of Levi and Simeon. The tribes over which Solomon's son would reign would be: Judah, Benjamin, and portions of Levi and Simeon. For the most part Levi (2 Chron. 11:13-16) and Simeon were loyal to Judah.

11:41 The book of the acts of Solomon was probably the official chronicle of his reign, but certainly not an inspired part of Scripture.

11:42, 43 After reigning for forty years, Solomon died and was buried in Jerusalem. Rehoboam his son succeeded him. Solomon's beginning was better than his ending. A good start does not guarantee a good finish. He had been raised to the pinnacle of greatness, but he plunged off into the abyss of moral degradation and idolatry. If only the king had practiced what he preached in Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14:

> Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is man's all. For God will bring every work into judgment, including every secret thing, whether good or evil.

III. THE DIVIDED KINGDOM (CHAPS. 12-22)

A. King Rehoboam of Judah (12:1-24)

Rehoboam the son of Solomon ruled in Judah for seventeen years (931/30-913 B.C.; 1 Kgs. 12:20-24; 2 Chron. 11 and 12).

12:1-11 Rehoboam went to Shechem to be acknowledged as king. Having heard of the death of Solomon, Jeroboam returned from Egypt and also went to Shechem, along with the whole assembly of men of Israel. The Israelites delivered an ultimatum to Rehoboam—"Lighten the burdensome service of your father, and his heavy yoke which he put on us, and we will serve you." To maintain the oriental opulence of his court, Solomon had used forced labor and taxed heavily. So they were saying in effect: "Lower the taxes with which your father oppressed us, and we will serve you. Otherwise we will revolt." Rehoboam asked for three days to think it over. During that time he first consulted his older counselors. They advised him to treat the people kindly and be a servant to them. His younger advisers, however, suggested the very opposite—they told him to threaten the people with still heavier demands! In that sense, Rehoboam's little finger would be thicker than Solomon's waist. If Solomon chastised them with whips, then Rehoboam would use scourges (probably meaning whips with sharp points).

12:12-20 When Jeroboam and the congregation of Israel returned for the decision on the third day, they were answered ... according to the advice of the young men. Verse 15 points out that this was a turn of events brought about by the LORD to fulfill His word ... spoken through Ahijah the Shilonite (11:30-39). At this point the people of Israel revolted against Rehoboam, although some of them were still living in the territory of Judah. Rehoboam sent Adoram, his unpopular taskmaster over forced labor, to bring these latter Israelites under subjection, but they stoned Adoram to death. Then the people of Israel ... made ... Jeroboam their king. Although it says in verse 20 that only ... the tribe of Judah ... followed Rehoboam, we must remember that Benjamin (v. 21), Simeon (Josh. 19:1b), and most of Levi belonged to Judah.

12:21-24 Rehoboam planned to thwart this by declaring war on Israel, but he canceled his plan as a result of a divine command. Having earlier ignored the counsel of his elders, Rehoboam now heeded the counsel of the LORD and spared the lives of many Israelites. The word of the Lord decreed the split, and the word of the Lord ensured that the division was without bloodshed.

THE DIVISION OF THE KINGDOM

The history of the divided kingdom begins here and continues through 2 Kings. Jeroboam reigned over the northern ten tribes, usually known as "Israel" and sometimes referred to in the prophets as "Ephraim." This kingdom had a succession of nine dynasties, and all the kings were wicked.

Rehoboam reigned over the southern kingdom, known as "Judah." This kingdom had only one dynasty. Every king was a descendant of David. It was through this kingdom that Christ's legal title to the throne of David is traced through Joseph, His foster father (see genealogy in Matthew 1). He was also physically a Son of David through the Virgin Mary, who was herself a descendant of David's own son Nathan (see genealogy in Luke 3). A few of these kings were outstanding reformers, though most of them were wicked.

The history of the divided kingdom can be divided into four phases. First, there was a time of open conflict, extending from Jeroboam (1 Kgs. 12:1) to Omri (1 Kgs. 16:28). Secondly, the two kingdoms settled down to a period of detente, from Omri (1 Kgs. 16:29) to Jehu (2 Kgs. 9). The third phase, from Jehu to the captivity of Israel by Assyria (722 B.C.), was one of relative independence (2 Kgs. 9-17). Finally, Judah was left as the surviving kingdom, until it was taken into captivity by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. (2 Kgs. 18-25).

The kingdom of Israel never returned to the land as a nation. Judah remained in captivity for seventy years, and then groups returned to Jerusalem in significant numbers, as recorded in Ezra and Nehemiah. The southern tribes thus came back to the land, under Gentile rule, approximately 500 years before the birth of Christ.

At the close of OT history, the Jews in the land were subject to the king of Persia. Later, Persia was conquered by Greece, and the Jews were ruled by this world power. Finally, the Greeks were subjugated by the Roman Empire; it was this empire that was in power when the Lord Jesus appeared.

In studying the divided kingdom, the student frequently comes across seeming contradictions in the dates given. Most of these chronological difficulties can be accounted for by the fact that different methods were used in calculating the length of reigns in Israel and in Judah. Another important factor is that oftentimes two kings served as coregents for a while. The whole subject of the chronology of the kings has been treated capably and in great detail in The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings, by Edwin R. Thiele.[10]

We shall study the divided kingdom in the order in which the kings are listed, giving the important events in the reign of each. The dates are taken from Thiele's book mentioned above.

B. King Jeroboam of Israel (12:25-14:20)

Jeroboam the son of Nebat, of the tribe of Ephraim, was king of Israel for twenty-two years (931/30-910/09 B.C.).

1. Jeroboam's False Religious Centers (12:25-33)

12:25-30 Israel's first king made Shechem his capital at the outset, then built Penuel, across the Jordan River. Fearing that the people of Israel would return to Jerusalem to worship on the feast days and then transfer their loyalty back to the king of Judah, he set up his own system of religion: He established Dan and Bethel as new centers of worship, setting up a golden calf in each place and declaring these idols to be the gods which delivered Israel from the land of Egypt!

12:31-33 Jeroboam made idolatrous shrines on the high places. He established a new priesthood from among all the people—not necessarily from the tribe of Levi, as God had ordained. He set up a new religious calendar, with a great feast on the fifteenth day of the eighth month, replacing the Feast of Tabernacles, which was in the seventh month. He himself usurped the office of the priest by offering sacrifices on the altar which he had made at Bethel.

That many of the people of Israel accepted these changes reveals that their hearts were far from the Lord. Their fathers had worshiped a calf before and were punished for it (Ex. 32). Solomon had erected high places and lost most of his kingdom for it (chap. 11). Korah and his followers had tried to usurp the priesthood and lost their lives for it (Num. 16). These innovations by which Jeroboam sought to secure his kingdom only ensured its eventual downfall. Those who had a heart for God fled to Judah (2 Chron. 11:14-16), leaving their brethren to the conveniences—and consequences—of man-made religion. It has been well said that "Jeroboam did not deserve so good a post [as king], but Israel deserved so bad a prince."

2. Jeroboam and the Man of God (13:1-32)

13:1-3 While Jeroboam was offering incense at the altar in Bethel, a man of God was sent from Judah to denounce the idolatrous altar. He predicted that a king named Josiah would arise in Judah and would burn the idolatrous priests on the altar. The fulfillment of the prophecy in verse 2 is found in 2 Kings 23:15, 16. Over 300 years elapsed between the prophecy and its fulfillment. As a token of the certainty of the prophecy, he said that the altar would be split apart and the ashes ... poured out.

13:4-6 As Jeroboam pointed to the prophet and ordered him to be apprehended, the king's hand became withered. Also, the altar was split apart and the ashes spilled out—an omen of doom for Jeroboam's religion. In answer to the prophet's gracious prayer, the withered hand ... was restored to normal.

13:7-10 If the king could not silence the prophet by threats, he would try by gaining his fellowship. God had issued strict instructions to the prophet that he was to do nothing to indicate the slightest tolerance of Jeroboam's evil reign. Thus, in accordance with the instructions of the Lord, the prophet refused to eat or drink with Jeroboam. Also, he took a different route home from Bethel.

13:11-19 On the way he was intercepted by an old prophet of Bethel. At first the man of God refused the hospitality of the old prophet lest he show the slightest sympathy with what was going on at Bethel. But then the old man said that an angel had told him to entertain the man of God, and this lie succeeded in persuading the latter to accept the proffered hospitality.

13:20-25 While they were eating together, the LORD spoke to the old prophet of Bethel, and he in turn delivered the message to the man of God. Because of his disobedience, the man of God would die and would not be buried with his family. If this seems harsh or severe, we should remember that God deals more strictly with those He loves, with those who are His spokesmen, and with those who are greatly privileged. On his way home, the man of God was killed by a lion. Contrary to all the laws of nature, the lion and the prophet's donkey stood watch together over his corpse on the road.

13:26-32 When the old prophet ... heard the news, he immediately realized that it was the Lord's judgment against disobedience. He went to the scene of the tragedy, brought the body back to Bethel, and buried it in his own tomb. He then instructed his sons that he desired to be buried ... beside ... the man of God; he realized that the idolatrous system of which he was a part was doomed to destruction by God.

3. Jeroboam's False Priesthood (13:33, 34)

King Jeroboam persisted in his evil, making priests from every class of people and serving as a priest himself. Such sin was the eventual cause of destruction to the dynasty of Jeroboam.

Irving Jensen notes:

> King Jeroboam ought to have seen a picture of himself and his own fate if he did not repent, by the fate of the prophet from Judah. Jeroboam, like the prophet, had been chosen by God for a high position. Also like the prophet, he knew perfectly well what God would have him do. But like the prophet, he had disobeyed the word of God.[11]

4. Death of Jeroboam's Son (14:1-20)

14:1-4 When Abijah the son of Jeroboam became sick, the king sent his wife to the prophet ... Ahijah—the man of God who had previously told Jeroboam that he would be king over the ten northern tribes.

The queen disguised herself, perhaps for several reasons. First, to visit the man of God openly would betray a lack of faith in the idols at Dan and Bethel. Second, Jeroboam realized that Ahijah was opposed to idolatry and would not speak favorable things to her if he knew her identity. Third, perhaps the king thought that by fooling the prophet he might even fool the Lord.

14:5-13 The LORD forewarned the blind prophet of the queen's approach. As soon as she arrived, the prophet exposed her disguise and then sent her back to Jeroboam with a message of doom. Because of the king's disobedience and idolatry, the Lord would cut off from him every male in Israel, both bond and free, and would utterly consume his house. None of his family would have a decent burial, except the ailing son, Abijah—who would die as soon as the queen entered the city.

14:14-16 God would raise up another king (Baasha), who would destroy Jeroboam's family. Eventually the nation of Israel would be led into captivity because Jeroboam had inaugurated the worship of Asherim.[12] The Asherim were carved wooden images symbolizing fertility.

14:17, 18 It appears from verse 17 that Tirzah was now the capital of Israel. As soon as the queen returned there, her son died. Israel buried him and mourned, as predicted by the prophet.

14:19, 20 After reigning for twenty-two years, Jeroboam died and was succeeded by his son ... Nadab. The book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel does not refer to the Book of Chronicles in the Bible but to the official record of the kings which was kept as a public national history.

The scene now switches to the kingdom of Judah.

A Kingdom Divided. The Glory of the united kingdom began to fade at the death of Solomon when his son Rehoboam spoke harshly to Jeroboam and those following him. Their response: "Every man to your tents, O Israel! Now, see to your own house, O David!" Rehoboam reigned over Judah to the south, and Jeroboam became king of Israel to the north.

C. King Rehoboam of Judah (cont'd) (14:21-31)

14:21-24 We have already studied the first part of Rehoboam's reign in chapter 12. This section summarizes the significant features of his reign. The fact that the queen mother was an Ammonitess (vv. 21, 31) is mentioned twice may be designed to call the reader's attention to an underlying reason for the failure of Rehoboam's rule—his father, Solomon, had married foreign wives, who led him and his family into idolatry. Idolatry was prevalent in Judah, and male cult prostitutes (perverted persons) carried on their abominable practices at the shrines.

14:25-28 Jerusalem was attacked and plundered by Shishak, king of Egypt. Treasures were stolen from the temple and the royal palace. Rehoboam ordered bronze shields to be made in ... place of the gold ones that were taken.

Isn't it ironic that Solomon had sought to protect himself from Egypt by marrying Pharaoh's daughter, but within a short time after his death Shishak of Egypt walked off with much of the glitter of Solomon's golden city!

14:29-31 This was a period of warfare between Judah and Israel. It continued for fifty-seven years, through the reign of Asa in Judah and Omri in Israel. The Lord prevented an all-out war between Judah and Israel (12:24), but the sister kingdoms were constantly skirmishing with each other. Rehoboam died at the age of fifty-seven, and his son ... Abijam became king in his place.

D. King Abijam of Judah (15:1-8)

Abijam the son of Rehoboam was king of Judah for three years (913-911/10 B.C.; 2 Chron. 13:1-14:1a).

15:1 Verse 1 contains a formula that is frequently repeated in the Books of Kings. This formula describes the beginning of one reign by naming the king who was reigning in the other kingdom and telling how long he had been reigning. Thus this verse explains that Abijam began to reign over Judah during the eighteenth year of Jeroboam's reign over Israel. He is also called Abijah (1 Chron. 3:10; 2 Chron. 12:16).

15:2 Here Abijam's mother is listed as Maachah the granddaughter of Abishalom; in 2 Chronicles 11:21 it is Maachah the daughter of Absalom; in 2 Chronicles 13:2 it is Michaiah the daughter of Uriel. It is possible that his mother had two names, and that she was the daughter of Uriel and the granddaughter of Absalom (same as Abishalom). ("Son" or "daughter" often simply designates a descendant in biblical usage.)

15:3-8 Abijam followed his father as an idolater and thus failed to follow David, who was loyal in the sense that he refrained from the worship of carved images. Verses 4 and 5 imply that God would have destroyed the house of Abijam had it not been for His covenant with David. Notice at the end of verse 5 how an otherwise exemplary life can be marred by a moment of passion! The war with Israel that began in Rehoboam's reign continued through Abijam's reign. In verse 6 Rehoboam and Jeroboam stand for Judah and Israel. There was war between these two kingdoms throughout Abijam's life. He tried to bring Israel back both by persuasion and by force of arms, killing 500,000 Israelites in the attempt (2 Chron. 13:1-20).

E. King Asa of Judah (15:9-24)

Asa the son of Abijam was king of Judah for forty-one years (911/10-870/69 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 14:1b-16:14).

15:9-15 Asa was one of the few good kings of Judah. He removed the sodomites (idolatrous homosexuals) from the land and destroyed all the idols that his fathers had made (v. 12; cf. 2 Chron. 14:3-5). He deposed Maachah his grandmother and destroyed her obscene image, though not ... the high places associated with this idol. He enriched the temple with gifts from his father and from himself.

15:16-22 When Baasha, king of Israel, began to fortify Ramah, a few miles north of Jerusalem, Asa realized that his capital was in peril. However, instead of turning to the Lord, he sought the assistance of Ben-Hadad, ... king of Syria. By making a liberal payment to this foreign monarch, he persuaded him to attack Israel from the north in the region of Galilee. This drew Baasha's forces to the north and enabled Asa to disassemble Ramah and to build the fortified cities of Geba and Mizpah along his northern border.

The silver and gold that Asa brought to the temple had been given to the Lord. But when Baasha threatened his kingdom, Asa took all the treasures and gave them to a heathen king, defrauding God and enriching Syria. Christians need to be careful not to take what belongs to God (i.e., their time, money, resources, etc.) and give it to someone else.

15:23, 24 The fact that he was stricken with a disease of the feet may be mentioned to indicate God's displeasure that Asa had trusted in the king of Syria to deliver him. During his last three or four years, Asa's son ... Jehoshaphat probably reigned with him.

F. King Nadab of Israel (15:25-27)

Nadab the son of Jeroboam, of the tribe of Ephraim, was king of Israel for two years (910/09-909/08 B.C.).

Nadab followed his father in the practice of idolatry. One of his subjects, Baasha, conspired against him and killed him. At the same time Baasha killed all the remaining members of the house of Jeroboam, in fulfillment of the prophecy of Ahijah (14:10,14).

G. King Baasha of Israel (15:28-16:7)

Baasha the son of Ahijah, of the tribe of Issachar, was king of Israel for twenty-four years (909/08-886/85 B.C.).

15:28-34 Baasha's reign marks the beginning of the second dynasty in the kingdom of Israel. Conflict between Judah and Israel continued throughout Baasha's reign. With Tirzah as his capital, he continued the idolatrous worship that Jeroboam had instituted.

16:1-7 A prophet named Jehu announced to Baasha that because he followed Jeroboam's idolatry, his posterity would suffer a similar fate. They would not be given the customary burial but would be eaten by dogs or birds. Another reason for Baasha's doom is given at the end of verse 7—he killed ... the house of Jeroboam. Either he was not the one whom God intended to do this or he did it in a cruel and vengeful manner, contrary to God's will.

H. King Elah of Israel (16:8-14)

Elah the son of Baasha, of the tribe of Issachar, was king of Israel for two years (886/85-885/84 B.C.).

Elah was a wicked king, given over to idolatry and drunkenness. After he had reigned two years, he was assassinated by Zimri, commander of half his chariots. Also slain were all the rest of Baasha's family, in fulfillment of Jehu's prophecy (16:3). Elah's death ended the second dynasty in Israel.

I. King Zimri of Israel (16:15-20)

Zimri was king of Israel for seven days, (885/84 B.C.).

Zimri's wicked reign was the shortest of all the kings, lasting only seven days. When he usurped the throne, the army of Israel was trying to capture the city of Gibbethon from the Philistines. The army proclaimed its commander, Omri, to be king. He promptly marched against Tirzah, the capital, to seize the reins of government. Zimri retreated into the citadel of the royal palace, set it on fire, and perished in the flames.

J. King Tibni of Israel (16:21, 22)

Tibni the son of Ginath was king of Israel for four years (885/84-881/80 B.C.)

Although Israel made Omri, the commander of the army, king over Israel (v. 16), he had a rival in Tibni, and there was civil war for four or five years (cf. v. 15 with v. 23). Half of the Northern Kingdom followed Tibni until his death.

K. King Omri of Israel (16:23-28)

Omri was king of Israel for twelve years (885/84-874/73 B.C.).

Omri's reign began the fourth dynasty in the northern kingdom. Tibni was defeated in 880 B.C., and Omri became the undisputed king. For the first six years he reigned in Tirzah. Then he purchased the hill of Samaria ... for two talents of silver and moved his capital there. The evil character of his reign is emphasized in verses 25 and 26.

Omri's chronology is somewhat complex. He was proclaimed king in the twenty-seventh year of Asa (with only half of the people behind him), after the death of Zimri (v. 15). After the four years of civil war, he became undisputed king over the northern kingdom in Asa's thirty-first year (v. 23). He died in the thirty-eighth year of Asa (v. 29). Thus he had about four years of internal strife and about eight years of relative peace.

Omri was a progressive king and brought a measure of peace and prosperity to Israel. Extrabiblical sources mention Omri as the conqueror of Moab. So prominent was he in the view of the Assyrians that they called Israel "the House of Omri" or "the Land of Omri." Archaeologists have found what they believe was Omri's palace in Samaria.

L. King Ahab of Israel and the Prophet Elijah (16:29-22:40)

Ahab the son of Omri was king of Israel for twenty-two years (874/73-853 B.C.).

1. The Sins of Ahab (16:29-34)

Ahab was an exceedingly evil king, not only because he followed Jeroboam in idolatry, but also because he married Jezebel, a daughter of the king of the Sidonians. This villainous woman was a Baal-worshiper who succeeded in influencing Ahab to promote Baal-worship in Israel by building a temple, an altar, and a wooden image. The godlessness of the times is witnessed by the brazen attempt by Hiel of Bethel to rebuild Jericho in defiance of God's curse (Josh. 6:26). When he laid the foundation, his oldest son, Abiram, died. As the gates were erected, his youngest son, Segub, died.

2. Elijah and the Drought (17:1-7)

17:1 In chapter 17 we are introduced to the Prophet Elijah. His ministry extends through 2 Kings 2:11. God spoke to His people through prophets during times of sin and declension. These prophets were really mouthpieces for Jehovah. They fearlessly cried out against idolatry, immorality, and all other forms of iniquity. They urged the people to repent and return to the Lord, and then warned of dire consequences if they failed to do so. Some prophets ministered primarily to Israel, some to Judah, and some to both. Since Israel was the more wicked of the two kingdoms, God accompanied the prophet's messages to Israel with miracles and wonders. This left Israel without excuse.

Elijah is mentioned in the Gospels in connection with the ministry of John the Baptist. John came in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke 1:17).

Elijah came from Tishbe in Gilead, east of the Jordan River, and was thus called a Tishbite. His history is recorded only in Kings. We are told nothing about his background, family, or call to the prophetic ministry. But that he was a man sent from God no one could deny. He was God's chosen instrument to bring adulterous and haughty Israel to her knees. His prayers could bring down blessing (rain) or wrath (drought and fire). He served his generation as a fearless, embodied conscience. His first recorded act was to announce to Ahab that the land would suffer a drought. This was obviously a divine judgment against idolatry. God chose to use a severe drought to get the people's attention. They did not care that idolatry had brought a spiritual drought upon the land, but they could not ignore the physical drought that typified it.

17:2-7 In obedience to the LORD, Elijah went from Samaria to the Brook Cherith, east of the Jordan. There he was sustained by water from the brook and by food which was miraculously brought to him morning and evening by ravens. After a while, however, due to the drought the brook dried up.

3. Elijah and the Widow of Zarephath (17:8-24)

17:8-16 In obedience to the word of the LORD, Elijah journeyed to Zarephath, on the Mediterranean coast between Tyre and Sidon. There God had arranged that a Gentile widow would feed him. At first she hesitated because she had only enough meal for her son and herself. However, the prophet ordered her to make ... a small cake for him first. By doing this she was, in effect, giving God the first place. When she obeyed, she learned the precious lesson that those who put God first never lack the necessities of life. Her bin of flour and jar of oil never failed. Jesus made note of the fact that Elijah was sent to a Gentile widow and not to any of the numerous Israelite widows (Luke 4:26).

During the drought Jehovah provided for His prophet in most humbling ways—first through unclean birds and then through a Gentile woman, and a poor widow at that. The king in his palace was hard-pressed, but Elijah had all he needed. God's man, obeying God's voice, will always have his needs met, despite the conditions that prevail around him.

17:17-24 Later the son of the woman was stricken with a serious sickness and died. Immediately the mother suspected that Elijah had ordered his death because of some sin she had committed. The prophet took the lad up to his bedroom, stretched himself out on the child three times, and cried out to the Lord. The boy revived and was taken down ... to his mother in normal health. This convinced the woman that Elijah was a man of God and that the Lord's word was the truth. As a Gentile, she showed faith in the God of Israel.

4. Elijah's Challenge to the Priests of Baal (18:1-19)

18:1-6 Three years after Elijah left Israel, and three and a half years after the drought had begun (Luke 4:25), the prophet was instructed to appear before Ahab—an action that, humanly speaking, was extremely dangerous. So severe was the famine that Ahab and his steward, Obadiah (not the prophet who wrote the Book of Obadiah), had searched the land for grass to feed the animals. (It was this Obadiah who had saved one hundred prophets of the Lord when Jezebel had murdered some and was seeking to exterminate others.)

18:7-15 While Obadiah was on his search for grass, Elijah met him and ordered him to notify Ahab of Elijah's whereabouts. Obadiah feared that this would result in his death, since Ahab had been searching relentlessly for Elijah in order to silence him once and for all. If Obadiah revealed Elijah's presence, the king would undoubtedly respond. But by then the Spirit of the LORD might have carried Elijah away. Then Ahab would kill Obadiah for his "false" report. And besides all this, Obadiah's position in the royal court was already precarious because he had protected the LORD's prophets. Elijah promised that he would not leave the place, and a meeting was then arranged.

18:16-19 King Ahab went to meet Elijah and accused him of being a troubler of Israel, not realizing that the man of God was one of the best friends Israel ever had. Not fearing for his own life, Elijah answered Ahab fearlessly and accusingly. He blamed the king for mixing the worship of Jehovah with Baal-worship and challenged him to assemble his idolatrous prophets for a contest on Mount Carmel to determine who was the true God. (The four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal went to Carmel, but the four hundred prophets of Asherah did not; cf. vv. 19, 22.)

5. Elijah's Victory over the Priests of Baal (18:20-40)

18:20-25 Addressing the assembled representatives of Israel, Elijah accused them of wavering between two opinions; they should choose either the LORD or Baal. Then the contest began. Two bulls were to be killed and laid on kindling wood. Elijah would represent the LORD, whereas four hundred and fifty of Ahab's prophets would represent Baal. The God who answered by fire would be acknowledged as the true God.

18:26-29 The prophets of Baal cried out to their god and hopped around the altar from morning ... till noon. Elijah mocked them with "helpful" excuses for Baal's failure to answer. "Perhaps he was such a small, weak god that he could not do two things at once." In desperation, they ... cut themselves (as was their custom) with knives and lances and raved on until the time ... of the evening sacrifice. But there was no voice; no one answered, no one paid attention.

18:30-35 Then Elijah ... built an altar of twelve stones in the name of the LORD, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. Then, to eliminate any possibility that the altar might be ignited in any way other than by a miracle, he saturated the oxen and the wood with twelve barrels of water (four waterpots emptied three times).

Some wonder how Elijah obtained so much water during a time of drought. But this is not a real difficulty. Twelve barrels of water is not an impossible amount during drought time. The drought had affected farmlands, but drinking water must have been obtainable or else everyone would have died. Another explanation is that this water could have come from the Mediterranean Sea, a few miles away. Williams says:

> the Kishon (v. 40), the sea (v. 43), and a well which still exists could severally or collectively supply the water needed to fill the trench (v. 35).[13]

18:36-40 At the time of ... the evening sacrifice, ... Elijah prayed that God would reveal himself by sending fire from heaven. Immediately the fire of the LORD fell from heaven, consuming not only the sacrifice but also the wood and the stones and the dust, and ... the water ... in the trench around the altar. The people were thus compelled to acknowledge the LORD as the real God. Then they obeyed Elijah's order to slay the wicked prophets of Baal. Only after the people acknowledged that Jehovah was God and executed ... the prophets of Baal could the rain come. Confession of sin and obedience to the Word of God are the steps to blessing.

6. Elijah's Prayer for Rain (18:41-46)

The prophet advised Ahab to eat a meal because he would soon have to leave Mount Carmel to escape the oncoming rain. While Ahab sat down to eat, Elijah rose up to pray. He ascended to the top of Mount Carmel, bowed down on the ground with his face between his knees, and fervently asked the Lord to fulfill His word by sending rain. He continued in prayer until his servant reported a tiny cloud on the horizon. That was enough for Elijah. He immediately sent word to Ahab to make haste for Jezreel, a city in Issachar where the royal family lived at times (21:1). As a loyal subject and faithful servant, the prophet ran before Ahab's chariot in a drenching rain twenty miles to Jezreel.

7. Elijah's Flight to Horeb (19:1-18)

19:1-4 When Ahab told Jezebel of the defeat and death of the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel, she swore that she would slay Elijah within a day. Then the prophet whose faith had gained such a mighty victory the previous day lost courage. He ran for his life from Jezreel, south across the land to Beersheba, about one hundred miles away, at the southern boundary of Judah. Leaving his servant at Beersheba, Elijah continued south a day's journey into the wilderness. At length he rested under a broom tree, despondent, defeated, and depressed.

19:5-8 It is interesting to notice God's treatment for this severe depression: rest; food and drink; more rest; more food and drink. Thus fortified, the prophet traveled in the strength of that food 200 miles in forty days and ... nights to Mount Horeb (Sinai), where God had given the law to Moses.

19:9-14 There in a cave ... the LORD dealt with him. In a self-righteous spirit, Elijah protested his own faithfulness and denounced the children of Israel. He said in effect that he was the only one who had remained true to the Lord. God then commanded him to stand on the mountain of the law, but Elijah did not obey. We know this because later (v. 13) he went out and stood in the entrance of the cave. In rapid succession the mountains were visited by a great ... wind, an earthquake, and a fire. These violent storms must have reminded Elijah of his harsh, censorious spirit. None of them brought him out of the cave. Finally, after the fire the prophet heard a still, small voice. It was this gracious voice of the Lord which brought him to the entrance of the cave. There he again exalted himself as God's sole remaining witness. George Williams comments:

> Had his heart not been occupied with self, he would have learned that tempests, earthquakes and fires cannot accomplish what the gentle voice of love can. He should have recognized that there was no difference between his heart and that of the nation; and, that as coercion failed to make him leave his cave, so it failed, and must fail, to compel men to leave their sins.[14]

19:15-18 It seems that Elijah's usefulness as a servant of God suffered when he adopted this attitude of self-importance. God told him to return north to the Wilderness of Damascus, where he would conduct three anointings: (1) He would anoint Hazael to be king over Syria. The disobedient nation of Israel would be punished by this king. (2) He would anoint Jehu to be king over Israel. Jehu would execute God's judgment on the house of Ahab. (3) He would anoint ... Elisha as his own successor.[15] This would teach him that he was not indispensable. These three men would execute God's judgment on idolaters in Israel (v. 17), but the Lord would leave seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal or kissed him.

8. Elijah's Appointment of Elisha (19:19-21)

19:19 Elijah traveled north to Abel Meholah, in the Jordan Valley near Beth Shean. There he found Elisha, a farmer plowing in the field. The fact that Elisha had twelve yoke of oxen indicates that he was not poor. He was probably plowing with one yoke and his servants with the other eleven. Elijah threw his mantel on Elisha, a sign that Elisha was to be his successor.

19:20, 21 Elisha asked permission to return home and make a farewell feast for his family. Elijah gave consent but warned him not to forget what had just happened to him—i.e., how Elijah had anointed him. After a sumptuous feast, Elisha arose and followed Elijah and became his personal servant.

Elisha's request to say goodbye to his parents sounds dangerously like that of a would-be disciple whom Jesus pronounced unfit for the kingdom (Luke 9:61, 62). The difference is that in Elisha's case it was a no-nonsense decision to sever ties immediately, whereas in the other case it was a delaying tactic and an excuse.

9. Ahab's First Victory over Syria (20:1-22)

20:1-6 Ben-Hadad, the king of Syria, was formerly thought to be the son of the Ben-Hadad mentioned in 15:18, 20. But later research has raised the possibility that he was the same person. He formed an alliance of thirty-two Aramean kings and marched against Samaria ... with horses and chariots.

When the city was in a state of siege, he sent surrender terms to Ahab —"Your silver ... your gold ... your loveliest wives and children." Ahab meekly and weakly agreed. Not satisfied with Ahab's capitulation to his first terms, Ben-Hadad next demanded right of entry for his servants and the right to seize anything they wanted.

20:7-12 The elders of Israel were indignant at this second demand and urged noncompliance. When Ben-Hadad was notified of Israel's refusal, he flew into a rage, boasting that he would strip Samaria so bare that there wouldn't be a handful of dust ... for each of his soldiers. To this, Ahab replied that a soldier putting on his armor should not boast as if the victory were already won. This taunt stirred the carousing Syrian and his confederates to action.

20:13-15 At this point a prophet of the Lord approached Ahab, assuring him of victory. God used a small force of two hundred and thirty-two servants of the governors of the districts, followed by seven thousand of the people of Israel, to defeat the assembled armies from the north. The phrase "all the children of Israel" (v. 15b) means all the soldiers in Samaria. A small number of young servants was chosen to begin the battle, to make it all the more apparent that victory was from the Lord and not from the arm of the flesh.

20:16-22 Ahab attacked at noon, when Ben-Hadad and his allies were getting drunk. When Ben-Hadad heard that the 232 men of Israel were advancing, he ordered that they be taken alive. This, of course, gave a military advantage to the Israelites and resulted in a great slaughter of the Syrians. The survivors retreated to their homeland. The prophet of the Lord warned Ahab that the Syrian army would return in the spring.

10. Ahab's Second Victory over Syria (20:23-34)

20:23-25 Ben-Hadad's servants attributed their shameful defeat to two factors: (1) The Israelites had won the battle in hill country. Doubtless their gods were gods of the hills. But they would be impotent on the plains. So the Syrians should engage them the next time on the plains. (2) The thirty-two kings who fought against Ahab had apparently proved themselves unskilled in warfare. Ben-Hadad's servants advised that they be replaced by professional captains.

20:26-30a In the spring, ... Ben-Hadad marched against Israel again. The army of Israel looked like two little flocks of goats compared to the host of Syria. A man of God told Ahab that the LORD would show Ben-Hadad that He was the God of the valleys as well as of the hills. In the battle, Israel killed one hundred thousand foot soldiers. The Syrians who escaped tried to take up positions on the walls of the city of Aphek, but the walls collapsed, killing twenty-seven thousand of them.

20:30b-34 Ben-Hadad hid in an inner chamber of Aphek. His servants persuaded him to let them go out to Ahab, clothed with symbols of surrender and mourning, and to plead for mercy. In the interview, Ahab stupidly referred to the king as his "brother." The men of Syria quickly caught that word and said, "Yes, your brother Ben-Hadad!" Ahab ordered that the king of Syria be brought to him. Ben-Hadad promised to restore the cities which had been taken from Ahab's predecessor (15:20) and to allow Israel to establish marketplaces ... in Damascus (v. 34). Ahab made a treaty on these terms and let Ben-Hadad escape instead of killing him, as he should have done.

11. Ahab's Disobedience (20:35-43)

20:35, 36 Ahab wanted a strong Syria as a buffer between Israel and the growing menace of Assyria. The incident that follows was an object lesson, acted out by the prophet, to illustrate the folly of Ahab's action.

One of the sons of the prophets ordered his fellow by the word of the LORD to strike him. The man disobeyed him and therefore disobeyed the LORD. For his failure to obey the Lord's voice, he was destroyed by a lion.If a good prophet were thus punished for sparing his friend and God's, when God said Smite, of much sorer punishment should a wicked king be thought worthy, who spared his enemy and God's, when God said Smite.[16]

20:37-43 The prophet found another man who obeyed him by striking and wounding him. Then the prophet ... disguised himself with a bandage over his eyes and waited for King Ahab. When the king was passing by, the prophet told of being in the battle and of being charged with the custody of an enemy prisoner. He had been warned that if the prisoner escaped, he would have to pay either with his own life or with the exorbitant figure of one talent of silver. The disguised prophet told how he had become preoccupied with other things and how the prisoner had escaped. The king showed no leniency; he insisted that the original terms of punishment be carried out. Then the prophet sprang the trap. He removed his bandage to reveal himself as a prophet known by Ahab. Ahab had had an enemy prisoner, Ben-Hadad, in his grasp. Obedience to the Lord required that the Syrian king be killed. For his disobedience Ahab would be slain. Campbell Morgan explains:

> This was the meaning of the parable: Ahab had one thing to do by the command of God, and while he did a hundred things, he neglected the one. What a revelation of a perpetual reason and method of failure! We are given some one responsibility by God, some central, definite thing to do. We start to do it with all good intentions, and then other things, not necessarily wrong in themselves, come in our way. We get "busy here and there" doing many things and we neglect the one central thing.[17]

Like King David before him, Ahab condemned himself by his own words. But unlike David, who repented, Ahab became sullen and stormed off to his palace to pout. Instead of asking the Lord for mercy, he continued to incite the Lord to wrath, as we read in the remaining chapters of 1 Kings.

12. Ahab's Crimes against Naboth (Chap. 21)

21:1-4 Chapter 21 traces the events leading up to Ahab's death. The scene is in Jezreel, where Ahab and Jezebel had a palace. Adjoining the palace was a vineyard owned by Naboth the Jezreelite. Ahab desired to annex the vineyard so he could plant a vegetable garden there. Naboth refused to sell or exchange his land, since the law of Israel decreed that property should remain in the family to which it was originally assigned (Lev. 25:23-28; Num. 36:7; Ezek. 46:18).

21:5-16 When Jezebel found her husband vexed and sullen and learned of Naboth's refusal to sell his vineyard, she assured Ahab that the vineyard would soon be his. She ordered a fast and a court of inquiry. Two evil men were appointed to charge Naboth with blasphemy against God and the king. Accordingly, Naboth was taken outside the city and stoned to death.

The treacherous Jezebel thus framed Naboth so that it would appear he was being executed for breaking the law of Jehovah. Since the property would pass on to Naboth's sons after his death, Jezebel had them murdered as well (2 Kgs. 9:26). The iniquitous queen was as thorough as she was wicked.

21:17-26 When Ahab was on his way to take possession of the vineyard, Elijah met him and condemned him for murder and theft. Elijah predicted that Ahab himself would be slain, that his male descendants would be slain, ending his dynasty, that the body of Jezebel would be eaten by dogs in Jezreel, and that Ahab's descendants would not be given a decent burial (v. 24). The severity of Ahab's punishment is explained by the extremes to which he went in idolatry—"there was no one like Ahab who sold himself to do wickedness."

21:27-29 When Ahab heard his doom, he humbled himself before the Lord. For this, the Lord decreed that the judgments on his wife and family would not take place until after Ahab's death.

If we learn anything from these verses, it is that God is a God of grace and mercy. "'As I live,' says the Lord GOD, 'I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. Turn, turn from your evil ways! For why should you die?'" (Ezek. 33:11). Even Ahab's superficial repentance brought a respite. But the next chapter proves that his heart was unchanged. Grace was met by pride, so the Lord handed Ahab over to the angel of death, and Jehu was appointed to carry out the bloody decree against the rest of his house according to the prophecy of Elijah (2 Kgs. 9, 10).

13. Ahab's Last Battle (22:1-40)

22:1-6 After three years of peace between Syria and Israel, Ahab conceived the idea of recapturing Ramoth Gilead, on the east of the Jordan, from the Syrians. Ben-Hadad had promised to return Israel's cities when he received amnesty from Ahab (20:34), but he apparently had failed to do so. Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, happened to be visiting Ahab at the time and expressed willingness to cooperate in the military venture. But first Jehoshaphat suggested that they inquire of the LORD through the prophets. Four hundred prophets in Ahab's court advised in favor of the plan and promised victory. These may well have been the 400 prophets who did not go to Mount Carmel for the showdown with Elijah (18:19, 22).

22:7-12 Jehoshaphat must have felt uneasy because he asked if there were a prophet of the LORD who could be consulted. This brought to the fore Micaiah, a fearless prophet who was hated by Ahab because of his uncompromising messages. At the time Micaiah was summoned, the 400 prophets were unanimously urging the kings of Israel and Judah to march against Syria. One of them, Zedekiah, made horns of iron to depict the irresistible power of Ahab and Jehoshaphat against the Syrians.

22:13-17 Micaiah was informed that his message should agree with that of the other prophets, but the advice was wasted on him. When Ahab asked if the campaign against Ramoth Gilead should be undertaken, Micaiah first said the same thing as the prophets: "Go and prosper, for the LORD will deliver it into the hand of the king!" But it is probable that he said it in a mocking manner. The tone of his voice must have dripped with irony and sarcasm.

Ahab sensed this and put Micaiah under oath to tell ... the truth (Lev. 5:1). The prophet then related a vision in which Israel was scattered because they had no shepherd, intimating that Ahab would be killed and his army dispersed.

22:18-23 King Ahab presented this to Jehoshaphat as evidence that Micaiah could speak nothing but evil against him. Then the brave prophet spoke up again. He related a vision in which a lying spirit, appearing before the LORD, agreed to trick Ahab into going against Ramoth Gilead and be slain. The lying spirit would put this advice into the mouth of all the king's prophets. This is an example of how God, while not the author of evil, uses it to achieve His ultimate ends. He sent the lying spirit only in the sense that He permitted it.

22:24, 25 The point of this parable was not lost upon Zedekiah. Realizing that he and the other prophets were being accused of lying, he struck Micaiah and asked, "Which way did the spirit from the Lord go from me to speak to you?" In other words, Zedekiah was saying:

> I spoke by the Spirit of God when I advised Ahab to go against Ramoth Gilead. Now you profess to speak by the Spirit, yet you advise the very opposite. How did the Spirit go from me to you?

Micaiah answered calmly that Zedekiah would know the truth when he would hide in terror in a secret place—evidently when Ahab's death would expose Zedekiah to the fate of a false prophet.

22:26-30 The infuriated king of Israel ordered that Micaiah be put ... in prison and fed with bread ... and water, ... until he (Ahab) returned in peace from Ramoth Gilead. Micaiah's parting salute was, "If you ever return in peace, the LORD has not spoken by me." Ahab decided to disguise himself before going into battle, hoping in this way to avoid the disaster predicted by Micaiah. Jehoshaphat, on the other hand, would wear his kingly robes, exposing himself to the very danger that Ahab was trying to escape. Ahab thus attempted to fool the Lord and the king of Syria, but "God is not mocked; for whatever a man sows, that he will also reap" (Gal. 6:7). Ahab was slain, but Jehoshaphat was saved.

22:31-36 The Syrians had been ordered to kill the king of Israel; this was their prime military objective. At first they mistook Jehoshaphat for Ahab. The king of Judah cried out in terror, perhaps revealing his true identity in this way. Then Ahab was struck between the joints of his armor by a random arrow and was removed from the active fighting. He was propped up in his chariot so that his army would not lose heart. When he died at sunset, the fact became known, and his soldiers retreated to their homes.

22:37-40 Ahab's body was taken back to Samaria and buried. His bloodstained chariot was washed beside a pool in Samaria, ... while the harlots bathed. This was only a partial fulfillment of Elijah's prophecy

(21:19); it took place in Samaria rather than in Jezreel. Because Ahab had humbled himself (21:29), God compassionately deferred the complete fulfillment to the king's son, Joram (2 Kgs. 9:25, 26).

Ahab received three separate prophetic warnings of his death. One was pronounced by an unnamed prophet when Ahab spared Ben-Hadad (20:42); one was given by Elijah when Ahab took the vineyard of Naboth (21:19); and the third prophecy was uttered by Micaiah on the eve of the eventful battle (vv. 17-23).

M. King Jehoshaphat of Judah (22:41-50)

Jehoshaphat the son of Asa was king of Judah for twenty-five years (873/72-848 B.C.).

For the first three or four years, Jehoshaphat co-reigned with his father Asa. We have already been introduced to Jehoshaphat in verses 2-4, where he made a shameful alliance with the wicked king of Israel and nearly lost his life as a result. In general, however, his reign was good. The following are significant features of Jehoshaphat's administration.

1. He followed his father's example in combating idolatry, though he was not successful in eradicating it completely (v. 43).
2. He reigned jointly with his father Asa.
3. He made peace with Ahab, king of Israel (v. 44).
4. He expelled the male cult prostitutes from the land (v. 46).
5. His kingdom included the land of Edom (2 Sam. 8:14), where he was represented by a deputy (v. 47). His son Jehoram later lost Edom through a revolution (2 Kgs. 8:20).
6. He allied himself with Ahaziah, Ahab's son, in a shipbuilding project at Ezion Geber (2 Chron. 20:35, 36). Their plan was to send the ships ... to Ophir for gold. But the ships were wrecked before they ever left port (v. 48), no doubt by a windstorm. The prophet Eliezer told Jehoshaphat that this was because the Lord disapproved of the unholy alliance with Ahaziah (2 Chron. 20:37). When Ahaziah suggested renewing the project, Jehoshaphat declined (v. 49).

N. King Ahaziah of Israel (22:51-53)

Ahaziah the son of Ahab was king of Israel, for two years (853-852 B.C.; cf. 2 Kgs. 1:1-18).

The reign of Ahaziah was one of gross idolatry and wickedness. His mother, Jezebel, no doubt urged him on in ungodliness even as she had pushed his father. He worshiped Baal ... and provoked the LORD God of Israel to anger. Like father, like son. There is no formal close to 1 Kings, since 1 and 2 Kings were originally one book, and the break was made strictly for convenience. Second Kings continues the narrative from this point.

COMMENTARY

I. THE DIVIDED KINGDOM (CONT'D. FROM 1 KINGS) (CHAPS. 1-17)

A. King Ahaziah of Israel and the Ministry of Elijah (Chap. 1)

1:1 Moab had been subjugated by David (2 Sam. 8:2). When Solomon's kingdom was divided into Israel and Judah, Moab came under Israel's sway. After Ahab's death, the Moabites rebelled and won their independence.

1:2 King Ahaziah fell through the lattice on the roof of his palace in Samaria and was seriously injured. Instead of appealing to the Lord for healing, he sent messengers to Baal-Zebub, the god of Ekron, to see if he would recover. Whitcomb identifies the pagan god as follows:

> The real name of this Syrian deity was Baal-zebul ('Lord of life'), but the Jews called him Baal-zebub ('Lord of flies') in derision. By the time of Christ, this deity had become a symbol of Satan.[1]

It is pathetic that a king whose name means "whom Jehovah sustains" should turn to Baal for healing!

1:3-8 A hairy man wearing a leather belt, Elijah met the messengers and sent them back to Ahaziah with a stern rebuke for inquiring of Baal-Zebub and with the announcement that his illness would be fatal.

1:9-12 Ahaziah responded by sending a captain ... with ... fifty men to order Elijah to appear before him immediately. When the captain delivered the insolent demand, God vindicated Elijah by causing fire ... from heaven to destroy the captain and his fifty men. A second captain ... with ... fifty men ordered Elijah to "Come down quickly!" but they met the same fate. With fire ... from heaven God had previously discredited Baal and his priests (1 Kgs. 18). Now that same heavenly flame destroyed the soldiers of Baal who sought to lay unholy hands on Elijah. The prophet took his orders from Israel's true King, not from an idolatrous usurper. We are not told specifically why the two captains and their men were killed; perhaps they shared Ahaziah's determination to destroy Elijah.

1:13-16 Only when the third captain humbly acknowledged Elijah's power and pleaded for mercy was the prophet instructed by the angel of the LORD (Christ in preincarnate appearance) to go and speak with Ahaziah. Elijah fearlessly told the king that he would not recover because he had treated the Lord with contempt by consulting Baal-Zebub.

1:17, 18 When Ahaziah died, he was succeeded by his brother, Jehoram (later referred to as Joram), because he had no son to wear the crown. Judah at this time had a co-regency composed of Jehoshaphat (3:1) and his son, who was also named Jehoram.

B. The Translation of Elijah (2:1-12a)

This chapter opens with the saintly Elijah being "taken up" (vv. 1-11) and closes with the hooligans of Bethel being "torn up" (vv. 23-25).

2:1-6 The time had now come for Elijah to finish his ministry and for Elisha to succeed him. But first Elijah must visit Bethel, Jericho, and Jordan. Elisha faithfully insisted on going with him to these places. In Bethel and Jericho, the sons of the prophets told Elisha that the LORD was going to take Elijah "away from his head" that day. This refers to the practice of a disciple sitting at his master's feet; in such an arrangement, the master was at the disciple's head, of course. Elisha already knew this and told the prophets to "keep silent!" The matter was too sad and sacred to discuss.

2:7-9 From Jericho, Elijah and Elisha went down to the Jordan River, followed ... at a distance by fifty of the ... prophets. When Elijah ... struck the Jordan with his mantle, the waters divided and the two men crossed over on dry land. Elijah had come from Gilead, east of the Jordan, during the reign of Ahab, to begin his prophetic work (1 Kgs. 17:1). Now at the close of his ministry he crossed back over Jordan to be taken up into heaven. Encouraged by the departing prophet to make a request, Elisha asked for a double portion of his spirit. The double portion is the right of the firstborn son and may simply mean here that Elisha wanted to be his worthy successor. Williams says that the fulfillment of the request is seen in the fact that,

whereas Elijah performed eight recorded miracles, Elisha performed sixteen.[2]

2:10-12a Elijah said that it was not in his power to grant the request, then added a condition that was also beyond his control: If Elisha would see him depart, then his request would be granted. As they walked on and talked, they were separated by a chariot of fire ... with horses of fire. Then a whirlwind caught Elijah ... up ... into heaven in full view of Elisha. Elisha ... cried out, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and its horsemen!" This may indicate that Elijah was the strongest weapon of God's power and the best defense of Israel.

C. The Beginning of Elisha's Ministry (2:12b-25)

2:12b-14 After tearing apart his own clothes in grief, Elisha returned to the east bank of the Jordan, struck the water with Elijah's mantle, and said, "Where is the LORD God of Elijah?" This question did not express doubt or unbelief but merely afforded opportunity for God to show that He was with Elisha as He had been with Elijah. The waters divided, permitting the prophet to return to the west bank of the river, where the fifty sons of the prophets had been waiting and watching.

2:15-18 After seeing the parting of the Jordan, they acknowledged that Elisha was truly the successor of Elijah. Against Elisha's better judgment they insisted on sending out a party to search for Elijah, but the trip was in vain, of course, as Elisha had warned. Either they had not witnessed Elijah's translation, or, if they had, they thought his absence was temporary.

2:19-22 The ministry of Elisha from this point to 13:20 consists of a series of miracles designed to turn the nation of Israel away from idolatry to the true and living God. The incidents are not necessarily in chronological order. The first of these miracles occurred when Elisha threw salt into the brackish water in the fountain at Jericho; never again did it cause death or barrenness.

2:23, 24 En route from Jericho to Bethel, one of the centers of calf worship, Elisha was met by some rowdy youths who called him a baldhead and mockingly challenged him to go up to heaven as Elijah had done. After he cursed them in the name of the LORD, two female bears came out of the woods and mauled forty-two of them. An insult to God's messenger is an insult to God Himself.

2:25 Elisha retraced Elijah's steps, going to the schools of the prophets in Jericho and Bethel before traveling to Mount Carmel and Samaria. At Jericho the people treated him respectfully and received a blessing. Because of their irreverence for Jehovah, the young people at Bethel treated him shamefully, for which they received a curse.

D. King Jehoram (Joram) of Israel (Chap. 3)

Jehoram the son of Ahab was king of Israel for twelve years (852-841 B.C.; 2 Kgs. 3:1-9:29).

3:1-3 When Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign as king over Israel, there was a co-regency in Judah (Jehoshaphat and his son Jehoram). That explains how Jehoram, king of Israel, began to reign in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat and in the second year of Jehoram, king of Judah (2 Kgs. 1:17).

Jehoram (same name as Joram) was not as evil as his parents; he put away the ... pillar of Baal which Ahab had erected. However, he clung to the golden calf worship instituted by Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

3:4-9 Under Ahab's reign, the king of Moab had been required to pay annual tribute to Israel. When Ahab died, King Mesha decided that it was a strategic time to rebel. The famous Moabite Stone, discovered by a German missionary in 1868, mentions Israel's subjugation of Moab and Mesha's successful rebellion.[3]

Ahaziah had done nothing about Moab's rebellion. However, when his successor Jehoram came to power he immediately sought to bring Moab back under his control, not wanting to lose her sizable tribute. Jehoram asked Jehoshaphat to join with him in the battle, and once again Jehoshaphat foolishly agreed. (See 1 Kgs. 22, where Jehoshaphat almost lost his life by allying himself with Israel.) They decided to march down the west side of the Dead Sea, east through Edom, and north to Moab. Since the king of Edom was a vassal of Jehoshaphat at this time, his help was enlisted in the war.

3:10-12 As they approached Moab, the army ran out of water. The insolence of Jehoram in blaming the LORD was answered by Jehoshaphat's suggestion that a prophet of the LORD be consulted. When it became known that Elisha, the servant of Elijah, was nearby, the three kings went down to him.

3:13-19 At first Elisha protested that he had nothing to do with the idolatrous king of Israel and suggested that he go to the idolatrous prophets of his father. Jehoram's reply may have suggested that it wasn't the idols but the LORD who was causing the problem. In deference to Jehoshaphat, Elisha agreed to seek the mind of the Lord. As a musician played, the power of God came upon Elisha and he predicted that the valley would be full of pools not caused by rain, and that the Moabites would be defeated.

3:20-25 The next morning, water flowed in the valley, coming from the direction of Edom. In the light of the sunrise, the water looked like blood to the Moabites, and they decided that the kings of Israel, Judah, and Edom had fought among themselves. As they hurried to the camp of Israel for the spoil, they met a devastating attack. The Israelites filled the arable land with stones, stopped up the wells, and cut down all the good trees.

3:26, 27 The king of Moab, embittered at his former allies, the Edomites, and suspecting that their king would not fight as wholeheartedly as Israel and Judah, sought to break through the lines of Edom. When this strategem failed, he offered his eldest son as a sacrifice on the wall of the city to appease his gods, to incite his men to fiercer battle, and to frighten the enemy. Israel was stunned by this human sacrifice, which was, of course, an abomination. Smitten directly by God or by their own consciences, they withdrew without bringing Moab back into subjection. Harold Stigers comments:

> The author seems to be asking: If Israel was so deeply moved in this case, why was she not shocked enough to forsake her own idolatry? But idolatry continued in Israel and in Judah.[4]

E. The Miraculous Ministry of Elisha (4:1-8:15)

1. Miraculous Provision of Oil (4:1-7)

An impoverished widow of one of the godly prophets was in danger of losing her sons to slavery because of unpaid debts. She was miraculously supplied with oil, the only limit being the number of vessels she could borrow to receive it. By selling the oil she was able to pay her debt and support her family. This event illustrates grace for the debtor, enough to meet present needs and to provide for future sustenance. God's grace to needy sinners sets us free from debt and slavery and provides all we need for a new life.

2. Miraculous Birth (4:8-17)

A prominent woman of Shunem had shown unusual hospitality to Elisha, even fitting out a small upper room for him in her home. When she was offered a position or favor from the king through Elisha's intercession, she humbly expressed her satisfaction at dwelling simply among her own people. Gehazi, the servant of the prophet, suggested that she might like a son, and this suggestion became a reality at the word of the prophet. The following spring she bore a son. Out of death (the barren womb) the Lord brought life, a picture of the spiritual birth of every child of God (Eph. 2:1-10).

3. Raising the Shunammite's Son (4:18-37)

4:18-25a Years later the lad suffered a stroke of some kind while out in the field. He was carried back to his mother and died in her arms at noon. She put his body in the prophet's chamber. Then, without revealing the reason, she told her husband that she wanted to visit the man of God on Mount Carmel. He thought it strange to visit the prophet when it was not a religious holiday, but he made the necessary arrangements for transportation. With great speed she rode from Shunem, in the plain of Esdraelon, to Mount Carmel.

4:25b-28 Seeing her approach, Elisha sent Gehazi to meet her and to inquire as to her welfare. She did not tell Gehazi the purpose of her visit. In fact, she deceived him by saying that all was well with herself, her husband, and her son. She preferred to present her case directly to the prophet. The woman met Elisha with an emotional outburst and would have been dismissed by Gehazi if the prophet had not sensed her deep distress and permitted her to speak. The LORD had not revealed to Elisha the purpose of her visit, and neither did she. But she gave a hint when she said, "Did I ask a son of my lord? Did I not say, 'Do not deceive me'?" In other words, "I do not want to be deceived by being given a son and then having him taken away from me." Perhaps Elisha surmised from this that the son was seriously ill.

4:29-31 At first the prophet sent Gehazi to lay his staff on the dead child, telling him to avoid the usual prolonged Eastern greetings en route. The woman sensed that this would not do and insisted that Elisha himself return with her. As they approached Shunem, Gehazi met them with the news that the lad had not awakened.

4:32-37 Elisha then went into the room where the body lay, closed the door, prayed, and stretched himself out on the child—mouth to mouth, eyes to eyes, and hands to hands. The prophet got up, walked back and forth, and then stretched himself out on the boy again. This time the lad sneezed seven times and ... opened his eyes. The thankful mother received her son back to life again. In raising the child, Elisha fully identified with the dead youth: mouth to mouth, eye to eye, hand to hand. His staff had effected no change, but when he put himself on the boy and breathed his own life into him, the lad came alive.

4. Detoxifying the Poisonous Stew (4:38-41)

The next recorded miracle took place at Gilgal. During a time of famine (perhaps the seven-year famine mentioned in chap. 8), Elisha ordered his servant to cook some stew for the sons of the prophets. By mistake some poisonous gourds were put into the pot. When the mistake was detected, Elisha threw some flour into the pot and in this way made it safe to eat.

5. Miraculous Provision of Bread (4:42-44)

At another time Elisha fed one hundred men with twenty small, round, flat loaves of barley bread and some fresh ears of grain. There was enough and to spare, as the Lord had promised there would be. Elisha unselfishly gave to others what rightfully belonged to him. When we share with others and leave the consequences with God, He is able to meet our needs and the needs of others, and to even leave a surplus (Prov. 11:24, 25).

6. Miraculous Cleansing of Naaman the Leper (5:1-19)

5:1-4 Elisha's miracle-working power extended even to the army of the Syrians. A captive Jewish girl was a servant in the home of Naaman, the commander of the Syrian army. Knowing that he was ... a leper, she suggested that the prophet Elisha in Samaria could heal him. This girl illustrates how a person of no importance in the eyes of the world, by being in a key place and showing loyalty to God, can influence the course of the history of salvation. D. L. Moody comments:

A little maid said a few words that made a commotion in two kingdoms. God honored her faith by doing for Naaman, the idolater, what he had not done for any in Israel. See Luke 4:24. How often has the finger of childhood pointed grown-up persons in the right direction. The maid boasted of God that he would do for Naaman what he had not done for any in Israel; and God honored her faith.[5]

5:5-7 Naaman obtained a letter of introduction from Ben-Hadad, king of Syria, to Joram, king of Israel, and also took gifts of money and clothing with him. Apparently the letter did not mention Elisha but simply requested healing for Naaman. The king of Israel was infuriated by such an unreasonable request and suspected that the Syrian king was looking for an excuse to attack Israel.

5:8-12 Elisha received word of the king's predicament and asked for Naaman to be sent to him. There was no power in the palace, for they were all idolaters there; but there was a prophet of God in Israel who had power to cleanse a man and make him whole. Elisha didn't talk to Naaman personally; his word was enough if acted upon by faith. Elisha sent word to Naaman to wash in the Jordan River seven times. Naaman had expected some more dramatic and colorful mode of healing than this, and he protested in a rage that the waters of his native Damascus were superior to the Jordan.

5:13, 14 D. L. Moody analyzed the problem accurately:

Naaman had two diseases—pride and leprosy. The first needed curing as much as the second. Naaman had to get down from his chariot of pride; afterwards, to wash according to the prescribed way.[6]

Finally his servants persuaded him to obey the prophet in such a simple matter, and he was thoroughly healed. As has been well said, "He swallowed his pride and lost his leprosy."

5:15-19 Naaman became a convert to the God of Israel and sought to reward Elisha, but the prophet would accept nothing from him. The Syrian general then obtained permission to take two mule-loads of earth back home with him so he could worship the true God on the displaced soil of Israel. He explained that his official duties might require him to go to the temple of the idol Rimmon with his master and even bow down, but he hoped that the LORD would pardon him for this. Elisha neither approved nor disapproved this, but simply sent him on his way.

In the story of Naaman we find a classic illustration of the gospel of grace. He was an enemy of God, being the captain of the Syrian army. Humanly speaking, his condition was helpless and hopeless, since he was a leper (cf. Rom. 5:6-10). Being a Gentile, he was a stranger to the promises and covenants of God and had no claim on His blessing (Eph. 2:11, 12). But God's grace reached out to touch human need. All Naaman had to do was to humble himself and obey the word of the Lord. He eventually washed himself in obedience to God's word and came up a new man, with new skin and a new heart.

Marvelous grace of our loving Lord,
Grace that exceeds our sin and our guilt,
Yonder on Calvary's mount outpoured,
There where the blood of the Lamb was spilt.
—Julia H. Johnston

7. The Greed of Gehazi (5:20-27)

But Gehazi coveted the gifts from Naaman which Elisha had refused. He told the Syrian that Elisha had sent him to collect the gifts for two young ... prophets who had just come to him from the mountains of Ephraim. Then he took the money and the garments to his own home. As a prophet, Elisha often received special revelations from the Lord. Now he was informed as to what his servant had done, and when Gehazi arrived, Elisha exposed him. He reminded the greedy servant that it was no time to receive money and garments or other things that could be bought with money. Gehazi was struck with the leprosy of Naaman. He had sinned greatly in giving the Syrians occasion to think that God's free gift of grace was not free at all.

8. Miraculous Recovery of an Axhead (6:1-7)

Some of the sons of the prophets were dissatisfied with the cramped quarters where they lived with Elisha, probably in Jericho or Gilgal. Therefore, they gained the prophet's permission to move near the Jordan and build a place there. In the process of building, one of the men lost a borrowed axhead in the Jordan. Elisha responded to his distressed plea by casting a stick into the river. The axhead floated and was retrieved by the grateful builder.

9. Miraculous Military Maneuvers (6:8-23)

Another evidence of Elisha's miraculous powers concerned his knowledge of highly confidential military moves in the camp of the enemy. The Syrian king was nonplussed because all his secret plans repeatedly became known to the king of Israel; he suspected that one of his men was a spy for Israel. When he learned that the Prophet Elisha was revealing his plans to the king of Israel, he determined to capture Elisha at all costs. Hearing that the prophet was in Dothan, a city not far north of Samaria, he sent a band of marauders to surround the city ... by night. In the morning Elisha's servant was terrified when he saw the enemy host surrounding the city. But in answer to the prophet's prayer, the servant was given miraculous power to see a protective host of horses and chariots of fire sent by God to guard His people.

Elisha asked the LORD to strike the Syrians with blindness. The prophet was then able to lead them from Dothan to Samaria without a struggle. When the king of Israel suggested killing them, Elisha reminded him that he would not kill the captives whom he had taken ... with ... sword and bow, so why kill these who were delivered into his hands without any effort on his part? Instead, the king was ordered to feed them and send them home. By this humane treatment he overcame evil with good. Such marauding bands conducted no more raids on Israel.

Verse 16 reminds us of 1 John 4:4b—" ... He who is in you is greater than he who is in the world." In our spiritual battle with the forces of evil, we have protection and power given us by our omnipotent Ally. Through the prayer of faith the Lord can open the eyes of our hearts to the reassuring fact that He is defending us and frustrating Satan's destructive intentions.

10. The Famine in Samaria (6:24-7:20)

6:24-31 The incident beginning here is not necessarily in chronological order. Ben-Hadad, king of Syria, ... besieged Samaria so successfully that famine conditions prevailed in the city. (If this siege took place after the seven-year famine mentioned in 8:1-2, as some suggest, we can understand how serious the situation really was.) People had to pay exorbitant prices for ceremonially unclean foods (a donkey's head) and for herbs or grain.

"Dove droppings"[7] was the name of a plant with an edible bulb. The plant bears the name "Star of Bethlehem" today. The king of Israel acknowledged that no one but the LORD could help, and he mourned greatly when he found cannibalism being practiced by the people. Blaming Elisha for the terrible conditions and for failing to do anything to relieve the situation, he vowed to kill him before the day was over.

6:32, 33 But Elisha received divine information about the king's intentions and told the elders that a messenger from the king was on the way, followed by the king himself. He ordered them to refuse entrance to the messenger until the king himself arrived. Almost immediately the messenger arrived, and then the king. He felt there was nothing to do but surrender to Syria. Then the king said, "Surely this calamity is from the LORD; why should I wait for the LORD any longer?" The incident reminds us that "The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, like the rivers of water; He turns it wherever He wishes" (Prov. 21:1).

The king of Israel is not mentioned by name here; in fact, the name of the king is not given in any of the incidents recorded in chapters 4-8. Many commentators hold that Jehoram (Joram) was king during the siege, but it is impossible to be certain since Elisha's ministry, which stretched over half a century under four different kings, is not recorded in chronological order.

7:1, 2 Elisha then made a remarkable prediction to the king. He promised that the next day fine flour and ... barley would be sold at very low prices at the gate of Samaria. When the king's skeptical aide questioned the likelihood of such incredible plenty, Elisha added that he would see it with his eyes, but would not eat of it. "If you would believe," writes Moody, "you must crucify the question, 'how?'"[8] (cf. our Lord's disciples before the feeding of the 4000 in Mark 8:4).

7:3-7 That evening four leprous men who sat at the ... gate of Samaria decided in desperation to desert to the camp of the Syrians in hope of getting food. When they arrived, the Syrian camp was abandoned—the LORD had caused the enemy forces to hear the noise of a mighty onrushing army. Supposing it to be Hittites and Egyptian soldiers hired by the king of Israel, they retreated in pandemonium. Matthew Henry comments:

> The Syrians that besieged Dothan had their sight imposed upon, ch. vi.18. These had their hearing imposed upon. ... Whether the noise was really made in the air by the ministry of angels, or whether it was only a sound in their ears, is not certain; which soever it was, it was from God.[9]

7:8-16 At first the lepers helped themselves liberally to food, money, and clothing. But realizing that the people would soon find out that the Syrians were gone and would punish them for their silence, they decided to notify the king. He immediately suspected the Syrians of laying an ambush for the Israelites. But a servant suggested sending a few men as scouts, reasoning that if they weren't killed by the Syrians, they would die of starvation anyway like the rest of Israel. The scouts found that the Syrians had actually fled, leaving a trail of abandoned spoil. So the people of Israel plundered the tents of the Syrians, and the famine was over.

7:17-20 In accordance with the prophecy of Elisha, fine flour and barley ... sold at very low prices that day. The king's officer who had doubted the prediction saw this, but he did not enjoy it because he was trampled to death by the jubilant throng at the city gate. Verses 18-20 reemphasize that the man died according to the word of the Lord because of his unbelief. Unbelief robs its victims of blessing and rewards them with death.

The memorable words of the lepers, "We are not doing right. This day is a day of good news, and we remain silent" (v. 9), are a constant challenge to those of us who are entrusted with the gospel of redeeming grace.

11. Restoration of the Shunammite's Property (8:1-6)

Before a seven-year famine came to the land (perhaps the famine of 4:38), Elisha warned the Shunammite woman (of chap. 4) to leave with her family, including the son whom he had restored to life. She went to the land of the Philistines and then returned when the famine had ended. At this time Gehazi was in the court of the king of Israel, a place that would ordinarily have been forbidden to a leper. Just as he was relating to the king how Elisha had restored a lad to life, the woman arrived to petition that her property be restored to her. The king ordered both the property and the produce which had grown on it during the seven years of her absence to be restored to her.

12. Elisha's Prophecy of Hazael's Reign (8:7-15)

8:7-12 When the ailing Ben-Hadad, king of Syria, heard that Elisha had come ... to Damascus, he sent an officer, Hazael, with a large gift to inquire if he would recover. Since Naaman was captain of the Syrian army under Ben-Hadad, the king would have been aware of Elisha's healing power (chap. 5). Perhaps the prophet would heal him as well. The prophet's vague answer to Hazael was, "Go, say to him, 'You shall certainly recover.' However the LORD has shown me that he will really die." This meant that the illness itself was not necessarily fatal, but that Ben-Hadad would not recover from it because Hazael was going to murder him. Elisha gazed so intently on Hazael that the latter became ashamed. Elisha also foresaw that Hazael would inflict terrible loss and suffering on the children of Israel—so terrible that the thought of it caused him to weep.

8:13-15 Hazael answered that he was but a dog; how could he be expected to do such a gross thing? Williams paraphrases it:

> Can it be that I, who am only a dog, should mount the throne of Syria and accomplish such great deeds![10]

But Elisha had been told by the LORD that Hazael would be king of Syria. Following this announcement, Hazael returned to Ben-Hadad, told him that he would ... recover, and then treacherously smothered him with a thick cloth soaked in water.

The following quotation succinctly tells how accurate Elisha's prophecy was:

> Soon after [the murder of Ben-Hadad], Hazael fought against the combined forces of Jehoram and Ahaziah at Ramoth-gilead (8:28, 29; 9:14, 15). He frequently defeated Jehu in battle, devastating all his country east of the Jordan from the Arnon in the south to Bashan in the north (10:32, 33). During the reign of Jehoahaz, Jehu's successor, he repeatedly encroached upon the territory of Israel, which was kept from complete destruction only by God's mercy (13:3, 22, 23). Hazael also moved into southwest Palestine, taking Gath; he compelled the king of Judah to pay a heavy bribe for sparing Jerusalem (12:17, 18; 2 Chron. 24:23, 24). It was not until the death of Hazael that Israel was able to successfully check the aggression of Syria under Ben-Hadad III, the son of Hazael (2 Kgs. 13:24, 25).[11]

F. King Jehoram (Joram) of Judah (8:16-24)

Jehoram (Joram) the son of Jehoshaphat was king of Judah for eight years (853-841 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 21:4-20).

8:16, 17 The chronology in verse 16 needs to be reconciled with that in 1 Kings 22:42, 51; 2 Kings 3:1; and 2 Kings 8:25. One explanation is that Jehoram was coregent with his father, Jehoshaphat, for five years. Another is that Jehoshaphat shared part of his reign with Asa and that the reigns of Ahaziah and Jehoram are dated from the beginning of Jehoshaphat's sole regency.

8:18, 19 Jehoram had married Athaliah, a daughter of Ahab and Jezebel. This marriage had doubtless been engineered by his father, Jehoshaphat, as part of his policy of conciliation with Israel. The result of it, however, was to lead the kingdom of Judah farther into the idolatrous ways of the northern kingdom. Because of this apostasy, the LORD would have destroyed Judah had it not been for his promise to David (2 Sam. 7:12-16).

8:20-24 During Joram's reign, Edom revolted against him. To quell the rebellion, he marched with his army to Zair (Edom), south of the Dead Sea. The Edomites ... surrounded him, forcing him to break through their lines to safety. His army fled home. From that time, Edom was not in complete subjection to Judah. It may have been during the reign of Jehoram that the prophet Obadiah spoke his oracle against Edom.

Mention is made that Libnah, near Philistia, also revolted, thus calling attention to the inherent weakness of the kingdom of Judah during the evil reign of Joram. Libnah was a Levitical city. The reason for her revolt is given in 2 Chronicles 21:10, 11. Judah evidently regained control of the city at a later time (19:8).

G. King Ahaziah of Judah (8:25-29)

Ahaziah the son of Jehoram was king of Judah for one year (841 B.C., cf. 2 Chron. 22:1-9).

8:25-27 Ahaziah is spoken of in verse 26 as the son of Athaliah, the granddaughter of Omri. Ahaziah is the same as Jehoahaz in 2 Chronicles 21 and is also called Azariah in 2 Chronicles 22:6. Ahaziah was a nephew of Joram, king of Israel. His mother, Athaliah, was the daughter of Ahab and the sister of Israel's Joram. The names get a bit confusing at this particular point in history! Ahab, king of Israel, had two sons who came to the throne successively, Ahaziah and Jehoram (Joram). Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, had a son named Jehoram who reigned after him. This Jehoram was followed on the throne by his son ... Ahaziah. Thus Ahaziah and Jehoram ruled in Israel while Jehoram and Ahaziah ruled in Judah.

ISRAEL JUDAH

Ahaziah Jehoram

Jehoram Ahaziah

Here Ahaziah, ... king of Judah, is said to have been twenty-two years old when he began to reign; in 2 Chronicles 22:2 his age is given as forty-two years. Most evidence points to twenty-two as the correct age. The other figure is probably a copyist's error.

8:28, 29 Ahaziah joined his uncle Joram, king of Israel, in a war against ... Syria at Ramoth Gilead. King Joram was wounded in battle and taken to Jezreel to recover. Ahaziah visited him there while he was recovering. Joram's father, Ahab, lost his life at Ramoth Gilead (1 Kgs. 22). Ahaziah's grandfather, Jehoshaphat, had unwisely joined Ahab there and was almost killed as a result. But Ahaziah did not heed history's warning (about allying himself with Israel) and was later killed as a result (chap. 9).

H. King Jehu of Israel and Elisha's Ministry (Chaps. 9, 10)

1. Jehu's Anointing (9:1-10)

Elisha directed one of the sons of the prophets to go to Ramoth Gilead and secretly anoint Jehu as king of Israel to succeed Joram. Jehu was the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi (v. 2), not the son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. Jehu was commander of Joram's army and had been stationed at Ramoth Gilead to hold back the Syrians. In anointing him, the prophet commissioned him to destroy the house of Ahab, in accordance with the prophecy of Elijah (1 Kgs. 21:21-24). Elijah had been told to anoint Jehu (1 Kgs. 19:16), but it appears that he passed this responsibility on to his successor, Elisha, who in turn sent an unknown prophet to Ramoth Gilead that the anointing might be carried out in secret. This secrecy gave Jehu the element of surprise, which he skillfully used in seizing the throne.

2. Jehu's Executions (9:11-10:17)

9:11-13 When Jehu emerged from the inner room, his fellow officers wanted to know what the "madman of a prophet" had said to him. Jehu first tried to evade the question by suggesting that they already knew. Perhaps he suspected that they had sent the prophet to anoint him in order to overthrow Joram. But at their insistence, he revealed that he had just been anointed ... king. In haste, his men covered the steps with their garments and publicly proclaimed him as king of Israel.Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat was king of Israel for twenty-eight years (841-814/13 B.C.; 2 Kgs. 9:14-10:36).

9:14-26 Jehu's reign began the fifth dynasty of the northern kingdom. Before news of his anointing could get to Jezreel, Jehu hurried there to kill Joram. A watchman ... saw the approach of Jehu's company and notified Joram. Messengers were sent out twice to learn the identity of the approaching company, but Jehu prevented them from returning. By then the watchmen notified the king that the furious driving resembled that of Jehu, the "son" (grandson) of Nimshi. Joram then went forth in his royal chariot, accompanied by his nephew Ahaziah, king of Judah, supposing that there was important news about Ramoth Gilead. He greeted Jehu with "Is it peace (sha¯lôm), Jehu?", but received warlike words in reply. Sensing treachery, Joram tried to flee but was killed by Jehu's arrow. In literal fulfillment of Elijah's prophecy (1 Kgs. 21:19), his body was cast to the ground in Naboth's vineyard.

9:27-29 Ahaziah also tried to escape, but he too was hit by an arrow and died at Megiddo. By fraternizing with the house of Ahab, he fell under the divine curse that Jehu had been commissioned to carry out. His body was then returned to Jerusalem for burial. Second Chronicles 22:9 says that he died in Samaria, but this could refer to either the kingdom of Samaria or the region. Verse 29 is not in chronological order, being a repetition of 8:25. The discrepancy between the years mentioned (eleventh and twelfth) is probably due to different methods of reckoning.

9:30-37 When Jehu reached the city of Jezreel itself, Jezebel mocked him, shouting, "Is it peace, Zimri, murderer of your master?" Zimri too had become king of Israel by murdering his master, but he enjoyed anything but peace. His abortive coup d'état lasted only seven days (1 Kgs. 16:9-19). Jezebel was intimating to Jehu that he would not prosper in his rebellion. Two eunuchs in the palace proved their loyalty to Jehu by throwing Jezebel out the window. Her blood spattered on the wall and on the horses, and her body was eaten by the dogs of Jezreel in fulfillment of 1 Kings 21:23—all except the skull and the feet and the palms of her hands. Campbell Morgan remarks:

> The very dogs turned from the skull and hands and feet that had designed and executed such abominations; and no tomb but infamy perpetuates her memory.[12]

10:1-11 Jehu's next step was to slay seventy descendants ("sons") of Ahab who were living in Samaria. He first gave their guardians an ultimatum—choose the best qualified of Ahab's descendants as kings and fight against Jehu and his men. But they remembered how two kings (Joram and Ahaziah) had been powerless against Jehu at Jezreel, so they sent back word that they would be obedient servants. He wrote back that they could demonstrate their loyalty to him by delivering the heads of Ahab's seventy male descendants to Jezreel the next day. They agreed to this. In the morning Jehu went out to see the heads, lying in two heaps at the entrance of the gate. Perhaps the assembled people expected him to be angry at this wholesale destruction, not knowing that he had ordered it. Quickly he set their minds at ease, saying in effect:

> You are innocent of this deed. I am innocent too. It is true that I killed my master, Joram, but who killed these? It must have been God, fulfilling what He predicted to His servant Elijah.

In further fulfillment of Elijah's prophecy, Jehu proceeded to kill all of Ahab's relatives, great men, close acquaintances, and his priests in Jezreel.

10:12-14 On the way to the capital, Samaria, Jehu met ... forty-two of Ahaziah's relatives. "Brothers" (v. 13) means cousins, nephews, etc., since Ahaziah's brothers had been slain (2 Chron. 21:17). These people had come from Judah to visit the royal family of Israel. Realizing that they had ties with the house of Ahab, Jehu ordered them to be killed at the well of Beth Eked.

10:15-17 Jehu also met Jehonadab (also called Jonadab), a Rechabite. On the assurance that Jehonadab was loyal to him, Jehu invited him to ride to Samaria and witness his zeal for the LORD. Jeremiah 35 tells us a little more about Jehonadab. He ordered his descendants to return to the early lifestyle that Israel had known under Moses and Joshua, in an attempt to keep them from following the kingdom into apostasy, the national sin of Israel. Upon hearing of Jehu's purge, he went with the new king, who immediately welcomed him as a great ally in the fight against Baalism. In Samaria, Jehu slew all the remaining relatives of Ahab. Morgan warns:

> He [Jehu] was proud of his own zeal. How subtle the peril! And it is a peril. Wherever it exists it leads to other evil things. While this man was carrying out the judgments of God upon Israel, he was in his own life corrupt.[13]

3. Jehu's Purge of the Baal-Worshipers (10:18-36)

10:18-28 The new king's next assault was aimed at the worshipers of Baal. In order to identify them, he ordered a great holiday in honor of Baal. The temple of Baal was filled with worshipers from all parts of Israel, wearing special identifying vestments. Care was taken to see that no worshipers of Jehovah were present. As soon as Jehu had offered the burnt offering, he gave the signal for his guard and ... captains to kill all the idolaters. Eighty men were stationed outside to prevent anyone from escaping. Jehu's men went into the inner room of the temple of Baal, removed the sacred pillars that were there, and burned them. They tore down the temple of Baal, converting it into a latrine or refuse dump.

10:29, 30 In many ways Jehu was one of the best, perhaps the best of the kings of Israel. He executed God's judgment on the house of Ahab and purged the land of Baal-worshipers. The Lord rewarded what was praiseworthy by promising that his dynasty would continue to the fourth generation (i.e., Jehoahaz, Joash, Jeroboam II, and Zechariah).

10:31-36 However, Jehu continued to promote the worship of the golden calves, which Jeroboam had inaugurated. Also, he is condemned in Hosea 1:4 for his extreme cruelty in exterminating the house of Ahab. As a result of his failures, the LORD began to cut off parts of Israel. Hazael, the king of Syria, captured the land east of the Jordan that had originally been occupied by the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half-tribe of Manasseh. Elisha had foreseen the activity of Hazael (8:12). The Syrian king was carrying out the judgment of the Lord on the house of Israel even as Jehu had executed judgment on the house of Ahab. Behind the activities of these wicked kings the spiritual eye can see the sovereign hand of Jehovah making the wrath of man accomplish His purposes.

I. Queen Athaliah's Usurpation in Judah (Chap. 11)

Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, was queen of Judah for six years (841-835 B.C.; 2 Chron. 22:10-23:21).

11:1 The scene now changes from Israel to Judah. Athaliah seized control when her son Ahaziah was slain by Jehu. To prevent any threat to her rule, she ordered the deaths of all (or so she thought) the sons of Ahaziah. That Athaliah could cold-bloodedly order the execution of her own grandchildren shows just how much like her mother (Jezebel) she was. She was also unwittingly carrying out the curse pronounced on the descendants of Ahab, her father (1 Kgs. 21:21, 22).

11:2, 3 Jehosheba, the wife of Jehoiada (2 Chron. 22:11) and an aunt of the doomed sons, courageously entered the royal house and stole a lad named Joash (same as Jehoash) from among the ... sons who were being murdered. Athaliah would have cut off the royal line, but the Lord preserved Joash because of the Davidic covenant. The long-range consequences of what she tried to do are staggering. This was a satanic attempt to break the royal Messianic line. Joash was hidden with his nurse in the bedroom of the unused temple. He remained there for six years, while Athaliah reigned over the land.

11:4-11 In the seventh year, Jehoiada the high priest called the captains of hundreds—of the bodyguards and the escorts—showed them the heir to the throne, and made a covenant with them to overthrow Athaliah and crown Joash as king. Williams comments:

> The steps taken by Jehoiada to bring about the royal revolution (vv. 4-11) may be thus paraphrased. He sent for the officers of the royal bodyguard. One regiment was ordered to surround the king's house, and the two remaining regiments to parade in front of the temple. Any person attempting to force his way through the troops was to be put to death. The guard relieved on that morning (v. 9) was not to return to barracks, but to fall in with the relieving guard and join the main body in defense of the king.[14]

11:12 Then Joash was brought out to the people. A crown was placed on his head and a copy of the Testimony (the law) was handed to him. The shout went up from the people, "Long live the king!"

11:13-16 When Athaliah was attracted by the noise to the court of the temple and saw what was going on, she cried, "Treason! Treason!" Because Jehoiada did not want her to be killed in the environs of the temple, he ordered that she be taken outside between ranks of soldiers and killed at the horses' entrance.

11:17-21 A covenant was then made between the LORD, the new king, and the people, that they would serve the Lord. In demonstration of this, the people sacked the temple of Baal, which Athaliah had promoted, and killed Mattan the priest of Baal. The king was escorted to the royal palace in a great procession. The people of the land rejoiced, and the city was quiet after Athaliah had been executed.

J. King Jehoash (Joash) of Judah (Chap. 12)

Jehoash (Joash), the son of Ahaziah, king of Judah, reigned for forty years (835-796 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 23:1-24:27).

12:1-5 John C. Whitcomb comments on the reign of Jehoash:

> The forty-year reign of Joash may be divided into two parts—before and after the death of his spiritual guardian, Jehoiada. The statement that "Joash did that which was right in the eyes of Jehovah all the days of Jehoiada the priest" is ominous. Without the moral and spiritual courage of this high priest, Joash was as unstable as Lot without Abram. Therefore, God showed His mercy to the people of Judah by extending Jehoiada's life to an amazing 130 years (2 Chron. 24:15)! Thus Jehoiada lived longer than anyone on record during the previous thousand years, since Amram, an ancestor of Moses, died at 137 (Ex. 6:20).[15]

In general, the reign of Jehoash was commendable. However, he failed to stop the people from worshiping at the high places. His major contribution was his undertaking to repair ... the temple. To do this he issued instructions to the priests that certain funds should be laid aside for the purpose of restoring the house of the LORD. According to Williams, these were: (1) the money of everyone who passed the account—that is, the census tax of Exodus 30:12; (2) the money that every man is set at—that is, the assessment money of Leviticus 27; (3) all the money that a man desired to bring—that is, the ordinary freewill offerings legislated for in Leviticus.[16]

12:6-16 When no repairs had been made by the twenty-third year of the reign of King Jehoash, the king called Jehoiada ... and the other priests and announced a new plan for collecting the money and repairing the temple. The priests would no longer collect the funds directly, nor would they supervise the repairs on the temple (v. 7). Instead, a chest with a hole in its lid was to be placed at the right side of the altar to receive money for the restoration of the temple. The king's scribe and the high priest added up the funds and distributed them to the workmen. The overseers were honest, so it was not necessary to demand a public accounting of the funds. Verse 13 seems to contradict 2 Chronicles 24:14; however, verse 13 means that these funds were not used to purchase utensils for the temple while it was being restored, whereas 2 Chronicles 12:14 means that after the work on the temple was completed, the surplus funds were used for this purpose. In obedience to God's Word (Lev. 5:16; Num. 5:8, 9), the money from the sin and trespass offerings continued to be given to the priests.

12:17, 18 At this time Hazael, king of Syria, captured Gath and marched toward Jerusalem. Jehoash gave him sacred things from the temple and from the king's house to dissuade him from attacking the capital of Judah.

12:19-21 After the death of Jehoiada, the princes of Judah turned their king to idolatry. When Zechariah, a son (or grandson) of the high priest, tried to call the people back to the worship of Jehovah, King Jehoash ordered him to be stoned to death (2 Chron. 24).

Jehoash's own servants conspired against him and killed him in the house of the Millo. This was God's judgment on him for the murder of Zechariah.

Jesus referred to the death of Zechariah when He reproved the lawyers (Luke 11:51). He said that the blood of all the prophets, from the blood of Abel to that of Zechariah, would be required of that generation. Thus He included the blood of all martyrs in the OT period, from that of Abel in Genesis to that of Zechariah here and in 2 Chronicles, the last book of the Hebrew Bible. (The Hebrew Bible contains the same books as our OT but in a different order.)

Jehoiada was a godly man who devoted himself to the service of the kingdom and the temple. He received two blessings in return: His son Zechariah followed in his steps, and he was buried with the kings of Judah, a great honor indeed for one born outside the royal family. Joash, on the other hand, got progressively worse after the death of Jehoiada. He plundered the temple he had once repaired and robbed the royal treasury to buy off the Syrians. He was not buried in the tomb of the kings because he died under divine judgment for the murder of Zechariah. It is vital that we persevere in godliness lest we hinder the kingdom of God. Jehoiada, a shining example! Joash, a solemn warning!

K. King Jehoahaz of Israel (13:1-9)

Jehoahaz the son of Jehu was king of Israel for seventeen years (814/13-798 B.C.).

Jehoahaz followed Jeroboam in the mixed worship of Jehovah and the Asherah (v. 6). God punished him by sending the Syrians against Israel. They reduced Jehoahaz's forces to only fifty horsemen, ten chariots, and ten thousand foot soldiers. When Jehoahaz pleaded with the LORD, He raised up a deliverer who rescued Israel from ... the hand of the Syrians. The deliverer might have been Adad-nirari III, king of Assyria, who late in the reign of Jehoahaz caused more and more trouble for Syria, leaving her little time to bother Israel. Some commentators suggest that Elisha was the deliverer. Others say that verse 5 refers to either Jehoash (v. 25) or Jeroboam II (14:26, 27). Verse 23 explains why God answered Jehoahaz's prayer: It was because of His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Notice that verses 5 and 6 are a parenthesis. The parenthesis is one of grace. Before another century passed, Israel would be swept off the promised land because of her persistence in the sins of Jeroboam. By providing a deliverer for the nation, the Lord was seeking to turn her from her destructive course before the final stroke of judgment fell. However, they did not depart from the sins of the house of Jeroboam ... but walked in them.

L. King Jehoash (Joash) of Israel (13:10-13)

Jehoash (Joash) the son of Jehoahaz was king of Israel for sixteen years (798-782/81 B.C.; 2 Kgs. 13:10-14:16).

13:10-13 This King Jehoash is to be differentiated from the king of Judah with the same name who was reigning at this time. The reign of this Jehoash was wicked, patterned after that of Jeroboam the son of Nebat. These verses give a condensed account of his reign: He became king; he did evil in the sight of the LORD; he rested with his fathers. His dealings with Amaziah of Judah are recorded in 14:8-16.

M. The Close of Elisha's Ministry (13:14-25)

13:14-19 Verses 14-25 tell of the prophecy and death of Elisha, which took place during the rule of Jehoash. When the prophet Elisha was dying, Joash (Jehoash) visited him and wept over him, saying, "O my father, my father, the chariots of Israel and their horsemen!" He meant that men of Elisha's caliber were the truest and best defense of the people of Israel. Elisha had used the same words to lament the passing of Elijah (2:12). He realized that the death of the prophet would be a great loss to the kingdom. From his sickbed, Elisha directed Joash to take a bow and some arrows, to shoot one arrow eastward, and then to strike the ground with the arrows. The arrow that shot eastward signified victory over the Syrians, who had occupied Israel's land east of the Jordan. Because Joash had struck the ground only three times, he would strike down Syria ... only three times. If he had struck five or six times, the threat of Syria would have been eliminated. But he lacked perseverance and endurance. Victory over enemies depends on the measure of obedience. Joash must have known the significance of what he was doing, or else he would not have been held responsible. Elisha's death spelled no good for the northern kingdom.

13:20, 21 In the spring of each year, marauding bands of Moabites invaded the land. One day as some men of Israel were taking out a corpse to be buried, they saw one of these marauding bands approaching. Hurriedly they opened the tomb of Elisha and threw the corpse in. As soon as the man ... touched the bones of Elisha, he revived and stood on his feet.

13:22-25 Scripture tells us nothing of the last forty-five years of Elisha's ministry, from the anointing of Jehu, in 841 B.C. (chap. 9), until his death in about 795 B.C. His final prophecy (from his deathbed) was one of victory (v.

17). His final miracle (accomplished long after his death—v. 21) was a validation of his message and ministry to Israel and her king. In fulfillment of Elisha's prophecy, Jehoash ... recaptured ... the cities which ... Hazael ... had taken from Israel. This was accomplished by three successive victories.

N. King Amaziah of Judah (14:1-20)

Amaziah the son of Joash was king of Judah for twenty-nine years (796-767 B.C.; 2 Chron. 25).

14:1-7 Amaziah's reign, though good, lacked the excellence of David's reign. It was more like his father's (Joash) in that both failed to abolish the high places. One of Amaziah's first acts was to kill the conspirators who had murdered his father (12:20, 21). However, he spared the children of these men, in obedience to Deuteronomy 24:16. Also, he led a brilliant campaign against Edom, killing ten thousand of its inhabitants and capturing the rock city of Selah (probably the same as Petra). Unfortunately, he brought back Edomite gods and began to worship them (2 Chron. 25:14).

14:8-14 Inflated with pride, Amaziah foolishly invited Jehoash, king of Israel, to a show of strength. Jehoash answered by a parable in which the thistle (Judah) said to the cedar (Israel), "Give your daughter to my son as wife" (a weed making an impertinent request to a mighty tree). A wild beast (the army of Israel) trampled down the thistle (Judah). Amaziah should be satisfied with his victory over Edom and not invite disaster by antagonizing Israel. When Amaziah refused to listen, Jehoash marched against Judah, broke down the wall of Jerusalem, and carried away some of its treasures.

14:15-20 The antagonism between Judah and Israel which began at this time continued until the fall of Israel in 722 B.C. Amaziah ... fled to Lachish to escape a conspiracy but he was followed and slain there.

O. King Azariah (Uzziah) of Judah (14:21, 22)

Azariah (same as Uzziah) the son of Amaziah was king of Judah for fifty-two years (792/91-740/39 B.C.; cf. 15:1-7; 2 Chron. 26).

The ministry of Isaiah, Amos, and Hosea began at this time in OT history (Isa. 1:1; Hos. 1:1; Amos 1:1). The books of Amos and Hosea reveal the social and religious conditions prevalent in Israel. Through these prophets the Lord constantly warned of coming disaster while trying to woo His people back from the precipice of judgment.

Azariah was coregent with his father for the first twenty-four years. He built Elath, at the north of the Gulf of Aqaba. A fuller record of his reign is given in chapter 15 and in 2 Chronicles 26.

P. King Jeroboam II of Israel (14:23-29)

Jeroboam II the son of Jehoash was king of Israel for forty-one years (793/92-753 B.C.).

The first twelve years of Jeroboam's reign overlapped with that of his father, Joash (Jehoash). As to his religious policy, this king followed the idolatry of his namesake, Jeroboam the son of Nebat. Politically, he recovered for Israel the land from the entrance of Hamath (Galilee) to the Sea of the Arabah (Transjordan), as Jonah had prophesied. This particular prophecy is not recorded in the Bible. (Verse 25 pinpoints the time of Jonah's ministry, which is important in studying the book bearing his name. It is startling to realize that the Assyrians carried Israel into captivity only forty to seventy years after the repentance of Nineveh occasioned by Jonah's preaching!) Jeroboam II may be the deliverer mentioned in 13:5 (cf. 14:26, 27). Verses 26 and 27 give deep insight into the tender love and patience of the LORD. Verse 27 must be understood in context; Israel, and later Judah, were subsequently blotted out for a time, but, according to God's promise to the Jewish fathers, the nation will be regathered and replanted in the land.

Q. King Azariah (Uzziah) of Judah, Cont'd (15:1-7)

In general Azariah was a good king. Part of his failure was his permitting the high places to continue in Judah. When he insisted on intruding into the priest's office by offering incense in the temple, despite the protests of the priests, he was struck with leprosy and had to dwell in an isolated house to the day of his death (cf. 2 Chron. 26:16-21).

The ministry of Amos ended at this period.

R. King Zechariah of Israel (15:8-12)

Zechariah the son of Jeroboam II reigned over Israel for six months (753-752 B.C.).

Like his predecessors, Zechariah walked in the steps of Jeroboam I, worshiping the golden calves at Dan and Bethel. After a brief reign of six months, he was assassinated by Shallum. The RSV, following the LXX, says he was killed at Ibleam, a town in the Jezreel Valley close to where Ahaziah had been killed by Jehu (9:27). His death marked the end of the Jehu dynasty, Zechariah being the fourth generation which God had promised Jehu would sit on the throne of Israel (v. 12; cf. 10:30).

S. King Shallum of Israel (15:13-15)

Shallum the son of Jabesh was king of Israel for one month (752 B.C.).

Little is recorded about this king. His was the only reign in the sixth dynasty of the ten tribes. Shallum had gained the throne by assassination and now lost it the same way one month later. He was assassinated by Menahem.

T. King Menahem of Israel (15:16-22)

Menahem the son of Gadi was king of Israel for ten years (752-742/41 B.C.).

Menahem proceeded to sack Tiphsah—not the city of Tiphsah on the Euphrates but the one near Tirzah. When the city refused to surrender, he cruelly massacred the people, including the pregnant women.

At this time the Syrian kingdom had declined, and Assyria had become Israel's chief enemy. During the reign of Menahem, Pul, the king of Assyria, invaded Israel. Menahem gave him a thousand talents of silver to appease him and to enlist Pul's support in confirming Menahem's uncertain power. The king of Israel raised this money by taxing all the wealthy men fifty shekels of silver apiece (v. 20). The price of a slave in Assyria at this time was fifty shekels of silver. Menahem was voluntarily submitting to the yoke of Assyria because he felt it was to his personal advantage to do so. Pul is generally considered to be the same as Tiglath-Pileser III (v. 29).

U. King Pekahiah of Israel (15:23-26)

Pekahiah the son of Menahem was king of Israel for two years (742/41-740/39 B.C.).

All that we know of this king is that his reign was brief and evil and that he was slain by Pekah and fifty Gileadites in Samaria. His reign ended the seventh dynasty of Israel. He was the only one of Israel's latter kings who did not take the crown by force, but it wasn't long before it was forcibly taken from him by one of his officials.

V. King Pekah of Israel (15:27-31)

Pekah the son of Remaliah was king of Israel for twenty years (752-732/31 B.C.).

Pekah was captain to Pekahiah, whom he killed. From other Scriptures we learn that he invaded Judah and then enlisted Syrian aid against Judah. But Ahaz, king of Judah, called Assyria to aid him. The king of Assyria first killed Rezin, king of Syria, and then attacked Israel. He conquered the two and a half tribes east of the Jordan and the territory of Galilee, carrying the inhabitants into captivity. This was the first phase of the Assyrian captivity. Pekah's power as captain overlapped with Menahem's (ten years) and Pekahiah's (two years). Supported by Assyria, Hoshea seized the throne of Israel by conspiring against Pekah and killing him. This ended Israel's eighth dynasty.

W. King Jotham of Judah (15:32-38)

Jotham the son of Uzziah was king of Judah for a total of twenty years, including four years of co-regency with Uzziah (750-732/31 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 27).

The first part of Jotham's reign was spent in a coregency with his father Uzziah, the last part with Ahaz. His official reign lasted sixteen years. Jotham was one of the better kings of Judah, even though he did not abolish the high places. He built the Upper Gate of the house of the LORD and sponsored other construction projects in the land. Just before his death, Rezin and Pekah began their joint attack against Judah. The prophet Micah began his ministry during the reign of Jotham.

Second Chronicles 27:6 includes the following editorial comment praising Jotham: "So Jotham became mighty, because he prepared his ways before the LORD his God." This is in stark contrast to the kings of Israel, who ordered their ways after Jeroboam.

Josephus also makes mention of Jotham's godliness.[17]

X. King Ahaz of Judah (Chap. 16)

Ahaz the son of Jotham was king of Judah for twenty years (735-716/15 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 28).

16:1-4 Ahaz was coregent with his father for perhaps twelve years. The name Ahaz is a contraction for Jehoahaz. It is by the latter name that the king is known on Assyrian inscriptions. The prefix "Jeho-" stands for Jehovah, and doubtless the Holy Spirit omitted it purposely because Ahaz was an apostate. He followed the kings of Israel in his idolatry, even making his son pass through the fire. In the worship of Molech, it is believed that children were passed between the red-hot arms of the brass idol, signifying cleansing from evil and dedication to the god. Sometimes the children were actually killed and burned (Jer. 7:31; Ezek. 16:21).

16:5-9 In order to force Judah to join them against Assyria, and to install a vassal king on the throne of Judah (Isa. 7:6), Syria and Israel united to attack Jerusalem. At the same time Syria captured Elath and planted a colony of Syrians there. In his distress, Ahaz sent a call for help to Assyria, accompanying it with silver and gold treasures from the temple and the palace. Tiglath-Pileser complied by capturing Damascus and killing the king of Syria. This was in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah. But God would make the Assyrians a curse to Judah (Isa. 7:17-25).

16:10-16 On a trip to Damascus to visit Tiglath-Pileser, Ahaz ... saw a heathen altar and decided to build one like it in Jerusalem. So he sent a model of it to Urijah the priest, and Urijah in turn had the altar ... built ... before King Ahaz returned. Ahaz offered various offerings on his new altar (all but sin and trespass-offerings) and then commanded Urijah to use it henceforth instead of the bronze altar. The last clause in verse 15 seems to suggest that Ahaz would use the bronze altar for divination. However, it may also be understood to mean, "As for the brazen altar, it will be for me to enquire (or consider) what I shall do with it."[18] Urijah the priest sinfully obeyed King Ahaz in his sacrilege instead of fearlessly rebuking him. Uriah (the same as Urijah) is mentioned favorably in Isaiah 8:2, but this was before the attack on Jerusalem. His wicked acquiescence to the demand of Ahaz to build the altar took place at a later date.

16:17-20 Ahaz ... removed certain furnishings from the temple area, perhaps for fear that the king of Assyria might take them if he ever captured Jerusalem. Some think he used them to pay tribute. Second Chronicles 28:24 tells how Ahaz closed the temple entirely toward the end of his reign. Like other apostate kings before him, Ahaz was not buried in the royal tombs (2 Chron. 28:27) but was buried with his fathers in the City of David.

Y. King Hoshea of Israel (17:1-6)

Hoshea the son of Elah was king of Israel for nine years (732/31-723/22 B.C.).

17:1, 2 We come now to the final king and the ninth and final dynasty of Israel. Hoshea killed Pekah (cf. 15:30), perhaps because of his inability to resist Assyria's inroads into Israel, and took the reins of government. He was not as wicked as his predecessors, but the nation had gone too far—his improvements were too late.

17:3-6 Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, marched against Samaria and made Hoshea pay tribute. Hoshea conspired with the king of Egypt against Assyria and reneged on his payment of tribute. Therefore the king of Assyria (either Shalmaneser or Sargon, his successor) imprisoned Hoshea, besieged ... Samaria ... for three years, and carried some of the people into captivity. We are not told Hoshea's fate; he simply disappears into an Assyrian prison, leaving Samaria without a king during her last days. The final fall of Israel took place in 723 or 722 B.C.

Z. The Fall of the Northern Kingdom (17:7-41)

17:7-23 These verses explain the underlying reasons why God was displeased with Israel and allowed the nation to be conquered and exiled. They had feared other gods, ... walked in the customs of the nations, ... built for themselves high places, ... sacred pillars, and wooden images

(Asherim) everywhere, and multiplied their idolatry. They refused to listen to His prophets but stiffened their necks and refused to believe the word of the LORD their God. They turned their backs on God's commandments and adopted the man-made religion of their neighbors. They were zealous in their pursuit of evil, offering their sons and daughters to false gods.

17:24, 25 The king of Assyria carried the ten northern tribes of Israel away to Mesopotamia and Media. Also, he brought people from five other nations which he had conquered and placed them in the land of Israel. Earlier, when Israel obeyed the Lord, He drove out the heathen nations and settled His people in Canaan by the hand of Joshua. When they stopped listening to Jehovah, He drove them out and brought the nations back in by the hand of the king of Assyria. These pagan people worshiped their own heathen deities and thus brought themselves under God's displeasure, especially since they were now living in Immanuel's land. The Lord's anger was revealed when He sent lions among them which roamed through the land, killing some of the people.

17:26-28 Someone notified the king of Assyria that the plague of lions was caused by the presence of these foreigners who did not know the law of the God of Israel. The king of Assyria then ordered an Israelite priest to be returned from captivity for the purpose of instructing the heathen colonists how they should fear the Lord. The priest who returned was likely one of the idolatrous priests of Israel, not a true priest of Jehovah. He went to Bethel, the seat of calf-worship (although the calf was no longer there), and taught the new inhabitants the polluted religion of Jeroboam, which included, but was in no way limited to, the worship of Jehovah. These foreign colonists intermarried with the Israelites in the land, and this produced the people known as Samaritans—a mixed ethnic group with its own religion and customs.

17:29-34a These verses seem to describe the foreign settlers in the land. Each nationality had its own ... gods and appointed ... priests from among its own people. They also adopted the worship of Jehovah, and the result was a mixed religion, which was worse than out-;and-out paganism.[19]

17:34b-40 The section from verse 34b ("they do not fear the LORD ... ") through verse 40 seems to describe the Israelites who remained in the land.

They did not heed the repeated warnings of the Lord against idolatry but continued to worship the golden calves.

17:41 This refers back to the foreign settlers in the land. They appeared to be less guilty than Israel. With what little light they had, they feared the LORD after a fashion; but the ten tribes, with all the light they had, did not fear the LORD (v. 34b).

As far as we know the ten tribes never returned to the land.[20] They are scattered throughout the world. Perhaps they include the black Falasha Jews of Ethiopia, the Chinese Jews of Kaifeng-Fu, and the Cochin Jews of India. Their identity is not hidden from God; He will bring them back to Israel in a coming day.

The prophet Hosea's ministry probably ended at this time—that is, with the fall of Samaria and the captivity of Israel.

II. THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH TO THE CAPTIVITY (CHAPS. 18-25)

A. King Hezekiah (Chaps. 18-20)

Hezekiah the son of Ahaz was king of Judah for twenty-nine years (716/15-687/86 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 29-32; Isa. 36-39). He is believed to have had a co-regency with Ahaz before that from 729/28 to 716/15.

1. Hezekiah's Righteous Reign (18:1-8)

18:1-6 More space is devoted to Hezekiah in Holy Scripture than to almost any king since the time of Solomon. The parallel accounts in 2 Chronicles 29-32 and Isaiah 36-39 should be read to better understand the spiritual and political victories that Hezekiah gained through his faith in God.

When Hezekiah came to power, Judah was virtually a vassal state under Assyria. His reign was one of great reform. He conducted a campaign against all forms of idolatry, destroying even the high places and the bronze serpent of Numbers 21 (because the children of Israel burned incense to it). He called it Nehushtan, meaning literally "A Bronze Thing" (NKJV marg.). As far as his trust in the LORD God was concerned, Hezekiah was the greatest of the kings of Judah. Josiah was the greatest of the kings as far as thoroughness in expelling evildoers from the land was concerned (23:24, 25).

18:7, 8 Eventually Hezekiah rebelled against the Assyrian yoke, perhaps because of his military success in driving the Philistines out of the land from watchtower (country places) to fortified city (thickly inhabited and well-defended places).

2. The Capture of Samaria (18:9-12)

This paragraph reviews the capture of Samaria by the Assyrians, and is perhaps introduced here to emphasize the seriousness of the threat which faced Hezekiah at this time. The seeming contradiction between the dates in verses 9 and 10 is explained by the fact that in Jewish reckoning a part of a year is counted as a year. The siege of Samaria began during the latter part of the fourth year of Hezekiah's reign, continued during the fifth year, and ended in the first part of the sixth year—therefore "three years." This would have been 725-722 B.C., during the co-regency mentioned above.

3. Sennacherib's First Invasion of Judah (18:13-16)

Assyria had been having troubles of her own at this time; Sargon II had died and Babylon was in rebellion. It wasn't until 701 B.C. that Sennacherib, Sargon's successor, was able to march on Palestine and Phoenicia. In his annals Sennacherib claimed to have taken forty-six fortified cities and 200,000 captives from Judah. Hezekiah ... sent a servile message to him acknowledging that he had been wrong in rebelling. He abjectly paid three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold (a huge sum) to prevent an attack on Jerusalem. At the time, Sennacherib was in Lachish, southwest of Jerusalem, on the way to Egypt.

4. Sennacherib's Second Invasion of Judah (18:17-19:34)

18:17-19 Hezekiah then began to fortify Jerusalem (2 Chron. 32:5). Perhaps it was news of this that caused the king of Assyria at a later date to dispatch his army officials to Jerusalem, demanding unconditional surrender. Three Jewish officials went out to meet the Assyrian emissaries and to hear their demands. The NIV renders the terms as "supreme commander," "chief officer," and "field commander." The NKJV labels these officials by their original military titles: the Tartan, the Rabsaris, and the Rabshakeh. These terms are not proper names.[21]

18:20-25 The Rabshakeh spoke insultingly to them ... in their own Hebrew (lit. "Judean") tongue. First, he mocked Hezekiah's trust in the fortifications of Jerusalem. Then he revealed his knowledge that Hezekiah had sought the help of Egypt against Assyria, and ridiculed Egypt as a broken reed (v. 21). Third, he said that Judah could not trust in the LORD because Hezekiah had destroyed all the high places and ... altars. Rabshakeh did not realize that these were heathen shrines and not places where the Lord was worshiped! Next he suggested a bet—he would give ... two thousand horses to Judah if Hezekiah could find that number of horsemen. Judah did not have that many cavalrymen, he taunted, and so had to depend on Egypt for chariots and horsemen. Finally, the Rabshakeh claimed that the LORD had sent Assyria to destroy Judah.

18:26, 27 The Jewish officials quickly suggested to the Rabshakeh that all further discussions be carried on in Aramaic, the language of diplomacy, rather than in Hebrew. They were secretly fearful that such arrogant talk might be destructive to the morale of the Jewish people listening on the wall. But the Rabshakeh countered that he wanted the people to hear and understand their coming starvation and doom.

18:28-37 Addressing the people directly, the Rabshakeh warned them not to let Hezekiah deceive them into trusting in the LORD for deliverance. If they would surrender, they would be granted the privilege of living in Jerusalem temporarily. Then when the king of Assyria returned from the Egyptian campaign, he would take them to Assyria, "a land like your own." No other tribal deities had been able to deliver nations from ... Assyria; how could they expect their God to do it? The people on the wall remained silent while the three Jewish officials returned to Hezekiah, thoroughly disheartened.

19:1-7 Hezekiah was greatly distressed when he heard of the Rabshakeh's taunt. He sent messengers to Isaiah the prophet, saying that Judah was powerless when it needed strength the most. Further, he asked Isaiah to pray for the remnant of Judah and Jerusalem. Isaiah sent word back to Hezekiah that he didn't need to fear the Assyrian king, that God would put a spirit of fear upon him and cause him to hear a rumor and to return to his own land, where he would be slain.

19:8-13 When the Rabshakeh returned to Lachish, he found that Sennacherib had transferred his assault to the neighboring fortress of Libnah.

Sennacherib heard that Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia in upper (i.e., southern) Egypt, was advancing to attack him. He immediately tried to frighten Jerusalem into quick surrender by sending a blasphemous letter. Some scholars think that the rumor mentioned in verse 7 is explained in verse 9—namely, the rumor of the approach of the Egyptians. Others say that it was a report that the Babylonians were rebelling.

19:14-20 Hezekiah wisely took the letter ... to the temple and spread it before the LORD. His prayer was a revelation of his deep trust in Jehovah. In reply, God sent Hezekiah a twofold answer by way of Isaiah.

19:21-28 Verses 21-28 are addressed to Sennacherib. Verses 29-34 are addressed to Hezekiah. The prophecy of Isaiah is a taunt song against ... Assyria. It pictures Jerusalem, the virgin, the daughter of Zion, as laughing at Assyria's threats. It denounces Sennacherib for blaspheming God's holy name, and for boasting that he would invade Judah (Lebanon), destroy her rulers and great men (tall cedars and ... cypress trees), and enter the palaces of Mount Zion (lodging place and forest). Sennacherib also boasted of other foreign conquests, including his victory over Egypt. What he didn't realize was that all he had done was what God had already determined to be done. God knew him inside and out and would break his towering arrogance, sending back to Assyria the remnants of his shattered army.

19:29-34 Then, turning to Hezekiah, the Lord gave a sign that the Assyrian would not conquer Jerusalem. For two years the people of Judah would not be able to raise normal crops because of the Assyrian presence, but would eat things that grew without cultivation. Then, in the third year, they would be safe enough from the threat of assault that they could carry on their normal activities. Not only would the people of Jerusalem survive, but the king of Assyria would not even be allowed to come into the city or to shoot an arrow there.

5. Sennacherib's Defeat and Death (19:35-37)

That night ... the angel of the Lord[22] visited the encampment of Assyria and killed ... one hundred and eighty-five thousand soldiers. When men arose early in the morning, the Assyrians were corpses.

Sennacherib returned to his capital, Nineveh, where he was slain twenty years later (681 B.C.). (He actually outlived Hezekiah by five years.) Isaiah's prophecy (v. 7) was fulfilled when two of Sennacherib's own sons murdered him and a third, Esarhaddon, reigned in his place.

Hezekiah's Tunnel was dug through solid rock from the Pool of Siloam to Jerusalem in order to insure a supply of water for the city in case of an Assyrian attack.

6. Hezekiah's Sickness and Recovery (20:1-11)

20:1-7 The events of chapter 20 are generally believed to have taken place earlier, probably in the early part of chapter 18, during the first invasion of Sennacherib (see v. 6). When Hezekiah was taken seriously ill, Isaiah told him to set his house in order because death was imminent. The king prayed earnestly for recovery and was granted fifteen additional years of life. Whitcomb comments:

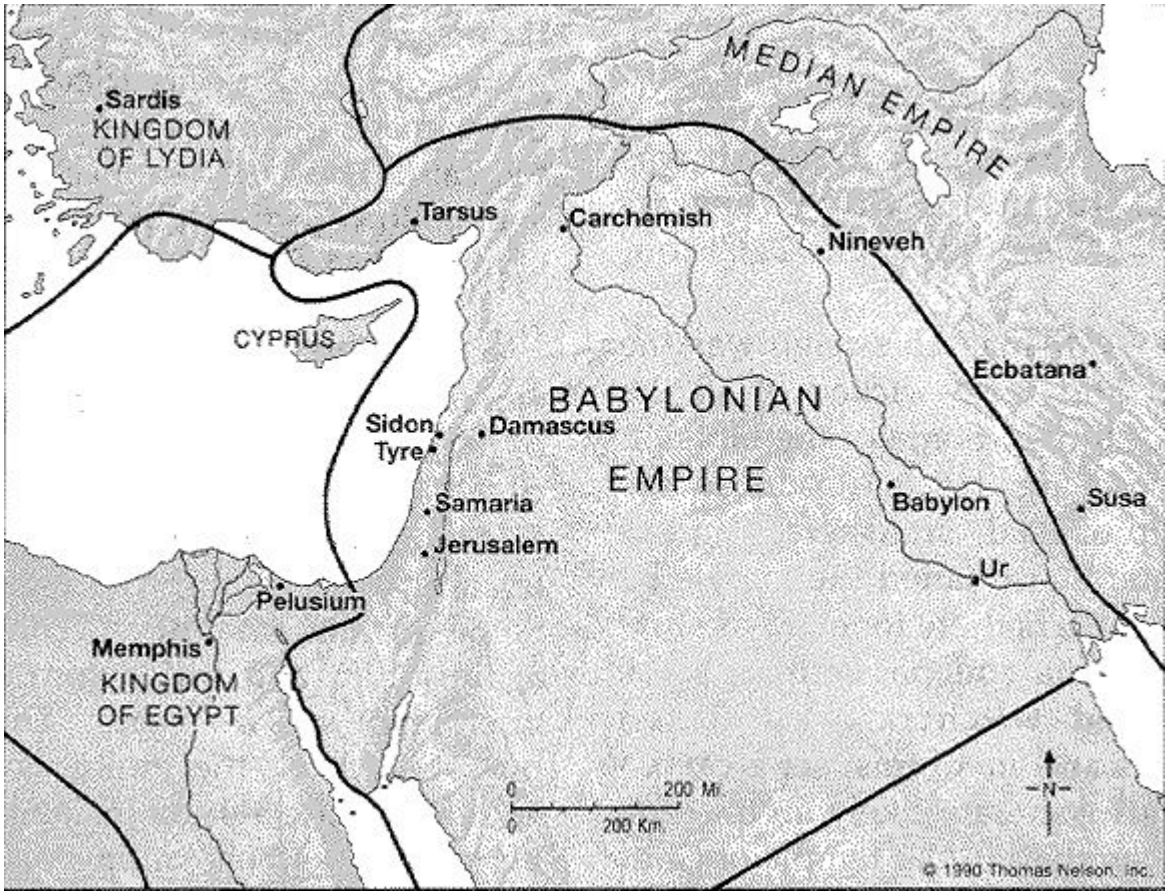
> What would I do with the remainder of my life if God told me that I had just 15 years to live? What did Hezekiah do with those years? The Bible does not say, for the last event recorded of his reign was the destruction of Sennacherib's army, in 701 B.C. (which probably occurred less than a year after his sickness). It has been suggested that one reason why God prolonged his life was that he had no male heir to the throne (2 Kings 21:1 states that Manasseh was only twelve when he began to reign). However, it is probable that Manasseh was a coregent with his father for nearly ten years, because otherwise it would be impossible to fit the 55 years of his reign into this period of Judah's history, working back from the fixed dates of the Babylonian Captivity.[23]

20:8-11 As a sign that Hezekiah would be healed and would return to the temple to worship, God caused the shadow ... on the sundial (or steps, NASB) of Ahaz to go back ten degrees. (Chronologically, verse 7 follows verses 8-11.)

From 2 Chronicles 32:31 we conclude that it was a supernatural event, the news of which reached as far as Babylon. The Babylonians worshiped the heavenly bodies and they would certainly notice any irregularities. Word spread quickly that it was on Hezekiah's behalf that this great miracle had taken place.



The Babylonian Empire, c. 560 B.C.

7. Hezekiah's Foolish Pride (20:12-21)

20:12-18 The king of Babylon, Berodach-Baladan, sent congratulations to Hezekiah on his recovery. Doubtless his real purpose was to strengthen his ties with Judah against Assyria. Hezekiah foolishly showed the messengers from Babylon all ... his treasures. (From 2 Chron. 32:31 we learn that God was testing him through this situation to know what was in his heart. The answer: PRIDE!) Isaiah rebuked him for this and prophesied that Judah would be taken into captivity by Babylon and that some of Hezekiah's own sons would be eunuchs (officials, NASB) in the palace of the Babylonian king. Before these treasures ended up in Babylon, many of them would first go to Assyria as part of the tribute that Hezekiah paid to Sennacherib when the Assyrians invaded Palestine shortly after Hezekiah's recovery (18:13-16).

20:19 Hezekiah submitted to God's decree and acknowledged its leniency. "For he said, 'Why not, if there will be peace and security in my days?'" (RSV).

20:20, 21 Hezekiah built a pool and a tunnel by which water could be brought ... into Jerusalem from a well outside the city. Such a hidden source would be especially valuable in a time of siege. It is still possible to wade through Hezekiah's tunnel from the Spring of Gihon to the Pool of Siloam.

In 1880 an inscription made by Hezekiah's workers in the ancient prong-shaped Semitic script was found. It was removed to a museum in Turkey, which was then ruling Palestine as part of the old Ottoman Empire.[24]

The ministry of Micah ended at this time.

B. King Manasseh (21:1-18)

Manasseh the son of Hezekiah was king of Judah for fifty-five years (697/96-643/42 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 33:1-20).

21:1-9 Manasseh's reign was the longest and most wicked of all the kings of Judah. Some of the blots on his record are: He reintroduced the worship of Baal, of Asherah, and of the stars; he profaned the temple by building altars there for star worship; he made his son pass through the fire; used witchcraft; consulted spiritists and mediums; set a carved image of Asherah (likely an obscene sexual symbol) in the temple of God. The Spirit of God dwells on the seriousness of this act by rehearsing God's promise to His people in connection with the temple (1 Kgs. 8:29; 9:3).

21:10-15 Manasseh led the people into worse abominations ... than those of the Amorites. As a result, God said that He would punish Judah as He punished Samaria and the house of Ahab. The measuring line ... and the plummet (v. 13) symbolize judgment. Also, He would empty Jerusalem ... as a man empties a dish by turning it upside down and wiping it out. His people would be led away into captivity because they had provoked the Lord so grievously.

21:16-18 In addition to his idolatry, Manasseh shed very much innocent blood. According to "The Assumption of Isaiah," a noncanonical book, Manasseh had the prophet Isaiah sawn in two (cf. Heb. 11:37).

From 2 Chronicles 33 we learn that Manasseh was taken into captivity in Babylon by the king of Assyria (Ashurbanipal). There, while in prison, he repented and turned to the Lord. After this he was permitted to return to Jerusalem and resume his reign—a fitting proof of the grace, love, and mercy of the Lord. He tried to undo the damage he had done, but it was too late. The people, including his son, followed his earlier example (2 Chron. 33:14-23).

C. King Amon (21:19-26)

Amon the son of Manasseh was king of Judah for two years (642-639 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 33:21-25).

Amon was notorious for his idolatry and for forsaking the true God. Some of his servants ... conspired against him and killed him after a brief reign of two years. The people ... executed the guilty assassins and then made his son Josiah king in his place. Neither Amon nor his father was buried in the tombs of the kings of Judah.

D. King Josiah (22:1-23:30)

Josiah the son of Amon was king of Judah for thirty-one years (641-609 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 34-35).

1. Josiah's Repairs of the Temple (22:1-7)

Zephaniah (Zeph. 1:1) and Jeremiah (Jer. 25:3) began their prophetic ministries at about this time. Habakkuk may have ministered toward the end of Josiah's time. Josiah's reign was the last era of reform in the kingdom of Judah. He took resolute action against idolatry and encouraged the people to return to the LORD. In the eighteenth year of his reign, when he was twenty-six, he instituted a program for the repair of the temple. Money that had been collected at the temple was turned over to workmen for labor and materials. Because of their honesty, no accounting was asked for the money which was turned over to them.

2. Josiah's Recovery of the Book of the Law (22:8-20)

22:8-10 While the repairs were going on, Hilkiah the high priest ... found a copy of the Book of the Law, perhaps the entire Pentateuch or the book of Deuteronomy. This was taken to King Josiah and read ... before him.

22:11-13 When the king heard the Word of God and realized how far the nation had wandered from Him, he tore his clothes in penitence. Then he sent five of his officials to inquire of the LORD, realizing that the wrath of God must be hovering over Judah for its sins.

22:14-20 The officials went to Huldah, a prophetess who dwelt in Jerusalem in the Second Quarter, a district or suburb of the city. They did not go directly to either Jeremiah or Zephaniah. Huldah was probably Jeremiah's aunt (v. 14; cf. Jer. 32:7). She confirmed Josiah's fears that God was going to punish Judah soon because of the corruption of the people. But she added that it would not happen during Josiah's lifetime because he had humbled himself and was penitent.

The fact that Josiah later died in battle (23:29) does not contradict verse 20. "You shall be gathered to your grave in peace" may mean "before the promised catastrophe of the Babylonian captivity." Or it may mean that Josiah would die at peace with God (he certainly did not die at peace with man).

3. Josiah's Renewal of the Covenant (23:17-3)

The king now held a holy convocation at the temple and read the words of the Book of the Covenant to all the people. Standing by the pillar, he made a covenant to obey all the words of the law. The people also entered into the covenant with the LORD.

4. Josiah's Reforms (23:4-30)

23:4-9 Then follows a list of the many reforms which Josiah undertook. He cleansed the temple of all the articles used in idolatry, burned them, and took the ashes to Bethel (to defile the shrine there). He deposed and probably killed the idolatrous priests. He took the wooden image (Asherah) out of the temple, burned it, and scattered the ashes on the graves of the common people. He tore down the ritual booths of the male cult prostitutes (sodomites) in the temple area, where the women wove hangings for the Asherah image. He defiled the high places. This means that he desecrated them in such a way that they would not be used again. He brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, where they had offered to Jehovah on the high places. God had designated Jerusalem as the place where these offerings should be made. Josiah barred these priests from further service in the temple, but gave them a share of the unleavened bread.

23:10-12 He desecrated and ruined Topheth, the heathen shrine in the Valley of the Son of Hinnom, where child sacrifices had been offered to Molech. He removed the horses ... dedicated to the sun and burned the chariots of the sun ... that the kings of Judah had used in connection with sun worship. He destroyed idolatrous altars erected by Ahaz and Manasseh. Manasseh himself had removed these altars after his conversion (2 Chron. 33:15), but they were undoubtedly pressed back into service by idolatrous Amon. Josiah made sure they would never be used again.

23:13, 14 He defiled the high places at the southern end of the Mount of Olives (Mount of Corruption), dating from the time of Solomon. He broke down the idolatrous sacred pillars and cut down the wooden images (Asherim), and then defiled their locations with the bones of men.

23:15-18 He destroyed the altar that was at Bethel ... and burned the high place. Then he took the bones from nearby tombs and burned them on the remains of the altar. ("Both Israelites and heathen regarded dead men's bones as a perpetual defilement."[25])All of this was in fulfillment of the prophecy uttered over 300 years previously by the man of God to Jeroboam. Josiah is one of the few men in Scripture named before his birth (1 Kgs. 13:2). He was a chosen vessel, foreordained to fulfill the oracle of the unnamed prophet against the altar ... at Bethel.

When King Josiah saw the gravestone of the man of God who had testified against the altar of Bethel, he ordered that no one should move ... the bones of the prophet. So they were permitted to remain there with the bones of the unnamed prophet who came out of Samaria (cf. 1 Kgs. 13:30, 31).

23:19, 20 The king's reforms even extended into Samaria. Apparently he had won control over this area, largely because the power of Assyria was declining. He destroyed the high places and executed the idolatrous priests ... on the altars where they had offered sacrifices. Also, he defiled these places with the ashes of men's bones.

23:21-23 On his return to Jerusalem, Josiah reinstituted the Passover, according to the Word of the Lord which he had read (see 2 Chron. 35:1-19 for more details). It was the greatest such observance since the days of the judges. Other Passovers had been larger and more elaborate, but this one was particularly pleasing to the LORD. Scripture makes mention of only three Passovers during the kingdom years: Solomon's (2 Chron. 8), Hezekiah's (2 Chron. 30), and Josiah's.

23:24 Josiah also cleansed the land of those who consulted mediums and spiritists, fortune-tellers, and other wizards.

23:25-27 As to the thoroughness of his reforms, he was the greatest of the kings of Judah. Hezekiah held the same honor as far as trust in God was concerned (18:5, 6). Yet in spite of Josiah's good reign, the LORD did not change His plan to punish Judah by sending the people into captivity and by destroying Jerusalem.

23:28-30 In 609 B.C. Pharaoh Necho ... of Egypt marched north along the coast of Palestine to ... aid the Assyrians in their struggle against Babylon. For political reasons Josiah decided to resist Necho's advance and as a result was mortally wounded at Megiddo. His servants transported him to Jerusalem, where he died and was buried (cf. 2 Chron. 35:20-24). Necho advanced to the River Euphrates, where four years later the Babylonians defeated him in the battle of Carchemish (Jer. 46:2).

E. King Jehoahaz (23:31-33)

Jehoahaz (also called Shallum) the son of Josiah was king of Judah for only three months (609 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 36:1-4).

Jehoahaz disregarded his father's reforms and allowed the people to return to idolatry. Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, summoned him to Riblah, in Hamath, a region of Syria where the Egyptians had encamped, and there he put Judah under tribute. Later he carried Jehoahaz off to Egypt, where he died (Jer. 22:11, 12).

F. King Jehoiakim (23:34-24:7)

Jehoiakim the son of Josiah was king of Judah for eleven years (609-598 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 36:5-8; Jer. 22:18, 19; 26:21-23; 36:9-32).

23:34-37 Pharaoh Necho made Eliakim, Jehoahaz's brother, king in Josiah's place and changed Eliakim's name to Jehoiakim. Jehoiakim was the eldest surviving son of Josiah (cf. vv. 31, 36), but the people had originally placed Jehoahaz on the throne instead. Necho reversed this and appointed Jehoiakim as a vassal king. He was more faithful to Pharaoh than he was to Jehovah.

24:1-4 Egypt was defeated by Babylon at Carchemish in 605 B.C., and Judah came under the control of the Babylonians.

Jehoiakim put Urijah the prophet to death (Jer. 26:23) and burned the Word of God which Jeremiah had written concerning Judah and Israel (Jer. 36:23). He tried to arrest Jeremiah and also Baruch, his scribe, but the Lord hid them (Jer. 36:26). In the third year of Jehoiakim's reign, Nebuchadnezzar ... came against Jerusalem (v. 1), carried some of the inhabitants (including Daniel) to Babylon, and also took some of the vessels from the temple (2 Chron. 36:7; Dan. 1:1, 2). He also bound Jehoiakim in chains to bring him to Babylon. Either he changed his mind or returned the king of Judah to Jerusalem because Jehoiakim subsequently rebelled against the Babylonians (24:1). Whitcomb describes the situation as follows:

The Chronicler says that Nebuchadnezzar "bound him in fetters to carry him to Babylon" (2 Chron. 36:6); but before the plan was fulfilled something of urgent importance happened that caused Nebuchadnezzar to change his mind. He received word that his father Nabopolassar had died in Babylon on August 15. Realizing that the throne was now in jeopardy, he forced Jehoiakim to promise loyalty as a vassal, then took the short route across the Arabian desert to Babylon.[26]

God sent invasion armies from four nations against Judah because of Manasseh's sins.

24:5-7 The Lord decreed that the king would have the burial of a donkey —that is, his body would be drawn outside the city and left exposed to the elements and to the creatures of prey (Jer. 22:19). No details of his death are given.

G. King Jehoiachin (24:8-16)

Jehoiachin, also called Jeconiah and Coniah, son of Jehoiakim, was king of Judah for three months (598-597 B.C.; cf. 25:27-30; 2 Chron. 36:9, 10).

During the short reign of this wicked king, Nebuchadnezzar ... besieged the city of Jerusalem and carried away a second group of captives. Ezekiel was taken to Babylon in this deportation. Also included were the royal family, 7000 soldiers, and the trained craftsmen. In fact, only the poorest people of the land were left. Nebuchadnezzar also took treasures from the temple and from the king's palace. Verse 14 says that there were ten thousand captives in all. Jeremiah says that 4600 captives were taken (Jer. 52:28-30). The number in Kings may include captives taken on other occasions as well. After Jehoiachin had been in captivity for thirty-seven years, Evil-Merodach, the king of Babylon, freed him from prison, set him above the other captive kings, gave him a position of honor in the court, and provided liberally for him (25:27-30).

The Prophet Ezekiel began his ministry at this period.

H. King Zedekiah (24:17-25:7)

Zedekiah, Jehoiachin's uncle, was king of Judah for eleven years (597-586 B.C.; cf. 2 Chron. 36:11-21; Jer. 52:1-30).

24:17-20 The king of Babylon appointed Mattaniah, an uncle of Jehoiachin, as king in his place. The king of Babylon changed Mattaniah's name to Zedekiah. Zedekiah made a treaty with Nebuchadnezzar, agreeing to serve as his puppet. But then he broke the agreement, rebelled against the king of Babylon, and sought the help of Egypt. Zedekiah's treachery in breaking his oath and God's subsequent judgment upon him are recorded in Ezekiel 17:11-21.

25:1-7 Zedekiah's intrigue with Egypt brought the final blow on the city of Jerusalem. Nebuchadnezzar ... besieged it for eighteen months, causing severe famine conditions within the walls. Zedekiah and his men of war tried to escape from the city at night and to flee to the wilderness near the Dead Sea. The Chaldeans captured the king and brought him ... to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah (in Hamath of Syria). After slaying his sons ... before his eyes, the king of Babylon ordered that his eyes should be put out and that he should be carried in bronze fetters to Babylon. This fulfilled two remarkable prophecies: Jeremiah had predicted that Zedekiah would see the king of Babylon face to face (Jer. 32:4; 34:3). This was fulfilled at Riblah. Ezekiel had also prophesied that he would be brought to Babylon but would not see it and would die there (Ezek. 12:13). Zedekiah's eyes were put out before he ever got to Babylon. He died in Babylon.

I. The Fall of Jerusalem (25:8-21)

25:8-12 The final destruction of Jerusalem took place in 586 B.C. by Nebuzaradan, captain of the Babylonian guard. He burned the temple, the royal palace, and all the great buildings. He broke down the walls and carried into exile all but the poorest people of the land.

25:13-17 These verses describe the wholesale looting of the temple treasures. Those things which were too big to be carried away were cut up into smaller pieces. The bronze which was seized was beyond measure. In addition, the Chaldeans ... took all the solid gold and solid silver they could find.

25:18-21 Nebuzaradan ... took about seventy-two of the leading citizens of Jerusalem to King Nebuchadnezzar in Riblah, where they were summarily executed.[27]

J. Gedaliah's Governorship (25:22-26)

The king of Babylon appointed Gedaliah to be governor over the people remaining in ... Judah. When four army captains ... heard this, they came to him at Mizpah, perhaps to recommend that the people flee to Egypt. Gedaliah counseled them to submit to the Babylonian yoke and that all would be well. Later Ishmael, a member of the royal family, attacked and killed Gedaliah and his associates. The people were thus left without organized government and fled to Egypt.

Nebuchadnezzar's Campaigns Against Judah. From 605 to 586 B.C. Judah suffered repeated Babylonian invasions. The final blow came from the southern approach to Jerusalem

K. King Jehoiachin (25:27-30)

The book closes on an encouraging note. Second Kings and Jeremiah have identical endings (cf. 25:27-30; Jer. 52:31-34). In his thirty-seventh year of exile, Jehoiachin was afforded honorable treatment by the king of Babylon. This gave hope that the rigors of the exile would be eased and later ended completely.

First Kings opens with David's death and 2 Kings closes with Judah's destruction. The nation had failed under Moses, had failed under the judges, and now had failed under the kings. The people refused to listen to God's Word. They refused to be moved by the tears of the prophets. They hardened their hearts and stiffened their necks until God appointed the Assyrians and the Babylonians to teach them that the wages of sin is death. The captivity served its purpose well: it purged the heart of God's chosen people of idolatry.

FIRST CHRONICLES

INTRODUCTION

"Chronicles has a character and beauty of its own, and a moral propriety, beyond anything, because it takes up and shows that in the ruin of all else the purpose of God stands fast. That is what we have to comfort ourselves with at this present time. There is a ruined state in Christendom; but God's purposes never fail, and those who have faith settle themselves and find their comfort in the sure standing of the purpose of God"

—William Kelly

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Chronicles, originally one large book, occupies the last position in the Hebrew Bible.[1] The Hebrew title means "Journals," or more literally, "Words of the Days." The title in the Greek translation (LXX) is "Omissions" (Paralipomena), an unfortunate and misleading title.[2] Our excellent English title traces back to Jerome's Latin Vulgate.

Since, at first glance, 1 Chronicles seems to repeat 1 and 2 Samuel, and 2 Chronicles seems to cover the same material as 1 and 2 Kings, what unique contribution does Chonicles make? Chronicles shows marked differences from Samuel and Kings. Those books emphasize the historical side of things whereas Chronicles emphasizes the spiritual . Thus Chronicles concentrates on the reign of David and his successors, and on the temple and its worship. It gives details not previously found concerning the priests, Levites, musicians, singers, and doorkeepers. It elaborates on the transporting of the ark to Jerusalem, on preparation for building the temple, and on reforms under some of the good kings of Judah. The northern kingdom is mentioned only in its dealings with David's dynasty. The chronicler even passes over the tragic stories of Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah, and the faithlessness of Solomon. So the Books of Chronicles are by no means an unnecessary repetition. Rather, they are a spiritual interpretation of the history in the preceding books.

The affairs of each king's reign were regularly recorded in a book (1 Kgs. 14:29; 15:7; etc.). No doubt it was from this common source that the passages in Samuel and Kings which are identical with those in Chronicles were derived.

Some have criticized Chronicles for not being more complete and well-rounded, for not including important history of the period covered.[3] However, with his usual spiritual perception, William Kelly shows how Chronicles, like all inspired books, reflects just what the Holy Spirit desires:

> These collections of testimonies of God that are brought together in the books of Chronicles ... are fragmentary; they are meant to be fragmentary. God could have given a completeness to them if He pleased, but it would have been out of His order. God Himself has deigned and been pleased to mark His sense of the ruin of Israel by giving only fragmentary pieces of information here and there. There is nothing really complete. The two books of Chronicles savor of this very principle. This is often a great perplexity to men of learning, because they, looking upon it merely with a natural eye, cannot understand it. They fancy it altogether corrupted. Not so. It was written, advisedly and deliberately so, by the Spirit of God.[4]

Kelly makes a pertinent application of the situation in Israel to the modern divided and chaotic state of professing Christendom:

> So, I am persuaded, the provision by the grace of God for His people at this present time looks very feeble, looks very disorderly, to a man with a natural eye; but when you look into it, you will find that it is according to the mind of God, and that the pretension of having all complete would put us out of communion with His mind-would make us content with ourselves instead of feeling with Him for the broken state of His Church.[5]

First and Second Chronicles are not dull history books. They are a priestly interpretation of sacred history from Adam through Israel's return from the Babylonian Captivity. They are written for us believers and apply to our daily life.

II. Authorship

Most commentators suggest Ezra as the author or compiler of Chronicles. The last two verses of 2 Chronicles are the same as the first two of the Book of Ezra, and there are many stylistic similarities. The inspired editor drew on a number of contemporary works for his information, as can be seen from the following list of reference works which he mentions:

1. The book of Samuel the seer (1 Chron. 29:29)
2. The book of Nathan the prophet (1 Chron. 29:29)
3. The book of Gad the seer (1 Chron. 29:29)
4. The prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite (2 Chron. 9:29)
5. The visions of Iddo the seer (2 Chron. 9:29)
6. The book of Shemaiah the prophet (2 Chron. 12:15)
7. The book of Iddo the seer (2 Chron. 12:15)
8. The annals of the prophet Iddo (2 Chron. 13:22)
9. The book of the kings of Israel and Judah (2 Chron. 20:34; 27:7; 32:32)
10. The story of the book of the kings (2 Chron. 24:27)
11. The vision of Isaiah the prophet (2 Chron. 26:22; 32:32)
12. The sayings of Hozai[6] (2 Chron. 33:19)

III. Date

Chronicles was written after the captivity (2 Chron. 36:22, 23). By using the genealogies we can pinpoint the date more closely. The last person in the Davidic genealogy, Anani (1 Chron. 3:24), is eight generations later than King Jehoiachin (also called Jeconiah [v. 17] or Coniah [v. 17, NKJV marg.]). This was about 600 B.C. Allowing an average of twenty-five years per generation, this brings us up to about 400 B.C. at the earliest. Chronicles can scarcely be much later than that, either, since a writer as dedicated to David's line as was the Chronicler would have included any later descendants of the king.

Thus we see that Chronicles is one of the last OT books written, near the time of Malachi.

IV. Background and Theme

The late date of Chronicles also helps us understand its emphasis.

The monarchy is no more, but the royal lineage is still traced as far as it has gone, in preparation for the Son of David, the Messiah, who was yet to come.

Although the monarchy no longer exists, the temple services are still central to the spiritual life of the nation. W. Graham Scroggie writes:

> Then, again, all that pertains to worship is here emphasised; the Temple and its services, priests, Levites, singers, and the hatefulness of idolatry. It is shown that the troubles of the nation were due to their disregard of the claims of Jehovah, and their prosperity was due to their return to Him. The KINGS are political and royal, but the CHRONICLES are sacred and ecclesiastical.[7]

It is worth noting that both of these themes-the Messiah and worship-are fundamental to present-day believers as well.

Second Chronicles takes up where 1 Chronicles leaves off. In 1 Chronicles 29 David established Solomon as his successor. Second Chronicles traces the Davidic line from Solomon to the return of the Jewish remnant from the Babylonian Captivity. First and Second Kings cover basically the same time period, but the emphasis in Kings is more on Israel, while in Chronicles the emphasis is on Judah, as we noted earlier. The kings of Israel are mentioned only as they relate to the history of Judah. Although much of the material is the same in both books, Chronicles sometimes contains details not found in Kings, Chronicles having been written at a later date and for a different purpose. We will comment on some of the differences between the two books, but it will be impossible to go into depth about all of them. Other books have been written for this purpose.

COMMENTARY

I. THE GENEALOGIES (CHAPS. 1-9)

The first nine chapters of 1 Chronicles contain genealogical tables, or "family trees," as we like to call them. Genealogies were very important to the Jews in seeking to maintain their tribal distinctions. After the confusion of the captivity, it was also important to establish the kingly and priestly lines once more.

There are several instances in these chapters where names differ from the names given in other parts of the Bible. There are different reasons for these apparent inconsistencies. Sometimes a man had more than one name. It should not surprise us that some names changed in spelling over the centuries. After all, there is a whole millennium between some of the genealogies in Genesis and their counterparts here in Chronicles (1400-400 B.C.). Many cases are copyists' errors. A look at the Hebrew language will show just how easily this could have happened. These "discrepancies" do not stumble the serious student, since most did not exist in the original documents and in no way affect any major doctrine of the faith.[8]

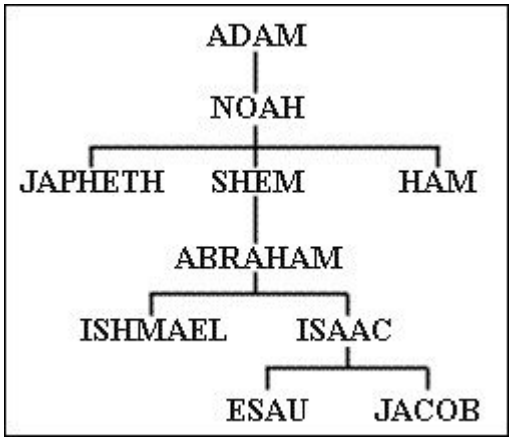
A. From Adam to Abraham (1:1-27)

The Book of Genesis appears to have been the source of these genealogies. Verses 1-4 go back to Genesis 5 (Adam to Noah). Verses 5-23 give the descendants of Noah, as recorded in Genesis 10. From Genesis 11 comes the genealogy of Abraham (vv. 24-27).

B. From Abraham to Israel (1:28-54)

Abraham's natural descendants, listed in Genesis 25, are given in verses 28-33. The descendants of Isaac, the son of promise, are dealt with next. Esau, from Genesis 36, is mentioned in verses 35-54, thus clearing the way for the descendants of Jacob (Israel). Chapters 2 through 9 trace the posterity of Israel.

Here in the first chapter the chronicler is narrowing the focus from Adam, the father of the human race, to Jacob, the father of the twelve tribes of Israel. He quickly clears the stage of all but the chosen nation. Here we also have the beginning of the messianic line (cf. Luke 3:34-38).



C. Descendants of Israel (Chaps. 2-8)

1. Judah (2:1-4:23)

Judah was the head of the largest tribe and the foremost in blessing and promise, and thus his genealogy is the first and the longest to be taken up (2:3-4:23). The genealogies of two descendants of Judah are developed more fully-Caleb: 2:18-20, 42-55 (this is not the Caleb of Num. 13; see 4:15), and David: 3:1-24.

Several historical notes are sprinkled throughout the genealogies. These are things to which the Holy Spirit would draw our attention, points of interest in this panoramic sweep of the history of Israel. In the genealogies of Judah, God's dealings with two wicked men and His blessing of one righteous man are brought to our attention.

"Er, the firstborn of Judah, was wicked in the sight of the LORD, so He killed him" (2:3). He was the offspring of Judah's marriage to Shua, a Canaanite woman (Gen. 38:1-10). We are not told what he did, but only that he was evil in the sight of the LORD. His wickedness cost him his privileges as the firstborn, his place in the messianic line, and his life. His name became a blot on the family record for all generations to view. Men would do well to ponder the consequences of evil before it is too late. "For evildoers shall be cut off; but those who wait on the LORD, they shall inherit the earth" (Ps. 37:9).

The story of Achar (Achan) (2:7) is found in Joshua 7. He "saw," "coveted," and "took" (Josh. 7:21) the things under the ban in Jericho. He troubled Israel in that, because of his sin, thirty-six men died in the unsuccessful attack on Ai. He was singled out by the Lord, and he and his family were executed.

"Now Jabez was more honorable than his brothers" (4:9). Here was a man who had a large concept of God and honored Him by seeking His blessing. Jabez was a man of faith, and the Lord took note of it. "But without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him" (Heb. 11:6). Ironside comments:

> His prayer is fourfold. "Bless me indeed." That is, "Give me true happiness." This is only found as one prevails and walks with God. "Enlarge my coast." He was not content to go on only with what he had. He would enter into and enjoy more of the inheritance of the Lord. "That Thine hand may be with me!" He counted on God's protecting care. And lastly, he prayed, "Keep me from evil that it may not make me sorrowful." Sin is the only thing that can rob a child of God of his joy in the Lord.[9]

Jabez sought and was rewarded. May God strengthen us to follow his example!

Bithia (4:18) is one of the few women mentioned in these genealogies. She was a daughter of Pharaoh but was now living with the chosen people. Her name means daughter of Jehovah.

One apparent discrepancy should be mentioned before we move on. In 2:15 David is called the seventh son of Jesse while in 1 Samuel 16:10, 11 and 17:12 he is the eighth son. One of Jesse's sons probably died childless or before he married and so is not included by the chronicler.

2. Simeon (4:24-43)

4:24-43 Simeon, Jacob's second born, is taken up next, probably because of the close association of his tribe with Judah. Simeon's portion in the Promised Land was within the territory of Judah (Josh. 19:9). The cities listed in 4:28-33 were their inheritance. However, later in history they acquired additional land through conquest.

3. Reuben, Gad, and the Half-tribe of Manasseh East of the Jordan (Chap. 5)

Chapter 5 deals with the transjordanian tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh. Very little space is devoted to these tribes. They were among the first to go into captivity (5:26).

Verses 1 and 2 explain why the blessing of the birthright was given to other tribes instead of to the Reubenites. When Jacob blessed his children before his death (Gen. 49), he took note of Reuben's wickedness (Gen. 35:22) and removed him from having pre-eminence. The double portion of land due the firstborn went to Joseph (through Ephraim and Manasseh), and the double portion as far as leadership was concerned went to Judah.

The Gadites are listed in verses 11-17, and the leaders of the half-tribe of Manasseh are given in verses 23 and 24.

The rest of chapter 5 gives a brief account of the fate of these tribes. Together they had fought successfully against the Hagrites (Ishmaelites) (vv. 10, 19-22). With a small army of 44,760 men, they defeated a much bigger enemy force. They had trusted in their God (v. 20), and He gave them victory and abundant spoils (v. 21).

Being constantly exposed to the idolatrous nations around them, they soon played the harlot after the gods of the peoples of the land, whom God had destroyed before them (v. 25). They turned to the gods who could not save the Ishmaelites and forsook the one true God in whose strength they had conquered. So God gave them into the hand of the Assyrian king and they were carried away into captivity.

4. Levi (Chap. 6)

6:1-53 This chapter takes up the sons of Levi, descendants of Jacob's third-born son. Verses 1-15 and 49-53 deal with the most famous family of this tribe, that of Aaron. The high priesthood had been given to Aaron and his sons, and thus the importance of an accurate genealogy from Aaron to the captivity.

Samuel (v. 28) the son of Elkanah (v. 27) was a great prophet and the last judge in Israel before Saul became king. His ministry is described in 1 Samuel.

Levi had three sons: Gershom, Kohath, and Merari. Their genealogies are given in verses 16-30. Verses 31-48 contain three genealogies: Heman, a Kohathite (vv. 33-38); Asaph, a Gershomite (vv. 39-43); and Ethan, a Merarite (vv. 44-47). These were the "songmasters" whom David appointed to minister before the LORD (vv. 31, 32).

Heman was probably the author of Psalm 88. He was a descendant of the Prophet Samuel. There are psalms which bear Asaph's name-e.g., Psalm 50 and Psalms 73-83. Ethan may be the author of Psalm 89.

6:54-81 The rest of the chapter is a listing of the cities and common-lands given to the Levites by the other tribes. This was in accordance with the Lord's command through Moses (Num. 35:1-8). The command was carried out under the supervision of Joshua (Josh. 21).

5. Issachar (7:1-5)

Six tribes are mentioned in chapter 7:

Issachar (vv. 1-5)

Benjamin (vv. 6-12)

Naphtali (v. 13)

Half-tribe of Manasseh (west of the Jordan) (vv. 14-19)

Ephraim (vv. 20-29)

Asher (vv. 30-40)

These genealogies are not nearly as complete as those of Judah or Levi, perhaps because neither the throne nor the priesthood is involved.

6. Benjamin (7:6-12)

Although the tribe of Benjamin had at one time been reduced to 600 men because of their folly (Judg. 20), they seem to have regained their strength and size. Benjamin's descendants are listed again in chapter 8. Here in chapter 7 the emphasis is on Benjamin in relation to the people, whereas in the next chapter it is on Benjamin in relation to Saul and Jerusalem.

7. Naphtali (7:13)

The four sons of Naphtali are called sons of Bilhah because she was Naphtali's mother. Further descendants of these four are passed over.[10]

8. Half-tribe of Manasseh West of the Jordan (7:14-19)

Manasseh's descendants living east of the Jordan in Gilead and Bashan were recorded in 5:23, 24. This passage deals with the half of the tribe that settled in Canaan, west of the Jordan.

A descendant of Manasseh who stands out in the genealogy is Zelophehad, who had all daughters. They are named in Joshua 17:3 and remembered because they spoke up for the inheritance that the Lord had promised women in such cases (see Num. 27:1-11). Jewish women had rights at a time when most pagan women had few.

9. Ephraim (7:20-29)

The writer goes into greater depth with the tribe of Ephraim in order to trace the lineage of Joshua, the most famous Ephraimite of ancient history. Men who do exploits for God are a glory to their families and are lovingly remembered and held forth as examples to succeeding generations.

10. Asher (7:30-40)

The four sons of Asher and their sister Serah coincide with the listing in Genesis 46:17. Their descendants were choice men, mighty men of valor, chief leaders.

11. Benjamin (Chap. 8)

8:1-28 Benjamin, Judah, and some of the tribes of Simeon and Levi formed the southern kingdom taken into Babylonian captivity. Most of the Israelites who returned to Judah under Nehemiah were from these tribes; hence the larger space devoted to them in these genealogies.

The Benjamites are discussed here more fully than in 7:6-12. When comparing these two lists, as well as those given in Genesis 46:21 and Numbers 26:38-41, the following principles help us to understand the seeming discrepancies.

1. Some men had more than one name.

2. The spelling of some names changed over the years.

3. Some names are omitted because the men died early or childless.

4. The word translated son (ben) can mean son, grandson, great-grandson, etc.

5. Some names are left out because they don't serve the chronicler's purpose.

8:29-40 Saul, a Benjamite, was Israel's first king. His genealogy is given here and in 9:35-44. Only the descendants of his son Jonathan, the friend of David, are given here. Merib-Baal (v. 34) is another name for Mephibosheth.[11]

The genealogies of Dan and Zebulun are not given. (Dan is also left out in other portions of Scripture-notably Rev. 7.)

D. Those who Returned from Captivity (9:1-34)

Verses 2-9 mention briefly some of the sons of Judah and Benjamin who returned to Jerusalem, leaders in their fathers' houses (v. 9). Verses 10-13 mention the priests, while verses 14-34 mention the other Levites who returned, describing some of their duties. Another listing of those who returned can be found in Nehemiah 11.

E. The Genealogy of Saul (9:35-44)

The last ten verses of chapter 9, which are virtually the same as 8:29-40, give the lineage of Saul and set the stage for the historical part of 1 Chronicles (chaps. 10-29). Saul's history is recorded in 1 Samuel 9-31.

II. THE DEATH OF SAUL (CHAP. 10)

10:1-5 A parallel account of the death of Saul and his sons is found in 1 Samuel 31:1-13.

C. H. Spurgeon comments on verse 5:

> While we earnestly condemn the self-destruction, we cannot but admire the faithfulness of the armour-bearer—faithful unto death. He would not survive his master. Shall this man live and die for Saul, and shall we betray our royal master, Jesus the Lord?[12]

10:6-10 In connection with Saul's death, several things should be noticed. "All his house died together" (v. 6) refers only to those who fought with Saul (1 Sam. 31:6). Saul had other sons not slain by the Philistines (vv. 13, 14; 2 Sam. 2:8; 21:1-9). But even these did not finally escape the fate that overtook their father (2 Sam. 21:1-8).

10:11, 12 Upon hearing the news of Saul and his sons, the valiant men of Jabesh Gilead marched all night to retrieve their bodies from the Philistines and then buried their bones and fasted seven days. Earlier Saul had saved their city from Nahash the Ammonite (1 Sam. 11); these valiant men did not forget his kindness.

10:13, 14 These verses give two reasons for Saul's death: He did not keep the word of the LORD (see 1 Sam. 13 and 15) and he consulted a medium (see 1 Sam. 28).

This brief account of Saul clears the way for the history of David, God's choice to rule over His people Israel.

III. THE REIGN OF DAVID (CHAPS. 11-29)

A. David's Army (Chaps. 11, 12)

1. David's Valiant Warriors (Chap. 11)

11:1-3 Chronicles does not mention the short and unsuccessful rule of Ishbosheth (2 Sam. 2-4), but moves on to David's coronation at Hebron (cf. 2 Sam. 5).

11:4-9 King David's first order of business was to secure a capital for himself. These verses tell how Jerusalem was taken (cf. 2 Sam. 5:6-10).

David's nephew, Joab the son of Zeruiah, was also commander of his army. He displayed great courage and bravery in the capture of Jerusalem. In accordance with David's promise, he was made chief of the armies of Israel. Although a valiant warrior, Joab was a ruthless man, not named among David's mighty men, perhaps because of his unscrupulous character.

11:10 This list of David's warriors is put at the beginning of his reign. In 2 Samuel 23 a similar list is placed at the end of his reign. These mighty men came to David at different times in his career. Some came to him when he was in the cave at Adullam (vv. 15-19). Some came when he was at Ziklag (12:1-22). Some came when David was made king in Hebron (12:23-40).

Following is a list of some of David's "mighty men" and a few of their "mighty deeds":

11:11 Jashobeam: He single-handedly defeated three hundred men with nothing but a spear. God gave him a supernatural victory against Israel's enemies. Valiant men can still do extraordinary things for God when they trust Him and press the battle against the enemy of men's souls.

11:12-14 Eleazar the son of Dodo: Note first of all that he was "with David." He was loyal to David and stood with him when all others fled. And for what was he risking himself? A field ... of barley! Principle, not property, was at stake. That land belonged by promise to Israel, and the Philistines were not to have so much as one foot of it. Today Christians need to realize that they belong to God and must not allow Satan a foothold in their lives, even in a seemingly insignificant area.

11:15-19 The three ... men at Adullam: They were with David in his extremity and knew the longing of his heart. They risked their lives to bring him water from the well of Bethlehem which would refresh his spirit. It was not for the honor they would receive, since their names are not mentioned, but for the pleasure it would afford David. Where are the men and women today who dwell close enough to the Lord Jesus to know the longings of His heart? Where are the men and women who will risk all to refresh His soul by bringing Him a drink from some needy mission field? Those who do so will certainly be reckoned among His valiant ones.

11:20, 21 Abishai the brother of Joab was the most honored of the second three.[13] Scripture tells us that Abishai was a man of unwavering devotion to David. He went with David into Saul's camp (1 Sam. 26), he was with David when he fled Jerusalem during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam. 16), he crushed the revolt of Sheba (2 Sam. 20), he saved David from the giant Ishbi-Benob (2 Sam. 21), and in many other ways he gave faithful service to his king (2 Sam. 10, 18; 1 Chron. 18). Selfless bravery linked with devoted faithfulness will make anyone a valued friend and servant of the King of kings.

11:22-25 Benaiah: His father was a priest (1 Chron. 27:5) and a valiant man. He was the head of David's personal bodyguard. A few of his exploits are listed here. Later he took Joab's place as commander of the armies of Israel (1 Kgs. 2:34, 35). In his victories we see a picture of the overcoming life, where the world (the Egyptian giant), the flesh (Moab), and the devil (the roaring lion) are all confronted and conquered.

11:26-47 Although no deeds are recorded in verses 26-47, the names of those who served David heroically are duly mentioned. Some of the names are very interesting. For example:

Zelek the Ammonite (v. 39) and Ithmah the Moabite (v. 46): They were by birth enemies of Israel. But here they are found in the service of Israel's king. We all were born enemies of God, but by His grace we too can find a place in the King's army.

Uriah the Hittite (v. 41): He was a member of a people who were supposed to have been exterminated by the Israelites when they conquered the Promised Land (Deut. 7:1, 2). But here he is, a warrior for David. David proved unworthy of his loyalty, ordering Uriah to be murdered so that he could have his wife, Bathsheba (2 Sam. 11).

2. David's Loyal Followers (Chap. 12)

Chapter 11 dealt with those individuals who identified themselves with David. This chapter deals primarily with the tribes, along with their captains, who allied themselves with the king. Every tribe is listed here in chapter 12, from those who came to David when he was in hiding (vv. 1-22) to those who came to ... Hebron after Ishbosheth's death (vv. 23-40)." ... and all the rest of Israel were of one mind to make David king. ... for there was joy in Israel" (v. 38).

Many who were in trouble or distress had previously come to David to find protection (1 Sam. 22:1, 2). But now these men came to serve David and assist him in obtaining the throne which was his by divine decree. Today the kingdom of God needs men and women who are equipped by God (v. 2), trained and swift (v. 8), strong in faith, able to prevail against overwhelming odds and put the enemy to flight (vv. 14, 15), full of the Spirit, and selflessly dedicated to Jesus (v. 32)—people who have an undivided heart (v. 33)!

David rightly questioned the sons of Benjamin and Judah (v. 17) because earlier he had been betrayed by some of them (1 Sam. 23).

The historical events referred to in verses 19-22 can be found in 1 Samuel 29 and 30. God prevented David from fighting against Israel while he was with the Philistines. He also gave him victory over the Amalekites who had raided Ziklag and captured his family.

The eastern tribes came in large numbers (v. 37), while those closer to Hebron were represented by smaller forces-e.g., Judah, Simeon, etc. (vv. 24, 25 ff.).

Now that Israel was united around their divinely appointed king, there was much rejoicing, feasting, and blessing (v. 40). Division and strife, caused by Saul's disobedience, were past. Israel would now find new prosperity under their godly shepherd-king.

B. David Brings the Ark to Jerusalem (Chaps. 13-16)

13:1-8 Chapter 13 records David's first attempt to bring the ark to his newly acquired royal city.

The ark had been neglected during the reign of Saul. The Philistines had captured it and held it for seven months, then returned it to Kirjath Jearim, where it was kept in the house of Abinadab, a Levite (1 Sam. 4-7). Now, at David's instigation, Uzza and Ahio put the ark ... on a new cart for the trip to Jerusalem. Shihor in Egypt probably refers to the brook of Egypt (Wady el Arish).

13:9-12 When the oxen stumbled, Uzza put out his hand to steady the ark. Immediately God ... struck him dead. The law forbade anyone to touch the ark, even the priests (Num. 4:15). When the Kohathites carried the ark, they placed the poles on their shoulders, but did not come in contact with the ark itself. The place was henceforth called Perez Uzza (outburst against Uzza). David became angry and fearful of bringing the ark to Jerusalem.

13:13, 14 So the ark was taken aside to the house of Obed-Edom, a Levite, where it remained for three months, bringing great blessing to its host.

14:1, 2 After David was established as king over all Israel, Hiram, king of Tyre, sent men and materials to build David a house. This was the beginning of a long and close friendship that extended into the reign of Solomon.

14:3-7 David sinned against the Lord by "multiplying wives"; this was expressly forbidden in Deuteronomy 17:17. Chronicles, while recording the violation, does not mention its sinful implication. The first four children mentioned in verse 4 were the sons of Bathsheba (1 Chron. 3:5). 2 Samuel 11 records David's illicit affair with her. However, even here we see the grace of God at work, for the names of two of the children of this marriage appear in the genealogy of our Lord: Nathan (Luke 3:31), ancestor of Mary, and Solomon (Matt. 1:6), ancestor of Joseph.

14:8-17 Upon hearing that David had been made king in Israel, the Philistines came up to attack him. David inquired of God (v. 10) and won a spectacular victory. The idols, which could not deliver their worshipers from the living God, were carried away (2 Sam. 5:21) and burned (v. 12). When the Philistines recovered and returned for a second attack, David inquired again of the Lord. He didn't assume that God's guidance would be the same. This time God gave victory through a completely different battle-plan.

These victories struck fear into the hearts of neighboring nations. Note the connection between verses 16 and 17: "So David did as God commanded him ... Then the fame of David went out into all lands."

15:1-3 Three months after the tragedy of Perez Uzza (chap. 13), David ... prepared once again to bring ... the ark to his capital, Jerusalem. However, this time he first made diligent search in the law and then proceeded accordingly.

A tent, not a house, was prepared ... for the ark at this time because this was the pattern found in the law. The tent was probably made in the same fashion as the one used during Israel's exodus (Ex. 26). However, the ark was the only piece of furniture in David's tent, the tabernacle and its furnishings being at Gibeon (16:39) until the days of Solomon.

15:4-15 Then David assembled the heads of the Levitical households. The chief priests, Zadok and Abiathar (1 Kgs. 4:4), were also called for this occasion (v. 11). The ark was now carried by the right men and in the right way, as Moses had commanded according to the word of the LORD (v. 15). Hence, this effort met with success (16:1).

15:16-29 The sweet psalmist of Israel also made elaborate arrangements for joyful music of praise to accompany the ark. Some sang, some played musical instruments. David was leaping and making music with stringed instruments and harps, and all were filled with joy. There was one sour note in this happy symphony, however. Michal, David's wife, was mocking (v. 29; cf. 2 Sam. 6:16 ff.).

16:1-3 As soon as the ark was placed in the tent, sacrifices were offered. The burnt offerings were the highest expression of worship ceremonially possible (cf. Lev. 1). It was wholly consumed by the flames and it ascended in smoke to be enjoyed by God alone.

The other sacrifices offered at this time were the peace offerings. These were the only Levitical offerings in which everyone had a part. The fat and the kidneys were offered up to the Lord upon the altar, a portion of the remainder went to the priests, and the rest was given to the offerer to be shared with his family and friends before the Lord (cf. Lev. 3). The peace offering pictured communion with the Lord and a sharing of the good things which came from the Lord. Both peace and burnt offerings were prominent in the observance of festivals and solemn occasions, and certainly this was a festive day for all Israel. Everyone received a helping of meat before he left for home (v. 3).

16:4-7 David next acted to insure that thanksgiving and rejoicing before the Lord would be carried on daily and not be reserved for special occasions (cf. vv. 37-42). Levites were appointed to commemorate, to thank, and to praise the LORD ... with ... instruments and voices.

16:8-22 The psalm recorded on this occasion has two main parts. Verses 8-22 are addressed to Israel, and verses 23-34 are addressed to all the nations. Verses 35 and 36 close the psalm. It is a composite of Psalms 105:1-15; 96:1-13; 106:1, 47, 48.

In verses 8-22 the Israelites are exhorted to sing the Lord's greatness and to *seek*the Lord's face. They are to remember His deeds, the marvelous works which He has done in the past, and they are to remember His *covenant, the unconditional promises He made to their fathers.

16:23-34 Widening the perspectives to all the earth, the psalmist urges all men to speak of the glory of the LORD. Fear is His due as the God of creation. Gloryis His due as the God of splendor, strength, and majesty. Joy is His due as the God who sustains and reigns over His world.

16:35, 36 This closing prayer is almost identical to Psalm 106:47, 48.

16:37-43 David was careful to appoint Levites to carry on the worship of Jehovah before the ark in Jerusalem, and also at Gibeon where the tabernacle and the altar of burnt offering were still located. At Jerusalem he designated singers, door-keepers, and trumpeters, all under Abiathar. The priesthood of Zadok officiated in Gibeon. The chief emphasis in this passage is on the musicians. Two different Obed-Edoms are possibly mentioned in verse 38, and there are two different Jeduthuns in verses 38 and

42. ... Now that the ark was settled in Zion, all the people went home and David returned to pronounce a blessing on his house.

C. David's Desire to Build the Temple and God's Response (Chap. 17)

Chapter 17 is divided into three parts: David's desire to build God a house (vv. 1, 2), God's determination to build David a house (vv. 3-15), and David's responsive prayer (vv. 16-27). Second Samuel 7 is the parallel passage.

17:1-4 David told Nathan the prophet that he was unhappy to be living in a luxurious home while the ark of the covenant was in a tent. His desire to build a house for the LORD met with Nathan's hasty approval. But then the Lord corrected Nathan: David was not the man chosen for this task.

17:5, 6 The ark of God had never been in a permanent house, but in a tent. Neither had God commanded that such a house be built up to this time. David later revealed to his son, Solomon, a fact not mentioned here: He was disqualified from building the temple because he had been involved in so much bloodshed and violence (22:7, 8). It was left for his son, "a man of rest" (22:9), to bring the ark of the Lord to its rest.

17:7-15 As God had spoken in grace to the patriarchs in the past, so now He singles out Israel's shepherd-king for unmerited blessing. These unconditional promises are known as the Davidic Covenant. Second Samuel 7:12-16 and Psalm 89 also record the covenant. Walvoord summarizes its provisions:

> The provisions of the Davidic covenant include ... the following: (1) David is to have a child, yet to be born, who shall succeed him and establish his kingdom. (2) This son (Solomon) shall build the temple instead of David. (3) The throne of his kingdom shall be established forever. (4) The throne will not be taken away from him (Solomon) even though his sins justify chastisement. (5) David's house, throne, and kingdom shall be established forever.[14]

This covenant, like the other unconditional covenants God made, plays an important part in His dealings with mankind. It is mentioned in several other places in Scripture (e.g., Isa. 9; Jer. 23,33; Ezek. 37; Zech. 14). It will find its complete and total fulfillment in the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom belong the throne and the kingdom forever.

17:16-27 Upon hearing these things, David went before the LORD and poured out his heart in believing prayer. His response to God shows two of David's outstanding traits: humility and trust in the Lord. Verses 16 and 17 inspired the former slave-trader and later preacher of the gospel, John Newton, to write his famous spiritual song, "Amazing Grace." Like David he saw his own unworthiness and smallness exalted by God's truly amazing grace.[15]

D. David's Victories (Chaps. 18-20)

The events summarized in the next three chapters (18-20) took place historically after David was made king (chap. 12) and before the ark was brought to Jerusalem (chaps. 13-17).

Many of Israel's hostile neighbors were now brought under her sway as had been originally intended by God. Up till then sin and disobedience had kept her in servitude under those she was meant to conquer. Now, tribute was sent from these Gentile nations to Israel in recognition of her superiority and power.

18:1-6 The Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites were all defeated because the Lord preserved ["helped," NASB] David wherever he went.

Verse 4 records another failure on David's part to observe the laws concerning the behavior of Israel's kings (Deut. 17:15-17). First he had multiplied wives for himself (14:3), and now he multiplied horses.

18:7-11 Much wealth was subsequently acquired. For example, all kinds of articles of gold, silver, and bronze, taken from Hadadezer's servants, he dedicated ... to the LORD, later to be used by Solomon in building the temple.

18:12, 13 The eighteen thousand who were killed by Abishai are attributed to David in the parallel passage in 2 Sam. 8:13. See the commentary there for a resolution of this apparent discrepancy.

18:14-17 David's enemies felt his wrath, but his people enjoyed his righteousness and justice. He was not only a good general but also an efficient administrator. David's officers and officials are listed here as well as in 2 Samuel 8:16-18. God likes to give recognition for service to Him and His leaders.

19:1-4 Nahash had fought against Israel in the days of Saul (1 Samuel 11). Evidently he had also rendered some unrecorded service to David during Saul's reign. Because of this, messengers were sent ... to comfort his son, Hanun, after his father's death. But Hanun followed unwise counsel and treated the ambassadors contemptuously.

19:5-7 Fearing reprisal, the people of Ammon hired mercenaries and prepared for war.

19:8-15 Joab along with his brother ... Abishai defeated the combined forces of the Ammonites and Syrians. Joab's exhortation in verse 13 inspired the Israelites and showed that he had the proper perspective as he faced the battle.

19:16-19 The Syrians ... sent for their relatives beyond the River and planned to avenge their recent loss. David realized the danger, quickly gathered his forces, and took up the offensive. The surprised army, under Shophach, was no match for Israel, and the proud Syrians ... became David's servants.

20:1, 2 Joab had been sent against Rabbah (modern-day Amman) by King David while David himself stayed at Jerusalem (2 Sam. 12:1). The siege probably lasted about two years. During this time David became involved with Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, one of his thirty "mighty men." Second Samuel 12 tells about David's sin and restoration but, true to the form of Chronicles, the sin is not mentioned here. Joab summoned David when the city was ready to fall, and the crown of the defeated monarch was placed on David's head.

20:3 This verse may refer only to the men of war. Since the Hebrew wording is somewhat obscure in this passage, a possible rendering offered by some commentators is that the people were put under forced labor (see notes on 2 Samuel 12).

20:4-8 Three giants were killed in the course of fighting with Israel's constant enemies, the Philistines. Sibbechai killed Sippai ... at Gezer, Elhanan ... killed Lahmi (referred to as Goliath in 2 Sam. 21), and David's nephew Jonathan (son of his brother ... Shimea, or Shammah) struck down a giant who had six ... fingers ... on each hand and six ... toes ... on each foot. Matthew Henry applies the verse for us:

> The servants of David, though men of ordinary stature, were too hard for the giants of Gath in every encounter because they had God on their side. ... We need not fear great men against us while we have the great God for us. What will a finger more on each hand do, or a toe more on each foot, in contest with Omnipotence?[16]

E. The Census and the Plague (Chap. 21)

When this chapter is compared with 2 Samuel 24, it is not at first clear who was behind David's sin of numbering the people. Second Samuel says that the Lord moved David to number Israel because His anger was kindled against the nation. Here we are told that Satan incited the action. Both statements are, of course, true. God allowed Satan to tempt David. God is not the author of evil, but He permits it and causes it to serve His appointed ends.

For the differences between the figures given in this chapter and those given in 2 Samuel 24, see Endnotes.[17]

21:1-7 Joab was against the census from the start and was not very diligent in carrying out the king's orders. Levi was not included perhaps because the tribe was dispersed throughout Israel and Judah, and to number the people would have been difficult. Benjamin may have been omitted because the census was interrupted before reaching that tribe (1 Chron. 27:24). In numbering the people no ransom was collected, as commanded in Exodus 30:12. David's disobedience and pride brought grave consequences.

21:8-15 Although David ... sinned greatly, he was quick to confess and humble himself before the Lord. When given a choice as to the penalty of his wrongdoing, he chose to fall into the hand of the LORD because he knew that He is merciful. Seventy thousand men were slain before the pestilence was stopped.

To us the punishment may seem severe. All of us have weaknesses and besetting sins. David was generally humble, but in this instance he fell into the ancient sin of the devil, pride. Matthew Henry makes application for all of us:

He was proud of the multitude of his people, but divine Justice took a course to make them fewer. Justly is that taken from us, weakened, or embittered to us, which we are proud of.[18]

21:16, 17 When David raised his eyes he saw a terrifying sight: the angel of the LORD with drawn sword stretched out over his beloved Jerusalem. His response was much better than most believers show when caught in some major sin or disobedience. Henry's four-point summary on how David bore his correction may prove helpful to us all, especially those in a place of leadership.

1. He made a very penitent confession of his sin, and prayed earnestly for the pardon of it, v 8. Now he owned that he had sinned, had sinned greatly, had done foolishly, very foolishly; and he entreated that, however he might be corrected for it, the iniquity of it might be done away. 2. He accepted the punishment of his iniquity: "Let thy hand be on me, and on my father's house, v . 17. I submit to the rod, only let me be the sufferer, for I am the sinner; mine is the guilty head at which the sword should be pointed." 3. He cast himself upon the mercy of God (though he knew he was angry with him) and did not entertain any hard thoughts of him. However it be, Let us fall into the hands of the Lord, for his mercies are great, v 13. Good men, even when God frowns upon them, think well of him. Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. 4. He expressed a very tender concern for the people, and it went to his heart to see them plagued for his transgression: These sheep, what have they done?[19]

21:18-26 Through Gad, the Lord directed David to acquire the threshing floor of Ornan (Araunah in 2 Sam.), a Jebusite, and to build an altar there and offer sacrifices. Ornan offered the land to David as a gift, but the king insisted on paying for it. Verse 24 is an important spiritual principle: Effective sacrifice is always costly. This threshing floor later became the site of the temple (2 Chron. 3:1).

21:27-30 It was on Moriah that Abraham offered up Isaac (Gen. 22). Here the plague was stopped, and when the LORD commanded the angel, he returned his sword to its sheath, as we read in this chapter. Here the temple stood. And we believe that it was on this same ridge, although not on the same spot, that the Lord Jesus died on the cross for the sins of mankind.

The realization that the site of the threshing floor was to be the new center of worship may account for David's fear to go to Gibeon for guidance.

F. Preparations for the Temple (Chaps. 22-26)

1. Materials, Men, and Motivation (Chap. 22)

22:1-5 David recognized that the threshing floor (21:28) was the future site of the temple and of the altar of burnt offering. Therefore he began to make preparations for construction, though he knew that Solomon was the one who would have the privilege of building the temple. The aliens mentioned in verse 2 were the Canaanites who remained in the land (1 Kgs. 9:20, 21). Israel was supposed to have destroyed them, but, having failed to do this, the Jews now subjected them to forced labor.

22:6-13 In a rather formal address to Solomon, David rehearsed his own desire to build the temple, his disqualification because he had been a man of blood, and the Lord's promise that his son Solomon would build the house of God. He requested that the LORD would be with Solomon, giving him wisdom and understanding, and urged Solomon to be obedient to the law of God.

22:14-16 Finally, David told Solomon about all the troubles he had taken to prepare materials and workmen for the task. He ended with advice that all Christians would do well to heed: "Arise and begin working, and the LORD be with you."

22:17-19 Then the king urged the leaders of Israel to cooperate with Solomon. Notice that building for God is first a matter of the heart, then of the hands: "Set your heart ... and build the sanctuary."

2. Divisions and Duties of the Levites (Chaps. 23-26)

23:1-3 Near the end of David's reign, a census was taken of the Levites from the age of thirty years and above, the age at which they could begin their active service.

23:4, 5 The thirty-eight thousand men were then divided into four general groups: twenty-four thousand overseers in the temple, six thousand ... officers and judges, four thousand ... gatekeepers, and four thousand musicians and singers to worship continually before the LORD. These instructions were divinely inspired and communicated to David through his prophets (2 Chron. 29:25).

23:6-24 In verses 6-23, the Levitical genealogies are given again: the Gershonites (vv. 7-11), Kohathites (vv. 12-20) (including Moses and Aaron, the most famous Levites of all), and Merarites (vv. 21-23).

Certain priestly functions had been committed exclusively to Aaron ... and his sons forever (v. 13). Burning incense, ministry to the Lord in the holy place and Holy of Holies (for the high priest alone), and blessing in the name of Jehovah (Num. 6:23-27) were reserved for the priests.

23:25-27 Next the duties of the Levites are spelled out. They would no longer carry the tabernacle and its furniture as they had been commanded by Moses, since the temple would be a permanent house for God. David, with his last words, lowered the minimum age to twenty years old and above because more manpower would be needed in the service of the temple.

23:28-32 The 6000 judges were probably dispersed throughout Israel while the other Levites served in relation to the temple. The 24,000 overseers of the work in the temple were to attend to the needs of the priests in the duties enumerated in verses 28-32.

24:1-19 In chapter 24 we are told how the priestly and Levitical divisions were formed. There were twenty-four households or divisions of priests (vv. 1-19) and twenty-four divisions of Levites (vv. 20-31). Each division was assigned a schedule on a rotating basis to minister in the temple, thus giving everyone the opportunity of serving approximately two weeks each year. Zacharias (Luke 1:5) belonged to the eighth course, the course of Abijah (v. 10).

The households of Aaron's two surviving sons, Eleazar and Ithamar, comprised the priesthood, sixteen divisions belonging to the former and eight divisions going to the latter (v. 4). The lot was cast in the presence of David, the leaders of Israel, and Zadok and Ahimelech the priests; the results were recorded by Shemaiah ... the scribe with meticulous care.

24:20-31 The Levites also cast their lot before David and the princes. The lot apparently determined the division to which each man was assigned.

25:1-7 In chapter 25 other sons of Levi, the singers and musicians, are set in their courses to perform their sacred service. These are the sons of Asaph (v. 2), Jeduthun (v. 3), and Heman (vv. 4, 5). These two hundred and eighty-eight men were appointed to sing in the house of the LORD, accompanied by cymbals, stringed instruments, and harps (vv. 6, 7).

25:8-31 They were assigned to their twenty-four courses or shifts by lot, as indicated in verses 8-31.

26:1-19 Details concerning the gatekeepers and the gates to which they were assigned by lot are given next. Here we find the Korahites (v. 1)," ... their duty being to prevent the presumption of which their father was guilty (Num. 16). Such are the ways of God."[20] Here too is Obed-Edom, who sheltered the ark, after the death of Uzza (13:14). God had not forgotten his faithfulness.

Verse 18 means that there were four gatekeepers or temple guards at a causeway adjoining one of the gates, and two more at the other end of the causeway leading to Parbar, probably a court or colonnade extending west of the temple.[21]

26:20-28 Some Levites were appointed to guard the temple treasuries, the spoils, and the freewill offerings that had been dedicated to the Lord.

26:29-32 A third group of Levites was set apart as officials and judges, one thousand seven hundred ... west ... of the Jordan and two thousand seven hundred on the east side of the river in Gilead.

G. Military and Governmental Leaders (Chap. 27)

27:1-15 The army, like the Levites, served in divisions. Twenty-four thousand men were on duty each month. All the commanders are listed among David's mighty men (chap. 11 and 2 Sam. 23).

27:16-22 The tribes are listed in a designed order. First listed are the sons of Leah, in their proper order: the Reubenites, the Simeonites, the Levites, Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun. Then the sons of Rachel: Joseph (represented by his sons Ephraim and Manasseh) and Benjamin. The children of Bilhah are given (but not in chronological order): Naphtali and Dan. The sons of Zilpah (Gad and Asher) are not named here.

27:23, 24 Those twenty years old and under were not recorded in the census that David had ordered. The census was never completed because the wrath of the Lord fell before Joab finished. David, perhaps ashamed of his sin, ordered that the result of the ill-fated census should not be put in the public records.

27:25-34 David had twelve officials who had charge of his domestic affairs. He also had counselors and close friends who advised him. Ahithophel's sad story is given in 2 Samuel 15 and 17. He was, like Joab, a man of high privilege but low character. How much nobler was Hushai, the king's companion. Ahithophel was a self-seeking opportunist, but Hushai was a self-effacing servant. Each one reaped what he had sown (see 2 Sam. 15-17). Both served the king, but each had different motives. The opportunist works for his own glory, but the servant for that of his master.

H. David's Last Days (Chaps. 28, 29)

28:1-8 David assembled at Jerusalem all the leaders of the various divisions and the officers of the tribes and captains. Once again he explained his desire to build a house for the LORD and the reasons why he had not been permitted to do so. But he had been chosen and established as king in Israel, and his son Solomon had been chosen to succeed him. Since David's throne had been firmly established by God, the people were to obey the Lord through Solomon as they had through David.

28:9, 10 Next David addressed his son. Verse 9 contains a command, a promise, and a warning. The command: "As for you, my son Solomon, know the God of your father, and serve Him with a loyal heart and with a willing mind." The promise: "If you seek Him, He will be found by you." The warning: "But if you forsake Him, He will cast you off forever." Since the LORD had appointed Solomon to build the temple, he should take courage and do it.

28:11-19 But, like Moses before him, Solomon must build according to the pattern given by the Spirit, perhaps in a vision. There was no room for human imagination or ingenuity, because the temple is a type of Christ. David gave ... Solomon the plans he had drawn up under the inspiration of the Spirit. He had even weighed the raw materials to be used for each piece of furniture. (More complete details are given in 2 Chron. 2-4.) The chariot, that is, the gold cherubim (v. 18), according to Unger, probably means "the cherubim as the chariot upon which God enters or is throned."[22]

28:20, 21 Solomon now had the plans; the materials were collected; the temple servants, the Levites, had all been assigned their duties. God was with him and would not fail him; therefore his father urged him again, "Be strong ... and do it."

29:1-9 Although King David had given so much already to the work of the temple, yet as a final offering and as an example to the people he dedicated more silver and gold from his private funds and urged the people to give liberally. Their generous response brought rejoicing to their own hearts and to the heart of the king.

29:10-19 David then offered a magnificent prayer of worship and thanksgiving. He eulogized the LORD as worthy of all honor, exalted as head over all, and as the Source of all riches and honor. He acknowledged that he and his people were unworthy to give to God, and that what they gave had come from Him anyway. He prayed that the present devotion (an upright heart, v. 17) of his people would become a permanent trait (a heart fixed on God [v. 18]), and that his son would have a loyal heart (v. 19) in building the temple.

29:20-22a When he called on the congregation to bless the LORD, they bowed low and prostrated themselves before the LORD and the king. The next day ... they sacrificed 3000 animals, and they ate and drank before the LORD.

29:22b-25 Solomon was made ... king a second time (v. 22; cf. 23:1); then, after David's death, he sat on the throne, enjoying the blessing of the Lord and the allegiance of the people. His glorious kingdom prepictures the splendor of Christ's Millennial Reign over the entire earth.

29:26-30 First Chronicles closes with a brief summary of David's reign. He died full of days (he was seventy), riches, and honor.

SECOND CHRONICLES

INTRODUCTION

"The Book of 2 Chronicles outlines God's discipline based on His conditional promises. The period of 427 years covers nineteen kings of Judah. Seven were good kings likened to David; ten were bad kings, likened to Israel or Jeroboam; two were good turning to bad, namely Solomon and Joash. Here we see discipline turning into judgment."

COMMENTARY

The break between 1 and 2 Chronicles was made strictly for convenience, since they were originally one very large book. Thus 2 Chronicles takes up exactly where 1 Chronicles leaves off. The dividing point is well chosen—between David's and Solomon's reigns.

In 1 Chronicles 29 David established Solomon as his successor. Second Chronicles traces the Davidic line from Solomon to the return of the Jewish remnant from the Babylonian Captivity. First and Second Kings cover basically the same time period, but the emphasis in Chronicles is almost entirely on Judah. The kings of Israel are mentioned only as they relate to the history of Judah. Also, the emphasis of Chronicles is spiritual while that of Kings is historical. Although much of the material is the same in both books, Chronicles sometimes contains details not found in Kings, Chronicles being written at a later date and for a different purpose. We will comment on some of the differences between the two books, but it will be impossible to go into depth about all of them. (Other books have been written for this purpose.)

I. THE KINGDOM OF SOLOMON (CHAPS. 1-9)

A. Solomon's Worship, Wisdom, and Wealth (Chap. 1)

1:1-3 First Kings 1-3 tells what went on between the death of David (1 Chron. 29) and the time when Solomon was established as king. Adonijah and Joab were killed in a power struggle as Solomon secured his father's throne in accordance with the word of the Lord (1 Chron. 22:9, 10).

With his kingdom secured, Solomon called together his subordinates and led them in a solemn procession to Gibeon, where the tabernacle was located.

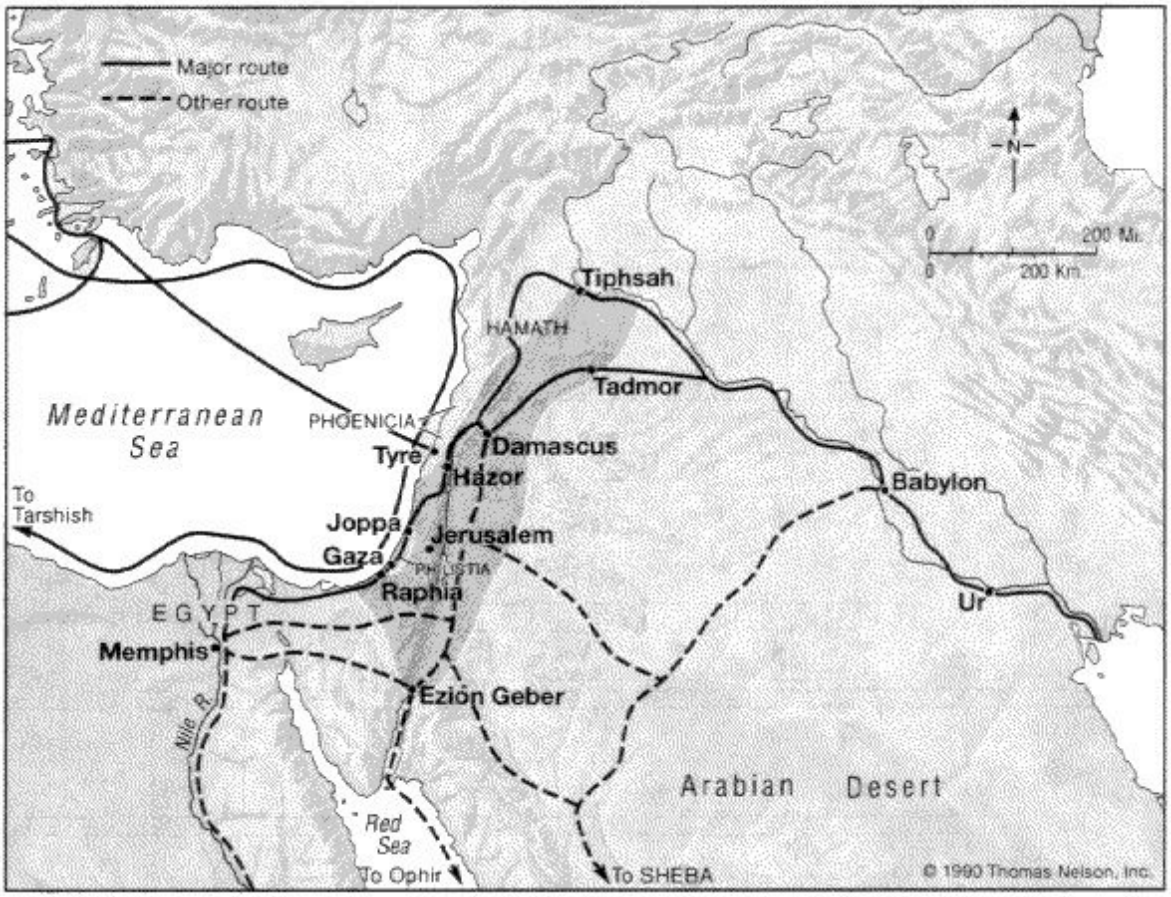
1:4-6 David had moved the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 13-15), but the rest of the furniture of the tabernacle was at Gibeon, including the bronze altar. Upon this altar ... Solomon ... offered a thousand burnt offerings, a display of his devotion and loyalty to Jehovah, the God of his father.

1:7-12 God appeared to him that same night in a dream and asked him what he most desired (v. 7; 1 Kgs. 3:5). Solomon's request for wisdom and knowledge in ruling the people so pleased the Lord that He also promised him unparalleled riches, wealth, and honor. In a sense, God appears to every believer and asks him what he wants. What we want in life largely determines what we get.

1:13-17 Solomon returned to Jerusalem to a reign of great prosperity. These verses dwell on his chariots, horsemen, chariot cities, silver, gold, cedar, and horses. But his prosperity contained the seeds of his eventual failure, as is often the case.



The spread of Solomon's Fame. Solomon's influence in economic and political affairs was enhanced by the transportation and trade routes that intersected his kingdom.

B. Solomon's Preparation, Construction, and Dedication of the Temple (Chaps. 2-7)

2:1, 2 In preparation for construction of the temple, Solomon selected seventy thousand men to carry the materials, plus eighty thousand stonecutters and three thousand six hundred supervisors.

2:3-10 Then he sent for help to Hiram, king of Tyre, who had supplied cedars for David's royal palace. After describing the spiritual significance of the project, Solomon asked specifically for a skilled craftsman to work with the artisan whom David had hired, and also for the necessary timber. Solomon promised to pay handsomely for any help given. There seems to be a discrepancy as to the actual amount.[1]

APPARENT DISCREPANCIES

In commenting on 2 Chronicles, we must note that there are some seeming discrepancies between this book and the parallel accounts in 1 and 2 Kings. If we overlook these differences, we do a disservice to our readers. On the other hand, if we overemphasize the differences, we run the risk of undermining confidence in the Word, and we certainly do not want to do this. Our solution is this: We have decided to bring the principal differences out into the open, even if we can't solve them all. At the same time we want to make it clear that they in no way affect the inspiration of the Scriptures. We believe that the Bible, as originally given, is inspired by God, inerrant, and infallible.

We have handled the problems in the Endnotes. In this way the technical discussions of apparently contradictory details will not break up the flow of the commentary. On the other hand, it gives us opportunity to investigate the problems briefly but freely.

Many of the discrepancies are copyists' errors. We should not be surprised if scribes made minor mistakes in copying and recopying the Bible over the course of many centuries. Even today it is almost impossible to publish a book without some typographical errors creeping in.

Someone might ask, "If God could guide the original writers of Scripture to be free from error, why couldn't He cause the scribes to produce error-free copies?" The answer, of course, is that He could have, but in His wisdom He didn't choose to do so. The important point is that, in spite of minor scribal or copyists' errors (mostly in the spelling of names and in numbers), the Bible as we have it today is the Word of God. Any problems have to do with minor details and not with any Bible doctrine. It is reassuring to remember that when the Lord Jesus was on earth, He used an edition of the OT (not the original manuscripts) and He quoted this text as the Word of God. We can use reputable versions of the Bible today with the same confidence that they are the Word of God.

The Plan of Solomon's Temple

2:11-16 Hiram's reply in writing, which he sent to Solomon, seemed to indicate a genuine, spiritual recognition that the undertaking was historic. He said he was sending Huram, a craftsman with impeccable qualifications.[2] He also promised to send wood from Lebanon in exchange for wheat, barley, oil, and ... wine. The timber would be floated on rafts down the Mediterranean Sea to Joppa, then transported overland to Jerusalem.

2:17, 18 The 153,000 aliens or strangers were Canaanites whom the Israelites had failed to destroy. Now they were used as forced laborers.[3]

3:1-4 After much planning and preparation, the construction finally began in the fourth year of Solomon's reign. With over 150,000 workmen and almost limitless resources, it would still take over seven years to complete this mammoth undertaking.

The foundations were laid on Mount Moriah. The temple would be ninety feet long, thirty feet wide, and forty-five feet high (see 1 Kgs. 6, where more details are given). It was roughly twice the size of the tabernacle and had a vestibule or porch thirty feet long.[4]

3:5-9 The interior of the temple was divided into two rooms on the main floor. The two rooms were the larger room (literally house, NKJV marg.) and the Most Holy Place. The building was of stone. The interior was paneled with cypress wood which was overlaid with pure gold, ornamented with various designs, and studded with precious stones. All that was visible inside the temple was gold, the symbol of deity, picturing the glory of the Lord which was to fill the place.

3:10-13 Two cherubim were put into the Most Holy Place (in addition to the two cherubim which formed part of the mercy seat atop the ark). Their combined wingspans extended the entire width of the Most Holy Place. The ark would later be placed under them (5:7). Cherubim are spirit-beings which appear often in Scripture. The walls (v. 7) and the veil (v. 14) were decorated with them, symbolizing their continual waiting on God. The temple and the tabernacle were types of the true dwelling place of God—i.e., heaven, where He is worshiped and glorified day and night by myriad hosts (Heb. 8:5). They were also types of Christ (John 1:14, where "dwelt" is literally "tabernacled"; 2:19).

3:14-17 A veil separated the two rooms, just as in the tabernacle. There were also doors (v. 7) between the rooms in the temple. Two pillars with capitals and one hundred ornamental pomegranates were placed in front of the temple.[5] The pillar on the right side was named Jachin (He shall establish) and the one on the left was called Boaz (in Him is strength).

4:1-22 The two chief metals used in the temple were bronze and gold. Chapter 4 briefly lists some of the furnishings made from these metals. Bronze was used for the altar of burnt offering, the Sea and supporting oxen (vv. 2-5, 10),[6] ten lavers or portable basins (v. 6), overlay for the doors of the court (v. 9), various utensils (vv. 11, 14-18), and the two pillars and capitals (vv. 12, 13). These were all cast in clay molds between Succoth and Zeredah (v. 17).

Solomon used gold for ten lampstands for the holy place (vv. 7, 20), ten tables for the showbread (8, 19) a golden altar (v. 19), various utensils (vv.

8, 21, 22), and overlay for the holy place and Holy of Holies (v. 22). Gold was used primarily for items inside the temple while the bronze furnishings were mainly employed outside.

All the furnishings for the temple were made by Solomon except the ark of the covenant. That was brought from the tabernacle.

5:1-10 Now the temple was finished (v. 1; cf. 1 Kgs. 8). Verses 2-10 tell about the transporting of the furniture from the tabernacle of meeting to the temple. The ark was placed in the Most Holy Place. Perhaps the other items, like the altar of incense and the table of showbread, were put into the treasury at this time, since they were not used in Solomon's temple.

The Levites who carried the ark were priests (vv. 4, 7). They set the ark in its place ... under the wings of the guarding cherubim (vv. 7, 8). Exodus 25:15 required that the poles stay with the ark. ("Drew out," v. 9 KJV, is inaccurate.) According to 1 Kings 8:8, the ends of the poles of the ark could be seen from the holy place. The two tablets of the law were in the ark at this time.

5:11-14 Verse 11b, "all the priests ... without keeping to their divisions," means that all the priests ... present that day participated, not just the course that was assigned the duty.

When the Levites and priests assembled at the east end of the altar, praising and thanking the LORD for His goodness and mercy, the glory of the LORD filled the temple so that the priests could not minister inside.

6:1-11 Before addressing the Lord in his prayer of dedication, Solomon reminded the people how, in Israel's earlier history, the Lord had not chosen a city as the religious capital or a man as ruler. (It is true that Samuel and others were leaders, but they did not have the power of a sovereign.) But the time came when God chose Jerusalem as His city and David as king over ... Israel. David desired to build a temple, but his good intention was to be carried out by one of his sons. And now here stood Solomon, a testimony to the faithfulness of God.

6:12, 13 The central part of chapter 6 is Solomon's prayer of dedication (vv. 12-42). It is the longest prayer recorded in the Bible and is full of praise and petition. Ascending a special platform in the temple court, Solomon ...

spread out his hands and prayed. He had much for which to be thankful. Emboldened by grace, he had much for which to ask.

6:14-17 First of all Solomon prayed about the throne of Israel. God had kept His word thus far concerning His promises to David. The king asked that His faithfulness might continue.

6:18-21 These four sentences contain the sum and substance of the entire prayer. All that follows is an expansion of the simple thought expressed by the verbs hear and forgive (v. 21).

6:22, 23 Next Solomon requests the Lord to hear ... and judge oaths taken before His altar.

6:24, 25 Then he asks forgiveness for sin that might cause Israel to be defeated by her enemies.

6:26, 27 He requests rain after drought caused by sin.

6:28-31 He requests deliverance from famine or pestilence in order that the people might learn the fear of the Lord.

6:32, 33 He requests that foreigners may see God work when they come to call on His great Name.

6:34, 35 He requests victory in battle.

6:36-39 He requests deliverance from captivity once the people repent and confess their wickedness.

6:40-42 Solomon closed by requesting three things. He asked that his prayer might be accepted. He asked for grace and joy for the priests, those who serve God in His temple. He prayed for favor for himself based on God's great love for his father David.

Lest we think that this prayer consists of petitions only, let us go back through it once more. There is a great deal about the attributes of God here. Solomon mentioned God's: uniqueness (v. 14); lovingkindness (v. 14); transcendence (v. 18); immensity (infinity) (v. 18); omnipresence (v. 18); justice (v. 23); forgiveness (vv. 25, 27, etc.); omniscience (v. 30); grace (v. 33); and mercy (vv. 38, 39).

Besides all these, the Lord's omnipotence and holiness are implied throughout.

7:1-7 As soon as Solomon had finished praying, fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices, and the glory of the LORD filled the temple. The people saw ... the glory cloud coming down ... on the temple, and they bowed ... on the pavement, worshiping and praising the LORD. Solomon then led the people in offering thousands of bulls and sheep as sacrifices to the LORD.

The priests took their positions, the Levites played the Lord's musical instruments, which King David had made for praising the Lord. Opposite the Levites, the priests sounded their trumpets, while all the Israelites stood.

The bronze altar was too small for the enormous number of sacrifices and offerings.

7:8-10 The dedication feast lasted for seven days, including the Day of Atonement. This was followed by the Feast of Tabernacles, after which Solomon dismissed the people.

7:11-16 After Solomon had finished the temple and his own palace, the LORD appeared to him at night with promises and warnings. In the event that God sent drought, locusts, or pestilence on the people, they should humble themselves, ... pray, ... seek His face, and turn from their wicked ways. Then He would forgive their sin and restore them.

Verse 14 may very well be the golden text of this entire book. Though originally addressed to the chosen nation of Israel, it has rightly been applied to those nations which have a biblical heritage. It is the sure road to restoration and revival for all times. If the conditions are met, the promises are sure of fulfillment.

J. Barton Payne comments:

> This great verse, the best known in all Chronicles, expresses as does no other in Scripture God's requirement for national blessing, whether in Solomon's land, in Ezra's, or in our own. Those who believe must forsake their sins, turn from the life that is centered in self, and yield to God's word and will. Then, and only then, will heaven send revival.[7]

7:17-22 If Solomon would live in obedience before God, He would establish his throne and allow Solomon's descendants to sit upon it. On the other hand, if Solomon and his people forsook the Lord for other gods, they would be carried into captivity, and God would reject the temple so that it would be an object of derision and a testimony to the nations that Israel had forsaken the LORD.

Verse 16 seems to imply that the temple would endure for all time; yet we know that it was destroyed in 586 B.C. The explanation, of course, is that God's promise was conditioned on Israel's faithfulness and obedience. Verses 19 and 20 specifically warn that if the people became idolaters, God would reject the temple.

C. Solomon in All His Splendor (8:1-9:28)

8:1-6 Here we read of Solomon's accomplishments and successes in various areas. First he undertook a vast urban-development program, rebuilding or capturing storage cities, fortified cities, chariot cities, and settlements.

8:7-10 He conscripted Canaanites for his slave labor force but used the Israelites as fighting men, commanders, and chief officials.[8]

8:11 He would not allow his wife, the daughter of Pharaoh, to live in the royal palace, saying that it was holy because the ark of the Lord had entered there. This does not mean that the ark had actually been taken inside the palace, but rather that the palace was holy by reason of its proximity to the ark in the temple. Unfortunately, the fact that Solomon restricted her to a special residence did not restrict her from leading him off into idolatry (1 Kgs. 11:1-8).

8:12-16 The king was careful to observe the sacrifices and offerings connected with the religious calendar. He also appointed ... the priests and Levites to serve ... according to the schedules prepared by David his father.

Thus all the work of Solomon was well-ordered from start to finish.

8:17, 18 Finally, we read of Solomon's maritime ventures in partnership with Hiram. The ships traveled between Ezion Geber and Elath—both on the northern tip of the eastern arm of the Red Sea (Gulf of Aqaba)—and Ophir.[9] It has been variously conjectured that Ophir was in southern Arabia, eastern Africa, or India.

9:1-9 When the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she traveled with a very great caravan loaded down with gifts to find out for herself. After seeing the splendor of his kingdom and testing his wisdom with hard questions, she was overwhelmed. She confessed that the half had not been told. She realized that Solomon's prosperity was due to the favor of his God.

9:10-12 Verses 10 and 11 interrupt the narrative to explain the source of some of Solomon's wealth and the uniquely beautiful uses to which he put it. When the queen of Sheba left, Solomon gave her gifts much greater in number and value than those she had brought to him.

9:13-28 Solomon received over six hundred and sixty-six talents of gold each year and used some of it to make shields, to overlay his throne of ivory, and to make goblets and tableware. His greatness brought him honor and wealth from all the kings of the earth. His trade went all the way to Tarshish, which may have been in Spain.[10] He was rich in the abundance of horses,[11] territory, silver, and cedar. Although he reigned over the territory from the River Euphrates westward, it was not incorporated as part of Israel but consisted of vassal states that paid tribute to him.

D. Solomon's Death (9:29-31)

Solomon died after he had reigned for forty years, and was succeeded by his son ... Rehoboam. The noncanonical books mentioned in verse 29 were probably used as resource materials by the chronicler, but they have since been lost.

II. THE DIVISION OF THE KINGDOM (CHAP. 10)

10:1-5 Perhaps to conciliate the northern tribes, Rehoboam decided to go to Shechem for his inauguration. The people promised to serve him if he would lighten the heavy yoke which Solomon had placed on them. "All Israel" (v. 3) means representatives from all the northern tribes. Rehoboam asked for three days to consider the people's request.

10:6-11 First King Rehoboam checked with the elders who had served his father Solomon. They told him to listen to "these" people. He next turned to the young men for advice, rejecting the elders' counsel, and heard what was more appealing to him. They urged him to speak roughly to the people.

10:12-19 When the people returned after three days and heard the king's threats, they rebelled, under the leadership of Jeroboam. The kingdom was divided, fulfilling the word of the Lord through Ahijah (1 Kgs. 11:29 ff.). After the murder of Hadoram the tax collector, Rehoboam retreated to Jerusalem, where he reigned over Judah and Benjamin. Williams comments:

> This fulfillment of the prediction of Ahijah affords an instance, similar to many others in the Scriptures, of prophecies being accomplished by the operation of human passions, and in the natural course of events. Men think that they are obeying their own wills and carrying out their own plans, unconscious that the matter is of God, and permitted and overruled by Him for the performance of His Word.[12]

III. THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH (11:1-36:19)

A. King Rehoboam (Chaps. 11, 12)

11:1-4 When Rehoboam returned to Jerusalem, the LORD intervened through the prophet Shemaiah to prevent a civil war. He told Rehoboam to accept the status quo because "this thing is done from Me." Rehoboam had not listened to wise counsel before, but he did this time. There was constant strife between the two kingdoms (12:15), but all-out war was avoided. The expression "all Israel in Judah and Benjamin" (v. 3) refers to all in the southern kingdom who were loyal to David's dynasty.

11:5-12 Much of the king's time was spent in building cities of defense for Judah. The fortified cities, located south of Jerusalem, showed that he feared attack from Egypt.

11:13-17 Meanwhile Jeroboam plunged the northern kingdom into gross idolatry (1 Kgs. 12), causing those priests and Levites who were loyal to the LORD to flee to Judah. They were followed by all those who had hearts for God, and in this way Rehoboam's kingdom was strengthened. It cost them everything to come to Jerusalem, for they left their common-lands, possessions, and friends behind.

11:18-23 Rehoboam was a polygamist, although he did not match his father in this regard! He had eighteen wives, sixty concubines, twenty-eight sons, and sixty daughters. The wives mentioned by name were Israelites from the royal family and not heathen women.

12:1-4 Whereas 1 Kings 14:22-24 mentions some of the details of Rehoboam's apostasy, Chronicles simply says that "he forsook the law of the LORD" and "did not prepare his heart to seek the LORD" (v. 14). Now five short years after the powerful monarch Solomon had died, the Egyptians were at Jerusalem's gates to carry away her treasures. Rehoboam's fortified cities availed nothing. Shishak subdued Judah not because of Egypt's military superiority but because of Judah's unfaithfulness to Jehovah.

12:5-8 When Shemaiah the prophet came to Rehoboam a second time (see 11:2) and delivered his message of doom, the king and the princes of Judah humbled themselves before the Lord and acknowledged His righteousness in the coming judgment. Instantly the Lord's mercy and grace provided deliverance, but not without a painful lesson on the difference between serving Jehovah and serving their captors.

12:9-12 The people were spared but the kingdom was spoiled. Rehoboam tried to adjust as much as possible. He substituted bronze shields for gold, unwittingly illustrating that God's presence and favor (gold) were being replaced by His judgment (bronze).[13]

12:13-16 The story of Rehoboam concludes with the statement that he did evil and rested with his fathers. The difference between Rehoboam and his grandfather David can be seen by comparing Psalm 27:8 with verse 14. David sought the Lord's face. Rehoboam did not.

B. King Abijah (Chap. 13)

13:1-3 Abijah, whose mother's name was Michaiah,[14] became the next king and reigned three years in Jerusalem. First Kings 15 mentions his sin in not following after the Lord, as David had done. But Chronicles skips over everything in Abijah's reign except one battle with Jeroboam.

13:4-12 In his speech before the battle, Abijah reminded Jeroboam that God had given the kingdom to David and to his posterity. Jeroboam had rebelled against the Davidic dynasty and had mustered a band of worthless rogues against Rehoboam when the latter was virtually defenseless. Israel hoped to win the victory because of its superior numbers and the golden calves. Israel had set up a counterfeit priesthood which men could enter without divine authorization. Judah, by contrast, clung to the Levitical priesthood, which was still serving the Lord in the prescribed manner. God was the Captain of Judah's army, and His priests used their trumpets to sound the alarm against Israel. It was folly, therefore, for the northern tribe to fight against the LORD God.

13:13-18 Instead of listening to Abijah, Jeroboam set an ambush. When the trap closed on Judah, the men cried out to the LORD and the priests blew the trumpets. The Lord answered by giving Judah a great victory. Five hundred thousand choice men of Israel fell—a staggering price to pay for turning away from God!

13:19-22 Abijah acquired additional territory, although he didn't completely subdue Israel. The loss was devastating for Jeroboam, who was later struck down by the LORD. But Abijah became powerful and prosperous.

C. King Asa (Chaps. 14-16)

14:1, 2 The next three chapters give us a brief report of Asa and his forty-one year reign. First Kings 15:9-24 should be read along with these chapters. Verse 1 is a bridge from the previous chapter. The Hebrew Bible starts chap. 14 with v. 2.

14:3-8 The source of Asa's peaceful reign was his heart's attitude toward Jehovah. He put away many of the sins of his fathers and urged his people to seek the LORD, leading the way himself by zealously purging his kingdom of idolatry.[15] During this time of rest, Asa fortified his cities and gathered a large army.

14:9-15 Judah's peace was shattered by an Ethiopian ... army of a million men with three hundred chariots. Judah's smaller force was victorious because of their trust in Jehovah. The enemy was routed decisively.

Asa's prayer in verse 11 is short and to the point. There is no time in battle to be eloquent, but prayers born out of desperate need are very effective if the person praying is in a right relationship with God, as Asa was. Because he followed the Lord in peace, he knew the Lord would care for him in war. The fight began in Mareshah, a city in Judah, and ended around Gerar, a city belonging to the Philistines. Many were slain, including those who owned livestock, and huge amounts of spoil and animals were carried back to Jerusalem.

15:1-6 Asa and his men were jubilant over their recent success against overwhelming odds. As they returned to Jerusalem, the Lord had a lesson for them. First, Azariah reminded them that the LORD was with them because they had sought Him. But ... He would forsake them if they forsook Him. And history proved more times than not that Israel had forsaken their God. Consequently they had no peace, and they were continually beaten by their enemies. But when the nation sought ... the LORD, they found Him always ready to forgive and restore.

15:7 Since Asa was seeking after Jehovah, Azariah encouraged him to keep up the good work. Tucked away in this historical narrative, verse 7 is well worth memorizing: "But you, be strong and do not let your hands be weak, for your work shall be rewarded!" The parallel for believers today is 1 Corinthians 15:58.

15:8-15 "Oded" (v. 8) probably refers to Oded's son, Azariah (see NKJV marg.). The king responded to the word of the prophet with real enthusiasm. He stepped up his reformation program immediately, removing more idols (cf. 14:3), not only from his own land of Judah but from the cities ... of Ephraim which he had taken in battle. He restored the altar in the temple and consecrated it with sacrifices. He called a solemn assembly at Jerusalem, offered part of the Ethiopian spoil ... to the LORD on the altar, and bound the people with an oath ... to seek the LORD. He left no room for dissenters—all who did not obey the covenant were to be executed (v. 13).

15:16-19 Also Asa removed his grandmother (not his mother[16]) from her position as queen mother and destroyed her obscene image. For comment on verse 17 see the note on 14:3-8. Treasures were brought into the temple instead of being taken out. His work was rewarded as the Lord had promised through Azariah, and he had peace.

16:1 Late in the reign of Asa,[17] Baasha king of Israel attempted to prevent his own people from defecting to Asa by fortifying Ramah, a town not far from Jerusalem.

16:2-6 Asa turned to the assistance of man instead of trusting in the arm of the Lord, as he had done earlier when invaded by the Ethiopians. He sent the Lord's treasure to purchase the help of Ben-Hadad. The Syrian king then attacked ... Israel from the north and forced Baasha to withdraw from Ramah in order to defend his northern border. Asa's scheme apparently worked, but God was displeased.

16:7-10 The end certainly did not justify the means in Jehovah's eyes, so He sent His prophet Hanani to speak to Asa. Hanani boldly accused the king of acting foolishly. Had not the LORD ... delivered him from the Ethiopians? Was not God continually looking for men through whom He could work? Since Asa had chosen to fight according to the flesh, he would have wars from then on. Asa ... was enraged. Instead of heeding the word of the Lord, as he had done earlier (15:8), he put Hanani in prison.

16:11-14 Asa chose to work contrary to the way of the Lord, so the Lord afflicted him with a foot disease. But he still refused to repent and turn back to Jehovah. He tried the physicians instead, and shortly thereafter died. Some think that the physicians may have been magicians or spiritistic healers.

Despite his sad end, Asa was one of the best kings Judah had (15:17). The people greatly mourned his death. The very great burning of verse 14 refers to burning incense, not to the cremation of his body.

D. King Jehoshaphat (Chaps. 17-20)

17:1-5 Jehoshaphat succeeded his father and reigned twenty-five years (20:31). Much more space is devoted to him in 2 Chronicles (chaps. 17-20) than in Kings. The material in chapter 17 has no parallel in 1 Kings.

Upon ascending the throne, Jehoshaphat ... strengthened his kingdom against Israel. He fortified his kingdom, but the secret of his successful reign was that he followed the LORD, as David had done. It is interesting how David is constantly used as the standard by which kings were measured. If they walked after his example, they prospered and were blessed. If they did not, they failed. The land was at peace under Jehoshaphat, and his enemies paid tribute (vv. 10-12).

17:6-9 The Word of God had high priority in Jehoshaphat's life. He was zealous in following its precepts and took delight in obeying it. He also made it the rule of his kingdom, sending a special commission of princes, Levites, and priests to educate the people in the ways of the LORD, thus obeying God's commands in Deuteronomy 6:6ff.

17:10-19 Under Jehovah's blessing, Jehoshaphat became increasingly powerful. And what an army he had! Rehoboam started out over sixty years earlier with 180,000 men. Now Judah's militia numbered 1,160,000 men, not counting those stationed in the fortified cities. Many of these men had no doubt defected from Israel because they saw that the Lord was with Judah. It is too bad that Jehoshaphat did not use his manpower more wisely, as we shall see in chapter 18.

18:1 Up to this point Israel and Judah had been hostile toward each other. But Jehoshaphat's son married Ahab's daughter (21:5, 6), thus forming an alliance between the two kingdoms.

18:2-7 Ahab asked Jehoshaphat to help him attack the Syrians, who held some of Israel's territory (cf. 1 Kgs. 22:3, 4). Jehoshaphat immediately consented to help Ahab, but he suggested that they first inquire for the word of the LORD. Accordingly Ahab sent for the prophets, who with one voice predicted success. However, they must not have been too convincing, because Jehoshaphat, who possessed a measure of spiritual discernment, asked for "a prophet of the LORD," as if to imply that the four hundred men already assembled were not in touch with Jehovah. It appears that even Ahab knew the difference between his prophets and a real prophet. But Micaiah, the one man through whom they could get the word of the Lord, was hated by Ahab because he always prophesied evil about the king.

18:8-11 When Micaiah was being summoned, Zedekiah dramatically portrayed how the Syrians would be destroyed (perhaps the two horns he put on signified the two Jewish kings), while all the king's other prophets chimed in their assent. D. L. Moody comments:

> Ahab had his preachers and prophets. No man is so corrupt, but he will find some one who preaches to suit him.[18]

18:12, 13 Micaiah meanwhile was being pressured by the king's messenger to agree with the other prophets in forecasting victory, but Micaiah promised only to deliver the word of the Lord. Verse 13 should be the motto of every preacher and every Christian: "As the LORD lives, whatever my God says, that I will speak."

18:14-17 At first Micaiah pretended to go along with the others, but it was soon apparent that he was not serious. When Ahab made him swear to speak the truth, he told of Israel's coming defeat and of Ahab's death.

18:18-22 Micaiah also explained why Ahab's prophets were giving him false information: They were under the influence of a lying spirit which the LORD sent because of Ahab's wickedness. Ahab was now the object of judgment, as had been prophesied earlier by Elijah (1 Kgs. 21:19-24). Matthew Henry comments:

> It is not without the divine permission that the devil deceives men, and even thereby God serves his own purposes. ... Thus Micaiah gave Ahab fair warning, not only of the danger of proceeding in this war, but of the danger of believing those that encouraged him to proceed.[19]

18:23-26 Micaiah suffered for his honesty. Zedekiah ... struck him on the cheek and Ahab imprisoned him with only bread and water, probably intending to kill him. To both men Micaiah responded by saying that the Lord would prove that he was telling the truth. Scripture does not tell us what happened to Zedekiah, but we do know that Ahab was slain in battle, according to the word of Jehovah.

18:27-29 The prophet's words must have had some impact on Ahab, because he tried to disguise himself and thus escape God's judgment. He suggested that Jehoshaphat wear his kingly robes while he (Ahab) donned a soldier's uniform.

18:30-34 But the word of the Lord came to pass. Jehoshaphat was delivered from the Syrians, after learning a lesson about the dangers of unholy alliances (2 Cor. 6:14). Ahab was not delivered. God directed a seemingly random arrow between the joints of his armor, and about the time of sunset he died.

19:1-5 When Jehu, the son of Hanani, the seer, who was also a prophet, rebuked Jehoshaphat for his alliance with Ahab, he responded by repenting.

His relationship with the idolatrous Ahab had set a poor example for his subjects. So the king went throughout his kingdom to bring the people ... back to the LORD. He also established a judicial system in accordance with the Mosaic Law (Deut. 16:18-20). This, along with his earlier dispersal of teachers throughout the land (17:7-9), showed Jehoshaphat's tremendous respect for the Scriptures. These actions also displayed his concern for his subjects and his desire to act faithfully as Jehovah's regent.

19:6-11 The king's exhortations were taken from the law (v. 10). He reinforced the Lord's original commands to those who would act as judges among His people. Since they were judging God's covenant people and since He was watching all that was done, the judges were to fear ... the Lord and "take heed." Judges were also appointed in the capital city of Jerusalem, where difficult cases could be brought. Amariah the chief priest was in charge of religious cases, and Zebadiah the head of the tribe of Judah was responsible to handle civil matters. The Levites served as officials.

20:1-6 A huge army from across the Dead Sea declared war on Judah. (Some Hebrew manuscripts read "Edom" for "Syria" in v. 2.[20]) Jehoshaphat was justifiably alarmed. He proclaimed a fast and called the people to the temple, where he prayed to the LORD. This is the third "king's prayer" in 2 Chronicles (see also Solomon's prayer, chap. 6, and Asa's prayer, 14:11).

20:7-13 Jehoshaphat reminded the Lord that the Jews were His covenant people. The temple, where Jehoshaphat was praying, was God's sanctuary and the place where He promised to hear and answer prayer. Those to whom Israel had once shown kindness were now coming to destroy her and take away her land. Jehoshaphat closed his impassioned appeal, and with all Judah ... stood before the LORD, awaiting His answer.

20:14-17 The Spirit of the LORD spoke through Jahaziel, dispelling the fear that had gripped the nation. The battle was God's; the people had only to go out the next day and see what He had done.

20:18-21 By faith the people rejoiced in their victory even before it came to pass. The next morning they were up at dawn to see what the LORD had done. They marched to the battlefield as though they were going to a festival, the singers leading the way.

20:22-30 God confounded the enemy when He heard His people singing their song of faith. He stirred up the opposition so that they fought and destroyed one another. When Judah arrived, the only thing left to do was to collect the spoil, a task requiring three days. With unbounded joy they praised the LORD and returned to Jerusalem singing. The neighboring countries took notice, and Judah enjoyed peace.

20:31-34 As is customary, a summary of the reign of Jehoshaphat is given. Despite his efforts he was unable to stamp out idolatry. But on the whole his had been a good reign. He sought to do good and, even though he was not perfect, he usually did what was right in God's sight.

20:35-37 This is a postscript concerning Jehoshaphat's partnership with Ahaziah, the wicked king of Israel. They made ... ships at Ezion Geber to travel to Tarshish, but the LORD wrecked the project, as announced by a prophet named Eliezer.

Jehoshaphat was sixty years old when he died. His son Jehoram, who had been his co-regent, succeeded him on the throne of Judah (21:1).

E. King Jehoram (Chap. 21)

21:1-3 Beginning with the reign of Jehoram, the history recorded in 2 Chronicles is downhill all the way, ending in calamity and captivity.

Two Azariahs are listed in verse 2 as brothers of Jehoram. The NKJV uses the alternative spelling of one (Azaryahu).

21:4-6 Judah's fifth king chose to walk in the way of the kings of Israel instead of in the way of David. Jehoram was a murderer and an idolater. He ruthlessly killed all his own brothers to strengthen his hold on the throne. Scripture leaves us in no doubt as to the evil influence that caused Jehoram to act so wickedly: His wife was Ahab's daughter (v. 6). Earlier Jehoshaphat had arranged the marriage between the two kingdoms, and now Judah was infected with the same wickedness that was ruining Israel. Ahab's daughter Athaliah was a tool in Satan's hands to bring judgment on God's people.

21:7 But the LORD remembered the Davidic covenant and so He did not deal as sternly with Jehoram and Judah as He had dealt with Ahab and Israel. ("A lamp" means a descendant to serve as king.) Still, Judah was to suffer much because of this unholy union.

21:8-15 The Edomites, who had feared Judah during the days of Jehoshaphat (17:10), now revolted. Libnah, a city in Judah, also rebelled. Jehoram made matters worse by leading his people further and further into idolatry. Even the prophecy of Elijah, contained in a letter to the king, failed to turn him from his course of evil. Jehoram certainly knew of the prophet's powerful ministry in Israel, but he proved as unresponsive to it as Ahab had been.

Elijah was taken to heaven sometime during the reign of Jehoshaphat (2 Kgs. 2:11). Since Jehoram reigned with his father for about five years, Elijah may have been alive when this message was delivered. Or the prophet might have written the letter by divine instruction and given it to Elisha to deliver at the appropriate time.

21:16, 17 The Philistines and the Arabians carried away Jehoram's possessions and his family, except Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons

(usually called Ahaziah). Since he had murdered his father's family this punishment would seem to fit his own crime.

21:18-20 Jehoram died in severe pain from an incurable disease of the intestines. He departed this life to no one's sorrow. Since he had not walked as the other kings had in life, he was not buried with them in death.

F. King Ahaziah (22:1-9)

22:1-9 The trouble caused by association with the house of Ahab now reached to the third generation. Ahaziah (same as Jehoahaz, 21:17, and Azariah, v. 6) became king after Jehoram's death. He was twenty-two[21] (NKJV marg.) years old at the time.

His mother, Athaliah, a granddaughter of Omri, continued her pernicious influence in Judah after the death of her husband. She was her son's chief counselor to do evil—"to his destruction." Ahaziah had been spared (v. 1) so as to leave a son of David on the throne, but he proved himself ungrateful by repeating his father's sins. He joined with Jehoram (Joram) to war against ... Syria. Jehu and his men found Ahaziah hiding in Samaria and killed him. The king's servants gave him a decent burial (2 Kgs. 9:28) because he was a grandson of the godly Jehoshaphat. Ahaziah left no son old enough to carry on the kingdom.

G. Usurpation of Queen Athaliah (22:10-23:21)

22:10-12 Having lost her husband and now her son, Athaliah seized the throne for herself by killing her own grandchildren! Satan was the unseen motivator behind this ruthless slaughter of the royal family, attempting to cut off the messianic line as he had tried to do earlier and would try to do again. But since the promise of Genesis 3:15 guaranteed the Lord's preserving the line through which the Lord Jesus would eventually come, Jehovah moved Jehoshabeath to hide her nephew Joash. He was hidden in the temple, where Jehoshabeath's husband, Jehoiada the priest, took care of him for six years.

Second Kings 8-11 gives more details concerning these events and also relates what was going on in Israel at the same time.

23:1-7 Until he felt that Joash was old enough, Jehoiada had to bide his time while the usurper sat on David's throne. But in the seventh year he called together the princes and Levites and plotted Athaliah's overthrow. Word went out throughout the kingdom and many entered into a covenant to set Joash on his father's throne. The words in verse 6b "all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD" mean that they were to observe the law forbidding entrance into the temple (see v. 6a). The Levites and princes were given their assignments, and a Sabbath was chosen as the fateful day.

23:8-11 As new divisions came to the temple, the old divisions were not dismissed; thus Jehoiada was able to gather a large number of men without drawing suspicion. The men were equipped with David's weapons, which were in the temple, and when all the preparations were complete, seven-year-old Joash was brought out of the temple and crowned. He was given a copy of the law (the Testimony) in accordance with the word of Moses (Deut. 17:18-20). Some think this was the original copy of the law which had been placed in the ark (Ex. 25:21; 2 Chron. 5:10).

23:12-15 Queen Athaliah came to the people in the temple to investigate the cheering and shouting, only to find a child rival she thought long dead now wearing a royal crown. But what must have alarmed her even more was the realization that the people were solidly behind him. No one listened to her charge of treason. After all, she was the usurper, not Joash. Jehoiada ordered her killed, but not inside the temple. She was taken to the Horse Gate, where she was put to death for the atrocities she had committed in Judah.

23:16-19 With Athaliah out of the way, reform was swift. Jehoiada and the people covenanted to be the LORD's. To demonstrate their commitment, they destroyed the temple of Baal and killed Mattan, the priest of Baal. As a priest, Jehoiada was sensitive concerning the temple and divine worship. One of the first things he did was to set the temple service in order, as had been commanded by Moses and David. The Levites and priests were assigned to their duties. The holiness of the temple was no longer to be treated as a light thing; gatekeepers were to keep out ceremonially unclean people. Jehoiada knew that reform must begin in the house of the LORD.

23:20, 21 Joash was taken to the king's house. The people looked forward with expectancy to life under Joash, thankful that a son of David sat on Judah's throne once more.

H. King Joash (Chap. 24)

24:1-3 Joash was only seven years old when he became king, and he reigned forty years. Joash did what was right as long as Jehoiada the priest was alive. Even Joash's two wives were chosen for him by this influential priest of God.

24:4-14 In order to restore the temple, Joash ordered the Levites to expedite the collection of funds from all Israel. When the Levites failed to respond quickly, he became upset with Jehoiada. Finally a special chest was set before the temple, and the people were commanded to come and deposit their "temple tax."[22] This was then taken and distributed to the workmen who restored the house of God to its original condition and reinforced it.[23]

24:15-19 When Jehoiada ... died, after a long and fruitful life, he was honored by being buried with the kings, an unusual honor for one who was not of royalty. But with his godly influence gone, Joash turned to idolaters for advice, to the ruin of his kingdom. Jehovah sent prophets to warn him, but rather than repent, the leader of Judah rebelled.

24:20-27 Zechariah spoke God's warning to the people, and the king ordered him stoned for it. Joash ... did not remember the kindness which Jehoiada, the father (or grandfather) of Zechariah,[24] had done to him. Perhaps in answer to Zechariah's dying prayer, the Lord sent a small ... army from Syria to plunder Judah and to slay the officials and princes. Those who had given wicked counsel to Joash were killed, and Joash himself, severely wounded, was then murdered by his own servants. Like wicked Jehoram before him, he was denied burial with the kings of Judah.

Because Joash forsook the Lord in the latter part of his life, all that he had done earlier was for nothing. He had repaired the temple and had refurnished it, only to hand over its treasures to Hazael the Syrian (2 Kgs. 12:17, 18). It is good to start well, but it is far more important to finish well. The Apostle John, knowing the tendency people have to "fade in the stretch," warns us to "Look to yourselves, that we do not lose those things we worked for, but that we may receive a full reward" (2 John 8).

Second Kings 12 gives more details about the life and reign of Joash (there called Jehoash); see comments on that chapter.

I. King Amaziah (Chap. 25)

25:1-10 After establishing his throne and dealing with his father's murderers according to the law, Amaziah turned his attention to foreign affairs. The Edomites had rebelled against Judah during the reign of Jehoram (21:10), and now perhaps Amaziah wanted to bring them back under his rule. So he ... hired mercenaries from Israel. However, after being warned by a man of God, he sent the Israelites home. Although he was concerned about losing the money he had already paid the mercenaries, he accepted the prophet's assurance that the LORD was able to give him much more to make up for his foolish investment.

25:11-13 Amaziah and his men killed ten thousand Edomites, then took ten thousand others captive, only to kill them later by hurling them over a precipice. The latter victims may have been guilty of unusual cruelty, or Amaziah may have been following an accepted wartime policy of that day. The mercenaries whom Amaziah had sent home to Ephraim angrily raided the cities of Judah, killing three thousand people and taking much spoil.

25:14-21 When Amaziah began worshiping idols which he had brought back from Edom, a prophet reproved him for thinking that gods which could not deliver their own people could help him! Amaziah interrupted the prophet with a threat, perhaps a veiled allusion to Zechariah, who had lost his life by prophesying against Amaziah's father (24:20-22). The prophet responded to the king's warning by saying in effect, "I am not going to be struck down. Since you have refused my advice, you are the one who is going to be destroyed." Amaziah did not listen to God's counsel but instead asked advice of his own staff. Foolishly he made war with Joash of Israel, refusing to heed Joash's warning.

25:22-28 Judah was defeated and Amaziah was humiliated and impoverished. Jerusalem was invaded and the temple was pillaged. Amaziah's subjects conspired against him, and eventually he fled from Jerusalem. He was murdered in Lachish, then brought back to Jerusalem and buried.

J. King Uzziah (Chap. 26)

26:1-5 The reason for Uzziah's success is given early in the chapter. He did what was right and sought God. Zechariah (not the same as the Prophet Zechariah) was his godly counselor, a man of understanding.

26:6-15 Everywhere Uzziah turned, he was blessed. He warred successfully against the Philistines and the Ammonites, and he increased Judah's defenses as well. He assembled an elite army and built up a powerful armory to equip it. He also built cities and encouraged agricultural development (v. 10). The "devices" (v. 15) were a form of catapult.

26:16-23 But Uzziah was lifted up with pride. He entered the temple ... to burn incense before the LORD, something which only the priests were authorized to do. Azariah and eighty other priests, all valiant men, went in after the king. The priests' rebukes angered Uzziah, but before he could do anything the LORD struck him with leprosy. He was hurried ... out of the temple, to which he never returned. He remained a leper from that day on, living in an isolated house while Jotham his son ruled. Uzziah was not buried in the graves of the kings, because he was a leper; he was interred in the field adjacent to the royal graves.

K. King Jotham (Chap. 27)

27:1-4 Like his father Uzziah, Jotham enjoyed peace so that he was able to build and improve his capital and the surrounding cities. He followed his father's example, except in the matter of Uzziah's sin. However, the high places were not removed, and Jotham does not appear to have been much of a reformer. He did little to prevent his people from acting corruptly.

27:5-9 The Ammonites had been subdued by Uzziah (26:8), but perhaps his death prompted them to withhold their tribute. Jotham ... fought against them and they were forced to pay tribute once again. His strength lay in the fact that he considered God in all he did. They buried Jotham in the city of David and Ahaz his son became Judah's next king.

L. King Ahaz (Chap. 28)

28:1-4 To get the full story of Ahaz, one should read 2 Kings 16 and Isaiah 7. He was the most wicked king that Judah had yet known, reigning sixteen years in Jerusalem.[25]

After Ahaz became king, he wasted no time plunging into idolatry. He chose the evil kings of Israel as his pattern instead of David. Ahaz revived the abominable ritual of child sacrifice in the valley of the Son of Hinnom, outside Jerusalem. The worship of Molech, of which this was a part, had not been practiced since the days of Solomon (1 Kgs. 11:7), but now all forms of idolatry and abominations were widely practiced and encouraged.

28:5-8 Because of this the LORD brought many adversaries against Judah. Isaiah tells us that Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, were allies against Jerusalem. They did not succeed in overthrowing the capital city but they did great damage to Judah. The Israelites killed one hundred and twenty thousand ... men ... in one day and carried off two hundred thousand people captive. Many noblemen were slain at this time. It was when Ahaz was threatened by Rezin and Pekah that God in grace gave to the house of Israel through him the promise of the virgin-born Immanuel (Isa. 7:14).

28:9-15 The Israelites intended to enslave their brethren from Judah, which was forbidden in the Law of Moses, but the Lord sent a prophet to warn them not to do so, for the fierce wrath of the LORD was against them. True, Israel had been God's instrument of judgment, but their cruelty had been unwarranted. Some of the heads of Ephraim had enough sense to heed Oded the prophet and secure the release of the captives, who were then fully equipped and fed from the spoil, and returned to their land.

28:16-27 At this same time King Ahaz was also troubled by those nations which his fathers had subdued, Edom and Philistia. But rather than turn to the Lord in his extremity, Ahaz turned to the king of Assyria, Tiglath-Pileser. He hired the Assyrians with gold from the temple and the king's house. The king of Assyria then attacked Syria and killed Rezin in Damascus (2 Kgs. 16:9). When Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-Pileser, he became enamored with the gods of the Syrians (2 Kgs. 16:8-10). Ahaz's alliance with the king of Assyria proved costly, since Assyria deceived him and exacted heavy tribute. But his alliance with the idols of Syria proved fatal because it provoked Jehovah to great anger. King Ahaz established idolatry so strongly in Judah that not even good Hezekiah, his son, would be able to root it out. When Ahaz died, he was not ... buried in the tombs of the kings.[26] Ahaz is called the king of Israel in verse 19. Sometimes the kings of Judah were given this name (see 2 Chron. 21:2).

M. King Hezekiah (Chaps. 29-32)

29:1-11 The Bible accords several chapters to Hezekiah's reign. Three chapters are devoted to him in 2 Kings (18-20), four in the Book of Isaiah (36-39), and four here. Second Chronicles mentions primarily his religious dealings while 2 Kings relates more of his political and foreign accomplishments. Both books bring out his outstanding character and devotion to the Lord.

Hezekiah started his reformation with the religious leaders. He called together the priests and Levites and ordered them to consecrate themselves and the temple. Because of unfaithfulness on the part of their fathers, the wrath of the LORD was on the land and many people had already been slain or taken captive. The king wanted to get right with God, and he urged the priests and Levites to do the same.

29:12-24 The Levites listed by name in verses 12-14 led their brothers in obeying the king's command. They cleansed (v. 18) the courts for eight days, then the temple itself for eight days (v. 17). They set the utensils in order for temple-service, then informed King Hezekiah that all had been carried out according to his word. Hezekiah offered a sin-offering on behalf of the kingdom. The blood from the sin and burnt offerings was used to purge the altar.

29:25-36 The priests and Levites were stationed in their places as appointed in the time of David, and they sang and played the holy instruments while the burnt offering was being offered. All those present bowed in worship along with the Levites, and those who were so inclined brought burnt and thank offerings. So much was brought for this freewill gift that the Levites had to help the priests slaughter the animals because not enough priests had sanctified themselves. The people rejoiced because of the suddenness of the revival and because it produced a glimmer of hope for a better future for Judah. But this was only the beginning of Hezekiah's reforms.

30:1-5 Chapter 30 is wholly taken up with Hezekiah's reinstatement of the Passover Feast, which had not been observed in such fashion since before the kingdom was divided (2 Chron. 8:13).

In the first month the king had purified the temple and reestablished its services. In the second month he prepared to keep the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. According to Numbers 9:11, the Passover could be celebrated in the second month if a dead corpse resulted in somebody's uncleanness, or if they were far away on a journey. In Hezekiah's case, observance during the first month, the regular time, was not possible because a sufficient number of priests had not consecrated themselves (v. 3). Since it was a national feast, the whole nation must be invited. So messengers were sent throughout Judah and Israel to ask the people to come to Jerusalem. Israel was an Assyrian province at this time, the bulk of the people having been taken into captivity. However, Hezekiah was able to invite the remaining Israelites without opposition from the Assyrians.

30:6-12 Most of the Israelites ridiculed the couriers who exhorted them to return to the LORD. However, a small remnant did repent and travel to Jerusalem to observe the Passover in the first year of Hezekiah's reign, 716-715 B.C. (2 Chron. 29:3).

30:13-15 The zeal of the people shamed the priests and ... Levites and awakened them to a more serious consideration of their duties. The city was cleansed of its heathen filth, and every vestige of idolatry was thrown into the Brook Kidron.

30:16-27 The Levites aided those who were ceremonially unclean and Hezekiah prayed that the Lord would overlook the irregularities and accept the heart attitude of the people. And the LORD did. The Feast of Unleavened Bread was such a joy to all that they decided to celebrate an extra seven days. The king and the leaders contributed animals for this extended feast and there was great joy in Jerusalem. The whole assembly was blessed; things were as they had been in Israel's golden age, and once more the prayers of Jehovah's priests were heard in heaven.

31:1 The first verse of chapter 31 is linked to the closing verse of the previous chapter. When the men of Israel left Jerusalem, they thoroughly destroyed the idols and idol shrines in Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh, then ... returned to their homes.

31:2-10 Hezekiah now appointed the priests and the Levites ... to their respective duties, then provided for their support through tithes. The people responded so generously that there was enough to eat and plenty left.

31:11-19 Special rooms had to be set aside in the temple to store the surplus, and capable men were appointed as overseers. These are listed by name, showing how God takes note of each individual who serves His cause.

While the principle of tithing (giving one-tenth) is not commanded in the NT, the practice of systematic, proportionate giving is taught.

31:20, 21 Chapter 31 closes with a commendation of Hezekiah. Whatever he did for God, he did ... with all his heart. No wonder he prospered!

32:1-8 Having carried the northern tribes into captivity (2 Kgs. 17), the Assyrians were now threatening to do the same to Judah. Hezekiah, who had earlier paid tribute to Sennacherib (2 Kgs. 18:13-16), was hard-pressed by the Assyrians to surrender his kingdom as well.

When Sennacherib invaded Judah, Hezekiah responded by cutting off the water supply outside the city, rebuilding and repairing the wall of Jerusalem, providing weapons and officers, and encouraging the people to look to Jehovah instead of fearing the army of the Assyrians. G. Campbell Morgan writes:

> It would seem to be a strange answer of God to the faithfulness of His servant that a strong foe should at this moment invade the kingdom. The story needs more details than are found in this record. They may be found in 2 Kings 18:7-16. From that passage we find that Hezekiah had flung off the yoke of the king of Assyria which his father Ahaz had consented to wear. Then Sennacherib had invaded Judah; and in a moment of weakness Hezekiah had paid him a heavy tribute, and again yielded to his rule in order to buy him off. The result was not what he desired, for Sennacherib now demanded an unconditional surrender. In this hour of crisis, resulting from his own vacillation, his faith and courage were renewed. He took immediate action to embarrass the foe by stopping the supply of water, by strengthening the fortifications, by mobilizing his army, and finally by assuring the people: "There is a Greater with us than with him."[27]

32:9-19 While besieging Lachish, the king of Assyria taunted Hezekiah and the people, implying that Jehovah was no more powerful than the other gods he had already conquered, and suggesting that the wise thing to do was to stop listening to Hezekiah and to surrender. Verse 12 shows that even the Assyrians had heard about Hezekiah's reforms. But Sennacherib had not counted on two things: the loyalty of the people to King Hezekiah and the power of Jehovah.

32:20-23 After Sennacherib derided the Lord, Hezekiah and ... Isaiah devoted themselves to prayer, and the LORD sent an angel who cut down the Assyrian army. Sennacherib returned home in humiliation and was later murdered by his own sons in the temple of his god.

32:24-26 Hezekiah's illness and recovery probably took place before the siege of Sennacherib. In his sickness he called on the LORD and was promised an extension of life, confirmed by a sign in which the sun seemed to go backward. When he failed to respond properly to this mercy, the Lord was angry with him, but because he humbled himself the punishment did not come upon Judah until after his death.

32:27-30 Special mention is made of his riches and honor, and of the tunnel he built to bring water from a spring in the Kidron Valley to a reservoir inside Jerusalem. (See 2 Kings 20:20 for more details on this water tunnel.)

32:31 Ambassadors came from Babylon, intrigued by the celestial wonder that God had given Hezekiah. They would be especially interested in this since they worshiped the sun and stars. The king foolishly showed them his treasures, arousing their desire to possess them, a desire that was soon to be fulfilled.

32:32, 33 The rest of the acts of Hezekiah ... are written ... in Isaiah. When Hezekiah died, he was buried with full honors. Manasseh his son reigned in his place.

N. King Manasseh (33:1-20)

33:1-11 In spite of having such a devout father, Manasseh had the most evil reign in Judah. It was also the longest, fifty-five years. The list of Manasseh's sins is also very lengthy. He polluted God's city and temple with his idols and revived the practice of burning children to Molech in the Valley of the Son of Hinnom. He was an inveterate murderer (2 Kgs. 21:16);

Josephus states that daily executions were ordered by him. Tradition says that he murdered Isaiah the prophet by having him sawn in two (the reference in Heb. 11:37 to being "sawn in two" may include this tradition). When Manasseh refused to listen to the LORD and turn from his wickedness, the LORD moved the king of Assyria to take him away to Babylon, which was then under Assyrian control.

33:12-20 Only 2 Chronicles mentions Manasseh's repentance (the reference in verse 18 is not to the canonical Books of Kings but to a lost secular chronicle). After serving every kind of detestable idol for years, Manasseh learned that the LORD is God, and he was converted. He did what he could to lead the people back to faithfulness to Jehovah and to purge idolatry from his realm. The high places mentioned in verse 17 were used for sacrificing to the LORD away from Jerusalem. This was forbidden by the law, but went on anyway.

O. King Amon (33:21-25)

After Manasseh's death his son did not follow his reforms but rather his earlier sins. Young King Amon lasted only two years before he was killed by his own servants in his own house. Then the people of the land executed Amon's killers and replaced him with his son Josiah.

P. King Josiah (Chaps. 34, 35)

34:1-7 The idolatrous altars which Manasseh had removed from the city (33:15) had been brought back by Amon and the people. In the eighth year of his reign the teenaged King Josiah ... began to seek the God of his father David. Four years later he started his reforms. Josiah made sure that the same mistake would not be made again, so he completely destroyed everything connected with idolatry and burned it or ground it to powder. He extended his reforms to the farthest reaches of Israel.

34:8-18 Like the great reformers before him, he soon turned his attention to repairing the temple. A copy of the Book of the Law was subsequently found and read ... before the king. Every major or minor revival of true faith has involved a rediscovery of the teaching of the Word of God. The great Reformation of the sixteenth century was no exception.

34:19-28 Josiah took its warnings seriously and sent to Huldah the prophetess to see if there was still a chance for mercy. Her words only confirmed that God's wrath was on the way. However, Josiah would be spared from seeing Judah's day of calamity because his heart was tender and he humbled himself and believed the Word of the Lord.

34:29-32 Even though Josiah knew that judgment was inevitable, he still gathered ... the people and entered into a covenant with the LORD. He set the Word of God before the people so that they might understand how grave their situation was and see the deep need for repentance.

34:33 Because of his strong leadership, he was able to promote fidelity to the LORD throughout his lifetime. The contents of verse 33 are treated in much greater detail in 2 Kings 23:4-20. The reform that followed the finding of the law and the making of the covenant was even more thorough than Josiah's first purge of his kingdom.

35:1-6 Like Hezekiah before him, Josiah encouraged the priests and Levites to carry out their appointed service. They were to put the holy ark back in the temple, organize themselves in their respective divisions, take up their station in the temple, and be cleansed and ready to celebrate the Passover. There are several suggestions as to why the ark had been removed from the temple, and was now to be returned. The priests may have carried it on their shoulders from place to place to protect it from being profaned. Manasseh or some other idolatrous king may have ordered it to be removed. Josiah may have had it removed elsewhere while the temple was being restored.

35:7-19 Since the land was impoverished by the Assyrians, Josiah provided most of the animals for the feast, with other leaders and priests providing what they could. The Mosaic ordinances for the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread were followed to the letter. Amid songs of praise, the king and the people celebrated the most notable Passover ... since the days of Samuel. It was not the largest or most elaborate, but it was the most pleasing to Jehovah, perhaps because of the quality of the worship. This Passover was held in the same year as the great temple restoration (v. 19; cf. 34:8ff).

35:20-24 Nothing is mentioned about the next thirteen years of Josiah's reign. When he was thirty-nine he went out to fight against Necho king of Egypt. The Egyptian army was on its way to fight alongside the Assyrians against the Babylonians (2 Kgs. 23:29). Josiah could not imagine that God's hand was behind Necho's movements and did not inquire of the Lord to see if the pharaoh's words were true. Although he disguised himself, he was killed in the battle.[28] His people greatly mourned his loss, and those who believed the Word of the Lord knew that with Josiah gone, divine wrath was imminent (34:22-28).

John Whitcomb comments on these events.

> Now came one of the strangest episodes in Old Testament history. The heathen king, Necho II of Egypt, informed Josiah that "God hath commanded me to make haste" and that if Josiah interfered with God's plan, God would destroy him (2 Chron. 35:21). We would immediately dismiss such a statement as propaganda, of course, were it not for the explanation by the Chronicler that Josiah "hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God"! Furthermore, Necho must be believed, for Josiah was killed. What does this mean? Did Josiah lose his salvation because of disobedience? No, for Huldah had said he would die "in peace" (2 Chron. 34:28). Was Pharaoh-necho a prophet of Jehovah? No, for God had spoken to pagan kings directly at various times without necessarily transforming their hearts (see Gen. 12:17-20; 20:3-7). We may conclude that God wanted to maneuver the Egyptian army to the Euphrates so that Nebuchadnezzar could destroy it as well as the Assyrian army, and thus fulfill His warning that the Babylonians would conquer and chasten Judah (see Jer. 25:8-11).[29]

35:25-27 Jeremiah ... lamented Josiah's death. The singers remembered him even after the captivity. Josiah was a man of one Book; he lived by the Law of the LORD, and his faithfulness is forever recorded in the Word of the Lord. In Jeremiah 22:16 we read, " 'He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well. Was not this knowing Me?' says the LORD." Josiah evidenced by his life that he knew God. He started early to seek the Lord (34:3) and carefully obeyed the subsequent light he received. "Now before him there was no king like him, who turned to the LORD with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the Law of Moses; nor after him did any rise like him" (2 Kgs. 23:25).

Q. King Jehoahaz (36:1-3)

The captivity of Judah took place in stages. In 605 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar entered Jerusalem, made Jehoiakim a vassal, and took captives to Babylon, including Daniel (2 Kgs. 24:1). In 597 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar again invaded Jerusalem, deported Jehoiachin, and took additional captives, including Ezekiel (2 Kgs. 24:10). Finally, in 586 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the temple and took captive all but the poorest of the people (2 Kgs. 25:1-10).

Jehoahaz ... reigned only three months, then was deposed by the Egyptian king and forced to pay heavy tribute. He was an evil man, not at all like his father Josiah (cf. 2 Kgs. 23:31-34). He was taken to Egypt, where he died.

R. King Jehoiakim (36:4-8)

Eliakim, also called Jehoiakim, was Jehoahaz's older brother. He was placed on the throne by Necho. His eleven-year reign was characterized by wickedness and was ended by Nebuchadnezzar, who looted the temple in 605 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar intended to carry Jehoiakim to Babylon but did not succeed. Although Chronicles does not record the fact, we know that he died ignominiously while still in Jerusalem, as Jeremiah had prophesied (Jer. 22:19; 36:30).

S. King Jehoiachin (36:9, 10)

Jehoiachin was eighteen (NKJV marg.[30]) when he became king. After a short reign of three months and ten days, Jehoiachin surrendered Jerusalem and spent the next thirty-seven years of his life in prison in Babylon. After the death of Nebuchadnezzar, he was released and elevated to a place of honor (2 Kgs. 25:27-30).

T. King Zedekiah (36:11-19)

Zedekiah, whose other name was Mattaniah, was yet another son of Josiah. When Jehoiachin proved unfaithful to the Babylonians, they chose Zedekiah as his successor. He did evil and refused to humble himself before Jeremiah the prophet. He also broke his oath to Nebuchadnezzar and rebelled. Jerusalem underwent a terrible siege lasting eighteen months. When the Chaldeans (Babylonians) took the city in 586 B.C., they destroyed it and the temple. Then they took all but the poorest of the land into exile.

IV. THE BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY (36:20, 21)

The Jewish people had refused to keep the sabbatic year for 490 years; now their land would keep an enforced Sabbath for seventy years. For different ways of computing the seventy-year captivity, see the Introduction to the Commentary on Ezra.

V. THE DECREE OF CYRUS (36:22, 23)

While the people of Judah were in captivity, Babylon was conquered by Medo-Persia. Seventy years after the captivity began, Cyrus, king of Persia, issued a proclamation permitting the Jews to return to their land.

It is noteworthy that in the Hebrew order of the OT books, Chronicles stands last. Instead of ending "with a curse" (Mal. 4:6), the Jewish Bible ends on this positive and encouraging note:

> Thus says Cyrus king of Persia: All the kingdoms of the earth the LORD God of heaven has given me. And He has commanded me to build Him a house at Jerusalem which is in Judah. Who is among you of all His people? May the LORD his God be with him, and let him go up!

EZRA

INTRODUCTION

"The Book of Ezra is a work of so simple a character as scarcely to require an 'Introduction' ... . It is a plain and straightforward account of one of the most important events in Jewish history—the return of the people of God from the Babylonian capitivity. ... Very little that is directly didactic occurs in it: the writer tells his story as plainly as he can, and leaves his story to teach its own lesson."

—George Rawlinson

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

At one point in history Ezra and Nehemiah were one book in the Hebrew Bible, but being separate books (as in modern Bibles) was no doubt even earlier because Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7 are virtually the same. Such a repetition would never occur in one book.

Ezra is spiritual, or religious history. It shows that a book which includes many documents from secular sources can by the Holy Spirit's selection and arrangement make them a part of the inspired record.

Of the 280 verses in Ezra we have the following most unusual breakdown for a Bible book:

11 verses: • registers

109 verses: • narrative

44 verses • letters

10 verses • prayer

3 verses • proclamation

3 verses • excerpt

280 total verses[1]

II. AUTHORSHIP

Although the book is anonymous, the inspired compilation of first person memoirs (see 7:27-9:15), genealogies, and documents is probably the work of Ezra. The official documents, logically enough, are in Aramaic, the official Gentile language used as a lingua franca during Ezra and Nehemiah's time. About one fourth of Ezra is in this language.[2] The beautiful form of the alphabet that we call "Hebrew" was actually borrowed from this semitic sister-tongue, Aramaic.

III. Date

Fifth century B.C. Jewish community living at Elephantine, on the Egyptian Nile, left behind papyri in Aramaic similar to that of Ezra and Nehemiah. This supports the traditional fifth century date of these books rather than the liberal notion of the era of Alexander the Great (about 330 B.C.).

Ezra is believed to have penned his book between the events at the end of chapter 10 (456 B.C.) and Nehemiah's arrival in Jerusalem (444 B.C.). The following chronological chart will aid in understanding the Books of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther:

CHRONOLOGY OF EZRA, NEHEMIAH, AND ESTHER

538 B.C. The decree of Cyrus to rebuild the temple.

538/7 B.C. Zerubbabel's expedition to Jerusalem.

536 B.C. Foundation of the temple laid.

535 B.C. Work on the temple halted.

520 B.C. Ministry of Haggai and Zechariah.

520 B.C. Decree of Darius to resume work on the temple.

IV. Background and Themes

As the Book of Ezra opens the Neo-Babylonian Empire is passing away and Jeremiah's prophecy of restoration of the Jews to their land is being fulfilled (Jer. 29:10-14).

In chapters 1-6 the first expedition back to Palestine takes place under Zerubbabel. The first thing the returned exiles do is to build the altar of burnt offering, followed by the house of the Lord. The latter goes up against much opposition from the enemies of God's people, but also with the encouragement of the Prophets Haggai and Zechariah.

Between chapters 6 and 7 there is a period of about fifty-eight years. During that era occur the dramatic story of Queen Esther in sacred history and the famous battles of Marathon, Thermopylae, and Salamis in secular history.[3]

Chapters 7-10 recount Ezra's journey to Jerusalem in about 458 B.C. with a commission from King Artaxerxes Longimanus. Ezra's personal attempts to reform the people are detailed in these chapters.

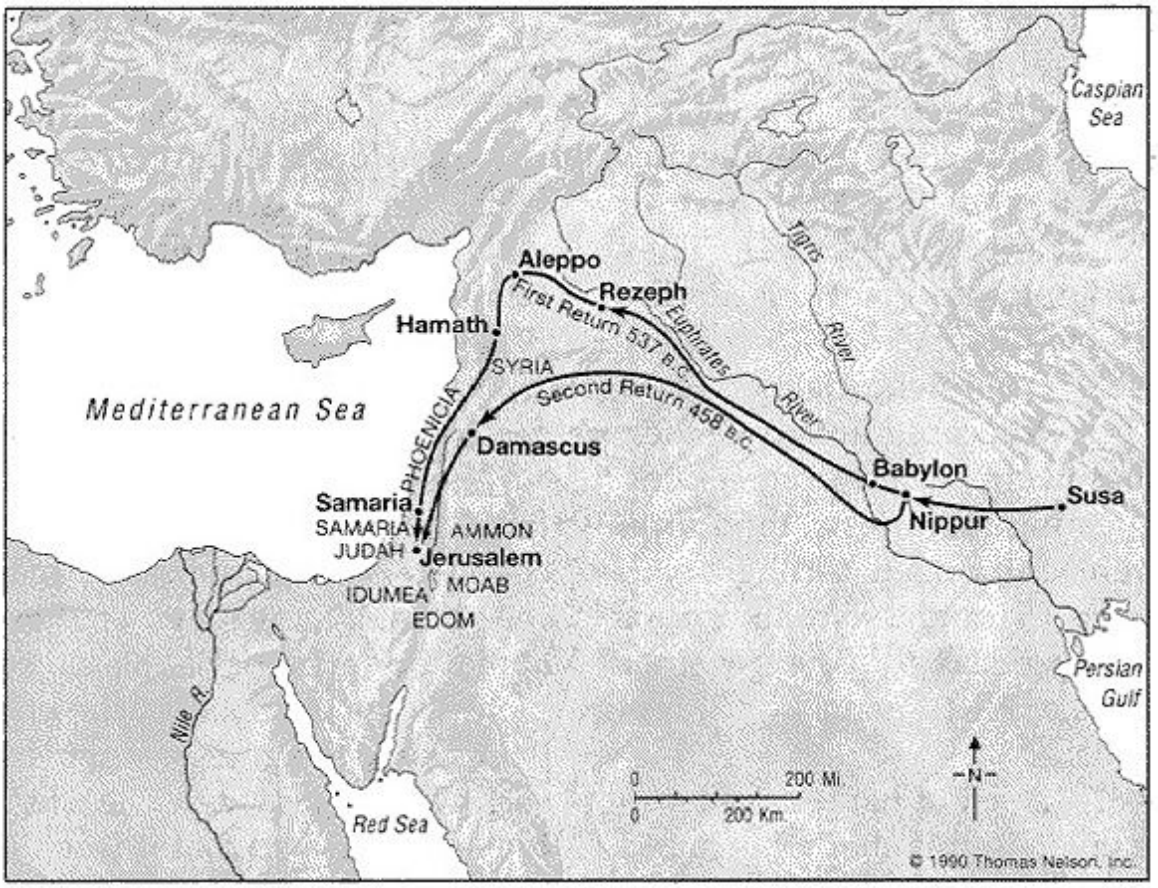
COMMENTARY

I. THE RETURN OF CAPTIVES TO JERUSALEM UNDER ZERUBBABEL (CHAPS. 1-6)

A. The Decree of Cyrus (1:1-4)

The first three verses duplicate the last two verses of 2 Chronicles. God used Cyrus, king of Persia, to issue a proclamation permitting the Jews to return to Judah and to rebuild the temple in Jerusalem. In addition, he commanded their neighbors to contribute generously to the returning remnant. Many years before his birth, Cyrus had been named by God and set apart for this high destiny (Isa. 44:28-45:13). He illustrates the truth of Proverbs 21:1: "The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, like the rivers of water; He turns it wherever He wishes."

The decree ended seventy years of captivity for the Jews. The seventy-year period can be calculated in two ways: from 605 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar attacked Jerusalem and led off the first deportation, to 535 B.C., when the foundation of the temple was laid; or from the fall of Jerusalem, in 586 B.C., to the completion of the temple, in 516 B.C.



The Return from Exile. When Cyrus the Persian captured Babylon in 539 B.C., the way was opened for captive Judah to begin the return to her homeland. Two major expeditions made the journey, one in 537 B.C. and another in 458 B.C.

B. Preparations and Provisions (1:5-11)

In addition to the wealth donated by the neighbors of the Jews, King Cyrus gave them five thousand four hundred vessels of gold and silver that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple in Jerusalem. Sheshbazzar (v. 8) may be the Persian name for Zerubbabel; he may be a totally different person. Notice the mention of twenty-nine knives in verse 9. If God cares for such details, how much more does He care for His people!

C. Register of Those Who Returned (Chap. 2)

2:1-58 In verses 1-61 we have a list of those who returned to ... Judah under Zerubbabel. Some are recorded according to parentage (vv. 3-19) and some according to hometown (vv. 20-35). Special mention is made of the priests (vv. 36-39), the Levites (vv. 40-42), and the Nethinim or temple-servants (vv. 43-54). They would occupy important roles in the reconstructed temple.

2:59-63 Some who claimed to be priests but who could not prove their genealogy were barred from serving or from eating the priests' food until they were authorized through consulting the Urim and Thummim, or "lights and perfections."[4] The governor (or Tirshatha, NKJV marg., v. 63) was Zerubbabel.

2:64-67 A list of names similar to the one given in this chapter is found in Nehemiah 7. While there are some minor differences in tabulations, both give the total number of Jews returning to Judah as forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty plus seven thousand three hundred and thirty-seven servants. Ezra adds 245 singers and Nehemiah adds 200. So the total of the returning remnant was about 50,000—a small fraction of those who had been carried away.

2:68-70 When the Jews reached Jerusalem, some of the heads of the fathers' houses contributed gold and silver for the construction of the house of God and garments for the priests. Then the people settled in their respective cities.

D. Construction of the Altar and the Temple Foundations (Chap. 3)

3:1-7 In the seventh month, which was the beginning of the civil year, the repatriated Jews gathered in Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles. Under the leadership of Jeshua[5] and Zerubbabel, they built an altar and offered burnt offerings, as required by the Law of Moses. They felt that by their honoring Jehovah He would protect them from their enemies. Then they moved ahead with preparations for building the temple, using help from Tyre and Sidon.

3:8-13 The actual construction began fourteen months after the return. As soon as the foundation ... was laid, the priests and Levites led in a service of dedication. But many of the old men ... wept when they compared the splendor of Solomon's temple with the plainness of the one now being built (Hag. 2:3). Their cries of sorrow mingled with the shouts of joy and praise so that it was difficult to distinguish them, and the sound was heard afar off.

E. Opposition to Rebuilding the Temple (Chap. 4)

1. In the Reign of Cyrus (4:1-5, 24)

4:1-3 The adversaries of Judah and Benjamin mentioned in verse 1 were descendants of colonists from other countries who had been planted in the land when Assyria took the northern kingdom into captivity. These colonists had intermarried with the Jews who remained in the land, and their offspring became known as Samaritans. They came to Zerubbabel and pretended that they wanted to assist in the rebuilding of the temple. They, too, worshiped Jehovah, but He was only one of many gods in their idolatrous system of religion. So their offer was refused by Israel's leaders.

4:4-5, 24 The Samaritans then changed their strategy. First they tried to discourage the people of Judah. Then they troubled them in building. They also hired counselors to lobby against Israel at the royal court to frustrate the Jews through the use of scare tactics. The work on the temple thus came to a halt.

Verse 24 follows verse 5 chronologically. The enemies of Judah succeeded in having work on the temple stopped until the second year of Darius's reign.

2. In the Reign of Ahasuerus (4:6)[6]

Verse 6 mentions a letter that was written during the reign of Ahasuerus, bringing an accusation against the Jews. Verses 7-23 describe another letter, written in the days of Artaxerxes, accusing the Jews of rebuilding the city and its walls as an act of rebellion. The king thereupon ordered the work to stop.

3. In the Reign of Artaxerxes (4:7-23)

The rebuilding of the temple was completed during the reign of Darius, who ruled before Ahasuerus (v. 6) and Artaxerxes (v. 7). Therefore, the letters described in verses 6-23 were written after the temple was rebuilt. They have to do with attempts to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, not the temple. But they are placed here, out of their chronological order, as further illustrations of attempts made to obstruct the work of the returned exiles.

From 4:6 to 6:8, the language used is Aramaic[7] instead of Hebrew. This was the language used by Persia in official decrees.

F. Haggai and Zechariah's Encouragement to Rebuild (5:1, 2)

From Haggai 1:1 and Zechariah 1:1 we learn that this chapter belongs to the second year of Darius's reign (v. 1, cf. 4:24). These two prophets urged the Israelites to resume work on the temple instead of building expensive houses for themselves (Hag. 1:4). Zerubbabel ... and Jeshua obeyed the Lord and ordered construction to begin immediately. Notice here that it was not by the power of the king's decree that the work was resumed, but by the power of the Holy Spirit speaking through the prophets of God (cf. Zech. 4:6).

G. Opposition During the Reign of Darius (5:3-17)

5:3-5 Opposition arose quickly. The Persian governor and his associates came to Jerusalem and asked what authority the Jews had to start building and what the names of the men were (see vv. 9, 10). They were given the names of the Jewish leaders. These Persian officials were more reasonable than those mentioned in chapter 4. They did not stop the work, but sent a letter ... to Darius to determine its legality. Because the Jews had started to obey God's word, His eye ... was upon them to fulfill it.

5:6-17 In their letter ... to Darius, Tattenai ... and Shethar-Boznai told of their conversation with the Jews and the latter's reply. The elders of the people first of all gave their divine authority. They were servants of the one true God, but they had been delivered up to the Babylonians because of their sins. Now that Jehovah had brought them back to their land, they were to rebuild His temple. As to human authority, they had the decree of Cyrus which gave them permission to rebuild the temple. Cyrus himself had contributed generously to the project. The governor requested that a search be made to determine if King Cyrus had made such a decree and asked Darius to notify him what action should be taken concerning this matter.

H. Completion of the Temple through a Favorable Decree of Darius (Chap. 6)

6:1-5 After diligent search, the decree of Cyrus was found in what used to be his capital city, Achmetha (or Ecbatana, NKJV marg.). (The edict was much more detailed than is summarized in chap. 1.) In it, the specifications of the temple were given along with an order to return all the gold and silver articles taken by Nebuchadnezzar.

6:6-12 Darius then spelled out to Tattenai and his colleagues their responsibilities toward the Jews. They were not to hinder the work but were to pay for the cost of the temple out of the royal treasury from collected taxes. Provisions for the temple service were to be supplied upon request of the priests (v. 9) so that the Jews might find favor in the eyes of God and hence be effectual in their prayers for the ... king and his family. Darius put some teeth into his edict by making it a capital offense to hinder the work. He called on God to deal with anyone, kings included, who might try to destroy this house of God in the future.

6:13-15 The king's orders were quickly obeyed and the work on the temple surged ahead. With encouragement from God's prophets and provisions from Darius's treasury, the temple was completed four years later, but nineteen or twenty years after the laying of the foundation. Artaxerxes actually lived later; he contributed to the maintenance of the temple, not to its building.

6:16 The Israelites and their leaders celebrated the dedication of the temple with joy. Dennett observes:

> It was but natural that they should rejoice at such a moment, for the house of their God was the expression of all the blessings of the covenant in which they stood. And at length, after weary years of failure, difficulties, disappointments, and sorrow, it stood completed before their eyes. It was for this that they had been brought up out of Babylon, and if any of them had sown in tears they now reaped in joy.[8]

6:17-22 They offered sacrifices. If we compare this dedication with Solomon's—22,000 oxen and 120,000 sheep plus innumerable oxen and sheep sacrificed before the ark (2 Chron. 7:5; 5:6), it pales into a poor and feeble event. Fortunately, they did not dwell on this.

Today in many churches, fellowships, denominations, schools, and even whole countries of Christendom, a comparison not unlike the decline from Solomon's time to Ezra's is apparent. Dennett has an encouraging application that is worth quoting at length:

> Faith, however, has to do with unseen things, and it could thus recall to the mind of this feeble remnant that Jehovah was no less mighty and no less merciful for them than for Solomon.
> The house might be less glorious, and they themselves but poor subjects of a Gentile monarch, but if God was for them, as He was, the resources available to faith were as unbounded as ever. This truth cannot be too deeply impressed on our minds, that Christ remains the same for His people in a day of difficulty as in a season of prosperity. To be in the power of this raises us, as nothing else can, above our circumstances, and gives us courage to press on, whatever the perils of the path.[9]

Afterward the Passover was observed and the Feast of Unleavened Bread was kept ... with great joy, for the people clearly saw God's hand behind the favors they had obtained from Darius. Darius is called the king of Assyria here because he was ruling over the old Assyrian empire.

II. THE RETURN OF CAPTIVES UNDER EZRA (CHAPS. 7-10)

A. Generous Authorization by Artaxerxes (Chap. 7)

7:1-5 There is about a fifty-eight-year gap between chapters 6 and 7. (See the chart "CHRONOLOGY OF EZRA, NEHEMIAH, AND ESTHER" in the Introduction.) During that time Darius was succeeded by Ahasuerus (Xerxes). His reign covered the events recorded in the Book of Esther. After him, Artaxerxes (Longimanus), mentioned in verse 1, came to the throne.

A brief genealogy of Ezra is given in verses 1-5 to show his priestly ancestry. G. Campbell Morgan comments:

As messengers of the will of God, the scribes took the place of the prophets, with this difference: instead of receiving new revelations, they explained and applied the old. Of this new order Ezra was at once the founder and type. ... He was expert in exposition and application of the Law. The qualifications for such work are very clearly set out in the statement made concerning him in the tenth verse of this chapter. He "set his heart to seek ... to do ... to teach."[10]

7:6-10 Besides possessing a distinguished pedigree, Ezra was ... a skilled scribe in the Law of Moses. Certainly Ezra was a man of the Book and a living illustration of the first three verses of Psalm 1.[11] Because he meditated on the Law of the LORD day and night, he prospered in what he sought to do for God. Jehovah once more directed the heart of a heathen king to carry out

His counsels. A decree was issued which made possible a second return to Jerusalem, this one under Ezra.

7:11-26 King Artaxerxes of Persia granted sweeping powers to Ezra in this letter recorded here. Any Israelites who desired could accompany him to Jerusalem, where he was to inquire if everything was being done in accordance with the Law of Moses. Generous gifts had been donated by the king and his counselors. These, along with any temple vessels which were still left in ... Babylon, were committed to his charge. The gifts were to be used to maintain the temple services, and any surplus was to be distributed at Ezra's discretion. If that was not enough, silver, wheat, wine, oil, and salt were to be supplied without prescribed limit from the royal treasury. The last four items were essential ingredients in the Jewish sacrificial system. Those who served in the temple were granted exemption from taxes. Finally, the edict gave Ezra the political power to appoint magistrates and judges for the Jews living west of the Euphrates River. These judges were to teach and enforce the laws of ... God.

7:27, 28 In his thanksgiving prayer, Ezra blessed ... God for directing the king's heart to beautify the temple and humbly thanked Him for the enabling strength He gave to undertake such an important work. Encouraged by the Lord's hand on him, Ezra gathered chief men of Israel to go up with him to Jerusalem.[12]

B. Register of Those Who Returned (8:1-14)

8:1-14 This first paragraph lists those who went back to Jerusalem with Ezra from Babylon. Several from these same families had returned under Zerubbabel years earlier (chap. 2). Almost 1500 males made up this second expedition.

C. Account of the Trip to Jerusalem (8:15-36)

8:15-20 While stopped by the river near Ahava (location unknown), Ezra noticed that there were no Levites in his company, so he commissioned eleven of the leading brethren to go to Casiphia, where he evidently knew that some Levites had settled, to encourage the Levites and temple servants to join him. Thirty-eight Levites and two hundred and twenty Nethinim (servants) responded.

8:21-23 Before the Jews began their 900-mile journey, they camped at the river of Ahava, and there Ezra proclaimed a fast. He had previously testified of God's goodness and power to the king. To request a military escort now would be to deny his words by his actions. Instead he put his faith on the line, trusting in the God who delights to save those who lean hard on Him. He would not be disappointed. He answered their prayer.

8:24-34 The money and utensils that had been given to Ezra were weighed out to twelve of the leaders of the priests and twelve Levites. Since these things were holy (set apart for sacred use), they had to be kept by men who were holy. After a three- and-a-half-month trek, the entire party reached Jerusalem without incident. Upon arrival in Jerusalem the silver and the gold and the articles were weighed again and given to those in charge of the temple.

8:35, 36 The first order of business for the exiles was to offer burnt and sin offerings on Jehovah's altar for all Israel. When they had taken care of their spiritual obligations, they delivered the king's orders to his officials in the western provinces, who in turn supplied them accordingly.

D. Mixed Marriages and Ezra's Prayer of Confession (Chap. 9)

9:1, 2 Ezra had not been in Jerusalem long when some of the leaders approached him with the disturbing news that the rulers and the people were intermarrying with the heathen. This was one of the sins for which Israel had been punished in days past. The law was clear (Ex. 34:16; Deut. 7:3); God's people must be holy. He wants them to separate themselves from the world and every other form of evil.

9:3, 4 Ezra was astonished when he heard about these mixed marriages. He was plunged into deep mourning until the evening sacrifice. With robe torn and patches of hair missing from his head and beard, he sat in silence while others who feared the Lord gathered around him.

9:5-15 As the blood of the evening sacrifice was being poured out before Jehovah for the iniquities of the people, Ezra fell to his knees and lifted his voice in confession. Making the people's sin his own, he was humiliated that they had responded so wickedly to the grace which had preserved them as a remnant through past judgments and had given them a peg in His holy place (v. 8). This "peg" speaks of the security of anyone or anything that depends on God. Some, such as Ironside, believe that ultimately it refers to Christ Himself:

> The reference to the "nail" [peg, NKJV] is doubtless a recognition of Isaiah's prophecy of the "nail in a sure place," upon which Jehovah's glory was to hang, which is, in the full sense, Christ Himself (Isa. 22:21-25).[13]

The prophets had spoken clearly on mixed marriages, so the men were without excuse, especially in light of the recent favors God had granted them. "Here we are before You, in our guilt." There was nothing else to say.

E. The Jews' Covenant to Put Away Foreign Wives and Children (Chap. 10)

10:1-5 Ezra's prayer of confession caused the people to weep bitterly. Acting as a spokesman, Shechaniah confessed their guilt but reminded Ezra that there was yet hope, if their confession was followed by forsaking the unequal yoke. He suggested that Ezra lead them in making a covenant ... to put away the foreign wives and children. The priests, the Levites, and all Israel responded to this plea for national repentance and so they swore an oath.

10:6-8 All the exiles were summoned to gather at Jerusalem for a solemn time of public confession. Those who refused to come within three days and face the issues were threatened with loss of property and excommunication.

10:9-11 With only three days to respond to the command, all the men of Judah and Benjamin hurried to Jerusalem from the surrounding cities. Adverse weather did not deter them, for the matter to be settled was very grave and caused more consternation than did the rainy weather. Ezra spoke to the gathering, pointing out their transgressions.

10:12-17 All the assembly was quick to acknowledge that they had disobeyed God's law. But because of the heavy rain and the large number of cases involved, they suggested that the individual cases be examined city by city. Four men tried to oppose the plan but were unsuccessful. Judges were appointed, and in less than two weeks the inquiry began. Within three months the probe was complete.

10:18-44 Those indicted are listed in verses 18-43: priests first (vv. 18-22), then Levites (vv. 23, 24), and finally others of Israel (vv. 25-43). Verse 44 reads: All these had taken pagan wives, and some of them had wives by whom they had children. Though it is not stated, it is likely that adequate provision was made for the support of these wives and children. The sorrow created by the disruption of these families must be weighed against the importance of maintaining the solidarity of the nation destined to produce the Messiah.

The unequal yoke is still forbidden (2 Cor. 6:14-18). It should not be found among the children of God. But 1 Corinthians 7:12, 13 is the NT rule for those already bound to an unbeliever at conversion. Under grace, the believer is not required to put away the unbeliever or the children. The latter are set apart in a position of external privilege by the believer.

The Book of Ezra is a study in revival. When men read the Word of God and apply its truths to their lives, when intercessory prayers flow for the saints, and when there is confession and separation from known sin, there will be power in the church to do great things for God.

NEHEMIAH

INTRODUCTION

"More than half this book is a personal record, punctuated with 'asides' and frank comments which make it (in such parts) one of the liveliest pieces of writing in the Bible. Much of Ezra's story was also told in the first person (Ezra 8:15-9:15), but Ezra was a quieter personality than the formidable, practical Nehemiah; he does not leap out of the page as this man does."

—Derek Kidner

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

If you are having any sort of a building program and are having trouble getting people involved, Nehemiah is the book to read, study, teach, or preach. The leadership qualities needed to get a nearly impossible job done are wonderfully exemplified in this 5th century B.C. Hebrew leader.

Whitcomb writes:

> No portion of the Old Testament provides us with a greater incentive to dedicated, discerning zeal for the work of God than the book of Nehemiah. The example of Nehemiah's passion for the truth of God's Word—whatever the cost or consequences, is an example sorely needed in the present hour.[1]

II. AUTHORSHIP

Nehemiah, whose name appropriately means Jehovah consoles, writes his memoirs in the first person, but he also includes state documents to which he had access. The Elephantine papyri witness to the historical truth of the book, mentioning Johanan the high priest (see Neh. 12:22, 23) and the sons of Nehemiah's arch-foe, Sanballat.

All of this supports the traditional authorship by Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah and brother of Hanani (1:1, 2). We know little of Nehemiah's background, but he was probably born in Persia.

The tact, drive, and leadership qualities shown in this book are the type that would be demanded by Nehemiah's position as king's cupbearer, a very important position.

III. Date

Nehemiah probably wrote soon after the events recorded, or about 430 B.C. This would be during the reign of Artaxerxes I (464-424 B.C.).

Josephus says that Jaddua was high priest when Alexander the Great came through Palestine. Since Nehemiah 12:22 mentions a Jaddua, some use this to date the book later than Nehemiah's time. It may be that Jaddua was a very young man when Nehemiah mentioned him (because he was in the priestly line) and was about ninety in Alexander's time. Or, there may have been two high priests with this name. A third possibility is that Josephus, who often was wrong on his chronology of this era, was mistaken here as well!

IV. Background and Theme

Nehemiah was the third great leader in the Jewish restoration. Zerubbabel led the first group of exiles back to Jerusalem in 538-537 B.C. (Ezra 2) and supervised the building of the temple. Almost eighty years later, Ezra the scribe came to the holy city with a second group of Jews, bringing sweeping reforms through his ministry of God's Word. But in time things degenerated in Jerusalem.

Thirteen years after Ezra's expedition, Nehemiah was burdened by God about conditions in Jerusalem. After receiving permission to rectify the situation, he provided the kind of quality leadership the Israelites desperately needed. His roots were deep in God (notice the numerous references to his prayer life); this enabled him to weather the storm of opposition that buffeted him from the outset of his mission. It has been well said that "there are three kinds of people in the world—those who don't know what's happening, those who watch what's happening, and those who make things happen." Nehemiah was a man who made things happen. Whereas the book of Ezra deals with the temple and worship, Nehemiah deals with the walls and everyday work. The book of Nehemiah brings God into the everyday affairs of life.

COMMENTARY

I. NEHEMIAH'S FIRST VISIT: RESTORATION OF JERUSALEM (CHAPS. 1-12)

A. Consternation over Jerusalem's Condition (Chap. 1)

1:1-3 Little is given by way of introduction in this first chapter. We are told only two things about Nehemiah: his father's name was Hachaliah and he himself was the cupbearer to King Artaxerxes, a very influential position. His reaction to the news concerning Jerusalem shows that he was a man of spiritual character. Motyer comments:

> It is rather an uncertain time of history, but it seems very likely that some of the enthusiasm engendered by the mission of Ezra took a political or nationalistic direction; enthusiasm was so roused that it began to flow out into an unauthorized rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. Some of the enemies of God's people in the area reported this matter back to ... Artaxerxes, and he commanded that the building work should cease. The enemies of God capitalized on this by going up to Jerusalem with the royal mandate in their hands, causing the work to cease, and tearing down the city walls. It is very likely that it was the news of this action which came to Nehemiah.[2]

1:4-11 Nehemiah had a burden for the remnant in Judah. Even though he had not experienced their hardships, he identified with them, denying himself the luxuries of the palace in order to fast, mourn, and pray. He confessed their sins as his own and asked God to remember His Word and to be faithful in regathering His people as He had been righteous in scattering them. He also asked the Lord to grant him favor in the sight of the king, for a bold plan to aid his brethren was taking shape in his mind. For days he pleaded his case before the Most High.

Nehemiah is often used as an example of effective leadership. First, he had a vision of a goal to be achieved. After analyzing the problem, he decided on a proper course of action. Then he motivated others to share his vision and to become actively involved. Next we see him delegating authority and assigning tasks. He supervised the work and checked on performance until the project was satisfactorily completed.

B. Authorization for Jerusalem's Restoration (2:1-8)

2:1-3 It was three or four months before Nehemiah's faith was rewarded in a most unexpected way. One day when he was serving wine ... to the king, his face betrayed his sorrow of heart. The king's question brought on a wave of fear, for sadness was not allowed in the royal presence (Est. 4:2). Williams notes:

> Eastern monarchs being in daily dread of poison, any appearance of agitation in the cup-bearer would be regarded as especially suspicious.[3]

But Nehemiah meant no harm to the king. The cause of his sorrow was the desolation of Jerusalem, his ancestral home.

2:4, 5 Nehemiah's prayerful dependence upon the Lord was not in vain. Not only did the king give him what he requested, he also made him governor of Judah (5:14). Artaxerxes' decree fulfilled the word of the Lord to Daniel (Dan. 9:25), even as the earlier decree of Cyrus had fulfilled the prophecy of Jeremiah (Jer. 29:10; Ezra 1).

2:6-8 In answer to the king's question, Nehemiah told him how long he expected to be away. As it turned out, Nehemiah was away from Persia for at least twelve years (5:14). In all of this Nehemiah acknowledged the good hand of God upon him.

C. Reconstruction of Jerusalem's Wall (2:9-6:19)

1. Private Inspection and Public Opposition (2:9-20)

2:9-16 Along with the king's official letters, Artaxerxes sent an armed escort with Nehemiah. Shortly after he came to Jerusalem, the new governor surveyed his capital under cover of darkness in order to attract as little attention as possible and to keep his plans secret. He knew it was imperative that the walls be repaired if the city was to survive. At one place the rubble was so deep that his mount could not pass.

2:17-20 Later he called the leaders together, told them what needed to be done, and encouraged them by relating how the hand of the Lord had been with him so far, and also of the king's words. The Jews were excited and ready to begin. Their enemies, Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, scoffed and tried to stop the building project by raising the false cry of "rebellion against the king." But Nehemiah was not intimidated; the God of heaven had promised success. The people were united, and that is necessary if God is going to bless (Ps. 133:1-3).

2. The Workers and Their Work (Chap. 3)

The priests were the first to begin the task by repairing the Sheep Gate. This gate, located in the northeastern corner of the city, was so named because the sheep destined for the temple altar were brought through it. The gates are mentioned counterclockwise: the Sheep Gate (vv. 1, 2); the Fish Gate (vv. 3-5); the Old Gate (or Corner Gate) (vv. 6-12); the Valley Gate (v. 13); the Refuse (or Dung) Gate (v. 14); the Fountain Gate (vv. 15-25); the Water Gate (v. 26); the Horse Gate (v. 28); the East Gate (v. 29); and the Miphkad Gate (Inspection Gate, NASB) (v. 31). Verse 32 brings us back full circle to the Sheep Gate. Two other gates are mentioned in the book—the Gate of Ephraim (8:16) and the Prison Gate (Gate of the Guard, NASB) (12:39). There were twelve gates in all, even as there will be twelve gates in the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:12). It is significant that God keeps a careful record of all those who serve Him; this is seen in the listing of those who repaired the walls and gates.

The House of the Mighty (v. 16) may originally have been the headquarters for David's mighty men.

Men and women, artisans and laborers, princes and commoners, all labored side by side. There was only one case of disunity—the nobles of Tekoa shirked their responsibility (v. 5). Some who finished their assigned task took on an additional portion of the wall (cf. vv. 4 and 21; 5 and 27). God has given different work assignments to believers today. He has equipped us with various gifts and abilities appropriate to our calling, and He knows who is not really involved and who is doing double duty. "Each one's work will become clear; for the Day will declare it, because it will be revealed by fire; and the fire will test each one's work, of what sort it is" (1 Cor. 3:13).

3. External Hindrances and Special Precautions (Chap. 4)

4:1-6 When Sanballat and Tobiah ... mocked the early rebuilding efforts, Nehemiah responded by prayer and went on with the work. While the imprecatory language of verses 4 and 5 was acceptable in the Dispensation of Law, it would not be suitable for Christians in this Age of Grace (Rom. 12:19-21). Soon the wall reached half its intended height.

4:7-14 External pressure from the Arabs, the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites was not the only threat; at times the immensity of the job almost crushed the Jews. The seemingly unending piles of rubble sapped their strength and drive (v. 10). When their countrymen living outside Jerusalem warned of imminent attack, Nehemiah positioned men behind the lower parts of the wall and armed the workers, encouraging them to "Remember the Lord ... and fight."

4:15-23 With the element of surprise lost, Judah's enemies abandoned their plan for a direct attack. From that time on, half the Jews worked at construction, while the other half stood guard. Even the builders carried weapons. Nehemiah kept a trumpeter with him at all times to sound the alarm in case of attack and rally the men who were spread out along the wall. Those who came from outside the city were ordered to spend the night in Jerusalem so as to be readily available if needed. Their strategy was to pray, watch, and work. The people emulated the courage and resoluteness of their indomitable leader. Nehemiah, his relatives, his servants, and the Persian guard that accompanied him gave themselves no leisure as they kept vigil over the city.

4. Internal Problems and Social Reformation (Chaps. 5, 6)

5:1-7 In the midst of rebuilding, an ugly internal problem arose. Food was evidently scarce and expensive. Inflation, plus the ... tax burden placed on the Jews by the king, had reduced many of them to poverty. They were forced to borrow money from their wealthier brothers and to mortgage their property. Some even had to sell their sons and daughters as slaves. And since their land was owned by others, they were left without means to buy back the children. When they told Nehemiah of their sad plight, he called the wealthy to a solemn assembly and rebuked them.

5:8-10 Was it not inconsistent to drive their Jewish brethren ... into slavery when Nehemiah and others had been redeeming them from bondage to their heathen neighbors? Was it not imperative for their safety that they maintain a right relationship with God? How could they afford to alienate Jehovah by breaking His holy law by charging usury (vv. 9, 10; cf. Ex. 22:25)? Even as their leader, Nehemiah, had set an example by not charging interest on loans he made, should they not do the same?

5:11, 12 After Nehemiah urged the rich to return the property gained by usury and to restore a measure of the interest exacted on loans of money, grain, new wine, and oil, they promised to do so. The priests were called and they sealed their pledge with an oath.

5:13 A vivid warning was then given of what would happen to anyone who reneged. He would be shaken off the good land like the dust off a garment. With a hearty "Amen" the men left the meeting and performed their vow.

5:14-19 A short account of Nehemiah's twelve-year tenure as governor closes chapter 5. He supported himself rather than charge the people with his maintenance. He did not take advantage of his position to acquire land or feather his nest for the future. His time was devoted to making Jerusalem safe for his brothers, not to building his own personal fortune. He supplied his own table and welcomed strangers to share his hospitality. He did all this because he feared God. If God kept track of his sacrifices, that was sufficient for Nehemiah.

6:1-4 Having failed to obstruct the Jews by other means, the enemy next tried to destroy Nehemiah. Four times Sanballat and Geshem the Arab tried to get Nehemiah to leave his work and meet with them in the plain of Ono. Four times Nehemiah refused, knowing that they were plotting to do him harm. Such a great work must not be stopped.

6:5-9 Still pretending to be his ally, Sanballat accused Nehemiah in a letter of planning to make himself king of Judah in rebellion against the king of Persia. Sanballat said he wanted to help Nehemiah avoid trouble with the king and suggested that they get together to discuss the matter. But Nehemiah refused, knowing all too well that Sanballat did not have his best interests at heart. Besides, the slanderous charges were false. Nehemiah's loyalty spoke for itself.

6:10-14 It was no secret that Nehemiah was a devout man and one who feared the Word of the Lord. So false prophets were hired to trick him into sinning and incurring God's displeasure. A Jew named Shemaiah, who was a secret informer for the enemy, warned Nehemiah about a supposed plot on his life and suggested that the governor accompany him into the temple for safety. Nehemiah saw through the prophet's ruse. God's Word forbade any but the priests to enter the temple. Nehemiah would rather lose his life than violate the law. And so Sanballat's third scheme fell harmlessly to the ground.

Verses 9 and 14 are examples of the "arrow prayers"[4] that characterized Nehemiah's life (see also 2:4; 4:9; 5:19). He habitually turned to God in times of crisis. Matthew Henry comments:

> In the midst of his complaint of their malice, in endeavouring to frighten him, and so weaken his hands, he lifts up his heart to Heaven in this short prayer: Now therefore, O God! strengthen my hands. It is the great support and relief of good people that in all their straits and difficulties they have a good God to go to, from whom, by faith and prayer, they may fetch in grace to silence their fears and strengthen their hands when their enemies are endeavouring to fill them with fears and weaken their hands. When, in our Christian work and warfare, we are entering upon any particular services or conflicts, this is a good prayer for us to put up: "I have such a duty to do, such a temptation to grapple with; now therefore, O God! strengthen my hands."[5]

6:15-19 Despite continued opposition, the wall was completed in fifty-two days, a remarkable feat. This evidence of divine blessing demoralized Judah's enemies. One further grief Nehemiah endured while the walls were going up is added in verses 17-19. Many of the nobles in Jerusalem stayed on friendly terms with the wicked Tobiah because they were related to him by marriage. (Tobiah was governor of the Ammonites—2:10.) The nobles reported Nehemiah's words to Tobiah on the one hand and praised Tobiah in Nehemiah's hearing on the other. We meet Tobiah again in chapter 13.

Although it took only fifty-two days to finish the walls, Nehemiah had plenty of other duties to fill up his twelve or more years as governor.

D. Organization of Jerusalem's Guards (7:1-4)

7:1, 2 As soon as the walls and gates were finished and the gatekeepers, singers, and ... Levites were appointed to their posts, Nehemiah turned the charge of the city over to his brother Hanani and to Hananiah. Both were godly men, well-suited for the responsibility. Hananiah had a deep reverence for God, which made him of kindred spirit with Nehemiah.

7:3, 4 Instructions were given to insure Jerusalem's security. The gates were to be opened only during daylight hours, and guards were to be posted around the city, with each man serving by his own house. By faith Nehemiah had built the walls where they used to be, even though the enclosed area was too large for so few inhabitants.

E. Registration of Jerusalem's Population (7:5-73)

7:5, 6 As he planned to repopulate the city with those whose genealogy proved their descent as Jews, he found a register of those who had returned to Jerusalem and Judah under Zerubbabel.

7:7-65 This list in verses 7-65 is almost identical with the one given in Ezra 2. The duplication argues against the theory that Ezra and Nehemiah were originally one book, even if Jewish tradition put them together at one point.

7:66-69 In these verses we have a recapitulation of the whole assembly, besides the servants, singers, and animals used for transport.

7:70-72 Donors and their contributions to the work are listed. Verses 70-72 differ significantly from Ezra 2:68, 69. The accounts may refer to two different but overlapping collections. The governor's plan for Jerusalem was not fully carried out until chapter 11.

7:73 The chapter closes peacefully with the cities of the children of Israel populated and secure.

F. Revitalization of Jerusalem's Religion (Chaps. 8-10)

8:1-8 This important chapter tells of spiritual revival among God's people through the public reading of the Scriptures. Notice that Nehemiah is now referred to in the third person (until 12:31). Ezra is the main character in the next few chapters.

On the first day of the seventh month, the people gathered together for a holy convocation, the Feast of Trumpets (Lev. 23:24, 25), typifying the regathering of Israel from among the Gentile nations. Standing on a special platform and flanked by thirteen Levites, Ezra read from ... the Law of Moses for several hours. The people showed deep respect for God's Word as the Levites, mentioned in verse 7, helped them to understand (v. 8) what was being read. Since the Aramaic language replaced Hebrew after the captivity, it was necessary to explain many words of the Hebrew Scriptures.[6]

Today, many centuries later, in an entirely different culture and language, preachers and Bible teachers must explain a great deal more. Dr. Donald Campbell emphasizes the importance of this ministry:

Ezra and his helpers were the first in a long line of expository preachers who explained the Bible. This method of preaching has been blessed by God down through the centuries and continues to be an effective instrument for bringing Christians to spiritual maturity. Topical and textual preaching may often be inspiring and helpful but the spiritual benefits do not compare with those resulting from a preaching ministry like Ezra's. Blessed indeed are the believers who are privileged to sit under expository preaching of the Scriptures.[7]

8:9-12 The people's tears showed that the message was taken seriously (v. 9). They were right in taking the Word of God seriously, but they did not need to be overwhelmed by grief. The feast was not for weeping but for rejoicing. Only one occasion for mourning and fasting was found among Israel's feasts, and that was the Day of Atonement. The rest of the feasts were to be kept with joy and celebration. The fruit of the Spirit was to be visible: love, in sharing with the less fortunate; joy, in eating and drinking before the Lord; peace, in calming their fears and putting their hearts at rest. Their sadness was turned to joy, and the joy of the LORD was their strength.

8:13-15 The next day a special time for Bible study was held for the leaders, the priests, and the Levites. They discovered the ordinances concerning the Feast of Booths (Tabernacles), which was to be observed later that month.

8:16-18 This holiday foreshadowed the time when Israel would dwell securely in the Promised Land. They quickly made provisions to keep the feast, the first time it had been done by the entire assembly since the days of Joshua. (A partial observance of the feast had been kept by the first exiles who returned to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel—Ezra 3:4.) Booths were built on rooftops, in courtyards, and in the streets. Joy ran high as the Word of God was daily opened to hungry hearts. The feast lasted from the fifteenth through the twenty-second of the month.

9:1-3 After the feast the people assembled for a great day of national confession. They separated themselves from the foreigners in their midst and humbled themselves before the LORD. With fasting and mourning, they ... read the Scriptures for three hours. Then for three more hours, they confessed and worshiped. Confession is the road to revival.

9:4-38 Afterward the Levites mentioned in verses 4 and 5 led the people in a great prayer of confession (vv. 6-37) and dedication (v. 38). Some think Ezra led the prayer, although his name is not specifically mentioned. It is one of the longest prayer in the Bible, and its roots go deep into sacred history.

The overriding theme of the prayer is God's faithfulness despite Israel's waywardness. The prayer can be outlined as follows: creation (v. 6); the call of Abraham and the covenant God made ... with him (vv. 7, 8); the exodus from Egypt (vv. 9-12); the giving of the law at Mount Sinai (vv. 13, 14); God's miraculous provision during the wilderness journey (v. 15); Israel's frequent rebellions in the wilderness contrasted with God's unfailing kindness (vv. 16-21); the conquest of Canaan (vv. 22-25); the era of the judges (vv. 26-28); unheeded warnings and ultimate captivity (vv. 29-31); appeal for forgiveness and deliverance from the consequences of the captivity (vv. 32-37); the people's desire to make a ... covenant with God (v. 38).

Another way to outline the prayer is to follow its progress through the books of the Bible: vv. 6-8, Genesis; vv. 9-13, Exodus; v. 14, Leviticus; vv. 15-20, Numbers (except v. 18); vv. 21-23, Numbers and Deuteronomy; vv. 24, 25, Joshua; vv. 26-29, Judges; vv. 30-37, 1 Samuel through 2 Chronicles. That is biblical praying! Events are seen from God's point of view. His faithfulness is acknowledged throughout, and mercy and grace are recognized as the only foundation upon which the nation can stand.

In many ways the last verse (38) is the most significant part of the prayer. The Jews realized that the problem was with them, not with the Lord, and they determined to do something about it (see chap. 10 for the details of the covenant). Prayer and confession, important as they are, are no substitutes for obedience.

10:1-27 These verses list the men who signed the covenant on behalf of the people (9:38b). Nehemiah's name heads the list (v. 1), followed by the priests (vv. 2-8), the Levites (vv. 9-13), and the leaders of the people (vv. 14-27).

10:28, 29 These two verses form a preamble to the covenant, stating that the entire population agreed to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD their Lord, and His ordinances and His statutes.

10:30-38 More specifically, the Jews bound themselves to refrain from foreign marriages (v. 30), to observe the Sabbath day and the sabbatical year (v. 31), to make an annual contribution for the temple services (vv. 32, 33), to provide wood for the altar of the LORD (v. 34), and to bring the redemption money for their firstborn and the firstfruits of their crops to the temple for the support of the priests and Levites—i.e., to restore the tithes (vv. 35-39).

Concern for their religious life was central in this covenant. With the exception of verses 30 and 31, the covenant deals exclusively with the maintenance of the temple and its servants.

10:39 The words "we will not neglect the house of our God" expressed the overriding concern of the postexilic Jews. Out of this genuine care for the externals of their faith would grow the corrupt pharisaical system which so violently opposed the Lord Jesus because He stressed the weightier issues of the law—obedience, mercy, etc. But in its original innocence such devotion must certainly have pleased Jehovah.

G. Repopulation of Jerusalem's Precincts (Chap. 11)

11:1, 2 Chapter 11 is closely related to the last verse of chapter 7. Nehemiah was concerned about the sparse population in Jerusalem; more people should have been living there to defend the city in case of attack. But fear kept many Jews in the country. Finally, lots were cast to bring in one out of every ten residents of the small towns to dwell in Jerusalem. Others who volunteered joined them in the city.

11:3-36 Having been enrolled earlier (chap. 7), the families living in Jerusalem are named here (vv. 3-24). There were four hundred and sixty-eight men of Judah, each the head of a household (vv. 4-6). The Benjamites were nine hundred and twenty-eight families strong (vv. 7, 8); Joel ... and Judah were their overseers (v. 9). Three divisions of priests are listed in verses 10-14; Zabdiel was their leader. The Levites in the holy city[8] numbered four hundred and fifty-six, one hundred and seventy-two of them being gatekeepers (vv. 15-19). The temple servants, under Ziha and Gishpa, lived in Ophel, a section of Jerusalem close to the temple (v. 21). A man named Uzzi had overall charge of the Levites, and Pethahiah was the king's agent in the city, under Nehemiah, of course (vv. 22-24). The rest of the Jews lived in the neighboring villages: Judah lived in the villages listed in verses 25-30, and Benjamin in the villages listed in verses 31-35. Some divisions of Levites that formerly lived in Judah now moved over to the territory of Benjamin (v. 36).

H. Tabulation of Jerusalem's Priests and Levites (12:1-26)

The priests ... who returned with Zerubbabel are named in verses 1-7. The Levites who came back are listed in verses 8 and 9. Verses 10 and 11 name the high priests from Jeshua (in the days of Zerubbabel, v. 1), until Jaddua. In verses 12-21 we have the priests who served in the days of Joiakim, whose son Eliashib was the high priest in Nehemiah's day (3:1). Most of them were probably still alive. The Levites were registered under succeeding high priests from Eliashib until Jaddua. The men mentioned by name in verses 24-26 served before and during Nehemiah's administration as governor.

I. Dedication of Jerusalem's Wall (12:27-47)

12:27-30 For the dedication of the wall, the Levites (particularly the singers) from the surrounding areas were brought to Jerusalem. The priests and Levites ceremonially purified themselves along with the people, the wall, and the gates.

12:31-42 Then Nehemiah assembled the princes of Judah ... on the wall and divided them into two large thanksgiving choirs. They headed in different directions around the wall, with the singers in front and the people following behind their leaders until they met again at the temple.

12:43-46 Great sacrifices were offered amid loud rejoicing. At the same time some men were appointed to oversee the collection of the offerings, the firstfruits, and the tithes for the support of the priests and Levites, as required by the law. The people contributed joyfully because they were happy to have the divine services resumed. The priests and Levites performed their duties of worship and purification. The singers and ... gatekeepers also carried on their assigned tasks, tasks that, as far as the singers were concerned, dated back to the time of David and Asaph.

12:47 In the days of Zerubbabel and ... Nehemiah, the people provided all that was necessary for the support of the singers, gatekeepers, Levites, and priests.

II. NEHEMIAH'S SECOND VISIT: REFORMATION OF JERUSALEM (CHAP. 13)

A. Expulsion of Tobiah from the Temple (13:1-9)

13:1-3 After serving for twelve years in Jerusalem, in 433 B.C. Nehemiah returned to Babylon for an unspecified time. Then he obtained permission to visit Jerusalem again, a visit that dealt with the correcting of abuses. "On that day" (v. 1) may refer back to the last chapter, or it may refer to another day during Nehemiah's absence (v. 6). In either case, the Word was read, including the part barring Moabites and Ammonites from the congregation. These Canaanites had not only refused bread and water to God's people, but had hired Balaam to curse them. But God had turned the curse into a blessing. What a wonderful God He is! The people responded by separating the mixed multitude from Israel.

13:4, 5 In expelling the foreigners, they were finishing the job they started in 9:2. Eliashib the priest had made a home for the wicked Tobiah in the forecourt of the house of God, using a storeroom which should have been full of tithes for the Levites and priests.

13:6-9 Upon his return it did not take Nehemiah long to remedy the situation. Other problems had also appeared in his absence, and Nehemiah indignantly campaigned to halt these evils.

B. Restoration of Tithes for the Levites (13:10-14)

Nehemiah rebuked the officials in charge of such matters for their irresponsibility in neglecting the Levites. The Levites who had been forced to work in the fields to make a living were regathered, and faithful men were appointed ... to distribute the tithes among them. For this good deed Nehemiah asked his God to remember him (v. 14).

C. Elimination of Illegal Activity on the Sabbath (13:15-22)

Nehemiah had to rebuke the rulers who allowed the people to work on the Sabbath. The foreigners who lived among them tried to make it a market day. But the Sabbath must be kept holy, by force if necessary. Men were sent to secure the gates, and the greedy merchants camping outside the city were run off under threat of violence. Illicit activity came to an abrupt halt. For this too Nehemiah asked to be remembered (v. 22).

D. Dissolution of Interracial Marriages (13:23-31)

Several years earlier the foreign wives had been put away at the command of Ezra (Ezra 10). The people had since then made a covenant to separate themselves from the heathen (chap. 10) and had done so to a certain extent. But in time the practice of Jews marrying women of Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab flourished once more, even in the priesthood. Some of the malefactors were physically punished; others were excommunicated. A grandson of the high priest was sent away.[9] The heathen were driven away and the Lord was asked to deal with those who had defiled their holy offices. Once more Nehemiah asked the Lord that he be remembered (v. 31).

In the church there is no ban on marriage between different ethnic groups, because Christianity is a faith embracing all peoples and tribes. But even in OT times the main reason for the ban was no doubt the corrupt, false religions of the Gentile nations.

Campbell comments on the type of mixed marriages that are destructive to Christianity:

> The New Testament adds its consistent witness against marriages between believers and unbelievers. Paul directed believers to marry "only in the Lord" (1 Cor. 7:39). Yet today as in previous ages, some believers rationalize that they will lead the unsaved mate to the Lord—but it rarely works that way and children more often than not follow the ways of the unregenerate parent.[10]

Throughout his rule Nehemiah was a man of action. Nowhere is that more evident than here, as zeal for the things of God consumed him (Ps. 69:9). Because he was no respecter of persons, his anger was felt equally by all who transgressed the law of the Lord. He warned, admonished, reprimanded, contended, struck, pulled out hair, and generally made things difficult for the ungodly! He was a courageous man and a tenacious general in the front lines of the fight against evil. He was a tireless worker and a great builder for God.

This chapter brings OT history to a close. The books that follow Nehemiah fit chronologically before this time (except for Malachi, which is contemporary with Nehemiah).[11]

Charles Swindoll closes his commentary on Nehemiah, Hand Me Another Brick, with a challenge to us all:

I think it is significant that the final scene in Nehemiah's book portrays him on his knees asking God for grace. He had fought hard for the right, but he had kept his heart soft before the Lord. What a magnificent model of leadership! He was a man of honesty, conviction, and devotion.

Can you handle another brick?[12]

ESTHER

INTRODUCTION

"The book of Esther gives us a segment of the history of the Jews which is not supplied elsewhere in the Bible. For instance, it is here that we learn about the origin of the Feast of Purim which, as we all know, is celebrated by the Jewish people to this very day."

—Carl Armerding

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

A Soviet Jew was recently asked by a Westerner what he thought would be the outcome if the USSR stepped up its anti-Semitic policies. "Oh, probably a feast!" Asked for an explanation, the Jewish man said, "Pharaoh tried to wipe out the Hebrews and the result was Passover; Haman tried to exterminate our people and the result was Purim; Antiochus Epiphanes tried to do us in, and the result was Hannukah!"

Esther explains the origin of the Feast of Purim, a colorful Jewish holiday that today features noisemakers sounding off every time Haman's name occurs in the annual public reading of the book.

Esther is unique in several ways. It tells the story of non-observant[1] Jews who preferred prosperity in Persia[2] to the rigors of the small remnant that returned to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel (Ezra 2). All reference to religion other than fasting is lacking in Esther.

Another remarkable feature of the book is that the name of God[3] is not found in it, a fact that has caused some to question its right to a place in Scripture. But J. Sidlow Baxter points out that the name Jehovah is hidden four times as an acrostic (1:20; 5:4; 5:13; 7:7), always at a crucial point in the story. Also the name Ehyeh (I am who I am) is found once in acrostic form (7:5). "This cannot be of chance," writes Scroggie, "and the difficulty of constructing such forms will be apparent to anyone who attempts it."[4]

Since few Christians know Hebrew, and this is a difficult literary form to grasp without examples, we quote two of Arthur T. Pierson's artistic and ingenious attempts to illustrate the acrostics in rhymed English couplets. He uses the word LORD for YHWH. Notice that, as in the original, one example uses initial letters and one uses final letters. Also, in Pierson's first example, the hidden name "L-O-R-D" is spelled backwards, and in the second example it is in normal order. This parallels the original Hebrew:

Due Respect Our Ladies, all*

Shall give their husbands, great and small (i. 20).

IlL tO feaR decreeD I find,

Toward me in the monarch's mind (vii. 7).[5]

Although God's name is not found explicitly, His presence and power are clearly manifested throughout as He provides deliverance for His people through a series of designed "coincidences." Even if Jehovah's name is not explicitly associated with those who voluntarily stayed in Babylon instead of returning to their own city and land, His care for them cannot be questioned. They were still His people, and He would protect them from the anti-Semitism (inspired by the devil) which sought to exterminate them. God is the Author of all history, even if He does not sign His name at the bottom of every page.

The poetry of James Russell Lowell is a fitting commentary on the Book of Esther:

Careless seems the great avenger:

History's pages but record

One death grapple in the darkness,

'twixt old systems and the Word.

Truth for ever on the scaffold;

Wrong for ever on the throne:

But that scaffold sways the future;

and behind the dim unknown

Standeth God, within the shadow, keeping watch above His own.

Esther is not quoted in the NT, and so far no fragment has been found in the Dead Sea Scrolls. For these and other reasons, some (even a few Jews) have questioned the canonicity of Esther. However, the book has wonderful lessons on the faithfulness of God even when His people are disobedient.

The Persian Empire, c. 500 B.C.

II. Authorship

The writer of this book was no doubt a Jew who knew Persian customs and the details of the palace. (Archaeology has confirmed some of these special features.) He writes as an eyewitness, using the type of Hebrew of the post-exilic era. Some have suggested Ezra or Nehemiah as author. Jewish tradition points to Mordecai as author. Actually we have no idea who wrote Esther; perhaps the human writer was an unimportant figure historically. Whoever it was, as the Pulpit Commentary put it, "no disbeliever in God could have written it; and no believer in God can read it without finding his faith strengthened thereby."

III. Date

Esther 10:2 implies that King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) was already dead; since he died in 465 B.C., this would date the book after that year. The Persian cultural details, access to court records, and eyewitness vividness all support a date soon after Xerxes' death, sometime during the reign of Artaxerxes I (464-424 B.C.). As usual, unbelieving critics date the book much later (third or second century B.C.).

IV. Background and Theme

The events in this book took place between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra, during the reign of Ahasuerus (Xerxes), king of Persia. The book is concerned with those Jews who decided to remain in Babylon rather than go back to Jerusalem with the small remnant that returned to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel (Ezra 2). It derives its name from its principal character, Esther, the orphan girl who became queen. Esther, her Persian name, means "star" and may have been derived from the goddess Ishtar. Hadassah, her Hebrew name, means "myrtle."

Ahasuerus held court in Shushan (Susa, NKJV marg.), one of three principal capital cities in Persia, the others being Achmetha (Ecbatana, NASB), and Babylon. Shushan is the Hebrew name and means "lily."[6] The Prophet Daniel spent time there (Dan. 8). Nehemiah served there after Esther's day (Neh. 1). It is there that our story takes place, beginning in the year 483 BC. (Xerxes came to power in 486 BC; chapter 1 opens in the third year of his reign—v. 3.)

COMMENTARY

I. THE EXPULSION OF VASHTI DECREED (CHAP. 1)

1:1-4 Although not all scholars agree as to the identity of Ahasuerus, most modern commentators believe him to be Xerxes (see NKJV, marg.), the son of Darius the Great. Xerxes reigned from 486 to 465 BC.

The first feast did not necessarily last uninterrupted for one hundred and eighty days. Rather, this was the time required to display the riches of his glorious kingdom. Probably different nobles came at different times throughout this period since the empire was so vast.

1:5-8 The second feast lasted seven days and was open to all the people of Shushan. Royal wine flowed freely from golden vessels in the elegantly furnished garden court (v. 6 is surely the most colorful verse in the Bible!). Guests were permitted to drink as much or as little as they chose.

1:9-12 The inebriated Xerxes ordered his chamberlains to bring Queen Vashti, who was hosting the women at a separate banquet. He wanted her at the public celebration so that he could show her beauty. Since Persian modesty required women to be veiled in public, it appears that the king was asking her to degrade herself to satisfy his drunken whim. She refused to be displayed, thus greatly angering the king.

1:13-20 When the king consulted his wise men, they told him that Vashti's behavior would prove a bad example to the women throughout the realm. Memucan therefore suggested that Vashti be deposed by a royal decree and that the decree be circulated in every part of the empire. Knowing that the law of the Medes and Persians was unalterable, the wise men might have suggested such a drastic step to ensure that Vashti would not return to power and punish them.

1:21, 22 The king rashly signed their advice into law and ordered it published in every province in the language of every people. Included was the law that every man should be master in his own house and that his language should be the one used there. Dr. J. Vernon McGee has suggested that Memucan at home was a hen-pecked husband, and that he was getting back at his wife with this decree.[7]

II. THE ELEVATION OF ESTHER ACCOMPLISHED (CHAP. 2)

2:1-4 When the king seemed to have second thoughts over what he had done to Vashti, his counselors proposed that a search be made among all the beautiful young virgins for a young woman to become queen in her place.

2:5-7 As potential young women were brought to Shushan, Esther, one of the capital's maidens, joined them. She had been adopted by her cousin Mordecai after the death of her parents. Mordecai was a Benjamite, whose ancestor, Kish, had been carried into captivity with Jeconiah (2 Kgs. 24:14-16).

2:8-11 Hegai, the keeper of the harem, showed special favor to Esther by readily supplying her and her attendants with beauty preparations, besides her allowance, and also by giving her the best place in the house of the women. In obedience to Mordecai, she did not yet reveal her ethnic origin. Although Mordecai could not contact her directly, he had ways of getting news of her progress every day.

2:12-14 The course preparing the young ladies to be brought into the king's bedchamber lasted for twelve months. They went through a ceremonial purification program with ointments, spices, and cosmetics. Then, when the turn of each one came, she could request anything in the way of apparel, adornments, or jewels. She then spent one night with the king, and would never be with him again unless she so pleased him that he asked for her by name.

For the Christian, lifetime is training time for reigning time. Soon the Lord will present the church to Himself without spot or wrinkle or any such thing (Eph. 5:27).

2:15-18 Instead of making lavish requests for outward adornments, Esther followed Hegai's advice. Perhaps he suggested that she depend on her natural beauty. In any event, the king loved Esther more than any of the others, chose her as his queen, and made a great feast in her honor. The holiday he made in the provinces may have included an amnesty, or a remission of taxes, or it may have been simply a holiday. He also gave gifts in keeping with his wealth.

2:19-23 A second gathering of virgins took place, perhaps to add to the king's harem. Esther was still keeping her nationality secret, and Mordecai was still positioning himself strategically at the king's gate. It was at this time that he overheard a plot to assassinate King Ahasuerus. He reported it to Esther, who in turn notified the king. The assassins were apprehended, tried, and hanged.

The incident was routinely recorded in the official chronicles of the kingdom. Mordecai was not rewarded immediately. He had to wait, but it was sure to come. God keeps good records. The ancient Greek historian Herodotus says that hanging was the standard punishment for traitors and rebels in Persia at that time.[8]

III. THE EXTERMINATION OF THE JEWS PLANNED (CHAPS. 3, 4)

A. Haman's Talk with the King (Chap. 3)

3:1 The words "After these things" indicate a five-year interval between chapters 2 and 3. The last important figure in the drama of Esther comes on stage in verse 1, Haman, the son of Hammedatha. We are not told why he was promoted, but subsequent history makes it clear that the hand behind the hand of the king was Satan's. Haman was an Agagite, a descendant of the kings of the Amalekites (Agag was a royal title). The Lord had declared perpetual war against Amalek (Ex. 17:8-16). The Book of Esther relates the last recorded battle in that war (see also 1 Sam. 15:32; 30:1-10; 1 Chron. 4:43).

3:2-6 By official order Haman was now to be paid homage as one second only to the king. But Mordecai refused to bow to a mere man, especially to an Amalekite. The fear of God overcame any fear of man. The law of Moses did not forbid showing due respect to those in authority, but it did forbid the worship of any but God. Eastern monarchs often demanded such worship. Mordecai's fellow workers sought to gain favor in Haman's eyes by pointing out his refusal. Haman was a very egotistical man, and the sight of Mordecai's blatant disrespect infuriated him beyond reason. Instead of dealing with Mordecai alone, he set in motion a plan to annihilate all the Jews in the kingdom!

3:7-11 Haman's first step was to cast lots to determine a suitable date for the mass execution. By a seeming coincidence the date indicated was nearly a year away. As someone has said, "Even superstition was chained to the divine chariot-wheels." God overruled to allow sufficient time to thwart Haman's plan. "The lot is cast into the lap, but its every decision is from the LORD" (Prov. 16:33). Haman next approached the king with an inflammatory report about the Jews, misrepresenting them as a danger to the kingdom. He urged that a decree be issued ordering their extinction. According to the law of the Medes and Persians, this decree, once issued, could never be changed or withdrawn. As added incentive, Haman offered to pay ten thousand talents of silver into the royal treasuries, now badly depleted by the king's losses in Greece. Ahasuerus sealed the death writ with his signet ring, sentencing thousands of innocent men, women, and children to be sacrificed at the altar of Haman's pride. Verse 11 might mean that the money taken from the slain would belong to Haman.

3:12-15 Copies of the execution order were sent out with great thoroughness, setting the thirteenth day of the twelfth month aside for the atrocity. In the palace Ahasuerus and Haman complacently sat down to drink, but in the city there was great perplexity. Irving Jensen comments on this:

> The last phrase of chapter 3 is significant: "But the city Shushan was perplexed" (KJV). Not only the Jews, but non-Jews reacted to this outrageous example of violent despotism. Sometimes the masses are wrong, but not always. Here was a situation where a king and his high minister were an erring minority with extensive authority. But all people—nations and individuals alike—must reckon with the highest Authority—God. The king's decree was issued and posted, but the King of kings would have the last word.[9]

B. Mordecai's Talk with the Queen (Chap. 4)

4:1-3 The Jewish population was stunned as the news broke throughout the land. There is always sadness where evil reigns. Mordecai put on mourner's garb and lamented through the city until he came to the king's gate, beyond which he could not go because sackcloth was not allowed in his majesty's presence. He knew that he was the main object of Haman's hatred. The fate awaiting his nation had been unwittingly prompted by him.

4:4-9 Since custom forbade Esther to leave her confinement in the palace, she sent a servant to take some garments to clothe Mordecai so that he might not be seen in sackcloth by the king and lose his life. But Mordecai refused to disguise his anguish. When Hathach, Esther's personal servant, came to find out why he continued in mourning, Mordecai told him the whole story. A copy of the written decree was sent back to the queen along with an order to use her office to intercede for her people.

4:10-12 Esther responded to Mordecai by reminding him that it was a capital offense to appear before the king uninvited, unless he spared the intruder's life by extending the golden scepter. She told of a further complication which would make such action doubly dangerous: She had not been summoned by Ahasuerus for thirty days, indicating that she may have somehow incurred his displeasure.

4:13, 14 Mordecai's reply to Esther's rationale was to the point: She would not escape, when the rest of the Jews were slain, even if she was queen. If she refused to act now, someone else would arise to deliver His people, but she would be destroyed. And perhaps this opportunity to save her people was the reason she had been exalted to the throne. The words of verse 14 should challenge each of us: "Yet who knows whether you have come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Though few of us will ever be in such a position as Esther's, each believer has an essential role to play in the ongoing plan of God.

4:15-17 Making her decision, Esther instructed all the Jews to fast with her for three days. Then she would go before the king.

Matthew Poole comments on Esther's famous and heroic words, "If I perish, I perish":

> Although my danger be great and evident, considering the expressness of that law, and the uncertainty of the king's mind, and that severity which he showed to my predecessor Vashti, yet rather than neglect my duty to God and to His people, I will go to the king and cast myself cheerfully and resolutely upon God's providence for my safety and success.[10]

The Christian's attitude in difficult and trying circumstances should not be one of fatalism but of optimism, especially when it comes to approaching the heavenly throne for grace to help in time of need. We have bold and confident access; the scepter of God's forgiveness has been stretched out to us at Calvary. "Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need" (Heb. 4:16).

IV. THE EXTERMINATION OF THE JEWS THWARTED (CHAPS. 5-9)

A. Esther's Supplication and Haman's Rage (Chap. 5)

5:1-3 On the third day, when the fast was completed, Esther put on her royal robes, summoned her courage, and appeared before Ahasuerus uninvited. Recognizing that only a very important matter would cause his queen to risk her life, the king held out to Esther the golden scepter and granted her safety. He also promised to grant her request, up to half his kingdom (a figure of speech meaning that he would give her anything at all within reason). Christ holds out His scepter of grace to any unbeliever who comes to Him in repentance and faith (see John 6:37b). For the believer the golden scepter is always extended (see Heb. 10:22).

5:4-8 At this point Esther simply invited the king and his favorite minister, Haman, to the banquet (the fourth banquet in the book). During the meal the king again tried to find out what the queen wanted. Once more Esther procrastinated and asked Ahasuerus and Haman to return the following day for yet another banquet. Then she would make her matter known. Opinions vary as to why Esther planned these two delays before making her request: (1) She wanted time to ingratiate herself with the king, having apparently been out of favor with him (see notes on 4:9-12); (2) her courage failed her both times; (3) she wanted to build up an element of suspense and impress upon the king that her business was vitally important and no mere whim; (4) she wanted to inflate Haman's pride and take him off guard before she exposed him as a vicious murderer. Perhaps elements of all these ideas entered into her strategy.

5:9-14 Filled with pride, Haman left the banquet in good spirits. When he met Mordecai on the way out of the palace, he was filled with indignation but restrained himself from violence. Calling his friends and his wife Zeresh together, he recited all the favorable things that had happened to him. The only cloud on his horizon was that stubborn Jew! His wife advised him to make a gallows seventy-five feet high, then get permission from the king to hang Mordecai ... on it. This pleased Haman; so he had the gallows made.

B. Haman's Humiliation and Mordecai's Honor (Chap. 6)

6:1-3 While Haman was sleeping, God kept Ahasuerus awake to thwart the evil scheme. In trying to make the best of his insomnia, the king had the chronicles of his reign read to him. By divine "coincidence" the portion that was read contained the account of the attempt on his life which had been foiled by Mordecai. Upon inquiry it was learned that nothing had ever been done to reward him for this service.

It is good to notice what J. G. Bellett calls

> ... the wonderful interweaving of circumstances which we get in this history. There is plot and underplot, "wheels within wheels," circumstances hanging upon circumstances, all formed together to work out the wonderful plans of God.[11]

The Lord is in perfect control.

6:4-11 Probably it was in the morning that Haman came to suggest that the king hang Mordecai. Strangely enough, it was at the very same time that the king had an impulse to reward the man who had saved him from the assassins. When Haman entered, Ahasuerus asked the general question, "What shall be done for the man whom the king delights to honor?" Thinking that his own great moment had come, Haman suggested the most elaborate parade and the bestowing of honors second only to those of the king himself. Haman further suggested that a public announcement be made as the parade moved through the city: "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delights to honor!" Thereupon the king ordered Haman to hurry and bestow all these honors not on Haman, but on Mordecai the Jew! Haman went out to proclaim his worst enemy as the man whom the king delighted to honor. Pride went before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall (Prov. 16:18).

In our day there is a Man whom the King delights to honor—the Lord Jesus Christ. God has decreed that every knee shall bow to Him and every tongue confess Him Lord to the glory of God the Father (Phil. 2:10, 11).

6:12-14 Crestfallen, Haman retreated to his house and reported these strange developments. His wife and wise ... friends saw in the day's events an omen of victory for the Jew and defeat for Haman. But by then it was time for Haman to hurry off to Esther's banquet.

C. Esther's Accusation and Haman's Execution (Chap. 7)

7:1-4 Esther's second banquet turned out to have ramifications which would shake the entire kingdom, starting with Haman's house. At the king's bidding she finally made her appeal. She asked for her own life and the lives of her people, who had been sentenced to death. If they had only been sold as ... slaves she would have held her peace, "for the trouble would not be commensurate with the annoyance to the king" (v. 4b NASB). But the seriousness of their plight impelled her to act.

7:5-7a The king indignantly asked who had instigated such a heinous plot against Esther's people. The queen had wisely invited Haman for just this moment. To his face she charged "this wicked Haman!" Haman's true character was now fully revealed. Ahasuerus stalked out to the palace garden like a raging panther. His conscience might have been bothering him too as he remembered his part in approving the terrible scheme. It was hitting much closer to home than he had anticipated.

7:7b-10 In mortal fear Haman threw himself before Queen Esther, pleading for his life. The king, returning to the room, interpreted this as an attempt to assault his wife sexually. Haman's fate was now sealed. Without an express word from the king, the servants covered his face, a preliminary to execution. One of them told the king about the gallows ... Haman had built, and Ahasuerus ordered the villain to be hanged on it. Thus Haman took Mordecai's place on the gallows. He reaped what he had sown. Then the king's wrath subsided.

D. Mordecai's Promotion and the Jews' Deliverance (Chap. 8)

8:1, 2 Haman's house was given to Esther and his position was given to Mordecai.

8:3-8 Haman was out of the way, but his destructive plot was still in motion. Once again Esther appeared before the king uninvited, careless of her own life, and tearfully pled for her people. Again the golden scepter of grace was extended to her. Verse 3 gives the gist of her plea, verses 5 and 6 the exact words. She asked that the first decree be revoked. But according to the law, no edict signed and sealed by a Persian king could be altered. However, after reminding Esther of what he had already done on her behalf, the king permitted her and Mordecai to write another decree counteracting the first one.

8:9-14 The king's scribes were called and Mordecai dictated an edict which gave the Jews the right to protect their lives. With great speed the new law was carried to the utmost parts of the kingdom on royal swift steeds. How much more should the news of man's redemption from the power of evil be disseminated through Satan's realm with thoroughness and speed!

8:15-17 Having discarded his sackcloth, Mordecai left the palace in robes of splendor. The Jews were filled with gladness when they heard of the sudden turn of events, while the rest of the people were filled with dread. Not wanting to be numbered among their enemies, many Gentiles became proselytes to the Jewish faith at this time.

E. The Enemy's Destruction and the Inauguration of the Feast of Purim (Chap. 9)

9:1-5 When the fateful day arrived—the thirteenth day of the twelfth month—the Jews gathered together in their respective cities and destroyed their enemies. Even the princes and rulers helped the Jews because they feared Mordecai, now the second-most-powerful man in the kingdom.

9:6-15 In the capital alone five hundred men were killed, along with the ten sons of Haman. When it was reported to the king, he realized that the slaughter in the rest of the land must be great as well. Esther requested that an additional day be given the Jews in Shushan to wipe out any remaining pockets of anti-Semitism. As a result three hundred more men were executed. She also asked that the bodies of Haman's ten sons be publicly hanged.

9:16 In the king's provinces the Jews killed seventy-five thousand, but had not taken any of their foes' plunder. This would make it clear to all that they were interested only in protecting themselves, not in growing rich.

9:17-28 The Jews in the provinces held a great feast on the fourteenth of the month while those at Shushan celebrated on the fifteenth. This was the beginning of the feast of Purim. The name Purim[12] comes from "Pur"—the lot which Haman had cast (3:7). Later Mordecai decreed that both the fourteenth and the fifteenth should be observed by all the Jewish people. Like the feasts of old, it was to be celebrated annually as a reminder to succeeding generations of this marvelous deliverance.

9:29-32 Apparently two letters went out to all the Jews, charging them to keep the feast of Purim—the first one in verse 20, and the second in verses 29-32. The book referred to in verse 32 was probably the chronicles of the kingdom (cf. 2:23; 6:1; 10:2).

V. THE EXALTATION OF MORDECAI (CHAP. 10)

10:1, 2 The Book of Esther closes with the exaltation of Mordecai. His advancements were recorded alongside the accomplishments of Ahasuerus ... in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia. Armerding closes his book on Esther with these words:

> The fact that we have no record of his death is quite remarkable, because the history of most men concludes with some sort of obituary. Not so with Mordecai. Thus the impression is left in our minds of one who lives on and on. "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (I John 2:17).[13]

10:3 Mordecai sought the good of his people. Spurgeon applies his ministry to Christians:

> Mordecai was a true patriot, and therefore, being exalted to the highest position under Ahasuerus, he used his eminence to promote the prosperity of Israel. In this he was a type of Jesus, who, upon His throne of glory, seeks not His own, but spends His power for His people. It were well if every Christian would be a Mordecai to the church, striving according to his ability for its prosperity. Some are placed in stations of affluence and influence, let them honour their Lord in the high places of the earth, and testify for Jesus before great men. Others have what is far better, namely, close fellowship with the King of kings, let them be sure to plead daily for the weak of the Lord's people, the doubting, the tempted, and the comfortless.[14]

INTRODUCTION TO THE POETICAL BOOKS

"Poetry," someone has said, "is that which is lost in translation." Fortunately for us, this is not true, or at best it is a great exaggeration when speaking of OT Hebrew poetry. Classic English or French poetry, on the other hand, being so dependent as a rule on rhyme, strict meter, and special forms, is most difficult to translate into other languages with real success.

Hebrew poetry has meter to a certain extent, uses the techniques of alliteration (words beginning with the same sound), and other devices common to our own poetry.

Though much of the Prophets are written in poetic form, five books in the OT are considered poetical as such: Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Songs.[1]

I. The Poetical Books

A. Job

This may be the oldest book in the Bible, since in all its discussions of right and wrong no reference is made to the law. In dramatic dialogues the greatly suffering yet righteous Job contends with his "friends" about the reason for his affliction, only to be taught at last by the Lord to accept His sovereign will for him. This is wisdom literature at its best, recognized even by unbelievers as truly majestic poetry.

B. Psalms

The most popular book in the OT for Christians is the Book of Psalms. We often see it bound together with the NT for convenience when a complete Bible is too unwieldy to carry. Many who love the Psalms are not even aware that it is all poetry.[2]

Psalms is the hymnbook of ancient Israel, consisting of a collection of five books written over a period of about a thousand years, from about 1400 B.C. (Moses) to about 400 B.C. (Ezra).

C. Proverbs

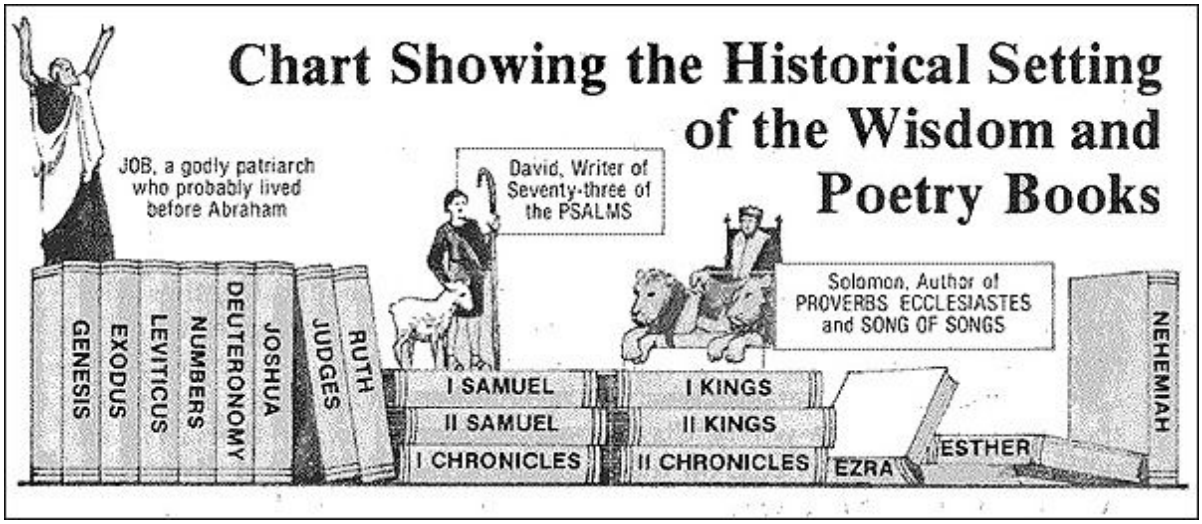
The second most likely OT book to be used by believers on a regular basis is the Book of Proverbs. It is absolutely chock full of wise sayings on how to live a successful life from God's viewpoint (which in the final analysis, is the only one that really counts). It is a marvelous example of wisdom literature.

D. Ecclesiastes

This book is the hardest for most people to fit into the framework of Bible teaching. The key to Ecclesiastes is the expression "under the sun," since "the Preacher" is reasoning from the viewpoint of a person without God's revelation. Here is another good example of "wisdom literature."

E. Song of Songs

All Bible lovers are agreed that this is a beautiful poem of true and pure love, though the interpretations of the story are diverse. The title "Song of Songs" is a Hebrew idiom meaning "the most exquisite song." Solomon wrote 1,005 songs (1 Kgs. 4:32); this was his finest.



II. Enjoying OT Poetry

Unfortunately, many people get "turned off" to poetry in school, either by being forced to memorize poems they don't like or don't understand, or by having had teachers who made them dissect poems till all the beauty and freshness was gone. It is somewhat like growing a rose, which anyone can do with little knowledge at all except a desire to experience beauty. A biology class assignment that takes the rose to pieces part by part is no doubt educational, but hardly helpful from an artistic or aesthetic viewpoint.

Enjoying OT poetry is somewhat like a middle ground between experiencing a rose with no knowledge of roses on the one hand, and doing a scientific study on the other. You will enjoy roses more if you know the difference between a tea rose and a floribunda, if you can tell red from pink and pink from coral and red-orange.

Likewise if you can notice the forms and techniques that lend "color" to poetry, and the techniques of the Psalmist or other biblical poet, you will get a great deal more out of Bible poetry. This is true not only in the five books considered poetic, but in the rest of the OT as well—not to mention in the NT.

III. Parallelism

Bible poetry's greatest technique is not to rhyme sounds, as in much English poetry, but to "rhyme" ideas—that is, to put two or more lines together that somehow match each other. We should be grateful to God that this is the mainstay of biblical poetry because it translates nicely into nearly all languages, and not too much beauty is lost in the translation process. Our Lord Himself also frequently spoke in parallelism. (Carefully reread, e.g., Matthew 5-7 and John 13-17 after studying the following notes.)

We would like to present some examples of the main types of Hebrew parallelism so that the reader can look for similar structures, not only while studying the OT with the help of the Believers Bible Commentary, but also while having daily devotions and listening to sermons.

1. Synonymous Parallelism

As the name implies, this type has the second or parallel line saying about the same thing as the first—for emphasis. Proverbs is especially full of these:

In the way of righteousness is life,

And in its pathway there is no death (Prov. 12:28).

I am the rose of Sharon,

And the lily of the valleys (Song 2:1).

2. Antithetic Parallelism

This type puts two lines "against" each other that form a contrast:

For the LORD knows the way of the righteous,

But the way of the ungodly shall perish (Ps. 1:6).[3]

Hatred stirs up strife,

But love covers all sins (Prov. 10:12).

3. Formal Parallelism

This type is parallel in form only; the two (or more) lines don't contrast, expand, or emphasize. It is just two lines of poetry put together to express a thought or theme:

Yet I have set My King

On My holy hill of Zion (Ps. 2:6).

4. Synthetic Parallelism

The second line of poetry builds up (synthesis is Greek for "putting together") the thought in the first line:

The LORD is my shepherd;

I shall not want (Ps. 23:1).

Keep your heart with all diligence,

For out of it spring the issues of life (Prov. 4:23).

5. Emblematic Parallelism

A figure of speech in the first line of poetry illustrates the content of the second line:

As the deer pants for the water brooks,

So pants my soul for You, O God (Ps. 42:1).

As a ring of gold in a swine's snout,

So is a lovely woman who lacks discretion (Prov. 11:22).

IV. Literary Figures

We use these every day without realizing it. Such expressions as "She's a real angel" or "He eats like a pig" are figures of speech.

1. Comparisons

Vivid comparisons are often made between one thing and another in the Bible, especially in the five poetical books.

a. Simile

When the comparison uses the word like or as it is called a simile:

For You, O Lord, will bless the righteous;
With favor You will surround him as with a shield (Ps. 5:12).

Like an apple tree among the trees of the woods,
So is my beloved among the sons (Song 2:3a).

b. Metaphor

When the comparison is direct, and one thing is called another, without like or as, it is a metaphor. This is a very popular device[4]:

For the Lord God is a sun and shield;
The Lord will give grace and glory;
No good thing will He withhold
From those who walk uprightly (Ps. 84:11).
A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse,
A spring shut up, a fountain sealed (Song 4:12).

2. Alliteration

Several words in close proximity beginning with the same letter—often a consonant—give us "apt alliteration's artful aid."[5] For example, the opening verses of the Song of Solomon have many words beginning with the "sh" sound (the letter shîn in Hebrew), including the name of the book and the Hebrew form of Solomon.

Obviously the alliteration in translation will not and indeed cannot match or be in the same place as in the original language.[6] Nevertheless the KJV and the NKJV have many striking illustrations in translation:

He frustrates the devices of the crafty,

So that their hands cannot carry out their plans.

He catches the wise in their own craftiness,

And the counsel of the cunning comes quickly upon them (Job 5:12, 13).

Man who is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble.

He comes forth like a flower and fades away;

He flees like a shadow and does not continue (Job 14:1, 2).

He has sent redemption to His people;*

He has commanded His covenant forever:*

Holy and awesome is His name (Ps. 111:9).*

A present is a precious stone in the eyes of its possessor;

Wherever he turns, he prospers (Prov. 17:8).

The words of a talebearer are like tasty trifles,

And they go down into the inmost body (Prov. 18:8).

3. Anthropomorphism

This means "human form," and describes God, who is spirit, as having human parts:

The LORD is in His holy temple,

The LORD's throne is in heaven;

His eyes behold,

His eyelids test the sons of men (Ps. 11:4).,

4. Zoomorphism

Similarly, God's attributes are compared to animal forms:

He shall cover you with His feathers,

And under His wings you shall take refuge;

His truth shall be your shield and buckler (Ps. 91:4).

5. Personification

An object or abstract quality is treated as a person:

Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad;

Let the sea roar, and all its fullness;

Let the field be joyful, and all that is in it.

Then all the trees of the woods will rejoice before the LORD (Ps. 96:11, 12).

I, wisdom, dwell with prudence,

And find out knowledge and discretion (Prov. 8:12).

6. Acrostic

This is one device that is almost impossible to translate,[7] because the poem is based on the Hebrew alphabet, and successive lines of poetry are in alphabetical order. Well-known examples are Psalm 119 and four of the five chapters in Lamentations. The Book of Proverbs ends with the twenty-two-verse tribute to the ideal woman based on the letters of the Hebrew alphabet (Prov. 31:10-31).

There are other figures of speech as well, some of them overlapping a bit with those we have presented, but these will be enough for most believers.

If the reader will be on the lookout for some of these poetic devices while studying these five books (and much of the rest of the Bible as well), a great deal of fresh interest may be found in the sacred text—not to mention a deeper appreciation of its beauty. (See Eccl. 3:11a.)

THE BOOK OF JOB

INTRODUCTION

"It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending Problem—man's destiny, and God's way with him here in this earth ... . Sublime sorrow, sublime reconciliation; oldest choral melody as of the heart of mankind—so soft, and great; as the summer midnight, as the world with its seas and stars! There is nothing written I think, in the Bible or out of it, of equal literary merit."

—Thomas Carlyle

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

Job is the only book of its kind in the whole Word of God: a long, dramatic dialogue in poetic form, set like a large multi-faceted diamond in between a prose historical prologue and epilogue. As originally written in the Hebrew language, the book was entirely in poetry, with the exception of chapters 1, 2, 32:1-6a, and 42:7-17.

Samuel Ridout comments about its place in Holy Scripture:

> From its size, and a rapid glance at its contents, we would judge that the book of Job is a very important part of the word of God. Yet how much it is neglected by most; an intimate familiarity even with its contents is the exception rather than the rule.[1]

The majesty of the language is recognized even (and sometimes especially) by unbelievers. Of course, the rationalists are ever ready with their theories of "sources," "redactions," and "interpolations"—usually with no manuscript evidence whatever to support their destructive theories.

The great Reformer, Martin Luther, who was himself a gifted writer and translator, said that Job was "more magnificent and sublime than any other book of Scripture." Alfred Lord Tennyson, who as poet laureate of England could be expected to recognize great poetry, called Job "the greatest poem whether of ancient or modern literature."

In light of the Book of Job's great style and insight into the human condition, it should prove no surprise that our everyday speech has been greatly enriched by this book. The following expressions are some of the rather clear borrowings. Most of these are direct quotations from the Book of Job that have become a part of our everyday speech:

"The hair on my body stood up" (4:15b). (My hair stood on end.)

"My life is a breath" (7:7a).

"Put my life in my hands" (13:14b). (Take my life in my hands.)

"Job's comforters." (These exact words are not found, but in 16:2 Job calls his friends "Miserable comforters.")

"There is no justice" (19:7).

"I have escaped by the skin of my teeth" (19:20b).

"The root of the matter" (19:28b).

"Put your hand over your mouth" (21:5b).

"The land of the living" (28:13b).

"Eyes to the blind ... feet to the lame" (29:15).

"Spit in my face" (30:10b).

"Great men are not always wise" (32:9).

"Words without knowledge" (35:16b).

"This far ... but no farther, and here your proud waves must stop" (38:11).

"The gates of death" (38:17a).

"He smells the battle from afar" (39:25). (We say, "The smell of battle.")

"Repent in dust and ashes" (42:6b).

The expression "I know that my Redeemer lives ... " (19:25) is well-known partly because of Handel's marvelous musical setting of the words in his Messiah.

The expression "the patience of Job" (Jas. 5:11, KJV) though not in the Book of Job, has become a part of everyday conversation.

As to the content of the book, it has been pointed out that the deep questions that Job poses about life, death, suffering, and life after death are all met in the Mediator he longed for, the Lord Jesus Christ.

II. Authorship

The book of Job is anonymous, though Jewish tradition chooses Moses as the author. Other suggestions are Elihu, Solomon, Hezekiah, Ezra, a nameless Jew living somewhere between 500 and 200 B.C., or Job himself. Since Job lived 140 additional years after the events in the book and experienced all of the events and speeches, perhaps he is the most likely choice.

III. Date

As to the events in the book, it is widely believed that Job lived prior to the birth of Abraham. Thus, the events in the book of Job would fall somewhere in the latter part of Genesis 11. There are several reasons why Job is assigned to this period in history. First of all, there is no undisputable mention in the book of his being a Jew. There is no mention of the exodus or Law of Moses. In fact, it is clear that Job was the priest for his own family (1:5), and this type of family priesthood belonged to the patriarchal period. The lifestyle characterized by wealth being determined by cattle and other animals is also largely patriarchal. Job lived for more than two hundred years, and this age span was characteristic of the era immediately preceding Abraham. Scholars also notice the musical instruments (21:12) and the forms of money (42:11) which are mentioned in the book of Job, and they assign these to the early part of Genesis chronologically.[2]

As to the time of writing, scholars range all the way from the patriarchal era (c. 2100-1900 B.C.) to the second century B.C.! (This last view is held by extreme liberals, and is virtually impossible to reconcile with Dead Sea Scroll portions of Job coming from the same era.)

The two most likely eras are the patriarchal and Solomonic. It would seem to modern Westerners that such long and complex speeches would be best preserved if written down soon after they were delivered. However, Eastern and Semitic oral transmission is known to be remarkable for its accuracy.

The best argument for the Solomonic age is the content and style of the book: it is "wisdom literature," not unlike the works of King Solomon. Such conservative OT scholars as Franz Delitzsch and Merrill F. Unger held a Solomonic date for the actual writing of the book, but obviously allowing for a long and accurate oral tradition. Such a literary phenomenon is widely understood in the East but hard for Westerners to relate to.

IV. Background and Theme

Although the author of the book of Job is unknown, there is no question as to its inspiration or historical accuracy. The Apostle Paul quotes from Job 5:13 in 1 Corinthians 3:19: "He catches the wise in their own craftiness." In Ezekiel 14:14, Job is spoken of as a historical person, not a fictional character. He is also named in James 5:11: "You have heard of the perseverance of Job and seen the end intended by the Lord—that the Lord is very compassionate and merciful."

The subject of the book is the mystery of human suffering and the problem of pain. Why do all people suffer some, and especially why do the righteous suffer? In Job we see a man who was probably exposed to more catastrophes in one day than any other person who has ever lived, with the exception of the Lord Jesus. The Lord allowed these sufferings to come into Job's life in order to enlarge his capacity for communion with God. Perhaps in a special way, the book is also intended to shadow forth the sufferings of the Jewish people.

If the Jews were to accept a suffering Messiah (as over against a heroic "Maccabean" type), it was necessary to show that suffering is not necessarily in return for individual sins. Christ suffered for us, the just for the unjust.

Several passages in this book can be applied to the Lord Jesus:

1. 9:33—"Nor is there any mediator between us, who may lay his hand on us both." (Christ is the Mediator who can bridge the gap between God and man.)
2. 16:8-19—The sufferings of Job. Many of the expressions in this passage are applied in the Psalms to the sufferings of the Messiah.
3. 16:21—"Oh, that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleads for his neighbor!" (The Lord Jesus Christ is our Advocate who pleads our case before the Father.)
4. 19:25, 26—"For I know that my Redeemer lives." (Christ's role as Redeemer and coming King are clearly described.)

5. 33:24—"'Deliver him from going down to the Pit; I have found a ransom.'" (The word "ransom" here is the same word as "atonement." Through the atonement of Christ, believers are delivered from the pit of hell.)

Several statements in the Book of Job are often said to reveal an advanced knowledge of science:

1. The evaporation-precipitation cycle (36:27, 28).
2. Wind and weather directions (37:9, 17).
3. Composition of the human body (33:6).
4. Suspension of the earth (26:7).
5. Ocean-bottom phenomena (38:16).
6. Cloud-lightning relationship (37:11).
7. The orbits of heavenly bodies and their influence upon the earth (38:32, 33).

VI. CONCLUSION: LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JOB

COMMENTARY

I. THE PROLOGUE: THE TESTING OF JOB (CHAPS. 1, 2)

A. Scene I: The Land of Uz (1:1-5)

1:1-3 Job was a wealthy man who lived in the land of Uz. From Lamentations 4:21 it appears that Uz was located in Edom, southeast of Palestine.[3] The upright and God-fearing Job had seven sons and three daughters. So vast were his holdings of livestock that he was the greatest man in the East.

1:4, 5 One of the strong arguments that the events of Job took place in the patriarchal era is the fact that Job, as father of the family, acted as priest and sacrificed burnt offerings for his sons. The danger of frivolous and even sacrilegious talk when even generally devout people are feasting and making merry is ever present. In his evening meditation for Christmas Day, C. H. Spurgeon makes a good application for us in the Christian dispensation:

> What the patriarch did early in the morning, after the family festivities, it will be well for the believer to do for himself ere he rests tonight. Amid the cheerfulness of household gatherings it is easy to slide into sinful levities, and to forget our avowed character as Christians. It ought not to be so, but so it is, that our days of feasting are very seldom days of sanctified enjoyment, but too frequently degenerate into unhallowed mirth. ... Holy gratitude should be quite as purifying an element as grief. Alas! for our poor hearts, that facts prove that the house of mourning is better than the house of feasting. Come, believer, in what have you sinned to-day? Have you been even as others in idle words and loose speeches? Then confess the sin, and fly to the sacrifice. The sacrifice sanctifies. The precious blood of the Lamb slain removes the guilt, and purges away the defilement of our sins of ignorance and carelessness[4]

B. Scene II: Heaven—The Lord's Presence (1:6-12)

As the story unfolds we are told of a scene in heaven when the sons of God[5] (angels) appeared before the LORD. Satan (the word is Hebrew for Accuser) also was present. When God spoke to Satan concerning the uprightness of His servant Job, Satan implied that the only reason Job feared God was that He had been so good to him. According to Satan, if the Lord had not put a protective hedge around Job, then he would have cursed his Creator to His face.

C. Scene III: The Land of Uz—Calamity to Job's Property and Prosperity (1:13-22)

1:13-19 The LORD, thereupon, granted Satan permission to test Job by robbing him of his possessions. However, the devil was not permitted to touch Job's person.Then followed a series of dreadful calamities in rapid succession:

1. The Sabeans stole five hundred yoke of oxen and five hundred female donkeys, and killed the servants who were in charge of these animals.
2. Lightning destroyed seven thousand sheep, as well as the servants who were tending them.
3. The Chaldeans stole three thousand camels and killed the servants who cared for them.
4. A great wind caused the collapse of the house in which Job's sons and daughters were eating and drinking wine, killing all of them.

1:20-22 In spite of these terrible losses, Job was enabled to worship God, saying, "Naked I came from my mother's womb, and naked shall I return there. The LORD gave, and the LORD has taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD."

D. Scene IV: Heaven—The Lord's Presence Again (2:1-6)

In chapter 2, we find Satan appearing before the LORD once again. This time Satan implies that Job's faithfulness to God would soon vanish if he were allowed to touch his body. Permission to do so is granted.

E. Scene V: Uz—Calamity to Job's Person (2:7-13)

2:7-10 Job, thereupon, breaks out with painful boils from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head. So great is his misery that even his wife urges him to "Curse God and die!" But Job answers her, "Shall we indeed accept good from God, and shall we not accept adversity?" Regarding Job's wife, Harold St. John quotes the following paragraph:

> I think of all the cruel and one-sided things that masculine commentators have written about Job's wife, and I almost despair of my sex; it takes a woman to understand a woman, and it is reserved for a lady writer (I think that her name was Louise Haughton) to discern that as long as Job's wife could share in his sorrows she bore up bravely, but as soon as he enters a fresh chamber of suffering and leaves her outside, then she breaks down: for her the one intolerable woe is that which she is forbidden to share with him.[6]

2:11-13 Shortly after this, three of Job's friends hear of his adversity and determine to visit him with words of comfort. The friends are Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar.

However, when they see Job's pitiful and wretched condition, they are so shocked that they are unable to speak to him for seven days and seven nights!

II. THE DEBATE BETWEEN JOB AND HIS FRIENDS (CHAPS. 3-31)

Chapter 3 begins a series of discourses by Job and his friends, the largest and most complex section of the book. Ridout describes it well:It has been well named The Entanglement, for it is a mass of argument, denunciation, accusation, suspicion, partly correct theories, and withal flashes of faith and hope—all in the language of loftiest poetry, with magnificent luxuriance of Oriental metaphor. To the casual reader there may seem to be no progress, and but little clarity in the controversy. And it must be confessed that God's people at large seem to have gained little from these chapters beyond a few familiar, beautiful and oft-quoted verses.[7]These discourses may be divided into three series: Job first speaks, then is answered by one of his friends; Job replies to him, only to be answered by another; poor Job seeks to defend himself again—only to be rebuked by the third friend!

The three series of discourses may be shown as follows:

First Round

Job: Chap. 3

Eliphaz: Chaps. 4, 5

Job: Chaps. 6, 7

Bildad: Chap. 8

Job: Chaps. 9, 10

Zophar: Chap. 11

Second Round

Job: Chaps. 12-14

Eliphaz: Chap. 15

Job: Chaps. 16, 17

Bildad: Chap. 18

Job: Chap. 19

Zophar: Chap. 20

Third Round

Job: Chap. 21

Eliphaz: Chap. 22

Job: Chaps. 23, 24

Bildad: Chap. 25

Job: Chaps. 26-31

(Zophar does not speak)

The arguments of the three friends may be summarized as follows:

Eliphaz stresses experience or general observation: "I have seen. ... " (4:8, 15; 5:3; 15:7; 22:19).

Bildad is the voice of tradition and the authority of antiquity (8:8). "His discourses abound in proverbs and pious platitudes which, though true enough, are known to everyone (9:1-3; 13:2)."[8]

Zophar counsels legalism and religiosity (11:14, 15). "He presumes to know what God will do in any given case, why He will do it, and what His thoughts about it are."[9] His ideas are mere assumptions, pure dogmatism.

The remaining portion of the book is taken up with a long speech by a young man named Elihu (Chaps. 32-37), and then by a conversation between God and Job (Chaps. 38-42). Job ends with a prose epilogue that matches the prologue.

A. The First Round of Speeches (Chaps. 3-14)

1. Job's Opening Lament (Chap. 3)

3:1-9 This chapter has been well titled "Unhappy Birthday," because in it Job curses the day of his birth, extols the blessings of death, and yet complains that he cannot die! He assigns total darkness to the day a male child—himself—was conceived.

3:10-12 Since he was conceived and born, why couldn't he have died at birth? (It is worth noting that even in his tremendous bitterness and grief Job does not suggest either abortion or infanticide, which were common evils in the ancient world, and are now so again today in the West.)

3:13-19 Job praises death as a situation where the weary are at rest, small and great are there, and the servant is free from his master.

3:20-26 Next he questions why the light of life is given to those who are in misery (as he was) and long for death as if for hidden treasures.

Verse 25 is very famous:

For the thing I greatly feared has come upon me,

And what I dreaded has happened to me.

Could this indicate that even in Job's happy and prosperous days he had fears of losing what he had? This is a common characteristic of the very rich: extreme fear of losing wealth and having to live a frugal life. Riches give no real security; only God can give that.

2. Eliphaz's First Speech (Chaps. 4, 5)

Chapter four commences the cycle of speeches of Job's friends and his responses to them. Ridout summarizes the gist of their message as follows:

> In the controversy of the three friends we have a unity of thought, based on a common principle. That principle is that all suffering is of a punitive rather than of an instructive nature; that it is based on God's justice rather than on His love—though these are ever combined in all His ways. Such a principle necessarily fails to distinguish between the sufferings of the righteous and those of the wicked.[10]

In chapters 4 and 5, Eliphaz speaks. Eliphaz (his name may mean God is strength or God is fine gold) was a pious and prominent person, orthodox in his views of God's greatness, but sadly lacking in compassion. He becomes harsher as the series of speeches progress. It is worth noting that while the three friends become less and less understanding (in both senses of that word) throughout the book, Job becomes more and more understanding of God's ways, until, after speeches by Elihu and a true encounter with Jehovah, he accepts God's will with true humility.

4:1-11 Eliphaz says in effect, "You helped others ('Your words have kept men on their feet' 4:4, James Moffatt), but now you cannot help yourself." (These words are reminiscent of Christ's mockers at the Crucifixion: "He saved others; He cannot save Himself.") The reason he gives for this is Job's self-righteousness. "Hath not thy piety been thy confidence, and the perfection of thy ways thy hope?" (4:6, JND). Since people suffer for wickedness, it must be that Job has sinned (vv. 7-9).

4:12-21 Then Eliphaz tells of a vision which was secretly brought to him at night. In this vision a spirit asks the question, "Can a mortal be more righteous than God? Can a man be more pure than his Maker?" (v. 17). The meaning of this seems to be that man has no right to reply against God. If a person suffers, it is his own fault, not God's. After all, God is so great that He cannot trust His own servants, and when compared to Him, His angels are guilty of error. Since this is so, how much more untrustworthy and fallible are mortal men who are as transient as a moth!

5:1-7 Eliphaz challenges Job to summon men or angels (the holy ones) to disprove that sin is followed by judgment. The speaker himself has observed the unalterable link between wickedness and punishment. Trouble is never causeless. Man, being sinful, is destined to trouble, as sure as the sparks fly upward.

5:8-16 The thing to do is to seek God and to commit one's cause to Him, because He is all-wise and all-powerful. This is seen in His control of nature and in His providential dealings with mankind. Verse 13 is quoted by Paul in 1 Corinthians 3:19 to unmask the false wisdom of this world.

5:17-27 By submitting to the chastening of the Almighty, says Eliphaz, people experience divine deliverance from famine, war, slander, civil strife, peril, drought, wild beasts, and crop damage. They enjoy domestic peace, security, fruitfulness, and longevity.

3. Job's Response (Chaps. 6, 7)

6:1-13 Job admits that his words have been rash, but there is a reason! His grief and calamity are heavier than the sand of the sea, and his spirit is drinking in the poison of the arrows of the Almighty. In spite of all the negative and awful things that are expressed in this book, especially by Job, they are so beautifully worded that the sensitive reader is struck by their potency. Job protests that he would not complain so bitterly without cause, any more than animals would bray without a reason. Suffering and weeping are linked just like flavorless food and seasoning. He wishes he could die because he has no strength to endure and no hope for the future. Prolonging life is useless.

6:14-23 Job's friends (he calls them brothers) have failed him and disappointed him when he needed them most. He compares them to brooks or wadis that vanish completely when you need them. Though he had sought nothing from them, they had criticized him vaguely without telling him how he had sinned.

6:24-30 Job maintains his integrity in spite of the implications of Eliphaz's speech that he is a secret sinner. He wants to know specifically where he has erred and desires proof of injustice on his tongue. Verse 27 is a counter-accusation to the friends; perhaps the friend they are undermining is Job himself!

7:1-10 Now Job addresses the Lord directly. It is as natural for him to have the death-wish as for a servant to long for rest after a hard day's work. However in Job's case the night hours bring no relief to his tortured body, as he tosses till dawn. Like a weaver's shuttle his life is passing swiftly without hope, vanishing from sight like a cloud.

7:11-21 He asks the Lord why He should pay so much attention to an insignificant human being, hemming him in, terrifying him with nightmares, until he would rather be strangled. Is man so great that God should cause him to suffer continually? Even if Job had sinned, is there no pardon, since he is going to die soon anyway?

4. Bildad's First Speech (Chap. 8)

The name Bildad may mean son of contention, which would be a very appropriate meaning, since this friend of Job seems to love controversy. Ridout compares Bildad to Eliphaz in style and knowledge as follows:

> There is perhaps less of the courtesy and dignity which marked the speech of Eliphaz, together with some harshness toward Job, caused apparently by the bitter charge of the latter against God. With all his ignorance of divine principles, Bildad is jealous of the honor of God, and cannot allow Him to be accused. In this he is surely right, but he fails to convince Job because of the root error in the thoughts, indeed, of them all: God must punish sin, and Job must be a sinner for he is being punished.[11]

8:1-7 Accusing Job of irresponsible and blustery speech, Bildad defends the justice of God in punishing the wicked and rewarding the upright. He says unkindly that Job's sons were destroyed because of their transgression. There is no indication of this, and even had there been, it was a cruel thing to say to a man in great sorrow and suffering. But if Job would earnestly turn to God, says Bildad, there was still hope for divine favor.

8:8-22 He next appeals to history to prove the link between evil and retribution. Just as reeds wither when there is no water, so is the doom of the irreligious and the hypocrite. (Verse 16a may be an allusion to the absorption of chlorophyll from sunlight.) God delights to replace the wicked with the blameless, whom He then proceeds to bless.

5. Job's Response (Chaps. 9, 10)

9:1-13 When Job asks, "How can a man be righteous before God?", he is not inquiring as to the way of salvation, but expressing the hopelessness of ever proving his innocence before One who is so great. It is folly to contend with God since one could not answer Him one time out of a thousand. He is sovereign, all-wise, and all-powerful, as seen in His control of mountains, earth, sun, stars, sea, yes, wonders without number.

9:14-31 What chance would Job have of defending himself? Could he be sure that God is listening? The Lord is merciless, arbitrary, and unjust, Job says, and therefore a fair trial is impossible. In his despair, Job accuses God of undiscriminatingly destroying the blameless and the wicked, of laughing at the plight of the innocent, and of causing earth's judges to act unrighteously. He says, "I am innocent, but I no longer care. I am sick of living. Nothing matters; innocent or guilty, God will destroy us" (vv. 21, 22 TEV). As his life runs out, he finds no hope in careless self-forgetfulness or self-improvement.

9:32-35 Job sighs for a mediator between God and himself, but finds none. We know that the Mediator who could meet his (and our) deepest need is the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Tim. 2:5). Matthew Henry comments:

> Job would gladly refer the matter, but no creature was capable of being a referee, and therefore he must even refer it still to God himself and resolve to acquiesce in his judgment. Our Lord Jesus is the blessed days-man, who has mediated between heaven and earth, has laid his hand upon us both; to him the Father has committed all judgment, and we must. But this matter was not then brought to so clear a light as it is now by the gospel, which leaves no room for such a complaint as this.[12]

10:1-7 In exasperation, Job complains bitterly, asking God to explain His unreasonable behavior to one He had created. Does He act like a mere man in judging uncharitably, even when He knows that Job is not wicked?

10:8-12 Harold St. John comments on this paragraph as follows:

> We must not miss this amazing passage in which the Clay expostulates with the Potter and reminds God that in creating man He has assumed responsibilities from which he cannot honorably escape. 10:8 Thy hands made and fashioned me. 10:10 The formation of the physical embryo. 10:11 The growth of skin and flesh and the development of bones and sinews. 10:12 (a) The gift of "soul" with its many-sided expressions and (b) The visitation of God by which man's highest part, the "spirit," is conferred and preserved.[13]

10:13-22 Why does the Lord inflict severe calamities on Job? Seemingly it makes no difference whether he is righteous or wicked; his life is filled with divine indignation. Why did God allow him to be born? But now why not let him have a little comfort before he passes off into oblivion, where even the light is like darkness?

6. Zophar's First Speech (Chap. 11)

11:1-12 Zophar the Naamathite insists that such empty, arrogant talk should not go unanswered. Regarding the meaning of Job's third friend's name, Ridout writes:

> Zophar, "a sparrow," from the root verb "to twitter," is the masculine form of Zipporah, Moses' wife, and like her he was an unconscious opponent of God's judgment on the flesh, though he was very zealous in condemning the fancied works of the flesh in Job. His vehement denunciations being utterly out of place, were as harmless as the "twitterings" of the bird for which he was named.[14]

If Job could only see things as God does, Zophar contends, he would realize that he is not suffering as much as he really deserves! His ignorance of God's greatness disqualifies him to question His justice. Verse 12 is an especially unkind cut, aimed obviously at Job: "For an empty-headed man will be wise, when a wild donkey's colt is born a man."

11:13-20 The best thing for Job to do is put ... away his sins; then God will give him security, rest, and comfort. If not, there is no escape from destruction.

7. Job's Response (Chaps. 12-14)

12:1-6 In biting (and now famous) sarcasm, Job accuses his friends of intellectual conceit:

> "No doubt you are the people,
> And wisdom will die with you!"

Anyone knows that God is wise and powerful, but how do they explain the excruciating sufferings of a man who once received answers to his prayers, and the contrasting prosperity of the ungodly? "You have no troubles, and yet you make fun of me; you hit a man who is about to fall" (v. 5 TEV).

12:7-12 Even the world of nature—the beasts and the birds and the fish—shows God's arbitrariness in destroying some and protecting others. If Job's critics tested words as carefully as they tasted food, they would agree with the ancients, who uniformly agreed with what Job had said.

12:13-25 Now Job launches into a majestic recital of the Lord's sovereignty, wisdom, and strength, and how they often produce inexplicable and paradoxical results.

13:1-19 Job scolds his critics. They have not said anything new. He wants to plead his case with God, not with these forgers of lies and worthless physicians. If they kept silent, people would think they were wise. Their explanation of God's action was not true; they would be accountable to Him for it. Their arguments were weak and useless. If they would just be quiet, he would plead his case ... before God and commit his life to Him. He is confident he will be vindicated, but even if God were to slay him he will still trust the Lord.

13:20-28 From 13:20 through 14:22, Job addresses God directly. He begs relief from suffering and demands an explanation of why God is treating him so severely. He wastes away like a rotten thing, a moth-eaten garment—scarcely worthy of such notice by God.

Francis Andersen evaluates Job's words as follows:

> Here Job shows himself to be a more honest observer, a more exuberant thinker, than the friends. The mind reels at the immensity of his conception of God. The little deity in the theology of Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar is easily thought and easily believed. But a faith like Job's puts the human spirit to strenuous work.[15]

14:1-6 Job continues to ask why God is so unrelenting with one who is so fleeting, frail, and faulty. Verse 1 is very widely quoted, perhaps because it seems to fit so many occasions:

> "Man who is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble."

Why not let him live out the rest of his short life with some measure of peace?

14:7-12 There is more hope for a tree that has been cut down than there is for him. There is a terrible finality about human death; a dead person is like a dried-up river.

14:13-17 Job wishes that God would hide him in the grave ... until His anger subsides. Then if the Almighty calls him forth, he will vindicate himself. In the meantime, God takes note of his every sin.

Job does four things in this section: (1) He asks for a revelation of what his sins are; (2) He describes the transitoriness of human life; (3) He despairs over the finality of death (longing for a mediator and grasping at the hope of life beyond); (4) He complains of his present plight.

Verse 14a asks a most important question: If a man dies, shall he live again? Our Lord answers the question in John 11:25, 26:

> "I am the resurrection and the life. He who believes in Me, though he may die, he shall live. And whoever lives and believes in Me shall never die."

Harold St. John comments on verses 14 and 15:

> In 14:14,15 light dawns on a silent sea, light breaks in, and in a passage of almost incredible daring, Job declares that man is more than matter, that though the heavens will pass and decay, the everlasting hills will crumble, he himself may lie in the grasp of the grave for millennia, yet a day must break when God will feel a hunger round His heart for His friend and will have a desire for the work of His hands.
> Then from the deeps of the underworld, Job will answer and, more abiding than the hills, more permanent than the heavens, he will be reunited with the God who had become homesick for His servant.[16]

14:18-22 As inevitable as erosion in nature is man's decay under trials. His body returns to dust and his soul goes to a place of sadness.

This ends the first round of speeches. The logic of Job's friends has been: God is righteous; He punishes the wicked; if Job is being punished it proves he is wicked. But Job has steadily maintained that he is not a wicked person at all.

B. The Second Round of Speeches (Chaps. 15-21)

In the second round of speeches Job's "comforters," no longer appealing for repentance, become more condemning and vehement. Job, meanwhile, becomes more stubborn.

1. Eliphaz's Second Speech (Chap. 15)

15:1-6 It is now the turn of Eliphaz the Temanite to reproach Job again for his vanity and his impious, unprofitable talk. In a series of rapid-fire questions, the Temanite ridicules Job's supposed knowledge, calling it empty. While Job's bold words challenging God did lay him open to the charge of "casting off fear," it was not fair to accuse him of choosing the tongue of the crafty. If anything, Job was too open and self-revealing. A hypocrite he was not! It is vain for him or for any person to profess righteousness.

15:7-13 Next Eliphaz challenges what he considers Job's arrogance in thinking so highly of his own thoughts: "Do you limit wisdom to yourself?" he asks. By Eliphaz's calling the three comforters' words "the consolations of God" and "gentle," he shows a complete lack of a heart for genuine compassionate counseling.

15:14-16 Eliphaz repeats his remarks of 4:17-19 on the holiness of God and the sinfulness of man. But how is Job any more sinful than Eliphaz? Ridout asks:

> Why then apply it to Job as though it proved him a sinner above all others? This, surely, is more like crafty speech than all the hot utterances of Job. Let Eliphaz take his place beside Job and confess that he too is "abominable and filthy." The poor sufferer might have responded to that.[17]

15:17-26 Turning to the ancient wisdom from the fathers, Eliphaz describes the pain that a wicked man experiences in life.

15:27-35 A terrible catalog of troubles overtakes the wicked, and these calamities are proportionate to the guilt.

2. Job's Response (Chaps. 16, 17)

16:1-5 Job rejects Eliphaz's analysis of the situation and fights back by calling his critics "miserable comforters." If they were in his place, he would at least try to comfort them!

16:6-14 But now God has turned against him and tortures him by turning him over to ... ungodly men and persecuting him beyond endurance, with wound upon wound. All this is in spite of the fact that he is guilty of no unrighteousness.

16:15-22 The fact that Job had sewn (not merely put on) sackcloth over his skin shows he is in permanent mourning. Without friends to comfort, or anyone to plead his case, he will soon go the way of no return.

Some of the language in verses 9-19 is employed in the Psalms to refer to the Messiah. Therefore we are justified in making an application of them to the sufferings of Christ, even if that is not the primary meaning.

17:1-12 As Job, broken in spirit, teeters on the edge of the grave, his friends mock him. He wants God alone to try his case because his critics have proven themselves of no use. The Lord has made him an object of contempt. Upright men who see his condition will rise up against his critics, while he continues to protest his integrity. He cannot find one wise man among his three antagonists.

17:13-16 There is nothing left for Job but the grave with its darkness, corruption, and worms.

3. Bildad's Second Speech (Chap. 18)

18:1-4 Bildad the Shuhite denounces Job for very strongly scorning the words of wisdom spoken by his friends and himself. One good thing that can be said about Bildad: he is briefer in his reproaches than his two fellow-comforters. Perhaps his awareness of this virtue of conciseness gave him boldness to suggest that Job should put an end to words.

18:5-21 He repeats the now-familiar refrain that the wicked person gets caught in the net of his own sins. Then he gives a dreadful list of the calamities that come upon a sinner's house. Bildad was right in saying that men suffer for their sins, but he was wrong in giving this as an explanation of Job's sufferings. Not all suffering is a direct result of sin in one's life.

4. Job's Response (Chap. 19)

19:1-22 Job tells his friends that they ought to be ashamed of the way they have wronged him. He has been mistreated by God and by relatives, friends, and servants. His body has wasted away and he has barely escaped death. Yet his friends join God in attacking him pitilessly.

19:23, 24 He wishes that his words of defense were inscribed in a book and engraved on a rock with an iron pen and lead, forever, so that sometime in the future he might obtain justice.

19:25-27 In a rare burst of light, he believes that there is a Redeemer who will one day vindicate him and then restore him, even though death and decay intervene.

The great English preacher, Spurgeon, whose own style is not unlike that of the Book of Job, makes a fine application of verse 25:

> The marrow of Job's comfort lies in that little word "My"—"My Redeemer," and in the fact that the Redeemer lives. Oh! to get hold of a living Christ. We must get a property in Him before we can enjoy Him ... So a Redeemer who does not redeem me, an avenger who will never stand up for my blood, of what avail were such? Rest not content until by faith you can say, "Yes, I cast myself upon my living Lord; and He is mine." It may be you hold Him with a feeble hand; you half think it presumption to say, "He lives as my Redeemer;" yet, remember if you have but faith as a grain of mustard seed, that little faith entitles you to say it. But there is also another word here, expressive of Job's strong confidence, "I know." To say, "I hope so, I trust so," is comfortable; and there are thousands in the fold of Jesus who hardly ever get much further. But to reach the essence of consolation you must say, "I know."[18]

The fact that Job has faith to see God in his flesh after his skin is destroyed, strongly suggests the physical resurrection, a doctrine not widely taught in the OT, but accepted as standard in the time of our Lord by OT-believing Jews.

Again Spurgeon comments in a beautiful way on verse 26:

> Mark the subject of Job's devout anticipation—"I shall see God." He does not say, "I shall see the saints"—though doubtless that will be untold felicity— but, "I shall see God." It is not—"I shall see the pearly gates, I shall behold the walls of jasper, I shall gaze upon the crowns of gold," but "I shall see God." This is the sum and substance of heaven, this is the joyful hope of all believers.[19]

19:28, 29 In view of this coming vindication, his friends should not persecute him, or they will be punished.

5. Zophar's Second Speech (Chap. 20)

20:1-19 Apparently Job's confession of faith fell on deaf ears. Zophar was not listening. He says that human history demonstrates that the proud man ... will perish out of sight forever. His children will beg from the poor, and return what he has taken unjustly. Though still in youthful vigor, he will be cut off. No matter how luxuriously he has lived, he will suddenly lose everything he has gained through oppressing the poor.

20:20-29 Almost every imaginable calamity will come upon him, including hunger, distress, misery, armed attack, fire, and loss of tranquility. Heaven and ... earth will conspire against him, and his possessions will disappear. This is the heritage appointed to the wicked by God.

G. Campbell Morgan says concerning this:

> In a passage thrilling with passion, Zophar describes the instability of evil gains. There is a triumph, but it is short. There is a mounting up, but it is followed by swift vanishing. There is a sense of youth, but it bends to dust. There is a sweetness but it becomes remorse; a swallowing down, which issues in vomiting; a getting without rejoicing. The final nemesis of the wicked is that God turns upon him, and pursues him with instruments of judgment. Darkness enwraps him. His sin is set in the light of the heavens, and earth turns against him. Let the history of wickedness be considered and it will be seen how true this is.[20]

6. Job's Response (Chap. 21)

21:1-22 Job now asks for strict attention. His complaint is not primarily against man, although his pathetic condition should awaken human sympathy. He counters their arguments with the true observation that the wicked often prosper in every area of life and die without suffering, even if they have had no place for God in their life. How often, he asks, do the wicked reap the reward of their sins in their own lifetime? How often are they driven away like chaff in the wind?

> You claim God punishes a child for the sins of his father. No! Let God punish the sinners themselves; let Him show that He does it because of their sins. Let sinners bear their own punishment; let them feel the wrath of the Almighty God. When a man's life is over, does he really care whether his children are happy? Can a man teach God who judges even those in high places? (vv. 19-22 TEV).

21:23-34 One person dies at peace and in full strength, prosperous. Another passes away in ... bitterness and poverty. In death all are alike. If Job's friends insist that the wicked are always punished in this life, he will appeal to those who travel extensively to testify that although the wicked may be punished in the afterlife, he often lives quite happily here. No one condemns or punishes him, and he dies just like all others. As a parting shot Job says, "And you! You try to comfort me with nonsense. Every answer you give is a lie!" (v. 34 TEV).

With these words Job ends the second round of speeches between himself and his friends. These "comforters" have about reached the end of their attempts to "convict" Job of sin; they will attempt one more round—minus Zophar.

The problem of the Book of Job is still unsolved. Why do the righteous suffer? Job, however, has made some progress and little glimmers of light have begun to shine through the dark enigma of his suffering.

The problem of the Book of Job is still unsolved. Why do the righteous suffer? Job, however, has made some progress and little glimmers of light have begun to shine through the dark enigma of his suffering.

C. The Third Round of Speeches (Chaps. 22-31)

1. Eliphaz's Third Speech (Chap. 22)

In the third round, Eliphaz and Bildad conclude their arguments, using a great deal of repetition. Zophar remains silent. Job answers them and is apparently unaffected by their arguments, since he knows that he is not a secret sinner nor a hypocrite, but, as chapter one reveals, a blameless man (but not sinless or humble). Eliphaz's last speech is full of dignity and literary beauty; he is slightly more polite to the poor sufferer, but unjust nevertheless.

22:1-11 Eliphaz's questions are designed to show that God doesn't need Job or anything he has or does, including his blameless ... ways. Then he launches into a prolonged tirade in which he accuses Job of gross wickedness—taking wrongful pledges from the poor, refusing water to the weary, bread to the hungry, taking land by force, and oppressing widows and orphans. That, according to Eliphaz, accounts for Job's present dilemma. The facts, however, were otherwise; Job had shown great social consciousness and had been generous in his charity.

22:12-20 Job should not think that God in the height of heaven doesn't see what is going on. If he continues in sin, he will share the fate of the people of Noah's day, when the earth's foundations were swept away by a flood—people whom God had previously prospered. The righteous rejoice whenever the wicked are punished.

22:21-30 Eliphaz truly has some exquisite words for Job in this his final appeal: "Now acquaint yourself with Him, and be at peace" (v. 21a); "Yes, the Almighty will be your gold and your precious silver" (v. 25); and "so light will shine on your ways" (v. 28b). These words are not only beautiful, but also true—for a repentant sinner "returning to the Almighty" and "removing iniquity far from his tents" (v. 23)! The only problem is one of application: Job has not been living in sin! Barnes summarizes Eliphaz's final appeal to Job:

> The Almighty would be his defense; he would find happiness in God; his prayer would be heard; light would shine upon his ways; and when others were humbled, he would be exalted.[21]

2. Job's Response (Chaps. 23, 24)

Chapters 23 and 24 are all one speech, merely divided for convenience by the ancient Bible scholars. Job develops three main themes in chapter 23: his longing to present his case at God's throne (vv. 1-9); his defense of his own righteous lifestyle (vv. 10-12); and his fear of God as if He were his adversary (vv. 13-17).

23:1-9 Job's complaint is bitter. If only he could come to God's throne and find Him! Spurgeon comments:

> His first prayer is not "O that I might be healed of the disease which now festers in every part of my body!" nor even "O that I might see my children restored from the jaws of the grave, and my property once more brought from the hand of the spoiler!" but the first and uppermost cry is, "O that I knew where I might find HIM, who is my God! that I might come even to His seat!" God's children run home when the storm comes on. It is the heaven-born instinct of a gracious soul to seek shelter from all ills beneath the wings of Jehovah.[22]

Job is confident that if he could approach the Lord He would have to admit that Job was righteous and so he would be delivered forever from his Judge.

23:10-12 Verse 10 is often quoted to prove the sanctifying effects of trials, but in context it is really Job's confidence in a "not-guilty" verdict. In the meantime God acts in an arbitrary manner, and His fearful judgments leave Job terrified. In spite of this, Job believes that if his case were to ever come to trial at God's Judgment Seat, he would be found to be as pure as gold and to have been always obedient to God's words, which he has treasured ... more than his necessary food. The lovely words of verse 10 are well worth learning by heart for our own lives:

> But He knows the way that I take;
> When He has tested me,
> I shall come forth as gold.

23:13-17 Meanwhile the unique and apparently arbitrary God does whatever His soul desires and Job is afraid of Him, and even terrified, because God has made Job's heart weak.

24:1-12 Since nothing is hidden from the Almighty, Job can't understand why He doesn't give the solution to the problem of the wicked's prosperity to those who know Him. He enumerates in detail the horrible injustice in this world—the crimes of the oppressors and the sufferings of the oppressed.

Ridout comments:

> It is an awful picture of facts only too well-known to them—and to us. How can Eliphaz make such facts fit in with his theory that evil is always punished in this life? But, oh, how can God close His eyes to these things, and afflict a faithful man instead of these wrong doers? This is Job's great trouble, and for this he has found no solution.[23]

Job complains of the apparent failure of God's governing of the world (v. 12):

> The dying groan in the city,
>
> And the souls of the wounded cry out;
> Yet God does not charge them with wrong.

24:13-17 Next Job describes the rebellious murderer, adulterer, and burglar. All three favor the night for their activities; the morning is the same to them as the shadow of death.

24:18-25 In spite of the fact that these wicked sinners should be cursed in the earth and they should be remembered no more, God apparently gives them security. Job maintains that the wicked don't die any more violently than anyone else. He defies anyone to disprove this.

Since Bildad's speech is so short, Zophar has none, and Job's response is so long, some Bible scholars have suggested that verses 18-25 are not really Job at all. Some modern versions even rearrange the text here (and elsewhere) in a very conjectural way. Andersen, who is "not convinced that Job could not have uttered these words,"[24] describes what some have done with them:

> We should not too hastily remove these words from Job's lips, just because they don't sound like what we think he should say. This has been done in three ways: to remove them altogether as a pious gloss which makes Job sound more orthodox than he is; to transfer them to one of the friends, either Bildad (NAB), or Zophar (Pope); to take them as a quotation by Job of what his friends say (RSV, which adds You say, and identifies verses 21-24 as Job's rejoinder; or Gordis, who takes all of verses 18-24 as the quotation).[25]

3. Bildad's Third Speech (Chap. 25)

The last of the speeches of Job's comforters turns out to be not by Zophar, but by Bildad the Shuhite. Apparently Zophar has depleted his fund of rhetoric. Even Bildad's speech is very short—the briefest in the Book of Job:

> Judging from the brevity of Bildad's address, and the fact that it contains practically nothing new, it would seem that the friends have exhausted all the arguments that their position permitted them to advance. And this is saying a great deal, for they were men of sober thoughtfulness, with abilities for expression rarely excelled. Their language is noble and elevated, their metaphors of rare beauty and force, but their position and contention were wrong, narrow, and untenable.[26]

Since Bildad has apparently finally comprehended that a multitude of words will not help, he only tries to communicate two themes: the greatness of God (vv. 1-3) and the nothingness of man (vv. 4-6).

25:1-3 God possesses dominion and fear, and His armies are without number.

25:4-6 When even the moon and the stars are not pure in God's sight, what hope is there for man, a mere maggot and worm? Bildad's words are true and beautifully stated, but they are spoken without love and comfort, and so they have not ministered to Job's needs.

4. Job's Response (Chap. 26)

26:1-4 First of all Job counters Bildad's argument. Even granting that Job is without power and has no strength or wisdom, how has Bildad helped? His words have been futile, insensitive, and a total failure as an answer to Job's arguments.

26:5-13 The rest of the chapter gives a marvelous description of God's power in the universe: the evaporation/precipitation cycle; the density of the clouds; the cycle of light and darkness; the storm at sea; and the stars and constellations by which His Spirit has adorned the heavens.

While Bildad stressed God's glory in the heavens, Job here dwells on His power in the depths: under the waters, Sheol, and Destruction.

Job describes—centuries before science taught it—that God hangs the earth on nothing (which is a poetic depiction of the earth's position and movement in the solar system).

> How immeasurably above the cosmogonies of the heathen philosophers are these few grand words! In them we have as in germ the discoveries of a Newton and a Keppler. It is a great mistake to think Scripture does not teach scientific truth. It teaches all needed truth, even if not in scientific language, yet with scientific accuracy.[27]

26:14 If these wonders are only the edges of His ways, and a mere whisper we hear of Him, Job asks, what must the full thunder of His power be if not incomprehensible?

5. Job's Closing Monologue (Chaps. 27-31)

Job's "comforters" have not proved their cases—but then neither has Job solved his problem! He is, however, on the right road, and seems to be growing in faith.

Job's monologue has three main themes: Job contrasts his integrity with the doom of the wicked (chap. 27); he lauds the priceless quality of wisdom (chap. 28); and finally he dwells on himself (chaps. 29-31).

27:1-5 The opening words of this chapter, "Moreover Job continued his discourse, and said," suggests a major break. No longer is he merely answering Bildad (26:1); he is addressing all, and he is getting many things "off his chest," as we would say. Job continues to insist on his own honesty, integrity, and righteousness. He refuses to admit that his critics might conceivably be right in accusing him of suffering as a result of secret sin.

27:6-23 Job does not defend the wicked, the unrighteous, and the hypocrite; their calamity is deserved. He will teach his three friends about God's dealings with the unrighteous man—truths that they themselves have observed. Disaster will often (but not always) strike his family, his possessions, his house, and himself. He will perish while good people rejoice.

28:1-11 This lovely chapter is built around the question voiced in both verses 12 and 20:

But where can wisdom be found?

And where is the place of understanding?

Man shows great skill and perseverance in digging for precious metals and jewels. Here in the first section of the chapter human cleverness (seen in mining) has been unable to find wisdom. In verses 13-19 human riches are incapable of buying wisdom, and in verses 21-28 God alone is seen as the giver of wisdom.

The description of mining in ancient times is very fascinating, but contains some difficulties for translators. Verse 4 is especially hard: nearly every English version has a different understanding of the text here. Andersen comments that "it is hard to believe that they all had the same Hebrew text in front of them."[28]

Unlike Bildad, who calls man "a maggot," Job admits man's cleverness in mining:

> Man's remarkable success as a miner shows how clever and intelligent he is; but, for all that, he has failed completely to unearth wisdom.[29]

28:12-19 The path of wisdom is not found so easily. It cannot be discovered in the land or the sea, it cannot be purchased, nor can an adequate price be placed on it, because its price ... is above rubies and topaz, and cannot be valued in pure gold.

28:20-28 Wisdom and understanding are hidden from the eyes of all living creatures. Destruction and Death have only heard ... about them. The same God who designed the patterns of nature is the source of wisdom, because He ... declared and prepared it. To fear Him is wisdom and to depart from evil is understanding.

This chapter seems to imply that we should submit to God's providential dealings even if we don't always understand them.

29:1-17 Job now gives a masterful and nostalgic account of the good old days of his prosperity and honor, and yearns for their return. He enjoyed God's favor and guidance. His children were with him. He lived in luxury and was respected in the city by young and old, by princes and nobles, because of his deeds of charity, his righteousness, and justice.

29:18-25 He anticipated long life and a peaceful death "in his nest," as he enjoyed prosperity, vigor, and strength, pictured by the dew ... all night on his branch, his glory ... fresh within him, and his renewed ... bow. Others welcomed his advice as a farmer welcomes the spring rain. His smiling countenance renewed their confidence. His leadership made him like a chief, or as a king in the army, as one who comforts mourners. It is hard to understand why God would punish such a man as this!

30:1-8 Now, sad to say, Job is scorned by younger ... men ... whose fathers were outcasts of society, unfitted even to help Job's dogs watch the sheep; worn out, weak, and poor; so hungry they fed on desert shrubs; driven out from among men; homeless nomads; driven from the land.

30:9-15 It is these dregs of humanity who now treat Job with utter contempt. Notice the phrases descriptive of their scorn—"taunting song," "I am their byword," "they abhor me," "they spit in my face," "they push away my feet" (trip him?), "they break up (or block) my path," etc. Job's honor and prosperity have totally vanished.

30:16-23 He is racked with pains, disfigured with agony, reduced to dust and ashes, and ready to die. God won't answer his prayers, cruelly opposes him, tosses him around, and is about to kill him.

30:24-31 Surely He will not afflict in the grave one who has prayed to Him when dying. Job had shown mercy to others but he himself was shown no mercy. His intense suffering is compounded by loneliness and rejection. His physical and emotional condition are appalling. Why would a righteous man like Job have to become a brother of jackals and a companion of ostriches?

31:1-12 Job insists that he has not been guilty of lustful looks at a young woman. He knows that God sees and punishes such sin. He has not acted deceitfully; an honest examination would convince God of this. He has not strayed from the way of righteousness; otherwise he would deserve to lose his harvest. He has not coveted his neighbor's wife; otherwise his own wife should become another man's, and his possessions and life be destroyed.

31:13-37 Job had been merciful to his servants; charitable to the poor, to the widow, and to the fatherless. He had been free from greed for gold; he had not been secretly enticed by idolatry (kissing his hand toward the sun or the moon); he was without malice toward his enemies; hospitable to all; free from secret sin; and honest in his real estate dealings. If any charges against him were written in a book, he would be proud to carry it around and wear it like a crown!

31:38-40 At the end of chapter 31 the words of Job are ended. Samuel Ridout, for one, is not yet satisfied with Job's finale:

> Job's words will be rightly ended when he is ready to give praise to the One who alone is worthy of it. We are glad to be through with Job's words as uttered here.[30]

III. THE INTERVENTION OF ELIHU (CHAPS. 32-37)

A. Elihu's Speech to Job's Three Friends (Chap. 32)

32:1-6 Here the conversation between Job and his three friends ceases. Normally, as we noted above, it would have been Zophar's turn to speak, but for some reason he chooses not to do so.

A young man named Elihu, the son of Barachel the Buzite, had been listening to the heated debate between Job and his three critics. Many Bible students see him as a picture of Christ, our Mediator. He seems the perfect bridge between Job's friends' analysis of his situation and the solution of Jehovah. In short, he is a middleman between men and God, a mediator to prepare for the Lord's coming on the scene.

Other commentators have less favorable views of him, viewing him as a conceited young upstart!

At any rate, Elihu (his name means my God is He) became incensed with Job for justifying himself rather than God. He was also angry with his three friends for failing to answer Job adequately. In the following verses, he summarizes twenty-nine chapters of discussions.

32:7-22 In deference to their age, he had kept quiet and paid close attention to their words, but now he can restrain himself no longer.

He says that great men (or men of many years, NKJV marg.) are not always wise, and that God can give insight to a younger man like himself. He blames Job's critics for not coming up with convincing arguments. Because of their failure, he is compelled from within to speak and he will do so without partiality or flattery.

B. Elihu's Speech to Job (Chap. 33)

33:1-7 Elihu, using the word "please," calls for Job's attention because he is going to speak words of sincerity and truth. Job had desired the opportunity to vindicate himself before God. Now Elihu, though a mortal formed out of clay like himself, is serving as Job's spokesman before God, and Job can make his defense, if he wishes, without fear of divine wrath.

33:8-18 Elihu rebukes Job for the way in which he had professed absolute innocence, and for blaming God for unjust treatment. God is greater than man, and does not have to give an accounting of ... His dealings with man. However, God does speak to people through dreams and nocturnal visions to warn them against evil and pride and to save them from violent death.

33:19-30 The Lord also speaks through pain and serious illness, when even succulent food seems revolting. If ... a messenger or a mediator explains God's way of uprightness (and if the sufferer responds in faith), God saves him from going down to the Pit on the basis of an acceptable ransom. Elihu does not explain what he means by a ransom, but we are justified in linking it with the One "who gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:6). When a person responds to the Lord's voice, says Elihu, then he is restored to physical health and spiritual well-being. It is the one who confesses his sin who is redeemed from spiritual and/or physical death.

33:31-33 If ... Job wants to speak, he should do so. If not, he should continue to listen carefully, holding his peace while Elihu teaches him wisdom.

C. Elihu's Second Speech to Job's Three Friends (Chap. 34)

34:1-15 Elihu next asks the three friends to test his words as they would taste food. He quotes Job's claim that God was unfair in causing a righteous man like him to suffer, and that there is no use being pious in order to please God. He then insists that God is never guilty of injustice. If He were to withdraw Himself, His creatures would utterly perish.

34:16-30 If it is inappropriate to tell a king or a noble that he is wicked or worthless, how much more unthinkable to condemn the Sovereign of the universe who is completely impartial! No wickedness can be hidden from God; He strikes down the evil and delivers the oppressed.

34:31-37 Apparently addressing Job, Elihu next counsels him to confess and forsake his sin, and to stop demanding God to do what he wants. Job has been talking ignorance, speaking evil, spewing forth rebellion, sin, and a multitude of words against God.

D. Elihu's Second Speech to Job (Chaps. 35-37)

35:1-8 Elihu then reproves Job for claiming to act more righteously than God and for saying that righteousness does not pay. Man's sin does not harm the sovereign God, neither does his righteousness benefit God.

35:9-16 Proud oppressors cry out in trouble, but they do not acknowledge the God who gave them wisdom above that of animals and birds; therefore, their prayers are not answered. Even if we do not see Him, God does see us, and we should trust Him and not be arrogant.

36:1-12 In Elihu's fourth speech, he professes to draw from deep truths to defend the justice of God and to explain suffering. The Lord is eminently just in dealing with the wicked and the oppressed as well as the righteous (vv. 7-9), whether they are kings ... on the throne or prisoners in fetters. If righteous men have acted defiantly, He seeks to bring them to repentance by convincing them of their ... transgressions. If they obey and serve Him, He prospers them. If they don't, they ... perish by the sword and without the knowledge of God.

36:13-21 If Job had been submissive and contrite, the Lord would have delivered him out of his dire distress, but because he was stubbornly self-righteous, he suffers the same judgment as the hypocrites. Elihu warns him that if he continues, he will suffer a fate from which a large ransom will not deliver him. (Verse 18 is a needed warning for sinners in all ages.)

36:22-33 Because God is all-wise, Job should magnify Him. His greatness is seen in His control of the rain, clouds, thunder, and lightning. We cannot fully understand the magnitude of His providential dealings, but we know that they portend grace to His people. Andreae wrote long ago:

> The same storm which on the one side is sent upon the lands for punishment and destruction is at the same time appointed on the other side to bless them abundantly, and to make them fruitful. Thus even the severest judgments of God are ever to be regarded as at the same time a source out of which divine grace distils forth.[31]

37:1-13 Elihu continues to delve into various realms of nature to show the wisdom, power, awesome majesty, and golden splendor of God. His descriptions of nature, of a thunderstorm with its heavy rain, or of the whirlwind, snow, gentle rain, cold ... winds of the north, thick and bright clouds, or bright sunlight, are classic.

37:14-23 Elihu ends with a direct appeal: "Listen to this, O Job, stand still and consider the wondrous works of God." He goes on to challenge Job's knowledge of nature: how the clouds are balanced and why he gets hot when the southwind blows. These lead up to the similar, but even more challenging, nature questions that the Creator Himself will pose to Job in the next main section of the book. Such excellent ... power surpasses our feeble comprehension. It is best to fear the Lord and to submit to His discipline, and not to be like Job, criticizing Him as unfair.

37:24 Elihu's last verse is the application to Job, a concise conclusion to the whole matter. The first line of verse 24 is easy to understand; the second is difficult in the NKJV (and other versions). Francis Andersen translates the second line differently by taking the negative word in Hebrew in this construction as an assertion rather than a negation:

Therefore men fear Him;

Surely all wise of heart fear Him![32]

IV. THE REVELATION OF THE LORD (38:1-42:6)

A. The Lord's First Challenge to Job (38:1-40:2)

1. Introductory (38:1-3)

The LORD Himself now answers Job out of the whirlwind, a not uncommon vehicle for an appearance of God in the OT. God's words are a welcome relief after the strife of words in the previous chapters. Job had been darkening counsel by words without knowledge, that is, he had been foolishly questioning the justice of God's dealings with him. Now the Lord will do the questioning, and it is time for Job to get ready to answer!

In the questions that follow, God does not give a detailed explanation of the mystery of suffering. Instead He ranges through the universe to give glimpses of His majesty, glory, wisdom, and power. He is saying, in effect, "Before you take it on yourself to criticize My ways, you should ask yourself if you could manage the creation as well as I do." This, of course, can only show Job how powerless, ignorant, insignificant, inadequate, incompetent, and finite he is.

We have here, as Ridout points out, the voice of the Lord:

> We are no longer listening to the gropings of the natural mind, as in the discourses of the friends; nor to the wild cries of a wounded faith, as in Job; nor even to the clear, sober language of Elihu—we are in the presence of Jehovah Himself, who speaks to us.[33]

As we listen to the Lord's questions, we have a recurring suspicion that they might be allegorical, that is, that they might have a deeper spiritual meaning, and that even the order of the questions might have significance. In the meantime, we see through a glass darkly.

Some might proudly say that, thanks to modern science, we know the answers to many of the questions that God asks. In response to that, Baron Alexander Humboldt acknowledged that > what Job could not answer, the men of science cannot answer yet. It is overwhelming to them; because although men of science are very clever about secondary causes, they are always stopped by primary causes. They never can arrive at the great cause, and they do not want the great cause.[34]

2. The Challenge of the Wonders of Inanimate Creation (38:4-38)

38:4-7 In poetic words of unsurpassed beauty, the Lord mentions the creation of the world when He laid the foundations of the earth, its measurements, its survey, its support (suspended in space, of course), and the angelic celebration. Then He asks, "Where were you when all this took place?"

38:8-11 Moving from cosmology to geography and oceanography, He describes how He restricted the sea to its assigned shores, forbade further intrusion, and clothed the waters, as if they were a baby, with clouds and thick darkness.

38:12-18 Next He vividly pictures His control of the morning—the light of dawn streaking across the heavens, illuminating everywhere it goes; unmasking the wicked who operate in darkness, as if by shaking them out; revealing the configuration of earth's surface, as if it had been stamped out like clay under a seal; and bringing out the colors of the landscape as if it were a beautiful garment. Darkness, which is the preferred "light" of the wicked, is withheld from them and their evil plots are frustrated. He challenges Job to tell what he knows about the depths of the ocean, the realm of death, and the breadth of the earth.

38:19-24 God now cross-examines Job on the origin and nature of light. The sun is not a sufficient answer, because there was light (Gen. 1:3) before the sun was put in place (Gen. 1:16). Was Job old enough to know the answer? And what does he know about snow and hail, which God sometimes harnesses in times of trouble and war? How do light and the east wind, which seem to come from a point, spread over the surface of the earth?

38:25-30 Next, in a class on weather, Job is quizzed on rainfall and thunder, on how water falls on a desert, causing it to produce luxuriant growth, and on the source of rain, dew, ice, and frost. How is it that water freezes hard as stone and solidifies the surface of the deep?

38:31-33 No science is so calculated to show man his insignificance as astronomy. So God questions Job on his ability to control the stars and constellations, or keep them in their orbits, or determine their influence over the earth.

In light of modern man's supposedly great control over nature through science, Spurgeon's words, based on the KJV text of verse 31, are a healthful counterbalance:

> "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?"—Job xxxviii. 31.
> If inclined to boast of our abilities, the grandeur of nature may soon show us how puny we are. We cannot move the least of all the twinkling stars, or quench so much as one of the beams of the morning. We speak of power, but the heavens laugh us to scorn. When the Pleiades shine forth in spring with vernal joy we cannot restrain their influences, and when Orion reigns aloft, and the year is bound in winter's fetters, we cannot relax the icy bands. The seasons revolve according to the divine appointment, neither can the whole race of men effect a change therein. Lord, what is man?[35]

38:34-38 Obviously, anyone who can question the wisdom and power of God should be able to bring down rain by shouting to the clouds, and command lightning so that it obeys instantly! Can Job tell God how the mind operates, how man gets wisdom and understanding in all these areas?[36] No man has the wisdom to number the clouds, to say nothing of the particles of moisture by which they are formed. And no one can determine the time when the rain falls on arid ground that has been hardened into clumps and clods.

3. The Challenge of the Wonders of Animate Creation (38:39-40:2)

38:39-41 God now moves from the inanimate creation to the animate. By continued questions, He reminds Job of His providence—how He opens His hand and satisfies the appetite of every living thing, from kingly lions in their dens and lairs to the unprepossessing raven and its young ones.

39:1-8 Job is reminded that no one but God knows fully the gestation periods, the birth habits, and the instincts of the wild mountain goats and the deer. The wild donkey (also called onager) scorns restraint, city life, and harness, but roams at will over the desert and mountain ranges searching for every green thing.

39:9-18 The wild ox also rejects a life of service in plowing or transporting. And what about the ostrich with her unusual wings? In some ways she acts foolishly, laying her eggs in places where they are vulnerable, and treating her young harshly. Yet she can outrun the race horse and its rider!

39:19-25 God next asks Job if he gave strength to the war horse, or clothed his neck with thunder (or a mane, NKJV marg.). Majestic and unafraid, devouring distance with fierceness and rage, this proud animal eagerly gallops into the battle in utter disregard of shouting, trumpet, or glittering spears and javelin.

39:26-30 Did Job give wisdom to the hawk to migrate south? And was he the one who taught the eagle to fly, to nest on the high rocky crag, to spy out carrion from a great distance, and to train its young ones to find their food?

40:1, 2 Again the LORD rebukes Job for his impertinence in finding fault with the Almighty. If he is so wise and powerful, surely he should be able to answer the catalog of questions that he has just heard!

B. Job's Response (40:3-5)

The LORD asks Job if he has any right to correct or rebuke Him in the realm of providence when he knows so little about the natural creation. With this, Job at last takes his proper place, saying, "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer You? I lay my hand over my mouth." Overwhelmed by the wide-ranging knowledge of the Lord, he determines to say no more.

C. The Lord's Second Challenge to Job (40:6-41:34)

1. Job Challenged to Respond Like a Man (40:6-14)

But Job's response comes somewhat short of repentance, so the LORD continues to remonstrate with him out of the whirlwind. He challenges Job to speak up like a man. After all, Job had accused God of injustice, and condemned Him in order to justify himself. Now then, let him play the part of deity by displaying omnipotence and by speaking in thunder. Let him take the throne, clothing himself with majesty, splendor, glory, and beauty. Let him pour out his wrath on the guilty and humble the proud. If he can do all these things, then the Lord will acknowledge his power to be his own deliverer.

2. Job Challenged to Consider Behemoth (40:15-24)

Next the Lord challenges Job to consider behemoth, which He made along with Job. This rules out the notion of some commentators that behemoth and leviathan are mythological creatures well known in ancient time. What challenge can a non-existent creature be to a created being such as man?

The word behemoth is simply the plural form of the common Hebrew word for cattle (beh_mah). Meredith Kline explains:

> The designation behemoth, taken as a plural intensive, "the beast par excellence," would be an epithet like chief of the ways of God (v. 19a). Note the similar supreme claims made for leviathan (41:33, 34).[37]

God presents the behemoth as the first of His ways, that is, as Exhibit A in the animal kingdom. Although we cannot identify it with certainty, we know that it is herbivorous, amphibian, and exceedingly powerful. It rests in shady, marshy areas and is not easily intimidated. The lesson is that if Job can't even control this brute, how can he control the world?

The behemoth is sometimes identified with the hippopotamus,[38] and some translations, such as the Louis Segond translation in French, actually put that animal in the text. But by no stretch of the imagination can the hippopotamus be called "the first of the ways of God"—an elephant or a mammoth might merit that epithet perhaps, but hardly a hippo! When children go to the zoo they squeal with glee at the cute, stubby tail of the hippo—hardly a tail like a cedar!

Some Christian scientists are now convinced that the behemoth must be an animal now extinct, or perhaps found in some remote parts of the African jungle. In fact, a reptile of the dinosaur type does fit the description very closely.[39]

3. Job Challenged to Consider Leviathan (Chap. 41)

God has not answered Job's complaints directly. Rather, He has just been saying in effect, "You should be able to trust the wisdom, love, and power of One who is so great, so majestic, so glorious."

41:1-9 Another awesome amphibious creature is Leviathan, unique in the creation of God. Can Job harness him? God wants to know. "Touch him once and you'll never try it again; you will never forget the fight" (v. 8 TEV). The term Leviathan in ancient Canaanite literature referred to "a seven-headed sea dragon," but as Andersen points out, this "does not prove that Leviathan is still a mythological monster in this poem."[40]

In English we use words like Thursday, January, and hell with no belief whatever in the pagan literary origins of the words themselves. Usage must determine meaning, and here God clearly challenges Job to consider a real creature, even if we can't be positive today which one it was. A popular choice is the Nile crocodile, and several parts of the description do fit that reptile well.

While the behemoth is primarily a land creature, Leviathan is primarily aquatic. Man cannot catch him with hook and line. Or domesticate him or make him a family pet. He is not considered a banquet delicacy. His armor-like exterior resists harpoons and spears, and the sight of him discourages meddling with him.

41:10, 11 God interrupts the description to ask a pertinent question: If men stand in such awe of a mere creature, how much more should they fear Him who created the creature, who is eternal, who is obligated to no one, and who is Owner and Creator of all? Kline comments:

> Here indeed is the point of the passage: Job is to discover from his inability to vanquish even a fellow creature the folly of aspiring to the Creator's throne.[41]

41:12-34 Back to Leviathan. His build is massive and his mighty power is enormous. His hide is a tough, protective covering. He cannot be bridled. His mouth and teeth are viselike. His skin and scales resemble armor with overlapping plates. In poetic terms, the Lord describes his sneezes, eyes, mouth, and nostrils as terrifying when he is aroused. Leviathan's strength is tremendous and his flesh compacted. While he himself is fearless, he fills the stoutest hearts with fear as he thrashes around, and normal weapons bounce off his hide. When he crawls through the mud, he leaves a trail of pointed marks, as if his underside was broken glass. He whips the water into a boiling pot, leaving a white phosphorescent wake. Even making ample allowance for the Oriental use of great poetic exaggeration (hyperbole), it is hard to see how even the largest crocodile could be called "king over all the children of pride."[42]

The descriptions of the wild animals and possibly dinosaurs in these chapters reflect the glory, power, and majesty of God Himself. They are His creation, and He purposely uses them to illustrate His own splendor and strength. Therefore, it is not surprising that He begins with harmless creatures such as the deer and the raven and gradually increases in size to the greatest of all creatures, the behemoth on land, and the king of all beasts—Leviathan of the sea, which was unbelievably awesome in its reputation.

D. Job's Humble Response (42:1-6)

Job is overwhelmed. He has had enough! He acknowledes the sovereignty of God. He confesses that he has spoken unadvisedly with his lips. Now that he has not only heard the Lord but his eye has seen Him, he hates himself and repents in dust and ashes. He did not see God visually,[43] of course, but he had such a vivid revelation of His wisdom, power, providence, and sovereignty that it was tantamount to a sight of the great God.

In Job 1:1 Job is called "blameless." Here at the end of the book he abhors himself. This has been the experience of the choicest of God's saints through the ages.[44] The more one grows in grace, writes D. L. Moody, "the meaner he is in his own eyes."[45]

V. EPILOGUE: THE TRIUMPH OF JOB (42:7-17)

A. Job's Friends Rebuked and Restored (42:7-9)

The LORD then reprimands Eliphaz and his two friends[46] for misrepresenting Him. They had insisted that all suffering is punishment for sin. That was not true in Job's case. In obedience to the divine command, they then offered a huge burnt offering (seven bulls and seven rams). Job served as mediator by praying for his friends, and as a result judgment on them was averted and Job was accepted.

B. Job's Prosperity Restored (42:10-17)

42:10-12 As soon as Job prayed for them, the Lord restored in inverse order twice as much as Job had before: twice as many sheep, camels, oxen, and female donkeys.

42:13-17 He also received seven sons and three daughters, which doubled his family, since he presumably still had the first ones in heaven. Job lived an additional one hundred and forty years. The LORD blessed the latter days of Job more than his beginning. So Job died, old and full of days. And in all this, Job had not cursed God as Satan said he would.

It is a lovely touch of God's grace that Job, who had been so hideously disfigured by his disease, after his restoration had daughters who were exceptionally beautiful (fathers love to boast of their lovely daughters!). The meanings of their names are instructive[47]: Jemimah (dove); Keziah (cassia, a fragrant cinnamon bark); and Keren-Happuch (horn of eye-makeup[48]). Job also gave them an inheritance with their brothers, probably not a common practice in the patriarchal era.

VI. CONCLUSION: LESSONS FROM THE BOOK OF JOB

Actually, the mystery of human suffering is not fully explained. As Wesley Baker puts it:

> When the end of the Book of Job comes, there is no answer written out. There is nothing there that would satisfy the logical mind![49]

However, we can be sure of these two facts:

First of all, Job's suffering was not a direct result of his personal sin. God testified that he was a perfect and an upright man (1:8). Also, God said that the reasoning of Job's three friends—that God was punishing him because of his sins—was not right (42:8).

Secondly, although Job was not suffering because he had sinned, yet his trials did reveal pride, self-justification, and animosity in his heart. He was not delivered until he had a vision of his own nothingness and of God's greatness (42:1-6), and until he prayed for his friends (42:10).

Some of the lessons we learn about suffering from the Book of Job are:

1. The righteous are not exempt from suffering.
2. Suffering is not necessarily a result of sin.
3. God has set a protective hedge around the righteous.
4. God does not send sickness or suffering. It comes from Satan (Luke 13:16; 2 Cor. 12:7).
5. Satan has some control in the realm of wicked men (the Sabeans and Chaldeans), supernatural disasters (fire from heaven), weather (a great wind), sickness (the boils on Job), and death.
6. Satan can bring these things on a believer only by God's permission.
7. What God permits, He often is said to do. "Shall we indeed accept good from God, and shall we not accept adversity?"
8. We should view things as coming from the Lord, by His permission, and not from Satan. "The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away."
9. God does not always explain the reason for our suffering.
10. Suffering develops endurance.
11. In visiting suffering saints, we should not be judgmental.
12. We should make our visits brief.

13. Human reasonings aren't helpful. Only God can comfort perfectly.
14. At the end of the Book of Job we see that "the Lord is very compassionate and merciful" (Jas. 5:11). We also learn that sometimes, at least, wrongs are made right in this life.
15. Job's patience in suffering vindicated God.
16. Job's patience proved Satan to be a false accuser and liar.
17. "A man is greater than the things that surround him and, whatever may befall his possessions or his family, God is just as truly to be praised and trusted as before."
18. We should be careful about making blanket statements that do not allow for exceptions.
19. Satan is neither omnipresent, omnipotent, nor omniscient.
20. In spite of God's allowing unmerited suffering, He is still just and good.

From other parts of the Bible, we get further light on some of the reasons why God allows His saints to suffer:

1. Sometimes it is a result of unjudged sin in the life (1 Cor. 11:32).
2. It is a means by which God develops spiritual graces, such as patience, longsuffering, humility (Rom. 5:3, 4; John 15:2).
3. It purges dross or impurities from the believer's life so that the Lord can see His image reflected more perfectly (Isa. 1:25).
4. It enables the child of God to comfort others with the same type of comfort with which God comforted him or her (2 Cor. 1:4).
5. It enables the saint to share in the non-atoning sufferings of the Savior and thus to be more grateful to Him (Phil. 3:10).
6. It is an object lesson to beings in heaven and on earth (2 Thess. 1:4-6). It shows them that God can be loved for Himself alone, and not just because of the favors He bestows.
7. It is an assurance of sonship since God only chastens those whom He loves (Heb. 12:7-11).
8. It causes saints to trust in God alone and not in their own strength (2 Cor. 1:9).
9. It keeps God's people close to Himself (Ps. 119:67).
10. It is a pledge of future glory (Rom. 8:17, 18).
11. God never allows us to be tempted above what we are able to bear (1 Cor. 10:13).

"You have heard of the perseverance of Job and seen the end intended by the Lord—that the Lord is very compassionate and merciful" (Jas. 5:11b).

THE BOOK OF PSALMS

INTRODUCTION

"I may truly call this book an anatomy of all parts of the soul, for no one can feel a movement of the spirit which is not reflected in this mirror. All the sorrows, troubles, fears, doubts, hopes, pains, perplexities and stormy outbreaks by which the hearts of men are tossed have been depicted here to the very life."

—John Calvin

I. UNIQUE PLACE IN THE CANON

If you were to be marooned on a desert island with only one book of the Bible, which one would you choose?

Frankly, I hope I never have to make this choice, but if I had to, I think I would choose the Psalms! Their range of subjects is so vast, their catalog of life's experiences so full and their worship so exalted that I would be well supplied with rich spiritual food and powerful fuel for praise and prayer for a long time to come.

Our opening quotation shows that Calvin would probably have chosen the Psalms, too.

Graham Scroggie would probably also have cast his vote for the Psalms. He said:

> How full of praise to God are these Psalms! The Keyboard of Creation, Providence and Redemption are all swept by the ecstatic soul; and heaven and earth, sea and sky, things animate and things inanimate are summoned to praise the Lord.[1]

When first studying the Psalms we are often frustrated at our inability to find an orderly flow of thought in certain Psalms. It seems that the continuity is sometimes erratic, sometimes veiled and sometimes completely missing. Two observations by Albert Barnes and C. S. Lewis may help us. Barnes said:

The Psalms are mostly lyrical poetry, that is, poetry adapted to the harp or lyre; to be used in connection with instrumental music; to be sung, not read.[2]

Lewis similarly explained:

Most emphatically the Psalms must be read as poems; as lyrics, with all the licenses and all the formalities, the hyperboles, the emotional rather than logical connections, which are proper to lyric poetry.[3]

These insights can open up a whole new window of understanding for us.

II. Authorship

The Psalms are often called "The Psalms of David," but only about half (seventy-three) are directly attributed to the "sweet singer of Israel." Twelve are attributed to Asaph, ten to the sons of Korah, two to Solomon, and one each to Moses, Ethan, Heman, and Ezra. Forty-nine, or nearly one third, of the Psalms are anonymous.

When we think of the Psalms, however, we usually do so in connection with the life of David. An unknown author expresses this beautifully:

The harp of David still sounds in our ears, and the Holy Ghost has crystallized for us the prayers and praises of the son of Jesse. Someone said that architecture was music frosted. The Psalms are the music of the heart, sometimes plaintive and sad, sometimes joyous and jubilant, sometimes full of darkness and anguish, sometimes tranquil and happy, the music of David's soul, preserved by the Spirit that, hearing it, we may feel encouraged to draw nigh to God.

III. Date

The Psalms were written over a period of about a thousand years, from Moses to Ezra (about 1400-400 B.C.). However, most of them were written during the three hundred years from David to Hezekiah (about 1000-700 B.C.). Thus, the Psalter was written over the same period of time as the whole OT (although Job may pre-date Moses).

IV. Background and Themes

The Psalms are divided into five books, each of which closes with a doxology. The doxology for Book 5 is the entire 150th Psalm.

F. W. Grant suggests that the Psalms are grouped according to subject matter.[4] He summarizes each of the five books of the Psalms, found in the Hebrew Bible, as follows:

1. Christ in the counsel of God, the source of all blessing for His people Israel (Pss. 1-41).
2. Their ruin, but redemption in the latter days (Pss. 42-72).
3. The holiness of God in His dealings with them (Pss. 73-89).
4. The failed first man replaced by the Second, and the world established under His hand (Pss. 90-106).
5. The moral conclusion as to the divine ways in which God and man are found at last together (Pss. 107-150).

There may also be a parallel between these five divisions and the books of the Pentateuch. For example, the second division fits the redemption from Egypt; the third matches Leviticus in its emphasis on holiness.

The Psalms themselves may be divided into classifications, although certain Psalms may fit more than one of these classes:

1. Historical—connected with some definite event or events in Israel's history or in the life of the psalmist.
2. Messianic—dealing with the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow.
3. Prophetic or Millennial—pointing forward to Israel's future tribulation and the subsequent era of peace and prosperity.
4. Penitential—recording the psalmist's deep confession of sins and his broken-hearted cries for forgiveness.
5. Imprecatory—imploring God to take vengeance on the enemies of His people.

Many other Psalms are expressions of individual or communal praise and worship to God, and still others are narratives of the Lord's dealings with His people.

Interpreting the Psalms

The distinction between Israel and the church is maintained throughout the Believer's Bible Commentary. Many of the Psalms, especially the ones which call down curses on the wicked, were entirely appropriate for Jews living under the law but are not suitable language for believers of the Church Age. In this age, we are urged to love our enemies and to do good to those who despitefully use us. Unless we recognize this important dispensational difference, we will encounter severe problems in interpreting the Psalms.

Every careful reader of the Psalms quickly notices that there is a close parallel between the experiences of the psalmist, the nation of Israel, and the Lord Jesus Christ. All three experienced persecution, suffering, sorrow, hatred and abandonment—as well as exaltation, glory and jubilation. We point out these similarities frequently in the BBC.

Applying the Psalms

While not all of the Bible is written directly to the church, all Scripture is profitable for the church. We can find comfort, teaching, rebuke and exhortation in the Psalms as we see our own experiences mirrored in those of the psalmist.

We in the church can learn important lessons from teachings which are primarily Jewish. The Jewish temple can be considered a prefigurement of the Body of Christ, made up of all believers and indwelt by the Holy Spirit. The battles in the Psalms speak to us of our spiritual warfare against principalities and powers, against the forces of darkness in the heavenly places. The material blessings of Israel on earth point us to our spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ—and so forth.

If we use these keys, the Psalms become richly meaningful to us, and many of the problems in interpretation disappear.

Psalm Titles

The titles to the Psalms are very ancient and are probably part of the sacred text. However, the meaning and purpose of many of them are very obscure, and for this reason, we have omitted commenting on most of them. It would not be helpful simply to keep repeating "We do not know what this means!"

COMMENTARY

I. BOOK 1 (PSALMS 1-41)

Psalm 1: The Good Life

The Book of Psalms opens by dispelling the common illusion that the sinful life is the good life. Daily the world is being brainwashed into thinking that true and lasting satisfaction is found by indulging the lusts of the flesh. Television, radio, movies, and magazines all suggest that permissiveness is the road to fulfillment. The life of purity is dismissed as "puritanical." But the psalmist sets the record straight.

1:1 The truly blessed person is the one who steers clear of the lifestyle of the ungodly. In his contacts with them he avoids complicity with them or even tacit approval of their sin and scoffing. This does not mean that the happy man isolates himself completely from the wicked. Instead he witnesses to them of "sin, righteousness, and judgment," and seeks to introduce them to Christ, the one source of lasting pleasure. The happy man is a real friend to the ungodly, but he is not a partner with them.

1:2 It is impossible to visualize a happy man who is not also a man of God's Book. He has an insatiable hunger for the Word of the LORD. He loves the Bible and meditates on it day and night. By this means his own life is enriched and he becomes a channel of blessing to others.

1:3 The man who is separated from sin and separated to the Scriptures has all the qualities of a strong, healthy, fruitful tree:

> Planted[5] by the rivers of water*—he has a never-failing supply of nourishment and refreshment.*
> It brings forth its fruit in its season*—he displays the graces of the Spirit, and his words and actions are always timely and appropriate.*
> Its leaf also shall not wither*—his spiritual life is not subject to cyclical changes but is characterized by continuous inner renewal. As D. L. Moody put it, "All the Lord's trees are evergreen."*[6]

This kind of man shall prosper in everything he undertakes. The reason, of course, is that he is living in fellowship with the Lord, and all his service is therefore guided by the Holy Spirit. The only way to be efficient and successful in the Christian life is to be led by the Spirit of God. Self-directed activity is an enormous waste of time, money, and effort!

1:4 The ungodly are not so; that is, they are neither well-planted, fruitful, enduring nor prosperous. Like chaff, they lack body or substance. When the storms of life blow, they prove unstable. A strong wind drives them away.

1:5 The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment. They will, of course, appear before God at the Judgment of the Great White Throne. But the meaning here is that they will have no adequate defense. In idiomatic language, they won't have a leg to stand on! Furthermore, they will never stand in the congregation of the righteous; they will be forever excluded from the company of those who are saved by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

1:6 What is the reason for all this? The LORD knows the way of the righteous. He is not only aware of their lives, but He approves them as well. What a contrast with the termination of a sinful life—eternal death!

We cannot emphasize too often, however, that a person's destiny is not determined by the way he lives. The determining factor is whether he has ever been born again by faith in Jesus Christ. The righteous person is the one who has confessed his sin and received the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Savior. His righteous life is the result of his new life in Christ. The ungodly person is the one who refuses to acknowledge his need and to bow his knee to the Lord Jesus. He would rather keep his sin than have the Savior, and thus he seals his doom.

Psalm 2: The Unchanging Decree

To place this Psalm in its proper setting, we must look ahead to the close of the Great Tribulation, immediately prior to the glorious Return and reign of our Lord Jesus Christ. At this time a vast federation of rulers and nations will unite in a passionate determination to prevent Christ from taking the reigns of world government.[7]

2:1-3 But such a federation will prove to be an exercise in futility. "Why," asks the psalmist, "do the Gentile nations and the Jewish people enter such a hopeless conspiracy? How do the Gentile kings and Jewish rulers think they can ever succeed in rebelling against the authority of the LORD and of His Anointed?"

2:4-6 God in the heavens shall laugh at their stupid insolence. He will mock their clenched fists and fiery slogans. Their boasts and threats are the squeaks of a mouse against a lion!

Eventually God will break His silence. When He speaks it will be in such wrath and fury that His enemies will be terrified. They will hear His irrevocable decision: "I have installed My King on My holy hill of Zion." Once God pronounces this decision, its fulfillment will be as certain as if it had already taken place.

2:7 Then Christ Himself will add His testimony. He will reveal that in private conversation, the Father had said first of all to Him, "You are My Son, today I have begotten You." This decree may be understood in at least four ways. First, there is a real sense in which Christ was the Son of God from all eternity. In Acts 13:33, however, the verse is quoted in reference to Christ's Incarnation. In a third sense, Christ was begotten in Resurrection —"the firstborn from the dead" (Col. 1:18). Finally, some suggest that "this day" refers to the future day when Christ will be crowned as King.

2:8 But the Father also added, "Ask of Me, and I will give You the nations for Your inheritance, and the ends of the earth for Your possession." In other words, God the Father has promised universal dominion to His Son. All the earth will submit to His authority, and His rule will extend from shore to shore.

2:9 Finally, God has given Christ the authority to deal with all insubordination and rebellion. He shall break ... with a rod of iron those who rise up against Him, shattering them like a potter's vessel. From other Scriptures we learn that Christ will exercise this authority both when He returns to earth and throughout His thousand-year reign. Prior to His inauguration as King, He will destroy those who do not know God and who do not obey the gospel. Then, in the Millennium, Christ will rule with a rod of iron, punishing rebellion wherever it raises its ugly head.

2:10, 11 The voice of the Holy Spirit is heard next. In a moving evangelistic appeal, He urges kings and rulers to love and serve the LORD.

To refuse Him means destruction, whereas to trust Him brings safety and true happiness.

2:12 For man to trust his Creator is the most sane, logical, reasonable thing he can do. On the other hand, to disbelieve and defy the Almighty is about as irrational a thing as a person can do.

Psalm 3: A Study In Moods

If we are subject to rapidly changing moods, we can take courage from the fact that David was too! In this Psalm he sweeps the scale from dark despair to calm confidence.

3:1, 2 At the outset David is overawed by his enemies. Their superior numbers strike terror to his heart. What is one among so many? Then too, he is stung by their taunting jibes. They insinuate that his sin has cut him off from any hope of divine help.

Verse 2 closes with the enigmatical word Selah. Since this is the first of its seventy-one occurrences in the Psalms, we pause to comment on it. Unfortunately, our remarks will be less an explanation than a confession of ignorance! The simple fact is that we do not know what the word means. All we can do is list some of the meanings that have been suggested and let the reader decide which seems best.

> Selah may mean to intensify voices or instrumental accompaniment; that is, to sing or play louder. Crescendo!
> It may indicate a pause or a rest, as if to say, "Stop and think about that."
>
> "It is rendered in the Septuagint by diapsalmos, which either means louder playing, forte, or more probably, an instrumental interlude."[8]
> Some think it means a repetition, like da capo.
> It may mean the end of a strophe (a musical section).
> It may even mean the bending of the body as an act of reverence or respect.

3:3 The mood of the Psalm changes in verse 3. David gets his eyes off his enemies and on the LORD, and that changes his whole outlook. Immediately he realizes that he has in Jehovah a shield, a source of glory, and the One who lifts up his head. As his shield, the Lord gives him complete protection from enemy assaults. As his glory, the Lord gives him honor, dignity and vindication in place of the shame, reproach and slander that were being heaped upon him. As the lifter of his head, the Lord encourages and exalts him.

3:4 Inspired by these great and true thoughts of God, David goes to the LORD in prayer and receives immediate assurance that his petition has been heard and answered. God answers from His holy hill, that is, from the site of the temple in Jerusalem, the place where He dwelt among His people.

3:5, 6 Assured of Jehovah's protection, the psalmist lies down and goes to sleep. It is the sweetest kind of sleep, a gift of God to those who trust Him in the midst of life's most distressing circumstances.

After a restful night, David awakes with the consciousness that it was the Lord who had calmed the nerves that were taut with fear and foreboding. Now he has courage to face his foes unafraid, even if he is surrounded by ten thousands of them!

3:7 But this does not mean that prayer is no longer necessary. The grace that sustained us last night will not do for today. We need a fresh supply of God's grace every day. So David comes to the Lord for continuing deliverance, believing that God will strike his enemies on the cheekbone and break their teeth.

3:8 As far as David is concerned, Jehovah is the only One who can deliver anyone; salvation belongs to the LORD alone. So he asks that God will bless His people by continuing to show them His marvelous deliverance.

The swirling emotions of this man of God can perhaps be better understood if we look at the heading of the Psalm once more:

"A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son."

The commander of David's enemies was his own son! It would have been bad enough if the adversaries were foreign invaders, but because they were led by David's rebel son, his grief and bitterness were compounded.

Psalm 4: God's Secret Tranquilizer

4:1 As David enters the Lord's presence, he addresses Him as God of my righteousness. This conveys the thought that the God of justice could be depended on to judge David righteously. Men may defame and blackball but God knows the true facts and will see that justice triumphs!

Then David adds, "You have relieved me in my distress." In Darby's New Translation this reads, "In pressure thou hast enlarged me." Ordinarily we think of pressure as reducing the compass or volume of its object, but God uses pressure to produce spiritual enlargement! Prosperity does little for us, but adversity produces growth and maturity. Spurgeon once said:

> I am afraid that all the grace I have got out of my comfortable and easy times and happy hours might almost lie on a penny. But the good that I have received from my sorrows and pains and griefs is altogether incalculable. What do I not owe to the hammer and the anvil, the fire and the file! Affliction is the best bit of furniture in my house.[9]

Remembering how God had answered his prayers in the past when he was under pressure, David feels free to ask God to hear him again.

4:2, 3 The immediate occasion for David's appeal can be deduced from verses 2-5. He was being maligned and slandered by unprincipled men. These carping critics were dragging his name in the mud, assassinating his character, and besmirching his reputation with baseless accusations and downright falsehood.

David asks them how long their mindless rage against him will continue, then reminds them that their efforts to overthrow him are futile because God Himself is on his side: "The LORD has set apart for Himself him who is godly." Those who trust in the Lord are as "the apple of His eye" (Zech. 2:8). Their names are engraved on the palms of His hands (Isa. 49:16). He hears them when they call and hastens to their assistance. David is thus anticipating Paul's argument in Romans 8:31: If God is for us, who can be successfully against us?

4:4 David's enemies should let their passions cool. If they must be angry, it should be in a righteous cause. The clause "Be angry and do not sin" is quoted in Ephesians 4:26, but there it is addressed to believers, reminding them that it is right to be angry in God's cause but never in one's own. Here in Psalm 4, of course, the words are spoken to wicked men to warn them against the overflow of anger into violent action. As they lie awake in the quietness of the night hours, they should search their own hearts and consider the stupidity of fighting against God. Such sober reflections would silence their slanderings and terminate their wicked plans.

4:5 In a bold evangelistic thrust, David counsels the wicked to combine practical righteousness with faith in the LORD. "Make justice your sacrifice" (Gelineau). But this can only be done by those who have put their trust in the LORD.

4:6 There are many who want prosperity and happiness. They are continually yearning to see some good. But the trouble is that they want blessing without the Blesser, and good without God. They want all the benefits of a Christ-filled life but they don't want the Benefactor.

In contrast to them, David goes straight to the Fountainhead of all good with the words, "LORD, lift up the light of Your countenance upon us."

4:7 His gladness in the Lord far exceeds the joy of the ungodly when their silos bulge with grain and their casks overflow with wine. "Never did rich harvests of corn and wine bring gladness like the gladness Thou puttest into my heart" (Knox).

4:8 Reassured of the Lord's all-sufficiency, the psalmist's inner agitation subsides. He can now lie down in peace and sleep, knowing that it is the LORD who makes him dwell in safety. What a change prayer has produced in only eight short verses!

Psalm 5: Morning Prayer

The heading of Psalm 5 reads:

To the chief musician; with flutes. A Psalm of David.

Since many of the Psalms have titles somewhat similar to this, we should mention again that many scholars believe that these superscriptions are part of the inspired text. In some versions of the Bible (following the original Hebrew), the titles are included as verse one. Some scholars think the headings actually belong at the end of each preceding Psalm, but the evidence for this is not convincing. The big problem with these titles is that the meanings are often obscure. In Psalm 5, they indicate the instrumental accompaniment, but in other cases they might indicate the tune of another song to which the Psalm can be sung. Psalm 57, for example, reads in the superscription, "Set to Do Not Destroy." This may have been the name of a well-known song at that time. Occasionally, the meaning is so doubtful that the NKJ translators decided to transliterate the Hebrew words. Psalm 16, for instance, reads "A Michtam[10] of David." Fortunately for us, our enjoyment of a Psalm does not depend on our full understanding of its title.

Psalm 5 is a morning prayer in which David reflects on God's contrasting attitudes toward the righteous and the wicked.

5:1, 2 At the outset he asks God to hear not only his words but consider his meditation as well. It is a valid request. The Holy Spirit can interpret our meditations just as easily as the words we speak.

The psalmist asks God to hear not only his meditations, but also the sound of his cry. This may mean more than the mere words; it suggests the very intonation, the deep, earnest pitch of the voice.

In addressing the Lord as "my King and my God," David reveals the warm, personal, intimate relationship he enjoyed with the Lord. In the words, "for to You I will pray," he shows that the true God was the only One to whom he prayed—"to You and to You alone." The relationship was not only possessive, but exclusive as well.

5:3 David's prayers were not spasmodic but regular. Every morning the Lord heard his voice. Every morning the man of God prepared a sacrifice of praise and prayer and watched for the Lord to reveal Himself during the day. Too often we do not watch for God's responses. "We miss many answers," said F. B. Meyer, "because we get tired of waiting on the docks for the returning ships."

5:4-6 Always aware of his enemies, David's confidence in prayer is strengthened by remembering God's holiness and righteousness. Believers have an inside track to the throne of grace. Not so the ungodly. God cannot be tolerantly pleased with any form of wickedness. Evil cannot be His overnight guest. The boastful are not favored with an audience before this King. He hates all evildoers—a truth that punctures the prevalent myth that God is all love and therefore incapable of hatred! God's holiness demands that He punish all liars and abhor all murderers and deceivers.

5:7 In contrast to his wicked adversaries, David had instant access into the presence of the Lord through the multitude of God's unfailing mercy or grace. In a spirit of deep reverence, David worshiped, like all godly Jews, facing the holy temple. Since the actual temple was not built until after David's death, the word here must refer to the tabernacle, as it does in 1 Samuel 1:9; 3:3 and 2 Samuel 22:7.

5:8 Harassed as he is by enemies, David asks the Lord to display His justice by leading him safely through the surrounding danger and making his pathway crystal clear.

5:9 Next the psalmist introduces strong reasons why God should vindicate His righteous servant and punish the wicked enemies. You can't believe a word they say. Their inward lives, their thoughts and motives, are utterly corrupt and bent on destruction. Their throat is like an open tomb, stinking with corruption and ready to devour their victims. They are inveterate and insincere flatterers.

5:10 Their doom is just. They should be made to bear their guilt. Their evil schemes should be made to boomerang on themselves. Their innumerable transgressions demand their eviction. Their crowning sin is that they have rebelled against the Lord God.

5:11, 12 But while God deals with His enemies in judgment, may His friends always have reason to rejoice and shout for joy as they find Him to be their Refuge, strong and sure. May all who love Jehovah magnify Him as their unfailing Defender! No question about it—God does favor the righteous man; He will surround him with grace like a protective shield.

Psalm 6: Double Trouble

It was bad enough to be racked with a serious illness, but David's grief was compounded by the tormenting pressure of his opponents. Perhaps they were gloating that his condition was hopeless.

6:1 David interpreted his sickness as a stroke of God brought on by some sin. We commonly do this ourselves; often it is the first thought that crosses our mind. And this diagnosis is sometimes correct: some illnesses are indeed caused by unconfessed sin in the believer's life (1 Cor. 11:30). But this is by no means always the case. God often permits illness as a springboard for the display of His power and glory (John 9:3; 11:4), or as a means of producing spiritual fruit (Rom. 5:3), or to prevent sin (2 Cor. 12:7), or as a natural result of overwork (Phil. 2:30) or old age (Eccl. 12:3-6).

Whenever sickness strikes, the first thing we should do is to make sure that we have no unconfessed sin in our life. Then we should ask the Lord to work out His purpose in the illness and to heal us. After that it is proper to resort to a physician and to the use of medicine, but we must be careful that our trust is in the Lord and not in the means that He uses (2 Chron. 16:12). All healing is from the Lord, whether miraculous or ordinary. If in any particular case He does not choose to heal, then He will give grace for suffering or for dying. Ordinarily we do not get dying grace until we need it.

6:2, 3 The psalmist was vocal and articulate in his plea for healing. He was wasting away. His bones pained him continually. Even his whole inner life—his emotions, intellect and will—were affected. But it seemed that the LORD was slow in responding. How long would it be before He would graciously heal the sufferer?

6:4 David asks the Lord to turn from what seems to be an attitude of indifference, and to save his life from sickness and death. His only claim to deliverance from misery is the steadfast mercy of Jehovah.

6:5 Then follows an unusual argument for healing, namely, that if David should die, it would be no advantage to God. As long as he is alive, he can remember the Lord and praise Him. But if he dies, God would be forgotten. The body without the spirit would not be able to give Him thanks.

The argument has a certain validity as far as the body is concerned, for a corpse is devoid of memory and of the power to praise. But as far as the spirit and soul are concerned, the argument reflects the limited knowledge which OT saints possessed of life beyond death. Thanks to the fuller revelation which Christ brought, we now know that when a believer dies, he leaves his earthly body and departs to be with Christ, which is far better (Phil. 1:23). He is away from the body and at home with the Lord (2 Cor. 5:8). So the believer does not go into a limbo of soul-sleep, but is consciously in the presence of the Lord, praising and worshiping Him.

It must be said in David's favor that he made wonderful use of the light that he had, weaving it into the fabric of his prayers. If our prayers made as good use of the superior light we have, what paragons of praise and petition they would be!

6:6, 7 We get some idea of the depth of the psalmist's misery by his description of his condition. He was utterly worn out with moaning and groaning. All night he soaked his pillow with his crying and drenched his couch with his tears. His eyes had become sunken due to his profound grief, and vision was fading because of the oppression of all his enemies. It seemed that his life was filled to overflowing with trouble and that he could stand no more.

6:8-10 But prayer changes things. By the secret, mysterious communication of the Spirit, the assurance comes to him that the LORD has heard the sound of his weeping and that his prayer has been answered. Strengthened by this assurance, he orders his enemies to disperse. He is no longer cowed by their threat because he realizes that they will go suddenly down to shameful defeat when the Lord rises up to punish them.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all—the distant and the near—
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong
Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are sometimes overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us in prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?
—Richard Chenevix Trench

Psalm 7: The Cry of the Oppressed

The Hebrew title identifies this as a Shiggaion of David, which he sang to the LORD concerning the words of Cush, a Benjamite. F. W. Grant writes that the word shiggaion implies a wandering ode or a loud, enthusiastic hymn, in which the writer is carried away with his enthusiasm.

Cush, the subject of the ode, was from the same tribe as Saul and was probably one of his lieutenants. In any case he was a malicious foe of David. The NKJV translates shiggaion as a meditation.

7:1, 2 In a passionate appeal David prays for deliverance from his pursuers. Otherwise he will be like a helpless lamb, attacked by a lion and dragged off, limp and lifeless.

7:3-5 Cush was obviously accusing David of a long list of crimes, probably including attempts on Saul's life and raids on the king's supply bases. But David protests his innocence. He was not guilty of the charges. His hands had not plundered. He had not taken vengeance on the king, even when he had had the opportunity to do so. If he had actually done these things, then he was willing to face the music—to be hunted, captured, struck down and killed.

7:6-8 But since it wasn't so, he boldly calls on the LORD to arise in His anger, punish the enemies and vindicate the innocent. He pictures God calling a great trial to order. A huge throng of people are gathered in the courtroom. Jehovah sits on the bench and judges the peoples. All David asks is that he be judged according to his own righteousness and integrity. This may sound like the height of conceit, but we must remember that David is not claiming absolute righteousness in every area of his life—only in regard to those accusations that were being hurled against him.

7:9-11 Verse 9 voices the age-long cry of God's oppressed people. Every devout heart pants for the day when the reign of evil will be ended and the just will inherit the earth. That day will come when Christ returns to set up His kingdom. In the meantime, the righteous God who knows man's thoughts and motives is the shield or protector of the upright and the righteous judge who is angry with the wicked every day.

7:12, 13 God has a well-stocked armory. Unless the wicked repents, He will sharpen His sword and tighten His bow to shoot arrows barbed with fire. All God's weapons are deadly ones!

7:14-16 In the end, David is confident that his enemy will reap what he has sowed. His sin will follow the familiar course of conception, pregnancy, birth, and death. The enemy first conceives a plot to destroy the psalmist. Soon he is bulging with wicked ideas. Then he brings to birth his treacherous scheme. But it backfires on himself. He falls into his own trap, and all the trouble and violence he had mapped out for the psalmist recoils on his own crown (head) by an inexplicable irony of circumstances.

7:17 This even-handed justice prompts David to lift his heart to the LORD in thanksgiving and to sing praise to the name of the LORD Most High.

Psalm 8: What Is Man?

God is indescribably great. Man, by contrast, is pathetically tiny. Yet God has conferred tremendous glory and honor upon man. The wonder of this fact brings forth an eloquent gasp from David.

8:1 The majesty of the LORD is evident in all creation, if a person only has eyes to see it. Every area of natural science teems with evidences of the wisdom and power of the Creator. God's glory is higher than the heavens. The planets, the stars, the limitless universe give only a partial view of how very great God really is. Yet sophisticated men shrug off the evidence as if it didn't exist.

8:2 But infants in their innocent faith chant God's greatness in their simple hymns. It is exactly as Christ Himself declared: God has hidden these things from the wise and understanding and has revealed them to babes (Matt. 11:25).

Whether we think of babes in a literal way or as those disciples of the Lord who have childlike faith in Him, it is still true that they form a bulwark for the Lord because of His enemies. They can often silence an enemy of God through an innocent question or a naive observation. Just as it takes only a small pin to prick a large balloon, so these homespun followers of the Lamb often bring low the lofty pretensions of those who deny God's hand in creation and providence!

8:3 No branch of science proclaims God's greatness and man's insignificance more eloquently than astronomy. The simple fact that distances must be reckoned in light-years (the distance that light travels in a year) illustrates the point. Light travels 186,000 miles per second, and there are 31.5 million seconds in a year, so light travels roughly six trillion miles in a single year! Yet some stars are billions of light-years from the earth. No wonder we call such computation astronomical.

To gaze into the heavens at night should give us great thoughts about God. The moon and the stars are the work of His fingers! When we think of the numberless myriads of stars, of the vast distances in the universe, and of the power that holds the planets in orbit with mathematical precision, it boggles the mind.

8:4 Relatively speaking, the planet earth is a speck of dust in the universe. If this is so, what is a single man perched upon this planet? Yet God is interested in every individual! He has a personal, intimate concern for every human being.

8:5 God made man in His own image and after His own likeness. Though lower than God,[11] man shares with Him some faculties that are not shared by any other order of creation on earth. Everything God made was pronounced to be good, but the verdict on the creation of man was "very good."

8:6-8 As God's representative on earth, man was given dominion over all kinds of animals, birds, fish, and reptiles. There was nothing that was not put under him.

But the writer to the Hebrews reminds us that we do not see man enjoying this undisputed sway at the present time (Heb. 2:5-9). Dogs bark at man, snakes bite him, birds and fish elude him. The explanation is that when sin entered the world through Adam, man lost his unqualified sovereignty over the lower creation.

Yet God's purpose still stands. He has decreed that man shall indeed have dominion, and nothing can block God's purposes. So while we do not see all things subject to man right now, we do see Jesus—the one Person by whom man's dominion will eventually be restored. When Christ came to earth, He became temporarily lower than the angels so that as Man He could die for the human race. Now He is crowned with glory and honor at God's right hand. Someday Christ the Son of Man will return to earth to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. In the Millennium, the dominion that was forfeited by the first Adam will be restored by the Last Adam.

8:9 Then God's redeemed people will join to sing with new appreciation, "O LORD, our Lord, how excellent is Your name in all the earth!"

Psalm 9: The Day of Retribution

If the inscription in the Chaldee Version is correct, David is here celebrating his victory over Goliath. But he is obviously looking beyond this triumph to God's final victory over His enemies. The Psalm is an acrostic, based on the first half of the Hebrew alphabet.[12]

9:1, 2 The sweet singer of Israel is ecstatic over all God's marvelous works. Here he is not thinking so much of His deeds in creation or redemption but of His spectacular feats in crushing the nation's foes. David gives all the glory to God—none to himself and none to man's weapons or skill. With every fiber of his being he honors and magnifies the name of the Most High. The example of his love and devotion to the Lord makes many of us realize how cold and unresponsive we often are.

9:3, 4 Then he reminisces about God's epic battle, though the final fulfillment of his words will not come to pass until the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. One sight of Him will cause the enemies to turn back and flee. They shall fall in panicky disarray and perish before they can escape. The righteous will be vindicated in that day by the King on His glorious throne. Finally the earth will taste what righteous judgment is really like.

9:5, 6 Gentile oppressors will be sharply rebuked, and all Israel's enemies will sink into perpetual oblivion. They will be buried in the ruins of their vaunted civilization. Cities that now seem to be timeless will be completely uprooted. Names like Washington, Moscow, or Ottawa will be forgotten forever.

9:7, 8 The adversaries will all be gone, but the LORD shall endure forever, as righteous and trustworthy as He has always been. Resplendent in glory on His throne, He will rule the world in absolute righteousness. Everyone will get a square deal from Him. Paul used the first part of verse 8 in his message at Athens, explaining that the active Agent in this future judgment will be the risen Lord Jesus Christ:

> Truly, these times of ignorance God overlooked, but now commands all men everywhere to repent, because He has appointed a day on which He will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained. He has given assurance of this to all by raising Him from the dead (Acts 17:30, 31).

9:9, 10 Earth's oppressed masses will find Him to be their high tower and unfailing refuge. All who know Him will put their trust in Him, realizing that He has never disappointed the confidence of His people.

9:11, 12 Israel will not only sing praises to the LORD but she will also fulfill a missionary role to the Gentile people, rehearsing the wonderful deliverances of the Lord and pointing out that He who avenges the blood of His people was not indifferent to their sufferings after all—that their prayers did not go unanswered.

9:13, 14 But millennial conditions have not yet come. Verses 13 and 14 bring us back with a jolt to the distressing present! David still needs God's mercy to protect him from the enemy, so that the gates of Zion will again echo to his happy songs of praise.

9:15 Then he leaps forward once more to the time when the anti-Semitic nations will fall into the pit which they dug for the Jews and be trampled in the net which they intended for God's ancient people. It is history repeating itself—another instance of Haman being hanged on the gallows he made for Mordecai.

9:16 Once again the LORD will reveal Himself as the One who evens the score by causing the ungodly to reap what they have sown. God is not mocked. The meaning of "Selah" is uncertain. It may mean an intensification (see notes on Psalm 3).

9:17 When David says that the wicked shall be turned into hell (Heb., Sheol), he does not restrict the word to the disembodied state or to the grave. Here the context demands that it mean hell itself. This is the fate of all the nations that forget God.

9:18 Equally certain is the fact that the needy shall not always be forgotten. As Knox translates, "The patience of the afflicted will not go for nothing." All that they hoped for will be fulfilled in that Millennial day.

9:19, 20 David's thoughts of the coming reign of righteousness arouse longings for its arrival. The prayer is born that the LORD will arise to foil man's plans and to judge the nations. As they stand in the presence of the Almighty Judge, they will realize in terror what puny, mortal men they really are.

Psalm 10: Public Enemy Number One

Here the psalmist employs an acrostic based on the second half of the Hebrew alphabet[13] to describe the supreme villain. Since this "Public Enemy Number One" seems to be the very embodiment of sin, we naturally link him with the "Man of Sin" who will arise at the beginning of the seven-year Tribulation Period. This "son of perdition" will oppose and exalt himself against every so-called god or object of worship. Taking his seat in the temple of God in Jerusalem, he will proclaim himself to be God (2 Thess. 2:3, 4). Those who refuse to worship him will suffer economic sanctions, persecution and even death.

The Silence of God (10:1)

As the Psalm opens we find the question that comes to all of us sooner or later: Why does the LORD remain silent while the innocent suffer and the wicked reign unchallenged? It is mysteries like this that call our faith into action, that encourage us to trust when we cannot understand, and that challenge us to endure to the end.

The Prayer of the Oppressed (10:2)

In their insufferable arrogance, wicked men relentlessly hunt down the helpless saints. What could be more fitting for them than to suffer the very fate they had devised for the righteous?

The Profile of the Enemy (10:3-11)

10:3, 4 It is typical for the wicked to boast about all the things he plans to do. In his mad craze to get rich he blasphemes and renounces the LORD, for to worship gold is to repudiate God. His lifestyle is one of self-sufficiency. He feels no need for God and lives as if He never existed.

10:5, 6 Everything seems to go his way; somehow he escapes the troubles that dog the rest of mankind. The guidelines which God has established for His own people are far beyond the wicked man; he cannot understand spiritual truths or divine principles. He sneers at all his enemies with utter contempt; nothing is ever going to disturb his security, he thinks. As long as he lives he will enjoy a trouble-free existence.

10:7, 8 Whenever he is around, you can expect the air to be blue with profanity. If he's not deceiving someone, he's probably browbeating someone else! He never seems to talk about anything constructive; it's always about crime and destruction. Like the other gangsters, he waits in unpatrolled, lurking places to ambush the innocent; when they walk past, he guns them down. He is always on the lookout for the unsuspecting and the helpless.

10:9-11 Like a lion in his den, he is poised ready to pounce on his prey. Like a hunter, he lures the victims into his net, whether of blackmail, extortion, bribery, servitude, or death. The unfortunate victim is overwhelmed—felled by the enormous power of the criminal. In his despair he feels that God has forgotten him, that He is looking in another direction and will never see the predicament of His child.

The Cry of the Faithful (10:12-18)

10:12, 13 But now it is time for the LORD to act by lifting His hand in judgment on the oppressor and in mercy on the afflicted. Why should the forces of evil be allowed to continue in their godlessness and irreligion? Why should they be encouraged to think that God will never demand an account for their crimes?

10:14, 15 God does see. He keeps a careful score of every act of injustice and wrong, so that He can repay in full in a coming day. So it is not in vain that the helpless commits himself to God. Has God not proved Himself to be the orphan's friend? The Lord will hear the cry of the faithful by breaking the arm of the wicked and by exposing his wickedness until every last vestige is punished.

10:16 That day of vengeance will arrive when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our LORD and of His Christ. Then the wicked and persecuting nations will have perished, as foretold by Isaiah:

> Behold, all those who were incensed against you shall be ashamed and disgraced; they shall be as nothing, and those who strive with you shall perish. You shall seek them and not find them—those who contended with you. Those who war against you shall be as nothing, as a nonexistent thing. For I, the Lord your God, will hold your right hand, saying to you, "Fear not, I will help you" (Isa. 41:11-13).

10:17, 18 We can be fully assured that the LORD will hear and answer the prayers of the humble. He will give them grace for every trial and will bend low to see that justice is the lot of the fatherless and the oppressed. The day is coming, praise God, when the man of the earth will oppress the poor and defenseless no more!

Psalm 11: Why Flee When You Can Trust?

Psalm 11 is an antidote for gloomy headlines. When the news is all bad—wars, violence, crime, corruption and political unrest—David reminds us that we can rise above the circumstances of life by keeping our eyes on the Lord.

It seems that when David had opened his front door, a frenzied visitor had burst in. His face was pale and drawn, his eyes were popping with excitement and his lips were quivering. In jerky, breathless gasps he told of imminent disaster and advised David to head for the hills. This Psalm is David's answer to the pessimistic visitor's counsel of despair and discouragement.

11:1-3 David first states his simple trust in the LORD as his refuge: "Why flee when you can trust?" Then he reproaches Calamity Charlie for seeking to disturb his peace. Notice that the text from verse 1b through verse 3 contains the words of the gloom peddler. It begins with "Flee as a bird to your mountain." He had said to David, in effect, "You are as insignificant and defenseless as a little bird. The best thing you can do is escape. Criminals now have the upper hand, and they are armed to the teeth, ready to gun down decent, law-abiding citizens. Law and order have vanished and the foundations of society are crumbling. This being so, what hope do you think there is for a righteous person like you?"

11:4-6 What hope? Why, the LORD, or course! The LORD is in His holy temple, and nothing can stop the fulfillment of His plans! His throne is in heaven, unmoved and unmovable, no matter what kingdoms on earth may rise or fall. Though nothing can disturb God's poise and serenity, He is nevertheless concerned about the doings of the sons of men. He not only sees what happens but constantly makes value judgments about the righteous and the wicked. Although God is infinite love, His soul hates men who practice violence. He will rain down a storm of judgment on them; the rain will be coals of fire and brimstone and the wind will be scorching heat.

11:7 Just as God hates the violent man, so He loves the righteous. God Himself is righteous and He loves righteousness. The ultimate reward of the upright will be to stand in God's presence.

So we need not get all upset over the headlines. The waves of adverse circumstances may seem to be against us at any particular time, but the tide of God's irresistible purpose is sure to win in the end.

He everywhere hath sway, and all things serve His might;

His every act pure blessing is, His path unsullied light.

We comprehend Him not, yet earth and heaven tell

God sits as sovereign on the throne and ruleth all things well.

Psalm 12: The Words of Men - and of God

12:1 The general decline of faithfulness among men, especially in their speech, evokes the prayer of verse 1:

Lord, come to my rescue; piety is dead; in a base world, true hearts have gone rare (Knox)

12:2 Three specific charges are then leveled against the faithless generation:

Lies—They are guilty not only of blatant forms of deceit, but of white lies, half-truths, exaggerations and broken promises.*

Flattery—They heap insincere compliments on others. Praise is not the same as flattery; it only becomes flattery when it ascribes virtues to a person which he is known not to possess. And flattery usually has some sinister or selfish motive.*

Two-facedness—They think one thing and say something quite different. Like Machiavelli, they practice duplicity and intrigue.*

12:3, 4 The age-long sigh of God's true saints is that the LORD Himself will silence the ungodly's flattering lips—that He will immobilize the tongues of those who boast that their principles will prevail, that they have full freedom to say whatever they want, regardless of what anybody thinks.

12:5, 6 In response to the groan of the poor and needy, the LORD promises to arise and "grant them the salvation for which they thirst" (Gelineau). And what He has promised He will surely perform. His promises are pure ... , like silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times—in other words, like the purest silver known. There is no deceit, no flattery, no double meaning, no error in God's words. They can be fully trusted.

12:7 So the believer instinctively turns to the LORD for protection from this generation—protection not only from its attacks but from any form of compromise or complicity with it.

12:8 The last verse is a description of "this generation"—the wicked generation which is continually on the prowl, exalting vileness and scoffing at virtue. It is the same generation described in Proverbs 30:11-14:

> There is a generation that curses its father, and does not bless its mother. There is a generation that is pure in its own eyes, yet is not washed from its filthiness. There is a generation—oh, how lofty are their eyes! And their eyelids are lifted up. There is a generation whose teeth are like swords, and whose fangs are like knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.

Psalm 13: How Long?

Four times the words formed on David's lips—"How long?" Pursued hotly by the enemy (perhaps Saul), David wondered what was delaying the chariot of God. Would help never come to free him from the four terrible burdens that were crushing him?

He felt as if God had forgotten him.

He considered himself cut off from the Lord's favor.

He experienced deep depression in his soul daily.

He suffered the constant humiliation of being on the losing side.

13:1-4 God must take note of David's plight and send help quickly in order to avert two disasters. The first would be David's death and the second would be the jubilant boasting of his enemy. Unless the Lord acted quickly to restore the sparkle to David's eyes, they would soon be closed forever in death. Unless Jehovah turned the tide, the enemies would soon be boasting that they had won—that David was thoroughly trounced.

13:5, 6 Now there is no doubt as to the outcome. The psalmist believes that the answer is on the way. Trusting in the mercy of the Lord, he knows that he will live to celebrate deliverance from his adversary. In anticipation of this salvation, he can sing praises to the LORD for His boundless lovingkindness.

This Psalm is like many of our God-sent testings: they begin with a sigh but end with a song!

Psalm 14: The Fool's Creed

14:1 The creed of the fool is "There is no God." He does not want there to be a God, therefore he denies the existence of God. It is an irrational position to take. First of all, it is a claim to omniscience; it says, "I know everything. It is not possible that a God could exist beyond the boundaries of my knowledge." Second, this attitude claims omnipresence; it says, "I am present in all places at one and the same time, and it is not possible that God could exist any place in the universe without my knowing it." Again, this position ignores the wonders of God in creation—the immensity of the universe, the amazingly precise movement of the planets, the marvelous suitability of the earth to sustain life, the intricate design of the human body, the fantastic complexity of the human brain and the extraordinary properties of water and soil.

Take for instance the suitability of the earth to sustain life. Henry Bosch has pointed out the following instances of God's careful and marvelous design:

> The earth rotates on its axis at approximately 1000 miles per hour. If that had been 100 miles per hour, our days and nights would be ten times longer, and our planet would alternately burn and freeze. Under such circumstances vegetation could not live!
> If the earth were as small as the moon, the power of gravity would be too weak to retain sufficient atmosphere for man's needs; but if it were as large as Jupiter, Saturn, or Uranus, extreme gravitation would make human movement almost impossible. If we were as near to the sun as Venus, the heat would be unbearable; if we were as far away as Mars, we would experience snow and ice every night, even in the warmest regions. If the oceans were half their present dimensions, we would receive only one-fourth the rainfall we do now. If they were one-eighth larger, our annual precipitation would increase fourfold, and this earth would become a vast, uninhabitable swamp.

Water solidifies at 32 degrees above zero [°F]. It would be disastrous if the oceans froze at that temperature, however, for then the amount of thawing in the polar regions would not balance out, and ice would accumulate throughout the centuries! To prevent such a catastrophe, the Lord put salt in the sea to alter its freezing point.[14]

The possibility that all this happened by chance is too small to warrant consideration. That is why the Bible says that atheists are fools. They are moral fools. It is not a question of their intelligence quotient but of their morality quotient.

God's verdict on these fools is that they are corrupt in themselves and that they act abominably. There is a close connection between a man's creed and his conduct. The lower his conception of God, the lower his morals are apt to be. Either as cause or consequence, atheism and agnosticism are linked with a corrupt life. Barnes writes:

The belief that there is no God is commonly founded on the desire to lead a wicked life, or is embraced by those who in fact live such a life, with a desire to sustain themselves in their depravity and to avoid the fear of future retribution.[15]

14:2, 3 When the LORD looks down from heaven to see if any of Adam's descendants act wisely by seeking after God, His findings are dismal. By nature and by practice, man is a sinner. If left to himself, he would never seek after God. It is only through the ministry of the Holy Spirit that men become aware of their need for God and His salvation.

Paul quotes from the first three verses of this Psalm in Romans 3:10-12 to show that sin has affected all mankind and every part of everyone's being. Here in the Psalm, David is not thinking of the whole human race, although the description would certainly be true; rather, he is thinking of outright God-deniers in contrast to the righteous. It is these infidels who have apostatized from the true and living God. They are morally corrupt. God Himself cannot find one of them who does good, no, not one.

14:4 Their ignorance is apparent in the way they treat God's people. If they realized how God defends the poor and punishes sin, they would never devour believers as if it were a legitimate, everyday thing, like eating bread! If they knew the goodness and severity of God, they would not go through life without praying.

14:5, 6 When the Lord takes the part of the innocent, the unrighteous will be greatly terrified. They had always mocked the poor for their simple faith, but now they will see that the God they denied is the refuge of His own.

14:7 It will be a great day when the Messiah comes out of Zion to deliver His people. Israel's joy will be unbounded when Christ's Jewish saints are fully and finally rescued from captivity among the nations that deny the only true God.

Psalm 15: The Man God Chooses

15:1 The individual God chooses as His companion is the subject of Psalm 15. Although it does not say so in this Psalm, the basic qualification for entrance into God's kingdom is to be born again. Apart from the new birth, no one can see or enter the kingdom. This birth from above is experienced by grace, through faith, and takes place completely apart from any meritorious works on man's part.

Taken by itself, the Psalm seems to imply that salvation is somehow connected with a man's righteous character or noble deeds. But taken with the rest of Scripture, it can only mean that the kind of faith that saves is the same kind of faith that results in a life of holiness. Like James in his Epistle, David is here saying that genuine faith in the Lord results in the kind of good works described in this Psalm.

Incidentally, the Psalm does not profess to give a complete catalog of the virtues of the citizen of Zion. The portrait is suggestive but certainly not exhaustive.

15:2 First of all, the citizen of Zion walks with integrity. The man of integrity is a man of moral soundness. He is complete, well-rounded, and balanced.

Second, the citizen of Zion does what is right. He is careful to maintain a conscience that is void of offense. He would rather go to heaven with a good conscience than stay on earth with a bad one.

You can depend on this man to tell the truth from his heart. He would rather die than lie. His word is his bond. His yes means yes and his no means no.

15:3 He ... does not backbite with his tongue. You won't find him gossiping about others. Slander and mud-slinging never get past his lips. He disciplines his tongue to edify instead of assassinate!

He does no evil to his neighbor. His whole desire is to help, to encourage and to instruct. When he hears some juicy tidbit of scandal about his friend, he lets it die right there. Depend on him not to repeat it to anyone.

15:4 Moral distinctions are not blurred in his vision. He discerns between sin and righteousness, darkness and light, evil and good. He despises a vile person in the sense that he outspokenly witnesses against his ungodliness. On the other hand, he identifies himself in open approval with everyone in the household of faith.

Once he has made a promise, he stands by it, even if it results in financial loss. A believer, for example, might agree to sell his house for $85,000. But before the papers are signed, he finds he could have sold the house to a large development company for $90,000. But he has given his word to the first buyer—and he keeps his contract.

15:5 The friend of God does not put out his money at interest, that is, to another member of God's family. Under the law of Moses, an Israelite could lend to Gentiles at interest (Deut. 23:19, 20) but was forbidden to do so to a fellow Jew (Ex. 22:25; Lev. 25:35-37).

If Jews living under law were guided by this principle, how much more so should Christians living under grace!

Finally, the righteous man does not take a bribe against the innocent. He hates the perversion of justice, and disproves the old saying that "everybody has his price."

This then is the type of person who lives for God in time and for eternity. Come to think of it, no one else would be comfortable in God's presence!

Psalm 16: Christ Arose!

The key to understanding Psalm 16 is found in Acts 2:25-28 where Peter quotes verses 8-11a as referring to the Resurrection of Christ. Let us put the key in the door, then, and listen as our wonderful Savior prays to His Father immediately prior to His death.

16:1, 2 As the perfect Man, completely dependent on God, Christ cries out for preservation to the One who is His only refuge. Throughout His thirty years of life on earth, the Savior not only acknowledged God as His Lord but joyfully confessed God as the absorbing passion of His life. The words "My goodness is nothing apart from You" are not a denial of the Savior's sinlessness, but are simply a moving testimony that Christ found all His sufficiency in God. This testimony is comparable to the worship of Psalm 73:25: "Whom have I in heaven but You? And there is none upon earth that I desire besides You."

16:3 The centrality of God in Messiah's life does not, however, exclude a deep regard for the saints in the land. In fact, the two are vitally connected: to love God is to love His people (1 John 5:1, 2). The Lord Jesus considers His saints the nobility of the earth, the people in whom He finds all His delight. Consider a similar testimony by an old saint of God:

> From the first day I set off until the present hour, I have been as highly favored as a mortal and sinful being can well be. My fellowship has been with the excellent of the earth, and every one of them striving to the utmost of his power to show me kindness for the Lord's sake.[16]

16:4 Standing in stark contrast to the true worshipers of God are people who worship another god. Idolatry inevitably brings a train of sorrows into the lives of its devotees. Perhaps one of the greatest judgments on idolaters is that they become like the thing they worship. The holy Son of God disavows any fellowship with their drink offerings of blood. He will, in fact, not even mention their names in any way that might suggest tolerance toward them or toward their heathen rites.

16:5, 6 As for His personal life, Christ's chosen portion and cup is the LORD. All His wealth and enjoyment rest in God. It is the Lord who guards the boundaries of His inheritance. As He thinks of how wisely and wonderfully the Father has planned every detail of His life, He compares it to a pleasant estate in a magnificent setting, and to an inheritance that is comprised entirely of good things. If we are living in fellowship with God, we too can praise Him for the ordering of our lives. When we complain, we betray a lack of confidence in God's wisdom, love and power.

16:7 Here Christ praises the LORD for the faithful way He has provided guidance and counsel throughout all His life. Even during hours of sleeplessness, as He prayed and meditated on God's Word, His heart had instructed Him. Far from being wasted, the time was sanctified to His comfort and blessing. How often has Christ's experience been duplicated in the lives of God's people!

For many a rapturous minstrel
Among those sons of light
Will say of his sweetest music,
"I learned it in the night."
And many a rolling anthem
That fills the Father's home
Sobbed out its first rehearsal
In the shade of a darkened room.

The remaining verses of Psalm 16 were quoted by Peter on the Day of Pentecost as referring to the Resurrection of Christ:

> For David says concerning Him: "I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for He is at my right hand, that I may not be shaken. Therefore my heart rejoiced, and my tongue was glad; moreover my flesh also will rest in hope. For You will not leave my soul in Hades, nor will You allow Your Holy One to see corruption. You have made known to me the ways of life; You will make me full of joy in Your presence."
> Men and brethren, let me speak freely to you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his tomb is with us to this day. Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his body, according to the flesh, He would raise up the Christ to sit on his throne, he, foreseeing this, spoke concerning the resurrection of the Christ, that His soul was not left in Hades, nor did His flesh see corruption. This Jesus God has raised up, of which we are all witnesses. Therefore being exalted to the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He poured out this which you now see and hear (Acts 2:25-33).

Now notice the points that Peter made (most of which we ourselves would never have gathered from the passage):

First, David was speaking of Christ (v. 25). David could not have been speaking about himself, since his body is still in a tomb in Jerusalem.

As a prophet, the psalmist knew that God would raise up Christ prior to the time He would reign upon His throne.

David therefore predicted that God would not allow Christ's soul to remain in Hades, nor would He allow Christ's body to decompose.

God did indeed raise up Christ, and what happened on the Day of Pentecost was the result of His glorification at God's right hand.

With this introduction in mind, let us now look at the closing verses of this Psalm.

16:8 First of all, Messiah asserts without any equivocation that He has kept the LORD always before Him. Jehovah has been the One for whom He lived. He has never done anything in self-will; everything has been done in obedience to His Father's will.

Because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. In Scripture the right hand speaks of:

Power (Ps. 89:13)

Safety (Ps. 20:6)

Honor (Ps. 45:9; 110:1)

Pleasure (Ps. 16:11)

Favor (Ps. 80:17)

Support (Ps. 18:35).

Here it speaks of safety and security.

16:9, 10 Assured of God's constant care and protection, the Savior faces the future with confidence. His heart is glad. His soul rejoices and His body is safe. He knows that God will not leave His soul in Sheol or allow His body to see corruption. In other words, Christ will be raised from the dead.

The reference to Sheol needs a word of explanation. It is the word used in the OT for the grave, for the "netherworld," and to describe the disembodied state. It is equivalent to the NT Greek word "Hades." Sheol did not so much indicate a geographical location as the condition of the dead—the separation of the personality from the body. It was used to describe the condition of everyone who died, whether believer or unbeliever. On the other hand the NT equivalent, Hades, is used only of unbelievers. Sheol was a very indefinite, imprecise word. It did not convey a clear picture of life after death. In fact, it expressed more of uncertainty than of knowledge.

In the NT, all that is changed. Christ has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel (2 Tim. 1:10). Today we know that when an unbeliever dies, his spirit and soul are in a state of suffering called Hades (Luke 16:23), while his body goes to the grave. The spirit and soul of the believer go to be with Christ in heaven (2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23), while his earthly body goes to the grave.

When the Savior said " ... You will not leave my soul in Sheol," He revealed His foreknowledge that God would not allow Him to remain in the disembodied state. Though He entered Sheol, He did not remain there.

God did not allow the usual process of decomposition to take place. By a miracle of preservation, Christ's lifeless body was kept from corruption for three days and nights.

16:11 In the final verse, our blessed Lord has complete confidence that God will show Him the path of life—the path from death back to life again. This path would ultimately lead Him back to heaven, to God's presence. There He would experience fullness of joy and pleasures forevermore.

Psalm 17: The Perennial Puzzle

When we do wrong and suffer for it, our own consciences tell us that our punishment is just. But it's another story when our suffering is unrelated to any wrong we have done! This kind of suffering—the "suffering for righteousness sake," as Peter calls it—is a perennial puzzle to the child of God.

David knew his share of it. But he also knew what to do about it. He took his case to the Righteous Judge. There he was confident of a fair trial.

At times David seems to be defending himself in a giant ego-trip. He loudly protests his righteousness, integrity and obedience. It almost sounds as if he has reached a state of sinless perfection. But this is really not the case at all. David is not claiming guiltlessness in all areas of his life, but simply in the present circumstances. He is saying that he did not do anything to provoke the current hostility of his foes.

We might paraphrase David's case as follows:

17:1, 2 "LORD, I ask you to hear my cause because it is a just one. Listen attentively to what I say, for I am being unjustly persecuted. In my plea for justice I am 'telling it like it is'—no deceit or shading of the truth. Before your tribunal I seek acquittal. Let your eyes see every aspect of the case and then decide in favor of the right.

17:3-5 "If You test my heart, if You check me out in the darkness as well as in the light—no matter how thoroughly you examine me—you will find that the opposition has no valid reason for harassing me the way they do. Honestly—I am telling the truth. As far as the usual wickedness of men is concerned, I have been able to steer clear of violence by staying close to Your word, the Bible. Not by depending on my own strength but by Your commands and promises, I have walked in paths of obedience to You. My footsteps haven't slipped; I haven't resorted to violence against my enemies when I had plenty of chance to do so.

17:6, 7 "Now I'm committing my cause to You. I appeal to You for justice, confident that You'll hear and answer me. You are the Savior of those who seek sanctuary from their enemies at Your right hand. As I come running to You now, show Your marvelous lovingkindness to me in a spectacular way.

17:8-12 "Protect me as the apple of Your eye—I'm thinking of the pupil of the eye and how it is 'protected by the eyelash, lid, brow, bony socket and the swiftly uplifted hand' (F. B. Meyer). Hide me in the protective and affectionate shadow of Your wings. Then I will be safe from the wicked who rob me of everything I have and seek to take my life itself. As You know so well, their fat hearts are incapable of pity, and their mouths spew out the most frightening boasts of what they are going to do to me. They stealthily track me down. They have now hemmed me in. Their eyes are intent on the final knockout blow. Savage as a lion that is ravenously hungry, and sly as a young lion lurking in the bush, they are ready to tear me to shreds.

17:13, 14 "LORD, You simply must come to my defense. Meet them head on and topple them. With Your sword rescue me from the clutches of these wicked men who are only concerned with what they can get in this life. You have given them more than enough of material things. Even their children have an oversupply—enough to leave to their babes.

17:15 "Well, they can have it all as far as I'm concerned. My interest lies in spiritual rather than material treasures. It is enough for me that I will look upon Your face as one who has been declared righteous and not as a guilty sinner. I shall be satisfied when I awake in Your likeness."

E. Bendor Samuel has pointed out that verse 15 contains every element of 1 John 3:2:

Supreme satisfaction • 1 Jn. &mdashIt has not yet been revealed&elipsisbut

• Ps. —I shall be satisfied

A great transformation • 1 Jn. —We shall be like Him

• Ps. —I shall awake in Your likeness

An enlarged vision • 1 Jn. —We shall see Him as He is

• Ps. —I will see your face. [17]

Psalm 18: The Power That Raised Christ From the Dead

We get a clue that this Psalm may be about the Lord Jesus Christ from the fact that verse 49 is quoted in Romans 15:9 as referring to Him.For this reason I will confess to You among the Gentiles, and sing to Your name.

As we investigate more closely, we find that we were right. The Psalm is indeed all about the Lord Jesus Christ. It describes graphically His death, Resurrection, exaltation, Second Coming and glorious kingdom.

Nowhere else in the Bible are we given such a vivid account of the tremendous battle that took place in the unseen world at the time of our Savior's Resurrection. But more of that later.

18:1-3 The song opens with praise to the LORD for hearing and answering the prayers of His beloved Son. Notice the figures of speech that are used to describe the strength, safety, security, and salvation that are found in God: my strength ... my rock ... my fortress ... my deliverer ... my shield and the horn of my salvation, my stronghold.

18:4-6 Death is rapidly closing in on the suffering Savior. In quickly changing pictures, He describes Himself as being bound with ropes, being gradually overwhelmed with waves, being entangled by cords, and being confronted with a host of inescapable snares. In such a desperate situation, there is only one resource: prayer to God. Christ did not ask to be delivered from dying; that, after all, was His purpose in coming into the world (John 12:27). What He requested was to be delivered out of death. "Who in the days of His flesh, having offered up both supplications and entreaties to Him who was able to save Him out of death, with strong crying and tears ... " (Heb. 5:7, JND).

In His deep distress Christ had the assurance that His prayer was heard and answered. The rest of the Psalm reveals how Immanuel's plaintive cries from Gethsemane and Golgotha mobilized all the forces of Omnipotence on His behalf. "The voice is thin and solitary," wrote F. B. Meyer, "but the answer shakes creation."

18:7-15 When you come to verses 7-19, it sounds as if a war has broken out. And that is exactly what happened at the Resurrection of Christ. The battle was between God and the hosts of hell. Satan and all his demons encamped at the tomb outside Jerusalem, determined that the Lord Christ would never rise again. Their success in having the Son of God crucified would be completely nullified if He were to rise from the dead. So they massed themselves at the sealed tomb of the Savior.

Then God lowered the heavens and came down in the greatest display of power the world has ever known. The Apostle Paul later spoke of it as "the working of His mighty power which He worked in Christ when He raised Him from the dead" (Eph. 1:19, 20). Greater than the might that created the universe, greater than the strength that delivered Israel from Egypt, God's resurrection power drove back the hosts of principalities, powers, and wicked spirits on that first Easter morning.

At the approach of God the earth is convulsed. His rage is fierce, pictured by smoke billowing forth from His nostrils, intense fire issuing in torrents from His mouth, and great coals of flame hurtling against His enemies. As He descends, riding upon a cloud that resembles a cherub, the world is shaken by a violent storm of darkness, thunder, lightnings and hailstones pummeling the enemy in a massive bombing attack. Just as in the crossing of the Red Sea, the waters of the sea and rivers recoil in fear at the titanic display of the wrath of the Almighty.

18:16-19 In striking symbolism God smashes, bruises, crushes, wounds and maims the foe until he retreats in utter defeat. Then He reaches down and takes Christ from the still-sealed tomb. Hallelujah! Christ is risen! Not only does God raise Him from the dead but He gives Him a triumphant ascension through the enemy's realm and glorifies Him at His own right hand. Thus, as Paul says, "Having disarmed principalities and powers, He made a public spectacle of them, triumphing over them in it" (Col. 2:15).

18:20-30 Here we have the rationale or mystique of the Resurrection. There was a certain moral necessity for God to raise the Lord Jesus. This necessity arose from Christ's sinless, spotless life, from His undeviating devotion to the will of His Father, and from the perfection of His work at Calvary's cross. All the righteous attributes of God demanded that He bring the Savior up from the grave in the power of an endless life. This is what is meant by the majestic utterance, "Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father" (Rom. 6:4). The glorious character of God made the Resurrection a moral necessity, the reward of Christ's perfect, personal righteousness.

While David did write verses 20-30, they are really not completely true of him. Instead, he was speaking prophetically through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit about the One who would be both his Son and his Lord (Matt. 22:41-46).

18:31-42 These verses describe Christ's Second Advent. He will come from heaven "with His mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on those who do not know God, and on those who do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7, 8). He will be "clothed with a robe dipped in blood ... out of His mouth goes a sharp sword, that with it He should strike the nations ... He Himself treads the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God" (Rev. 19:13, 15).

Christ is pictured primarily as a Man of war here. This is consistent with the other Scriptures that teach that when He comes back to earth, He will come first of all "to execute judgment on all, to convict all who are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have committed in an ungodly way, and of all the harsh things which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him" (Jude v. 15).

After being equipped for war by God the Father (vv. 31-37), Christ pursues and utterly destroys His enemies (vv. 37-42).

18:43-45 Following the crushing of His foes, Christ sets up His kingdom on earth and reigns as King of kings and Lord of lords. He is now the head of all the nations on earth. Both redeemed Israel and redeemed Gentiles serve in willing submission to the righteous rule of the glorified Christ. Foreigners yield feigned obedience.

18:46-50 The Psalm closes as it began—with a hymn of praise to God for His wonderful vindication of the Lord Jesus. He has given great victories to His king, and shown mercy to His anointed, His Son.

Because of what He has done, we too should extol Him among the Gentiles, and sing praises to His Name.

Psalm 19: God's Two Books

19:1, 2 "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament shows His handiwork." And what a story they tell! Think, first of all, what they tell about the immensity of the universe. If we traveled at the speed of light—186,000 miles a second or roughly six trillion miles a year—it would take us ten billion years to reach the farthest point we can see with a telescope. But this would still be far from the outermost limits of space. Now astronomers think that space may have no bounds at all! Our earth is nothing but a tiny speck in a limitless expanse!

Think too of the number of stars and other heavenly bodies. With the naked eye we can see about five thousand stars. With a small telescope we can see about two million. But with the Palomar telescope we can see billions of galaxies, to say nothing of individual stars.

Then think about the distances of the heavenly bodies from the earth and from each other. Someone has pictured the distances as follows: if it cost a penny to ride 1000 miles, a trip to the moon would cost $2.38, a trip to the sun would cost $930, but a trip to the nearest star would cost $260 million.

It takes light from the most remote stars which can be seen with telescopes ten billion years to reach the earth. So when we look out into space, we are really looking backward in time. For example, we do not see the Andromeda galaxy where it is now but where it was two million years ago!

Although the stars may appear to be crowded in the firmament, the distances between them are so great that they have been likened to lonely lightships a million miles apart, floating in an empty sea.

If creation is so great, how much greater is the Creator! Day and night the heavens are telling the greatness of His power and wisdom. The firmament unceasingly proclaims the marvels of His handiwork. (In Bible usage "firmament" refers to the expanse of the heavens.) As Isaac Watts wrote, "Nature with open volume stands to spread her Maker's praise abroad."

19:3, 4a There is no speech, no words, no audible voice, yet the sermon of the stars goes out through all the earth, and its message to the end of the world. Simply by looking up into the heavens man can know that there is a God and can perceive His eternal power (Rom. 1:20). The terrifying dimensions and complexity of the universe confirm Lord Kelvin's observation that "if you think strongly enough, you will be forced by science to believe in God." Kant wrote:

> It is impossible to contemplate the fabric of the world without recognizing the admirable order of its arrangement and the certain manifestation of the hand of God in the perfection of its correlations. Reason, when once it has considered and admired so much beauty and so much perfection, feels a just indignation at the dauntless folly which dares ascribe all this to chance and a happy accident. It must be that the Highest wisdom conceived the plan and Infinite power carried it into execution.[18]

19:4b-6 The psalmist sees the vaulted arch of heaven as a vast tent which God prepared for the sun. As the sun rises in the morning, it is like a bridegroom coming out of his chamber. The sun moves through the arc of the heavens like a strong man joyfully running a race. The course begins at the eastern end of the heavens and continues on down to the western horizon. We know, of course, that the sun does not actually rise and set, but that the earth moves in relation to the sun, creating this illusion. But in poetic passages the Bible often uses the language of human appearance, just as we do in our everyday speech.

There is nothing hidden from the heat of the sun. It enjoys universal exposure, pervading every remote corner and crevice of the world.

19:7-9 But creation is only one of God's volumes of self-revelation. Verse 7 introduces us to Volume Two of God's revelation—"the law of the LORD." Both volumes glorify God and inspire the worship of thoughtful men. Few commentators on the Psalms can resist quoting Kant's famous dictum:

> The starry sky above me and the moral law in me, are two things which fill the soul with ever increasing admiration and reverence.[19]

But there is a difference between the two books of God. Creation reveals God as the Mighty One, the God of Power. But His Word reveals Him as the One who enters into covenant relationship with His people. God's works reveal His knowledge and power but His Word reveals His love and grace. Scientific truth may stimulate our intellect but spiritual truth convicts our heart and conscience!

In his eulogy of God's Word, David describes it not only as the law of the LORD but also as the testimony of the LORD, the statutes of the LORD, the commandment of the LORD, the fear of the LORD, and the judgments of the LORD. The psalmist attributes eight excellent qualities to the Word of God; it is perfect, sure, right, pure, clean, enduring, true, and righteous. Then he lists five of its wonderful ministries: it converts the soul, makes wise the simple, rejoices the heart, enlightens the eyes, and warns the servant of God.

19:10 The values of the Word cannot be computed in terms of gold. But it does have this one thing in common with gold: men must dig for its treasures. Great wealth is hidden in the pages of God's Book, and man's best interests are served by searching for them.

> It is the glory of God to conceal a matter,
> But the glory of kings is to search out a matter (Prov.25:2)

I can truly say that no prospector is ever more delighted with the discovery of gold than I am to find nuggets of spiritual treasure in the Bible! Much as I like honey, its taste is never as sweet to me as the taste of the good Word of God! No words can ever describe the enrichment and satisfaction I have found in my Bible.

> This old book is my guide;
> 'Tis a friend by my side.
> It will lighten and brighten my way.
> And each promise I find

Soothes and gladdens my mind

As I read it and heed it each day.

—Edmund Pillifant

Incidentally, there is a beautiful touch in the expression "sweeter also than honey and the drippings of the honeycomb." The purest honey is that which drips from the comb rather than being pressed out.

19:11 Morever, by them Your servant is warned. By the Scriptures the believer is taught to resist the devil, flee from temptation, hate sin and avoid the very appearance of evil. In obeying the precepts of the Word, the Christian finds true fulfillment in life. Spiritually, physically, and mentally he enjoys the good life! On top of all this, he accumulates reward to be bestowed at the Judgment Seat of Christ. "Godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. 4:8).

19:12 But when we think of how holy, just and perfect the law of the Lord is, we realize what failures we are, and we exclaim with David, "Who can understand his errors?" Barnes writes:

> In view of a law so pure, so holy, so strict in its demands, and so extended in its requirements—asserting jurisdiction over the thoughts, the words and the whole life—who can recall the number of times he has departed from such a law? A somewhat similar sentiment is found in Psalm 119:96: "I have seen an end of all perfection; Thy commandment is exceeding broad."[20]

As the Scriptures expose us to ourselves and convict us of sins we were previously unaware of, we are prompted to pray for forgiveness from secret faults—faults hidden to ourselves and even to others but not to God. Sin is sin, even if we are ignorant of it. So our confession should always cover hidden sins.

19:13 But the Psalm teaches us to pray not only for clearing from unknown sins, but for preservation from presumptuous sins, that is, from sins that are born of pride and self-confidence. Pride was the parent sin of the universe. It led to Lucifer's original rebellion against God. More than anything else, the psalmist feared the dominion of such presumptuous sins in his own life. If he can escape their domination, he writes, he shall be innocent of great transgression—specifically, the great transgression of departing from God and revolting against Him.

19:14 The eulogy is finished. David has extolled the book of creation and the Book of revelation. Now he lifts a parting prayer for his words and meditation to be acceptable in the sight of the LORD, his strength (lit. "Rock") and his Redeemer. When God is referred to as a rock, the figure is designed to express strength, security and salvation. As our Redeemer, God in Christ is the One who buys us back from sin, servitude, and shame.

Psalm 20: The Name of the God of Jacob

The nation is on the brink of war. Before leading his troops off into battle, King David has come to offer sacrifices. A multitude of loyal subjects are there to wish him success. In verses 1-5 we hear them praying that the Lord will protect him and give him victory. Encouraged by his people's prayers, the king expresses confidence that Jehovah will intervene on his behalf (v. 6). His confidence overflows to the people, and their prayers are now mixed with assurance of deliverance (vv. 7-9).

The People's Prayer (20:1-5)

20:1 On the eve of battle the people look to the LORD to answer the king in the approaching battle by turning back the enemy in crushing defeat. When they chant "May the name of the God of Jacob defend you," they remind us that the name of God stands for the Person Himself. Three times in this Psalm we find references to that wonderful name:

May the name of the God of Jacob defend you (v. 1).

In the name of our God we will set up our banners (v. 5).

We will remember the name of the LORD our God (v. 7).

Williams aptly alliterates these allusions as:

The Defending Name.

The Displayed Name.

The Delivering Name.

20:2 The source of the desired aid is specified. The sanctuary in Zion was the dwelling place of God on earth, and so it was reasonable to expect help from the sanctuary and support out of Zion.

20:3 The king's faithful obedience in bringing offerings and burnt sacrifice is presented as a special reason why the Lord should remember him with favor.

20:4, 5 The king's desire was that the Lord should crown his plans and purpose with success. Here his loving people pray that this will indeed be the outcome of the battle. They are already thinking of a great victory celebration, with hilarious joy and excitement as the news is announced and with banners whipping and snapping in the breeze in tribute to the name of their God.

There is a question whether the words "May the LORD fulfill all your petitions" are spoken by the people, the priest, or the king. In any case it is a worthy prayer.

The King's Response (20:6)

Buoyed by the prayerful interest of his people, the king rejoices in the knowledge that the LORD will indeed send all needed help from His holy heaven and intervene with marvelous displays of His infinite strength.

The People's Confident Prayer (20:7-9)

20:7, 8 Such confidence is contagious. The devoted people, inspired by the assurance of their leader, are no longer awed by the vaunted military might of the enemy. Let him boast of his invulnerable chariots and battle-tested horses; Israel will boast in the name of the LORD! It is better to trust in Him than in arsenals of stockpiled weapons. At the glance of the Lord even the mightiest armies will crumple to the ground! But those who are on the Lord's side will still stand upright when the smoke of battle has cleared away.

20:9 With this peace of mind, the people once again ask the LORD to give victory to the King, thereby answering their prayers for deliverance.

Application

The historical application of the Psalm may be found in David's defeat of the Ammonites and Syrians (2 Sam. 10:14-19).

But the Psalm may also be applied to the Lord Jesus as a prayer for His Resurrection. His believing people pray that God will indicate His own complete satisfaction with Christ's sacrifice at Calvary by raising Him from the dead. As Messiah engages in conflict with Satan and his armies, He is confident of the final outcome. Psalm 20 anticipates the exultation of the first Easter morning.

The Psalm can also be applied to missionaries moving out into Satan's territory, or to any Christian striving to gain new ground for the Lord.

Psalm 21: Thanksgiving for Victory

There is a close link between this Psalm and the preceding one. There we heard the people praying for victory for the king as he went off to war. Here the prayer has been answered, and these same people rehearse the victory with the Lord. First they review the thrilling way in which God gave success (vv. 1-7). Then they anticipate the final subjugation of all the king's foes (vv. 8-12). Finally they extol the strength and power of Jehovah (v. 13).

The Sweet Taste of Victory (21:1-7)

21:1-4 The king rejoices in the way the LORD has just revealed His strength as the God of battle. He overflows with exultation when he thinks of Jehovah's timely intervention. God has given him the victory he craved, the success for which he prayed. Jehovah went out to meet him with the blessings of triumph and prosperity. The Most High set an imperishable crown of pure gold upon his head. In response to the king's request for preservation God gave him life—yes, length of days forever and ever. This latter expression probably means long life in David's case, but it is literally true of the endless resurrection life of the Messiah.

21:5-7 This passage takes on added beauty when we see them as referring to the Lord Jesus Christ. God's saving help has given Him great honor. By raising Him from the dead and seating Him at His own right hand, God has crowned Him with glory and honor (Heb. 2:9). Yes, the Lord has made him most blessed forever and a blessing to all the world! Seated in the highest place, Christ is filled with joy in the presence of His Father. It was His undivided trust in the LORD that brought Him to this place of honor. And it is the mercy of the Most High that will insure His perpetual exaltation.

The Doom of the King's Enemies (21:8-12)

21:8-10 At this point the people address the king directly. (In the previous section they had been speaking to the Lord.) If we identify the king as the Messiah, the passage describes the doom of Christ's enemies at the time of His Second Advent.

His right hand will ferret out all His enemies; none of those who hate Him will escape. The instrument of their destruction will be fire; He will be "revealed from heaven ... in flaming fire taking vengeance on those who do not know God, and on those who do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7, 8). He will also destroy their offspring from off the face of the earth, and their descendants from the human race.

21:11, 12 This plot to thwart Christ from taking the reins of universal government (also described in Ps. 2:2, 3) will fail dismally. The rebels will retreat in terror when God fires at them point-blank!

Praise the Lord (21:13)

In the closing stanza, the LORD is exalted because of the way He has revealed His own strength. Songs of praise burst forth because of God's power unleashed to deliver His own and to put down all His enemies. It is the song of Israel's remnant, praying for the exaltation of the Messiah and acknowledging Him at last as Lord of all.

Psalm 22: Christ in Suffering and Glory

Deserted! God could separate from His own essence rather;
And Adam's sins have swept between the righteous Son and Father;
Yea, once, Immanuel's orphaned cry His universe hath shaken—
It went up single, echoless, "My God, I am forsaken!"
It went up from His holy lips, amid His lost creation
That no believer e'er should use those words of desolation.
—Elizabeth Barrett Browning

22:1, 2 Approach this Psalm with the utmost solemnity and reverence, because you have probably never stood on holier ground before. You have come to Golgotha where the Good Shepherd is giving His life for the sheep. For three hours the earth has been enveloped in thick darkness. Now "Immanuel's orphaned cry" echoes through the universe: "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?"

Behind the poignant question lies an awful reality—the suffering Savior actually was, literally and completely, forsaken by God. The Eternal Son who had always been the object of His Father's delight was now abandoned. The Perfect Man who unfailingly did the will of God experienced the terrible desolation of being cut off from God.

The question is, "Why?" Why should the holy, sinless Son of God suffer the concentrated horror of eternal hell in those three long hours of darkness? Scripture gives us the answer. First of all, God is holy, righteous and just, and this means that He must punish sin wherever He finds it. To wink at sin or to overlook it is impossible for God. That brings us to the second point. Although the Lord Jesus had no sins of His own, He took our sins upon Himself. He voluntarily assumed responsibility to pay the penalty of all our iniquities. The debt we owed was charged to His account, and He willingly became surety for it all. But now what can God do? All His righteous attributes demand that sin be punished. Yet here He looks down and sees His only begotten Son becoming the scapegoat for others. The Son of His love has become our Sin-bearer. What will God do when He sees our sins laid on His own beloved Son?

There was never any doubt as to what God would do! He deliberately unleashed all the fury of His righteous wrath on His own beloved Son. The fierce torrent of divine judgment broke upon the innocent Victim. For our sakes, Christ was forsaken by God so that we might never be forsaken.

Thus when we read of Christ's deep, deep suffering, it should always be with the keen awareness that He bore it all for us. We should punctuate each statement with the words for me. He was forsaken—for me. When I hear Him cry, "Why are You so far from helping Me, and from the words of My groaning?" I know that it was for me. And it was for my sake that the heavens were silent to Him by day and by night.

22:3 In a sense the Savior explained His forsakenness in the words, "But You are holy, who inhabit the praises of Israel." The love of God demanded that sin's wages be paid. God's love provided what His holiness demanded. He sent His Son to die as a substitutionary sacrifice. Now "stern justice can demand no more, and mercy can dispense her store."

22:4, 5 But listen again! The Savior is still speaking to His Father, reminding Him that the patriarchs were never forsaken. Their believing cries for help never went unanswered. Not once were they disappointed when they cried for deliverance. In spite of their sin and waywardness, God never had occasion to forsake them. That sentence was reserved for the spotless Lamb of God!

22:6, 7 Not only was He forsaken by God, but He was despised and rejected by the people. To the creatures whom His hands had made Christ was hardly even a man—just a worm. He knew the bitterness of scorn and rejection by the very people He had come to save. Even as Christ hung on the cross, the watching throng ridiculed and mocked the Eternal Lover of their souls! Incredible as it seems, they sang a taunt song in which they mocked His apparent helplessness and the seeming futility of His trust in God.

22:8 "He trusted in the LORD, let Him rescue Him; let Him deliver Him, since He delights in Him!" This is exactly what the jeering crowd said at the cross (Matt. 27:39, 43).

22:9-11 But now the Son of Man turns away from man to God, and remembers Bethlehem. It was God who had brought Him forth from the virgin's womb. It was God who had preserved Him during the fragile days of His infancy. It was God who had sustained Him in His boyhood and young manhood. On the basis of this past relationship of love Christ now appeals to God to draw near in this hour of His crushing, solitary trial.

22:12, 13 Many of the hate-filled crowd at Calvary were Israelites. Christ likens them here to strong bulls of Bashan and to a raging and roaring lion. The district of Bashan, east of the Jordan, was known for its rich pasture-land and for its strong, well-fattened animals. Amos later referred to the luxury-loving Israelites as cows of Bashan (Amos 4:1). When Christ speaks here of bulls of Bashan, He is referring to His own fellow countrymen, who were even then waiting to close in for the kill. They were not only like goring bulls but also like ravening and roaring lions. The Messiah of Israel had come, and they were pouncing on Him like lions on a lamb!

22:14, 15 Christ's physical sufferings were excruciating beyond description. There was His exhaustion; He was poured out like water. There was the agony of bone dislocation by hanging on the cross; all His bones were out of joint. There was violent disorder of His internal organs; His heart, for instance, was melted like wax within His breast. There was His unendurable weakness; His strength was dried up like a fragment of pottery. There was His unremitting thirst; His tongue was clinging to His jaws. It could only mean that God was laying Him in the dust of death.

22:16, 17 Just as He had spoken of His Jewish tormentors under the figure of bulls and lions, so He now compares His Gentile executioners to dogs. It was a common name for Jews to use in referring to Gentiles (Matt. 15:21-28). Here it refers particularly to the Roman soldiers who surrounded Him like a pack of vicious, snarling curs. It was this company of evil-doers who had pierced His hands and His feet. As they gazed upon His half-naked form, they could see His bones pressing out against His shrunken skin. This gave them keen pleasure and satisfaction.

22:18 Then, in one of the several wonderful prophecies of this Psalm, the Lord Jesus foresees that the soldiers would divide His garments among them and cast lots for His clothing. Here is how it happened hundreds of years later:

> Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took His garments and made four parts, to each soldier a part, and also the tunic. Now the tunic was without seam, woven from the top in one piece. They said therefore among themselves, "Let us not tear it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be" (John 19:23, 24).

22:19-21 For the last time in this Psalm the Savior implores God for His presence and assistance. He asks to be delivered from the sword and from the power of the dog, both references to the Gentiles. The sword is the symbol of governmental power (Rom. 13:4). Here, it refers to the Roman government with its power of capital punishment. The dog, as explained above, refers to the Gentile soldiers. Then, in verse 21, Christ asks to be saved from the lion's mouth and from the horns of the wild oxen. As we saw in verses 12 and 13, this refers to the Jewish people who said to Pilate, "We have a law, and according to our law He ought to die ... " (John 19:7).

"You have answered Me" makes a distinct and triumphant break between verses 21 and 22. It is the hinge which unites the two sections of the Psalm. The poetry now obviously moves from plaintive pleading to jubilant song. The sufferings of the Lord Jesus are now forever past. His redeeming work has been finished. The cross has been exchanged for the crown!

Between these two verses the psalmist transports us in a moment of time from Christ's First Advent to His Second—from Calvary to Olivet! Although the Psalm does not mention it, we know that the intervening period includes the Savior's death, burial, Resurrection, and Ascension as well as the entire Church Age in which we live.

22:22 By this point in the psalm Christ has returned to earth to reign as King. The faithful remnant of the nation of Israel has entered the kingdom with all its millennial glories. The Messiah of Israel is ready to testify to His Jewish brethren about the faithfulness of God in answering His prayers in the first part of the Psalm. Now Christ praises God in the midst of the congregation.

22:23, 24 The next two verses give the substance of what Christ will say to redeemed Israel in that future millennial day. In three majestic parallelisms Christ addresses them as "you who fear the LORD," "you descendants of Jacob," and "you offspring of Israel." Then He exhorts them to praise the Lord, to glorify Him and to fear Him. The reason for this reverent response is that God has heard and answered those anguished cries that went up from dark Calvary. God did not despise the sufferings endured by His beloved Son, nor did He permanently hide His face from Him. Instead, "God ... has highly exalted Him and given Him the name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow ... and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2:9-11).

22:25 God is the object of Messiah's praise: "My praise shall be of You in the great congregation. ... " In His distress Christ had vowed to praise the Lord publicly, and now He will pay those vows before those who fear the Lord.

22:26 In the last six verses of the Psalm there is a change of speaker. Now the Holy Spirit speaks, describing the ideal conditions that will prevail during the peace and prosperity of the Millennium.

Poverty will then be banished; the poor shall eat and be satisfied.

The earth will be full of God's praise. All who seek Him will praise the LORD. On all these worshipers the Spirit pronounces the blessing, "Let your heart live forever!"

22:27 There will be worldwide revival. All the ends of the world shall remember what Christ did at Calvary and turn to the LORD. All the families of the nations will unite in one great act of homage and worship.

22:28, 29 The Lord Himself will exercise worldwide dominion. The throne rights are His, and He will rule over the nations. All the great men of the earth will submit to His rule, and every mortal man shall bow down before Him—all those who go down to the dust and who cannot keep themselves alive.

22:30, 31 Christ's fame will endure. One generation after another will serve Him and proclaim His excellencies. A special message will be passed down from one generation to the next: that Christ has righteously finished the great work of redemption. Psalm 22 begins with the fourth word from the cross—the atonement cry. It ends with the words "that He has done this," which have exactly the same meaning as Christ's seventh word from the cross: "It is finished!" (John 19:30). Down through the centuries of time the good news will be passed from one generation to another with grateful wonder that Christ has done it all.

Psalm 23: The Great Shepherd

The Twenty-Third Psalm is probably the best-loved poem in all literature. Whether sung to the stately measures of Crimond or recited in a Sunday School program, it has a charm that is perennial and a message that is deathless. "Blessed is the day," wrote an old theologian, "when Psalm 23 was born!"

J. R. Littleproud's outline is hard to improve upon:

The secret of a happy life—every need supplied.

"The LORD is my shepherd; I shall not want."

The secret of a happy death—every fear removed.

"Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil; for You are with me."

The secret of a happy eternity—every desire fulfilled.

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the LORD forever."[21]

23:1 Despite its worldwide popularity, the Psalm is not for everyone. It is applicable only to those who are entitled to say, "The LORD is my Shepherd." It is true that the Good Shepherd died for all, but only those who actually receive Him by a definite act of faith are His sheep. His saving work is sufficient for all, but it is effective only for those who actually believe on Him. Everything therefore hinges on the personal pronoun my. Unless He is my Shepherd, then the rest of the Psalm does not belong to me. On the other hand, if He is really mine and I am really His, then I have everything in Him!

23:2 I shall not lack food for my soul or body because He makes me to lie down in green pastures.

I shall not lack refreshment either because He leads me beside the still waters.

23:3 I shall not lack vitality because He restores my soul.

I shall not lack moral direction because He leads me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

We smile at the youngster who panicked when reciting this Psalm and came up with the novel version, "The Lord is my shepherd: I should not worry." But he was more right than wrong. He missed the exact words but caught the exact sense. If the Lord is our Shepherd, we need not worry!

23:4 And we need not be afraid of death. In the valley of the shadow of death there is no need to fear, because the Shepherd is right there with us.

The sting of death is sin—sin unconfessed and unforgiven. But Christ has robbed death of its sting for the believer. He has put away our sins once for all. Now the worst thing that death can do to us is really the best thing that can happen to us! Thus we can sing:

O death, O grave, I do not fear your power;

The debt is paid.

On Jesus in that dark and dreadful hour

Our sins were laid.

—Margaret L. Carson

It is true that Christians may have a certain foreboding about the suffering that so often accompanies death. As one old saint was overheard to say, "I don't mind the Lord taking down my tent, but I hope He takes it down gently!"

It is also true that we usually do not get dying grace until we need it. But the fact still remains that death has lost its terror for us because we know that dying means going to be with Christ—and this is far better. "To die is gain."

The Shepherd's rod and staff are sources of comfort, protection, and guidance. Whenever necessary He may use the rod for correction also. Most sheep need this ministry from time to time

23:5 In the meantime, the Shepherd prepares a table before us in the presence of our enemies. On the table are spread all the spiritual blessings which He purchased for us with His precious blood. The table pictures everything that is ours in Christ. Though surrounded by enemies, we enjoy these blessings in peace and security.

J. H. Jowett illustrates:

> Eastern hospitality guarantees the security of the guest. "All the hallowed sanctions of hospitality gather around him for his defense. He is taken into the tent, food is placed before him, while his evaded pursuers stand frowningly at the door."

He also anoints our heads with oil. Shepherds anoint the heads of their sheep to soothe the scratches and wounds. For priests the anointing oil speaks of consecration to their work. For kings the anointing oil is associated with coronation. Every believer is anointed with the Holy Spirit the moment he receives the Savior. This anointing guarantees him the teaching ministry of God the Spirit.

When we think of all the riches of grace which we have in Christ Jesus, we burst forth with the grateful acknowledgment, "My cup runs over!"

His love has no limit,

His grace has no measure,

His power has no boundary known unto men:

For out of His infinite riches in Jesus

He giveth, and giveth, and giveth again.

—Annie Johnson Flint

23:6 Finally there is the secret of a happy eternity. Escorted through all of life by God's goodness and mercy, we reach the Father's house at last, our eternal dwelling place. As we think of it all, we have to agree with Guy King when he said, "What lucky beggars we are!"

Psalm 24: Who Is the King of Glory?

The Twenty-Fourth Psalm looks forward to a glorious event which occurs at the end of the Great Tribulation. The thunders of God's judgments have ceased, the Lord Jesus has returned to earth and has put down all His foes, and Christ is now marching to Jerusalem to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. This is a triumphal procession such as the world has never seen. Even as onlookers were once startled by the depths of the Savior's suffering, so they are now speechless at the height of His glory.

24:1, 2 As the throng nears the city, the announcement rings out that the earth and everything in it belong to God. It is a statement of divine ownership and of Christ's full right to reign. Then the reason is given. Christ is the One who made the world. It was He who gathered the waters together in one place and made the dry land appear. It was He who formed the rivers, some on the surface of the earth and some beneath the ground. So now He is coming to claim what is really His own but has been denied to Him for centuries.

24:3-6 The next four verses describe the kind of people who will enter the kingdom and enjoy the thousand-year reign of peace and prosperity. These are the believing remnant of Israel and the redeemed Gentiles who will go up to the temple in Jerusalem to worship. It might seem that these people qualify for the kingdom by their good character, but this is not the case. Their character is the result of their new birth from above, for unless a man is born again he can neither see nor enter the kingdom of God (John 3:3, 5). These people, then, are the noble saints who have come through great tribulation and have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb.

Four traits of character are specified. They have clean hands; in other words, their actions are righteous and blameless. They have a pure heart; that is, their motives are sincere and their minds uncorrupted. They do not subscribe to falsehood in any form. And finally, they do not pervert justice by testifying to what is not true. Their hands, their heart, their soul, their lips are all righteous.

These are the kind of people who will be subjects in Christ's Millennial Kingdom. Though formerly ridiculed and despised by the ungodly, they will now be vindicated by the God of their salvation. Yes, these are the citizens of the Millennium—people who seek God's face, people who have received grace from the God who loves the unworthy.

24:7, 8 I like to think that the procession has been singing the words of verses 1-6 as they cross the Valley of the Kidron. But now their singing is interrupted by the clarion call of the herald at the head of the parade. He calls out to the watchmen at the gates of Jerusalem: "Lift up your heads, O you gates! And be lifted up, you everlasting doors! And the King of glory shall come in." A sentry on the wall of the city calls back in loud, impressive tones, "Who is this King of glory?" The answer comes back in clear, stentorian words, "The LORD strong and mighty, the LORD mighty in battle."

24:9, 10 They are closer to the city now, and the gates are still hesitating. So the herald commands again that the doors be opened to the King of glory. Again he is asked to identify the King. He responds, "The LORD of hosts, He is the King of glory."

Then the King enters the city with His loyal subjects to take the scepter of universal dominion in His nail-pierced hand.

F. B. Meyer says:

> This Psalm is accomplished in us when Jesus enters our hearts as our King to reign, and it will have its full realization when the earth and its population welcome Him as its Lord.[22]

Psalm 25: The Secret of the Lord

This is an acrostic Psalm, though one letter of the Hebrew alphabet is omitted, and one is used twice.[23] It is difficult to find a unified theme; instead, the Psalm seems to be a potpourri of prayers and meditations with the only apparent link being the alphabetical one.

25:1-3 First comes a prayer for protection. David's enemies are never far away, it seems. So he looks to the LORD for help, acknowledging God as the sole object of his trust. David's dual supplication is that he will never be disappointed for having trusted in Jehovah and that his enemies will never have occasion to gloat because God has failed His child. This is his prayer for all who depend on the Lord. As for those who deliberately deal falsely, he wishes them a full dose of shame.

25:4, 5 In the next section, the psalmist portrays a disciple seeking instruction. He wants to know the ways of the LORD, to walk in His paths, and to grow in His truth. His motivation arises from love for the God of his salvation, the One in whom all his expectations are bound up.

25:6, 7 Then David appears as a sinner seeking forgiveness. He appeals to the long-standing mercies and lovingkindness of the Lord and asks the Lord to remember that He has demonstrated such grace in the past—as if He could ever forget! If such requests betray an imperfect apprehension of God's grace on David's part, we must remember that he lived in an age of shadows while we enjoy the full light of the gospel era. ... The sins of David's youth were bedeviling him; they have a way of doing that. The psalmist succinctly asks the Lord to forget these sins but to remember him according to His lovingkindness and for His goodness' sake. Such a prayer is irresistible. ... What release there is in knowing that our sins are under the blood, removed as far as the east is from the west, buried in the sea of God's forgetfulness, forgiven forever!

25:8-10 David now moves from prayer to contemplation. He is lost in admiration as he thinks of the teaching ministry of Jehovah. Because the LORD is essentially good and upright, He teaches sinners in the way of truth, justice, and salvation. The single most important quality which we need to learn from Him is humility—we must be meek enough to admit our ignorance and our need for further instruction. If we are teachable we soon learn what is right, that is, what the will of God is. Far from having to endure an unpleasant life, those who obey the Word of the Lord find that life is filled with tokens of God's steadfast love and faithfulness.

25:11 David now returns briefly to prayer for forgiveness. Thoroughly convicted of the vastness of his guilt, he bases his appeal on "Your name's sake, O LORD." Since a person's name often stands for the person himself, the psalmist is here pleading God's own character—and especially His mercy and grace—as his only claim to pardon. There is not a word about David's own merit!

25:12, 13 Once again he interrupts his prayer to engage in a spiritual soliloquy. He envisions the man that fears the LORD as the one who enjoys God's best. This kind of person will experience:

Unmistakable guidance—God will show him the way to go.

Personal prosperity—he will enjoy abundant provision.

Family security—his children will possess the land.

Divine fellowship—he will be in the inner circle of friends to whom the Lord reveals His mind and ways in an intimate manner.

25:14 This is undoubtedly the golden verse of the Psalm:

The secret of the LORD is with those who fear Him;

And He will show them His covenant.

It was to Daniel, "a man greatly beloved," that God revealed the wonderful visions of Gentile governments superseded by the final kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And it was to John, the disciple who leaned on Jesus' bosom, that the glorious revelation of Patmos was given.

25:15 David includes himself in this God-fearing group. His eyes are looking continually heavenward in trust and expectation, and he is confident that the LORD will extricate him from the net of trouble and affliction in which he is presently entangled.

25:16-21 The mention of a net causes David to cut short his spiritual reveries and to utter a prayer about his present plight. He is lonely and afflicted. The troubles of his heart are compounded. So he implores God to turn to him in mercy, to relieve his overburdened heart, to deliver him from his distresses, to take inventory of his afflictions and to forgive all his sins. David also asks the Lord to protect him from his enemies and their vitriolic hatred, thereby vindicating him for having trusted in Jehovah. When he prays "Let integrity and uprightness preserve me" he is not referring to his own rectitude, but is instead asking God to show His righteousness by delivering the one who put his trust in Him.

25:22 In the final verse, David identifies himself with Israel and prays for the nation's redemption. This suggests that a Psalm like this will become the language of the godly Jewish remnant during the coming days of the Tribulation.

Psalm 26: A Psalm of Separation

When we first read Psalm 26 we might conclude that it is the product of a surpassing egotist. More sober consideration, however, will show us that it is really just a factual description of a life that has been separated to God from the world. Reading between the lines, we find that David had been accused of fraternizing with ungodly men and of thus being untrue to Jehovah. Here he pleads his own defense. Nowhere is he claiming sinlessness, but he certainly does plead "not guilty" to the specific charges that were being made against him.

26:1-3 He rests his case with the LORD, asking for divine vindication. Contrary to what his accusers were saying, David had indeed conducted himself with moral integrity. He had consistently walked in dependence on the Lord. In language borrowed from metallurgy, he submits himself to God to be tested for genuineness and sincerity, to be proved in the smelting furnace for the presence of dross. Both as to his heart (affections) and his mind (motives), he was confident of acquittal because he had always kept the Lord's lovingkindness before him and had walked in paths of faithfulness to God's Word.

26:4, 5 To sit with idolatrous mortals means to have approving fellowship with them; this David had not done. To consort with hypocrites means to be a willing partner with deceivers and pretenders; David had not been this either. On the contrary, he had hated the companionship of criminals and had shown a holy determination to avoid fraternizing with the wicked.

26:6-8 But his separation was not merely from wicked men; it was to God. Before approaching the altar of the LORD, David had made sure that his hands were cleansed from sin and defilement. Then, as a purged worshiper, he sang a hearty thanksgiving and recounted the wondrous works of Jehovah. To him worship was not a dreary ritual to be endured stoically; he actually loved the house of the Lord where the glory cloud symbolized the glorious Presence of God Himself.

26:9-11 Because he had refused to join the gang in this world, David prays to escape their fate in the next. He had shunned the practices of sinners, murderers, and payoff men in life; now he pleads to escape their company in death. Because he had lived a righteous life, he now asks to be saved from the doom of the wicked, and to be handled with all the grace of God.

26:12 Standing on the level ground of an unblemished history, David vows to bless the LORD ... in the congregations.

We should note that there is an aspect of separation that is not brought out in this Psalm. Though we should be separate from sinners as far as silent assent or complicity with their evil is concerned, we should not be isolated from them when it comes to telling them about their need of Christ. The Lord Jesus Himself was a friend of sinners; He not only received them but ate and drank with them. But He never compromised His loyalty to God or failed to tell them about their sin and their need of forgiveness. When He visited the house of Simon, says Bishop Ryle:He carried His "Father's business" with Him to the Pharisee's table. He testified against the Pharisee's besetting sin. He explained to the Pharisee the nature of free forgiveness of sins, and the secret of true love to Himself. He declared the saving nature of faith. If Christians who argue in favor of intimacy with unconverted people will visit their houses in the spirit of our Lord, and speak and behave as He did, let them by all means continue the practice. But do they speak and behave at the tables of their unconverted acquaintances as Jesus did at Simon's table? That is a question they would do well to answer.[24]

This is a question that all of us should ponder.

Psalm 27: The Arrest and Trial of Jesus

Psalm 27 is beautiful in any setting, but it takes on a special attraction if we think of it as expressing our Lord's innermost thoughts during those fateful hours immediately preceding Calvary.

27:1 For example, when the chief priests, the captains of the temple and the elders came to the Garden of Gethsemane to capture Christ, He said to them, "This is your hour, and the power of darkness" (Luke 22:53). But at this very moment He may have been consoling Himself with the thought:

The LORD is my light and my salvation;

Whom shall I fear?

The LORD is the strength of my life;Of whom shall I be afraid?

God was His light as the darkness settled in. God was His salvation, that is, His Deliverer from earthly enemies. God was the stronghold of His life, a refuge in the time of storm. With such protection, He need not be afraid of anyone!

27:2 When men came to arrest the Lord Jesus, He asked them, "Whom are you seeking?" They answered Him, "Jesus of Nazareth." As soon as He said "I am He," they recoiled and fell to the ground (John 18:6). At that moment Christ could well have been meditating on these words:

When the wicked came against me

To eat up my flesh

My enemies and foes,

They stumbled and fell.

They pounced on Him like birds of prey, but the glory of His deity as the Great I AM shone through His garb of humanity, and His captors were knocked to the ground.

27:3 John tells us that the gang who came to arrest Jesus in the Garden consisted of a detachment of troops, several officers from the chief priests, and numerous Pharisees. They came with lanterns, torches, and weapons (John 18:3). As He watched them approaching, He could say with perfect composure:

Though an army should encamp against me,

My heart shall not fear;

Though war may rise against me,

In this I will be confident.

27:4 Poor Peter tried to defend his Master by cutting off the ear of the high priest's slave. But Jesus replied to Peter, "Shall I not drink the cup which My Father has given Me?" His one desire was to dwell with God, and since the pathway to glory led first to the cross, He was prepared to endure its suffering and shame. His language was:

One thing I have desired of the LORD,

That will I seek:

That I may dwell in the house of the LORD

All the days of my life,

To behold the beauty of the LORD,

And to inquire in His temple.

There is something indomitable about "one-thing" people. They know what they want and are determined to get it. Nothing can stand in their way.

27:5 Finally the band of soldiers with their captain and the officers of the Jews seized Jesus and tied Him up (John 18:12). To the onlookers it must have seemed like a lost cause for the Lord Jesus. But at this very moment He may well have been saying:

For in the time of trouble

He shall hide me in His pavilion;

In the secret place of His tabernacle

He shall hide me,

He shall set me high upon a rock.

His heart was resting on the protection which God has promised to all those who love Him.

27:6 The soldiers took Christ to Caiaphas, the High Priest (Matt. 26:57). It was Caiaphas who had previously given counsel to the Jews that it was expedient for one man to die for the people (John 18:14). Though Christ's enemies planned to have Him lifted up on a cross between heaven and earth, our Lord Himself was anticipating another kind of lifting up:

And now my head shall be lifted up above my enemies all around me;

Therefore I will offer sacrifices of joy in His tabernacle;

I will sing, yes, I will sing praises to the LORD.

Strange optimism, this, for a Man on trial for His life and knowing that the outcome would be His execution! Yet even now He was delighting Himself with anticipations of glory. Did He not say to Caiaphas, "Hereafter you will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of the Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven" (Matt. 26:64)?

27:7, 8 At this, the High Priest exploded with charges of blasphemy. "What do you think?" he demanded of his onlookers. "He is deserving of death," was their reply. Here I can picture the Savior praying silently:

Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice!

Have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

When You said, "Seek My face,"

My heart said to You,

"Your face, LORD, I will seek."

27:9 By this time the disciples had all forsaken Him and fled (Matt. 26:56). But God had been His help in the past, and now He pleads that God would not forsake Him at this crucial moment either.

Do not hide Your face from me;

Do not turn Your servant away in anger;

You have been my help;

Do not leave me nor forsake me,

O God of my salvation.

27:10 As far as we know, David's parents never forsook him, and neither did our Lord's. J. N. Darby probably translates the verse more accurately as follows:

> For had my father and my mother forsaken me, then had Jehovah taken me up.

27:11, 12 At Christ's religious trial the chief priests and the whole council had solicited false testimony against Jesus in a determined effort to put Him to death. But they couldn't seem to concoct anything damaging until two witnesses appeared with the accusation, "This fellow said, 'I am able to destroy the temple of God and to build it in three days'" (Matt. 26:59-61). What Jesus had actually said (referring to the temple of His body) was, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2:19, 21). But since the whole trial was a sham anyway, the testimony was accepted. Now we can hear the Savior praying:

Teach me Your way, O LORD,

And lead me in a smooth path, because of my enemies.

Do not deliver me to the will of my adversaries;

For false witnesses have risen against me,

And such as breathe out violence.

27:13 Next we hear the frenzied mob outside Pilate's judgment hall screaming, "Let Him be crucified" (Matt. 27:22, 23). The blessed Lord Jesus heard the shouts too, and He knew what they meant. Yet He could have truly said at this very time:

I would have lost heart, unless I had believed

That I would see the goodness of the LORD

In the land of the living.

27:14 But how about the last verse of the Psalm? How does it fit into our interpretation? Well, I like to think that this verse is His parting word to each of us—a little personal advice from heaven based on the Lord's own experiences in trusting His Father.

Wait on the LORD;

Be of good courage,

He shall strengthen your heart;

Wait, I say, on the LORD!

Psalm 28: The Silence of God

28:1, 2 It's to You and You alone that I call, O LORD. You are my Rock, with all that that name implies of security, strength and stability. I beg You not to turn a deaf ear to me—if You do, it will be like being united with the wicked in death—utter separation from Yourself. Hear my pleading voice as I storm Your throne for help—as I lift up my hands toward Your inner sanctuary, the most holy place.

28:3 Never, never abandon me to the fate of the wicked, who ruthlessly plot iniquity against others, who speak so smoothly and peaceably to their neighbors while planning to do them in.

28:4 Lord, deal with them according to what they deserve, taking into account their deeds and the exceeding wickedness of what they do. Reward them according to the work of their hands—that which they richly deserve.

28:5 And not just because of their works, and the work of their hands, but because they have no appreciation for Your works and the operation of Your hands. That is why You will demolish them like a building that can never be rebuilt.

28:6 Lord, while I have been praying, Your Holy Spirit has given me that wonderful, inner assurance that my supplications have been heard and answered, and I bless You for it. Now I have a song to sing.

28:7, 8 Someone has made a beautiful metrical paraphrase of these verses:

The Lord's my strength; He is my shield
On Him my heart relies.
So I am helped, my heart exults,
To Him my thanks arise.
For all His chosen people too,
The source of strength is He.
And for His blest anointed Son
His saving strength shall be.

28:9 Lord, now that You have promised to deliver me, I ask one more thing. Save Your people. Bless Israel, Your heritage. Like the kind and tender Shepherd that You are, feed them well and bear them up in Your arms forever.

Thank You, Lord!

Psalm 29: The Voice of the Lord

29:1, 2 Do you ever complain about the weather? As David watched a thunderstorm sweep down over Israel it inspired him to praise rather than grumble. In fact he calls upon all the hosts of heaven to worship the LORD in full recognition of His glory and strength as revealed in the storm.

Oh, worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness,
Bow down before Him, His glory proclaim;
With gold of obedience, and incense of lowliness,
Kneel and adore Him; the Lord is His Name.
—J. S. B. Monsell

29:3, 4 The expression "the voice of the LORD" is used seven times. It seems to be applied to the storm in general and to the thunder in particular.

At first the storm is over the Mediterranean, moving inland to Lebanon. The thunder reverberates over many waters like an advancing cannonade. It is a sound of awesome power and majesty.

29:5, 6 Now the mountains of Lebanon are being bombarded. Tall cedars go crashing under the lightning assault. As the wind passes over the forest in sudden, violent gusts, the trees bend in rhythmic waves, creating the impression that the Lebanese range is skipping like a calf and Mount Sirion (Hermon) like a young wild ox.

29:7, 8 The lightning is streaking southward. The Wilderness of Kadesh is shaken by the ferocity of nature's onslaught.

29:9 As David sees the storm fade away in the south, he summarizes his admiration in three observations. First he says that the voice of the LORD makes the deer give birth. It is a scientific fact that weather disturbances have a direct influence on animals that are about to deliver their young.

The psalmist sees the forests denuded of leaves. The trees stand gaunt and bare, robbed of their foliage in a matter of minutes.

Then the sweet singer of Israel reminds us that in God's temple everyone cries "Glory!" His temple here quite clearly means the world of nature, especially the area that is being convulsed by the storm. The arrows of lightning, the peals of thunder, the winds of gale velocity, the forests, the wilderness—all join in telling forth the power, glory and majesty of God.

29:10, 11 The storm has gone; the LORD remains. His throne is unmoved by earth's violent upheavals, including the great Flood. His sovereignty remains undisturbed by natural cataclysms. In all the tumults of life He is able to give strength and peace to His people. May He be pleased to do so!

Some Bible students believe that this Psalm prefigures a military storm that will sweep down from the north on the nation of Israel during the Tribulation Period (vv. 3-9). Following that troubled time, the Lord Jesus Christ will reign as King over all the earth and bless His earthly people with strength and peace (vv. 10, 11). The idea deserves serious consideration.

W. E. Vine sees the Psalm as picturing Christ in His Second Advent, appearing first at Har-Magedon (Rev. 16:16), then sweeping down to the wilderness of Kadesh, the center of which is Bozrah (Isa. 63:1).[25] The Psalm thus describes poetically the complete overthrow of the nations that will have invaded Israel at that time.

But then there is always the practical application for today and every day. God's voice is heard in the storms of life as well as in the sunshine. He is working out His purposes. Nothing is beyond His control. For those who know and love Him, He is working all things together for good. Ironside says:It is a wonderful picture of the soul that has gone through its exercises, its stress, its trouble, but has learned that God is over all, that He is strong to save. And so the heart rests in Him and is at peace.[26]

Psalm 30: A Song of Healing

Most of us have at one time or another experienced the delicious relief of recovery from a serious illness. We have said goodbye to the sterile world of surgery, anesthesia, intensive care, intravenous feedings, hypodermic injections and the interminable pill parade! It is too easy to think that our recovery was "thanks to modern medicine!" We forget to sing a psalm of thanksgiving to the One who is ultimately responsible for all our healing.

But David did not forget. It may be that he had just gotten over a critical illness when it came time to dedicate his house. In any case, the dedication was the occasion for this hymn of praise to Jehovah, his Healer.

30:1-4 It teaches us first of all to extol the LORD with undiluted thanksgiving for the return of good health. David had sunk very low. His life signs were feeble. His foes were all but gloating over his imminent demise. Then he cried out to the LORD in his extremity and the Lord answered by bringing him back from the brink. It was a narrow escape from the dissolution of Sheol, a close call from going down to the grave.

Psalm 30 teaches us that we should not only thank God ourselves, but that we should share our exuberance by inviting the saints to join us in praise; let the solo become a choir! The sweet singer of Israel called on all God's people to sing praise to the LORD and to give thanks to His holy name.

30:5 Then he gives the reason for this praise in the form of two extraordinarily beautiful contrasts. Knox's translation of this verse is priceless:

For a moment lasts His anger, for a life-time His love; sorrow is but the guest of a night, and joy comes in the morning.

Let me pause here with a personal story. There was a time when the MacDonald family was plunged into deep sorrow. Friends trooped in to express their condolences, but nothing seemed to assuage the grief. Their words were well-intentioned but inadequate. Then Dr. H. A. Ironside sent a brief note in which he quoted Psalm 30:5:

Weeping may endure for a night,

But joy comes in the morning.

That did it. The bands of sorrow were snapped!

Since then I have had occasion to share this verse with many other believers who were passing through the dark tunnel of grief, and always the verse has evoked a nod of gratitude.

30:6, 7 The next lesson in the Psalm is that we should not rest in material prosperity but in God. Before his illness David was prosperous and self-reliant. He thought he was immune from trial and trouble. He was apparently immovable—like a great mountain. He had cushioned himself with every conceivable form of protection and security. It seemed he had nothing to fear.

But then something happened. As if overnight, the Lord seemed to hide His face; it seemed as if He were angry and had withdrawn His favor. Life became a nightmare.

30:8-10 But the nightmare produced a sudden change in David's prayer life. In his prosperity his prayers had been dull and listless. But now in his illness he prayed intently and sincerely. He reasoned with God that if he died, this would not benefit the Almighty. The lifeless remains of the psalmist could not praise Him, nor could his dust declare God's faithfulness.

What profit is there in my blood,

When I go down to the pit?

Will the dust praise You?

Will it declare Your truth?

To us such an argument does not carry much weight. In fact, it seems grossly deficient from a doctrinal standpoint. But we must be careful not to be too severe on the OT saints. In many ways they saw through a glass darkly. We have two illustrations of this in the Psalm before us.

In verse 5 David had interpreted his illness as a sign of God's anger. We know that God's chastening is a sign of His love, not of His anger (Heb. 12:6). Yet even we ourselves often slip into the fallacious thinking that sickness and suffering are marks of His displeasure.

Then in verse 9 David speaks as though death ends all praise on the part of the believer. As far as praise and witness on this earth are concerned, he is of course correct. But we know from NT teaching that a believer's spirit departs to be with Christ at the time of his death while his body goes into the grave (2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23). The believer himself is in the conscious presence of the Lord, worshiping Him in a way he never could on earth. The OT saints could not have known this. Christ is the One who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel (2 Tim. 1:10).

But the remarkable thing is this: with their more limited knowledge in many areas, many OT saints seem to have outstripped us in faith, prayer, zeal and devotion!

30:11 Now back to David. Verses 9 and 10 give us his prayer to God when he was in the throes of his illness. Then between verses 10 and 11 the answer comes. He is healed by the Lord. The last two verses of the Psalm celebrate his recovery. For David it was like the difference between the mourning of a funeral and the joy of a wedding. Or to change the figure, it was like a new suit of clothes. God had removed his sackcloth and dressed him up in garments of gladness.

30:12 One result of David's healing was that he could now praise the Lord in life rather than lying silent in the grave. And that is exactly what he intended to do—to give thanks to the Lord forever. He says, in effect, "I can never forget what the Lord has done for me, and I'll never cease to praise Him for it."

I don't know what this Psalm does to you, but it makes me feel ashamed. I think of all the times I've been sick, and of the urgent, desperate prayers with which I stormed the gates of heaven, and of how the Lord graciously answered. But then I forgot to come before Him with a thank-offering of praise. I took the healing too much for granted. I neglected to express my thanks.

God has given us David's example not only for us to admire but to follow as well!

Psalm 31: Into Thy Hand

The fifth verse of Psalm 31 alerts us that it has a definite association with the suffering, dying Lamb of God, for these words formed His final cry from the cross:

"Father, 'into Your hands I commend My spirit'" (Luke 23:46).

Of course, the fact that one verse in a Psalm is definitely associated with the Messiah does not require that all the other verses must be. However, in this particular Psalm every verse does seem to have at least some connection with Him.

There is a problem, though, in analyzing this Psalm. Instead of tracing the suffering, death, burial, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus in chronological order, the Psalm alternates back and forth between suffering and resurrection. But we must remember, as C. S. Lewis pointed out, that "the Psalms are poems, and poems intended to be sung; not doctrinal treatises, nor even sermons."[27]

Prayer for Deliverance (31:1-5a)

31:1 In the opening verses the Lord Jesus is praying to His Father from the cross. As the perfect Man He has always lived in total dependence on God. Now, in the hour of His deepest anguish, He reaffirms His trust in the LORD as His sole and sufficient Sanctuary. He asks that He might never be ashamed for having relied on God the Father. It is a very powerful prayer, reminding God that the honor of His name is inseparably connected with the Resurrection of His Son. It would be an act of righteousness for the Father to raise the Lord Jesus from among the dead. Were He not to do so, the Savior would be exposed as a victim of misplaced confidence and would thus be humiliated.

31:2, 3 In an elegant anthropomorphism, the lonely Sufferer asks God to lean over with His ear facing Calvary; then He asks God to hear His urgent plea and to run to His rescue speedily. He further asks the Lord to be His rock of refuge, steadfast and unmovable, and to be a strong bastion in which He can be safe from every peril.

Of course God already was His rock and fortress, His only defense and security.

Other refuge have I none;
Hangs my helpless soul on Thee.
Leave, O leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me.
—Charles Wesley

Once again Christ bases His appeal on the fact that the honor of God is at stake. "For Your name's sake lead me and guide me." Had not God promised to deliver the righteous? Indeed He had! Now He is asked to honor His name by delivering the Lord Jesus Christ out of death to Resurrection and glory.

31:4 A net of death had been carefully laid to capture and hold the Savior. Here Christ cries to God to pull Him out of this net, to rescue Him from the grave, for Jehovah is His refuge, safe and strong.

31:5a Luke writes that Jesus quoted the words of verse 5a with a loud voice. No man took Christ's life from Him; He laid it down voluntarily and in full possession of His faculties. These words have been repeated by dying saints of God down through the centuries since that time—by men like Luther, Knox, Hus and scores of others.

Praise for Resurrection (31:5b-8)

31:5b, 6 There is a distinct break in the middle of verse 5, a transition from death to Resurrection, a change from prayer to praise. True to His Word, God had redeemed His Holy One from death and the grave. It was a glorious vindication of His Son for trusting in the living God; those who trust in vain idols earn nothing but Jehovah's contempt!

31:7, 8 A song of praise now wings its way heavenward for the changeless love that hovered over God's beloved Son in His affliction. This was a love that took full account of all His adversities, that refused to abandon Him finally to the power of the enemy, that pulled the Savior out of the pit and set His feet on the wide place which is "Resurrection ground."

Deep Distress (31:9-13)

31:9, 10 But now we are brought back to the life of our Lord prior to His trial and Crucifixion. We are allowed to hear the prayers of the Man of Sorrows as He endured the bitter hatred of sinners. Despised and rejected by men, He turned to Jehovah in His distress and appealed for gracious consideration. His eyes were sunken through excessive grief, and His soul and body wasted away with weeping. He was worn out with grief and exhausted with sighing. His misery had sapped away His strength, and His very bones seemed fragile.

The only way "My strength fails because of my iniquity" can be applied to the sinless Savior is by understanding it to mean our iniquity, which He took upon Himself as our Sin-bearer. Otherwise the verse cannot have a Messianic connotation.

31:11-13 The patient Sufferer next speaks of Himself as an object of scornful contempt among all His enemies and a terrifying sight to His neighbors. They would cross the street to avoid Him or duck down an alley if they saw Him coming. He was quickly lost to their memory, discarded like a broken dish. He heard the slander campaign that was being carried on against Him. Terror stalked Him day and night as men hatched plots to kill Him.

This picture of abject pathos and misery is sad enough for any man. But what shall we say when we learn that it was written to describe the Maker of the universe, the Lord of life and glory!

Prayer for Deliverance (31:14-18)

31:14-17a Sorrow and sighing give way to believing prayer. The One whom men reject confesses Jehovah as His Hope and the God of His life. He finds unspeakable comfort in the fact that His times are in the Father's hand. This comfort has been shared by God's trusting people as they have sung in sunshine and sorrow:

Our times are in Thy hand;
Father, we wish them there!
Our life, our souls, our all, we leave
Entirely to Thy care.
—William F. Lloyd

Following this affirmation of trust and submission, the Lord Jesus prays specifically that God will deliver Him from the clutches of His persecuting enemies. He asks that the Father might look down upon Him in favor. He pleads for salvation out of death, a plea based on the steadfast love of the Lord. Again He asks that He might never be disappointed as He looks to Jehovah alone as His Deliverer. The language is rhetorical, of course, emphasizing style at the expense of literalness. There was no possibility that Christ could ever have been put to shame for trusting in Jehovah. He knew that, and we know it. But we lose something if we insist on strict literalness when we read impassioned prayer or lyrical poetry.

31:17b, 18 Turning to the wicked, Christ prays that they might be the ones who are put to shame, who go speechless to Sheol. He asks that their lying lips might be silenced for their slander of the Holy Son of God. Some sincere people consider these verses sub-Christian in their tone, but the more you think of the ruthlessness of the criminals, the vileness of their crime, and the innocence of the Victim, the more you conclude that the language is not too strong!

God, the Great Refuge (31:19, 20)

Once again the Psalm moves from distress to delight, from petition to praise. In majestic cadence, the Lord Jesus extols His Father as the incomparable Hiding Place. He pictures God as the Administrator of an inexhaustible storehouse of goodness treasured up for His believing people. To all who seek shelter in Him He waits to pour out these treasures abundantly in the presence of the sons of men. God's presence is a place where His chosen saints can hide from the malicious plots of man; He is adequate shelter from what Knox calls "the world's noisy debate."

Personal Gratitude (31:21, 22)

The Lord Jesus had experienced a wonderful demonstration of God's goodness when He was completely surrounded by foes, like a besieged city. In His alarm it seemed to Him as if He had been completely deserted by Jehovah. But though He was forsaken during those three awful hours on the cross, yet God heard His cry and raised Him from the dead.

Love the Lord! (31:23, 24)

Having tasted the love of God, Christ loves Him in return and rightly feels that everyone else should too. Jehovah can be depended on to protect His believing ones and to mete out adequate punishment to arrogant rebels!

Any believer who is up against seemingly impossible odds can thus be strong and courageous in the assurance that no one can hope in the LORD in vain—ever!

Psalm 32: Forgiven!

Happiness is to be forgiven! It is an emotion that defies description. It is the relief of an enormous burden lifted, of a debt canceled, of a conscience at rest. Guilt is gone, warfare is ended, peace is enjoyed. To David it meant the forgiveness of his great transgression, the covering of his sin, the non-imputation of his iniquity, and the cleansing of his spirit from deceit. To the believer today it means more than the mere covering of his sin; that was the OT concept of atonement. In this age the believer knows that his sins have been put away completely and buried forever in the sea of God's forgetfulness.

32:1, 2 In Romans 4:7, 8 the Apostle Paul quotes Psalm 32:1, 2 to show that justification was by faith apart from works even in the OT period. But the proof lies not so much in what David says as in what he does not say. He is not speaking about a righteous man who earns or deserves salvation. He is talking about a sinner who has been forgiven. And he makes no mention of works in describing the blessedness of the forgiven man. Through the Holy Spirit Paul deduces from this that David is describing the happiness of the one to whom God imputes righteousness apart from works altogether (Rom. 4:6).

32:3, 4 Next David switches to a minor key. After he had committed adultery with Bathsheba and plotted the death of Uriah, he steadfastly refused to confess his sin. He tried to sweep it all under the rug. Perhaps he rationalized that "time heals all things." But in his stubborn refusal to break, he was fighting against God and against his own best interests. He became a physical wreck, and it was all caused by his unrelieved anguish of spirit. He realized that God's hand was heavy upon him, blocking him, thwarting him, frustrating him at every turn. Nothing worked out right anymore. The gears of life never meshed. The carefree days had vanished, and continued existence was as unappealing as an arid wilderness.

32:5 After a year of this impenitence, David finally came to the place where he was willing to utter the three words that God had been waiting for —"I have sinned." Then the whole shameful story came out like pus from an abscess. Now there is no attempt to gloss over, to mitigate or to excuse. David finally calls sin by its real name—"my sin ... my iniquity ... my transgressions." As soon as he confesses, he receives the instant assurance that the Lord has forgiven the iniquity of his sin.

32:6 His experience of answered prayer moves him to pray that all God's people would prove their Lord in the same way. Those who live in fellowship with the Lord will be delivered in a time of distress. The rush of great waters will never reach them.

32:7 The one who had been so hard and impenitent is now contrite and broken. With keen gratitude He acknowledges that God is his hiding place, his protection from trouble, and the One who surrounds him with songs of deliverance.

32:8, 9 There is a question as to whether verses 8 and 9 are the words of David or of the Lord. If we interpret them as David's language, then they remind us, in Jay Adam's words, that "the natural response of forgiveness is to help others by sharing one's own experience and specifically by counseling others in trouble."[28] If we adopt the other view, then it is the Lord replying to David's worship with a promise of guidance and a lesson on the need for constant yieldedness. It is the Father spreading a feast for the returned backslider. He offers supervised instruction about the pathway ahead and personal counsel in all the decisions of life. But there is also a word of caution. Do not be like the horse, restless to move ahead without command, or like the mule, obstinately refusing to go even when directed. Both animals need the bit and bridle in order to make them submissive and obedient. The believer should be so sensitive to the Lord's leading that he does not need the harsher disciplines of life to bring him into line.

32:10, 11 As far as David is concerned, the righteous man has it all over the wicked. There is no comparison. Many sorrows are the heritage of the wicked. But the humble believer is surrounded by the mercy of the Lord. So it is only fitting that the righteous should be glad in the LORD and should shout for joy.

Psalm 33: A New Song

There appears to be an unmistakable link between the first verse of this Psalm and the last verse of the preceding one. In both, the writer urges the righteous to rejoice in the Lord. But this Psalm elaborates the theme by telling why it is appropriate for the righteous to praise Him.

We should note that there is no mention here of active enemies, of persecution, of tribulation. It is rather a peaceful scene, with Israel dwelling in safety and the Lord acknowledged as the universal Sovereign. The Psalm thus belongs to the beginning of Christ's kingdom, when Gentile oppression has been smashed and the time of Jacob's trouble is past.

33:1, 2 The call to worship goes out to Israel in the first seven verses, then to the Gentiles as well in verse 8. Praise is so beautiful and so compelling that the sweetest and finest possible instrumental accompaniment should be utilized—the harp and an instrument of ten strings.

33:3 The new song is the song of redemption. It follows the forgiveness of sins (Ps. 32) and belongs to all who have been cleansed by the precious blood of Christ. But this song will be sung in a very special way by redeemed Israel at the outset of the Millennium (Rev. 14:3).

33:4 The new song celebrates the word of the LORD and all His work. His word is absolutely true and righteous, unchanging and trustworthy. All His works are done in faithfulness. This is seen in creation—"seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, winter and summer, and day and night" (Gen. 8:22). It is seen in providence. "All things work together for good to those who love God, to those who are the called according to His purpose" (Rom. 8:28). And it is seen in redemption—"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9).

33:5 God is not only upright and faithful, upholding righteousness and justice, but the evidences of the goodness of the LORD are everywhere.

33:6, 7 The greatness of God is seen in that He created the heavens and their starry host by no greater expenditure of energy than by speaking the energizing word. Just this easily did He confine the oceans within appointed limits. Some see these two utterances as a poetic veiled reference to Israel as the stars of the heavens (Gen. 15:5) and to the Gentile nations as the raging seas, bottled up at last by the Lord Jesus at His Second Advent.

33:8, 9 In any case, God is so great that all mankind should reverence Him and show Him the deepest respect. His word was the sound energy which became matter. By His command all creation came into being.

33:10, 11 Throughout human history the ungodly nations have collaborated to thwart God and to ruin His people. But, as Burns said, "The best-laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agley," or, as we would say, they often go haywire! God ultimately frustrates the cleverest plots hatched by His opponents. And nothing can hinder the accomplishment of His purposes. He will always have the last word, and whatever He plans will come to pass.

33:12 So the pathway of blessing lies in cooperating with God. Happy is the nation that acknowledges Jehovah as its God. This is the people He has chosen as His own inheritance.

33:13-17 As the LORD looks down from heaven, He has a perfect view of all mankind. Nothing escapes Him. He sees all that is done and, what is more, He knows the thoughts and intents of every heart. He sees some who fight with carnal weapons—and He chuckles at their folly. They depend on army, navy, and air force rather than on the living God. When will they learn that the finest cavalry can't bring them victory?

33:18, 19 God also sees those who trust in Him for salvation and who depend on His mercy for provision. These are the ones who please Him. He looks down on them with keenest favor.

33:20-22 There is no question which class the psalmist and his people belong to. They trust Jehovah as their Helper and Protector. They have found true happiness by putting all their confidence in His holy name. All they ask is that they might continue to bask in the sunshine of His steadfast love as they continue to depend on Him alone.

Psalm 34: Psalm of the New Birth

The historical background of this Psalm is found in 1 Samuel 21. In his flight from Saul, David had sought refuge with the Philistine king of Gath whose name was Achish, or Abimelech, according to the heading of the Psalm. (Abimelech may have been a title rather than a personal name.) Fearing that this enemy king might kill him, David had pretended to be crazy by making marks on the doors of the gate and letting his saliva drool down over his beard. The trick worked. The king didn't need any more madmen and so he dismissed David, who then escaped to the cave of Adullam. This episode was certainly not one of the more heroic or brilliant chapters in the psalmist's checkered career, but he nevertheless looked back upon it as a dramatic deliverance by the Lord, and so he wrote this Psalm to celebrate that event.

Believers down through the centuries have loved Psalm 34 because it expresses so eloquently their own testimony of salvation by grace through faith in the Lord. Let's look at the Psalm in this light.

34:1 Salvation from sin is a gift of such tremendous value that it should draw unceasing thanks from our hearts to the Giver. If we were to bless the LORD at all times, it could hardly be too much. If His praise were to be continually on our lips, we couldn't begin to exhaust the subject. No human tongue will ever be able to thank God adequately throughout all eternity.

34:2 The converted person boasts in the LORD—not in his own character or achievements. When we understand the gospel of grace we realize that we did all the sinning and Christ did all the saving. So our boast must be in Him alone. If those who are still in the grip of sin will hear and heed our testimony of full and free salvation, they too will joyfully awaken to realize that there is hope for them as well.

34:3 The well-saved soul isn't content to enjoy his redemption in isolation. The subject is so superlative that he calls on all his brotherhood to magnify the LORD with him and to exalt His name collectively. Some couples have this reference inscribed on their wedding rings.

34:4 When the Spirit of God begins to brood over the soul of the sinner, He implants in it a divine instinct to seek the LORD. Only later does the saved sinner realize that it was the Lord who was the original Seeker! It is as the hymn says:

I sought the Lord, and afterward I knew
He moved my soul to seek Him, seeking me;
It was not I that found, O Savior true.
No, I was found of Thee.
—Anonymous

Still, when we seek Him He answers, delivering us from all our fears—the fear of the unknown future, the fear of dying with our sins unconfessed and unforgiven, the fear of standing before the Judgment of the Great White Throne. When we trust Christ as Lord and Savior we hear His words of absolution: "Your sins are forgiven; go in peace!"

34:5 But this is not a private salvation—it is available to all. All those who look to Christ in faith become radiant. Frowns are transmuted to smiles of joy, and depression and despair give way to delight. No one who commits his life to the Lord will ever be disappointed; He cannot fail the trusting heart.

34:6 We come to Him in our poverty and rags, our humiliation and helplessness, and gladly confess our inability to procure our own salvation. We put our whole trust in Him. Our language is:

In my hand no price I bring,

Simply to Thy cross I cling.

The LORD hears our cry. Our poverty appeals to His unlimited resources. He stoops down and saves us out of all our troubles—out of the tangled web of sin which we had woven by our own hands.

34:7 The believer is not only saved, but kept as well. The angel of the LORD, that is, the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, serves as an encircling garrison for those who fear Him, delivering them from dangers seen and unseen. No sheep of His can ever perish (John 10:28).

34:8, 9 Those who know the Savior long to share Him with others. Like the four lepers in Samaria, they say, "We are not doing right. This is a day of good news, and we are silent and do not speak up" (2 Kings 7:9, Amplified Bible). And so the evangel rings out, "Oh, taste and see that the LORD is good; blessed is the man who trusts in Him!"

This is the authentic, urgent invitation to the unconverted. We may reason, argue, resort to logic and marshal Christian evidences, but when all is said and done, a man must taste and see for himself. Campbell Murdoch writes:

> We may argue about God, His existence, and the external evidences which the universe and providence provide. But only when His love and presence touch our hearts can we really know Him in His unspeakable goodness.[29]

Then follows the invitation to the converted. It is the call to the life of faith. The saints are invited to walk by faith and not by sight, and to experience God's marvelous, miraculous, and abundant provision. It is the message of Matthew 6:33:

> But seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you.

34:10 While young lions[30] sometimes lack food and suffer hunger, those who seek the LORD shall not lack any good thing, for our Lord Jesus Christ is our great, all-sufficient Provider!

34:11 The grace of God not only saves, keeps, and provides but it instructs as well.

> For the grace of God that brings salvation has appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in the present age, looking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from every lawless deed and purify for Himself His own special people, zealous for good works (Tit. 2:11-14).

So here the psalmist offers practical instruction to his sons on what constitutes the true fear of the LORD.

34:12-15

1. A controlled tongue—one that is free from evil and deceit.
2. A separated walk—separated from evil and separated to good works.
3. A peaceable disposition—as Paul said, "If it is possible, as much as depends on you, live peaceably with all men" (Rom. 12:18).

Peter states in 1 Peter 3:9, "Knowing that you were called to this [blessing others], that you may inherit a blessing." He then quotes verses 12-16a of this Psalm to reinforce his teaching that we should not return evil for evil or reviling for reviling, but that we should rather bless. The blessing is the favor of the Lord; His eyes are on the righteous, and His ears are open to their cry (Ps. 34:15).

34:16 In quoting verse 16, Peter confined himself to the first half:

> The face of the LORD is against those who do evil.

He did not quote the rest, which says: To cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.

The first part of the verse is true in any age. The second half will be fulfilled when the Lord Jesus Christ returns to the earth as King of kings.

34:17 The righteous have the unspeakable privilege of instant audience with the LORD. He hears them every time they cry and delivers them out of all their troubles. Barnes comments here, "No one has ever fully appreciated the privilege of being permitted to call upon God, the privilege of prayer."

Before leaving verse 17 we should note that the Lord does not deliver us from troubles; He delivers us out of them. Believers are not immune to troubles, but they do have a Mighty Deliverer! That's the crucial difference.

34:18 The LORD knows how to resist the proud, but He cannot resist a broken and contrite heart. He keeps Himself accessible to the brokenhearted, and is always on hand to rescue the crushed in spirit.

34:19 As already mentioned, the righteous do have many afflictions. Perhaps we will find someday that we have had more than the ungodly. But at least all our troubles are confined to this life. What is more, we do not have to bear them alone, for our eternal Friend is by our side. We have the assurance of complete and final deliverance from afflictions through the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Because He has risen from the dead, we too shall rise someday, forever free from sin, sickness, sorrow, suffering, and death!

34:20 But even in death, the Lord protects the bodies of His saints:

He guards all his bones;

Not one of them is broken.

This verse was fulfilled literally at our Lord's death:But when they came to Jesus and saw that He was already dead, they did not break His legs. For these things were done that the Scripture should be fulfilled, "Not one of His bones shall be broken" (John 19:33, 36).

In this, of course, our Lord was the perfect "Antitype" of the paschal lamb, about which it was written:

"Nor shall you break one of its bones" (Ex. 12:46).

34:21, 22 The last two verses of the Psalm hinge on the word "condemned." As for the wicked, calamity shall bring them down in death, and they shall be condemned. But the servants of Jehovah have One who redeems their soul, and none of those who trust in Him shall be condemned. Praise God, there is no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus! (See Rom. 8:1.)

Who shall condemn us now?

Since Christ has died, and ris'n, and gone above,

For us to plead at the right hand of Love,

Who shall condemn us now?

—Horatius Bonar

And so the believer is saved, kept, and abundantly satisfied for time and eternity. It's a wonderful thing to be born again! That is the message of this Psalm.

Psalm 35: Friends Turned Traitors

35:1-3 In an innocent use of his imagination, David calls on God to arm Himself with a generous supply of weapons and to thereby deal summarily with those professed friends of the psalmist who turned out to be his cruel adversaries. The psalmist wants to see the LORD reach over for His shield and buckler and move into action, hurling His well-aimed spear, then saying to David in an aside, "I'll take care of them and be your Savior."

35:4-6 It would be even-handed justice for these would-be murderers to be ashamed and disgraced, and for their devilish plots to be repulsed and foiled. It would be a righteous thing for them to become as helpless and weightless as chaff in the wind, driven relentlessly by the angel of the LORD (the Lord Jesus Christ in one of His pre-incarnate appearances). Yes, it would be fitting retribution for their way to be as dark and slippery as ice, with the angel of the LORD in hot pursuit.

35:7, 8 They had no good reason for plotting against the psalmist as they did, for trying to capture him as if he were a wild animal. So now let the Lord lower the boom on them unexpectedly, and let them be caught in their own net!

35:9, 10 Then David will be joyful in the LORD, celebrating His salvation. All his being will join in acknowledging the LORD as the incomparable One who saves the defenseless from the superior power of his opponent, the helpless and needy from the spoiler.

35:11-14 To understand the psalmist's deep emotional involvement, we must realize that these people who are now testifying against him were once his friends. Now they malign him and accuse him of things of which he has no knowledge. For all the kindness he has shown to them, he is getting paid with hatred. No wonder he is disconsolate! When these same people were sick, it was another story. David had grieved over them sympathetically. He couldn't even eat. With his head bowed down in sorrow, he had prayed for them continually—just as he would for an intimate friend or brother. His mourning was as deep as when one mourns the death of his own mother.

35:15, 16 But when calamity and adversity struck David, they were elated. They rose up in a body to accuse him. They brought along railing derelicts from the street to defame him with a continuous tirade. Impertinently they taunted him in a rising crescendo, at the same time baring their teeth in hatred. The psalmist's experience makes us think of the Lord Jesus before Pontius Pilate or before Herod; much of the language here applies forcefully to what He endured.

35:17, 18 How long can the Lord look down on the injustice of it all before being moved to action? The time has come to rescue the innocent one from the havoc of his foes and to save his precious life from these human lions.

35:19-21 What a travesty it would be if those who are David's enemies for no good reason should have occasion to gloat over his downfall and wink their eyes in apparent triumph. They don't want peace—all they want is to concoct false charges against decent, law-abiding citizens. Whenever they see the slightest slip they say, "Aha, aha! Just as we predicted! We saw you do it."

35:22-25 But You have seen too, LORD. You've seen the whole miserable mess. Don't shut Yourself up in silent seclusion. Don't stay so far from me. It's time to awake and take resolute action to defend me and my righteous cause. I long for You to vindicate me—You always do what is right—and to thwart their desire to celebrate my collapse. Don't ever let them exult that they have seen their desires fulfilled, that they have succeeded in devouring me.

35:26 O Lord, see to it that those who rejoice to see me fall will be thoroughly disgraced. Dress them with ignominy and dishonor for the insolent way they have treated me.

35:27, 28 But may all those who are hoping for my ultimate acquittal have reason to shout for joy and be glad. Let them bear witness that You are truly a great Lord because You take such a keen delight in the welfare of those who serve You. And my tongue won't be silent, either; it will be continually telling others about Your justice and Your praiseworthiness!

Psalm 36: Great Sin, Greater God

36:1-4 An oracle in the heart of David gives a vivid picture of the transgression of the wicked. The sinner abandons any fear of God that he might have had. He flatters himself that his crimes cannot be proved against him and punished. His speech is saturated with wickedness and deceit. He scorns a respectable, law-abiding life. When he ought to be sleeping, he devises new misdeeds, then deliberately embarks on an evil course, gladly saying "yes" to sinful solicitations.

36:5 In stark contrast to the depravity of such a sinner are the perfections of the LORD. His mercy, for instance, extends to the heavens. Barnes writes:

> It is very exalted: to the very heavens, as high as the highest object of which man can conceive. The idea is not that the mercy of God is manifested in heaven ... nor that it has its origin in heaven (though that is true) but that it is of the most exalted nature, it is as high as men can conceive.[31]

God's faithfulness reaches to the clouds, that is, it is limitless in its dimensions. A. W. Pink says:

> What a word is this! "Thy faithfulness extends to the clouds." Far above all finite comprehension is the unchanging faithfulness of God. Everything about God is great, vast, incomparable. He never forgets, never fails, never falters, never forfeits His word. To every declaration of promise or prophecy the Lord has exactly adhered, every engagement of covenant or threatening He will make good, for "God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the son of man, that He should repent: hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" (Num. 23:19, AV). Therefore does the believer exclaim, "His compassions fail not, they are new every morning: great is Thy faithfulness" (Lam. 3:22, 23, AV).[32]

36:6 God's righteousness is like the great mountains He has made—stable, steadfast, immovable, thoroughly dependable. He can always be depended on to do the thing that is right. This was perfectly manifested at the cross. God's righteousness demands that sin be punished. If we were to be punished for our sins we would perish eternally. This is why God's blessed Son took our sins upon Himself. So unbending is God's righteousness that when He saw our sins on His sinless Son, He poured out the torrents of His judgment upon Him. Now God has a righteous basis upon which He can save ungodly sinners—the penalty has been paid by a worthy Substitute.

The perfect righteousness of God
Is witnessed in the Savior's blood.
'Tis in the cross of Christ we trace
His righteousness, yet wondrous grace.
—Albert Midlane

God's judgments are like the great deep. This means that His decrees, decisions, thoughts and plans are wonderfully profound, complex, and wise. When contemplating this attribute of God, Paul exclaimed: "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!" (Rom. 11:33).

"O LORD, You preserve man and beast." Here it is a matter of temporal salvation—of the providence of God preserving His creatures. And what a great mercy this is. Think of all that is involved in caring for so many human beings and so many animals, birds, and fish. As for man, God numbers the very hairs of his head; as for the insignificant sparrow, not a single one falls to the ground without your heavenly Father!

36:7 Nothing that enters human life is more precious than the lovingkindness of God. It is eternal, sovereign, infinite, causeless, and unchanging. And nothing can ever separate the child of God from it. In 1743 John Brine wrote:

No tongue can fully express the infinitude of God's love, or any mind comprehend it: it "passeth knowledge" (Eph. 3:19). The most extensive ideas that a finite mind can frame about Divine love are infinitely below its true nature. The heaven is not so far above the earth as the goodness of God is beyond the most raised conceptions which we are able to form of it. It is an ocean which swells higher than all the mountains of opposition in such as are the object of it. It is a fountain from which flows all necessary good to all those who are interested in it.[33]

This is why the children of men find refuge under the shadow of His wings. Unfortunately, not all men choose to enjoy God's loving protection. But the privilege is available to all, and people from every nation, class, and culture have found rest, refreshment, and safety under those incomparable wings.

36:8 Not only is there protection, but abundant provision as well. "They are abundantly satisfied with the fullness of Your house, and You give them drink from the river of Your pleasures." What food can match that of the house of the Lord for quality and for quantity? And what pleasures also? As F. B. Meyer pointed out, God gives sorrows by cupfuls but pleasure by riverfuls!

36:9 In Christ is the fountain or source of life. "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men" (John 1:4). In that light we see light. Just as natural light reveals things in their true form, so the light of God enables us to see things as He does. It enables us to form correct estimates of spiritual realities, of the world, of others, and of ourselves.

Corot, the great landscape painter once said, "When I find myself in one of Nature's beautiful places, I grow angry with my pictures." Pleased with them in his studio, the artist was humbled in sight of Nature's glory. Judging ourselves in the light of the world, we may easily find grounds for personal satisfaction; but to judge ourselves in the light of the Lord, to measure ourselves by the Divine standard, is to put our pride to shame (Choice Gleanings).

36:10, 11 After scaling the Himalayan peaks of the perfections of God, the son of Jesse returns to the valley of human need and prays for continued protection from the wicked. Verse 11 explains verse 10. The way in which David asks God to continue His lovingkindness and deliverance is by restraining the foot of arrogant men from trampling him down and the hand of the wicked from driving him far away.

36:12 His prayer is answered. Faith enables the psalmist to see the wicked fallen down and powerless to rise again.

Psalm 37: True Peace

David had suffered plenty at the hands of ungodly, unscrupulous men during his lifetime. Now an old man, he shares some advice on how to react when we become a victim of wicked schemes and venomous tongues.

37:1, 2 First, we must not allow ourselves to fret because of evildoers. The danger is that we will lie in bed at night and rehearse the whole outrageous episode. First we think of all they said and did, then we go over how we answered them, then we wish we had thought of some other choice brickbats to hurl at them! Soon our digestive juices have turned to sulfuric acid and we lie and toss and turn, wondering when sleep will ever come! Our fretting is hurting no one but ourselves and accomplishes nothing. We must not do it!

Whatever else we do, we must not be envious of the unrighteous! This earth is the only heaven they're ever going to have. The scythe of retribution will soon mow them down, and their spectacular careers will fade and wither.

37:3 That's the negative side of the picture—don't be agitated over them and don't wish you were like them. On the positive side, the first thing to do is to trust in the LORD, and do good. This trust does not mean an unfounded, breezy optimism that everything will turn out right. Instead, it means a deep, abiding reliance on the God who has promised to punish the ungodly and to reward the righteous. His Word can never fail. The upright will indeed dwell in the land and enjoy security. Despite the fiercest attacks of demons or men, no sheep of Christ will ever perish (John 10:27-29). A dwelling place in the Father's house is guaranteed to all who trust Christ (John 14:1-6).

John Wesley once sent financial help to a preacher-friend named Samuel Bradburn. Enclosing a five-pound note, he wrote: "Dear Sammy: 'Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.'" In expressing his thanks, Bradburn said, "I have often been struck with the beauty of the passage of Scripture quoted in your letter, but I must confess that I never saw such a useful expository note on it before."

37:4 But suppose you have had great desires to carry on a certain ministry for the Lord. You feel confident that He has been leading you, and your only desire is to glorify Him. Yet a powerful adversary has opposed, blocked, and thwarted you at every bend in the road. What do you do in a case like this?

The answer is that you delight yourself also in the LORD, knowing that in His own time He shall give you the desires of your heart. It is not necessary for you to fight back. "The battle is not yours, but God's" (2 Chron. 20:15). "The Lord will fight for you, and you shall hold your peace" (Ex. 14:14).

37:5, 6 Or it may be that you have been misquoted, falsely accused or slandered. If there were some shred of truth to the charges they wouldn't be so hard to take. But they are absolutely untrue and malicious. What should you do? Commit the entire matter to the LORD. Roll the whole weight of it onto Him. Let Him act on your behalf, and then you will be completely vindicated. It will become clear for all to see that you were innocent after all. Barnes says:

> If you are slandered, if your character is assailed and seems for the time to be under a cloud, if reproach comes upon you from the devices of wicked men in such a way that you cannot meet it—then, if you will commit the case to God, He will protect your character, and will cause the clouds to disperse, and all to be as clear in reference to your character and the motives of your conduct as the sun without a cloud.[34]

37:7, 8 Having committed your way to the Lord, the next step is to rest in Him. Since He is carrying your burden, it is not necessary for you to bear it also. Too often that is exactly what we do. We cast our care hesitatingly on Him, then promptly take it back on ourselves.

> It is God's will that I should cast
> On Him my care each day.
> He also bids me not to cast
> My confidence away.
> But oh, I am so foolish
> That when taken unawares,
> I cast away my confidence
> And carry all my cares.
> —T. Baird

"And wait patiently for Him." Notice how the believer's resource is repeatedly said to be in the Lord:

Trust in the LORD (v. 3).

Delight in the LORD (v. 4).

Commit your way to the LORD (v. 5).

Rest in the LORD (v. 7a).*

Wait patiently for Him (v. 7b).*

Sometimes this is the hardest thing for us to do. Waiting is the thing we do least well! But true faith waits, confident that God is able to do what He has promised (Rom. 4:21).

A second time David says, "Do not fret ... ." Why the repetition? For needed emphasis, of course. Even after determining not to get upset over the way we are treated, we often go back and stir up the mud all over again in our minds. But this is both self-defeating and hazardous. Even if the evil person prospers in his way—even if he succeeds in carrying out wicked schemes—the Christian should not become emotionally disturbed or build up anger, resentment, malice, and hatred. If we allow ourselves to indulge in these attitudes, they can eventually lead to violent words and acts. Then we become offenders ourselves.

37:9-11 The day is coming when all the wrongs of earth will be righted. At that time the evildoers shall be cut off and the trusting saints will possess all the blessings He has promised. It will not be very long until the wicked vanish from the scene. If you look diligently for them in their usual hangouts your search will be in vain! In that day the meek shall inherit the earth and thoroughly enjoy its unprecedented prosperity. When will that day come? For the church it will begin when the Savior descends into the clouds to catch away His waiting people and take them to their heavenly home. For the believing remnant of Israel and the nations it will begin when the Lord Jesus returns to earth to decimate His foes and to reign for a thousand years of peace. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus looked forward to this glorious day in these words:

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5).

37:12, 13 In the meantime the cheats, the extortioners and the oppressors lay their plans against God's children. They express the bitterest hostility toward those who love the Lord. But Jehovah is not agitated by the sound of their grinding teeth. He knows that the day of reckoning is not far away. It is good for us when we can look upon our foes with that same detached nonchalance, when, as someone has suggested, we can leave behind us the world of little men.

37:14, 15 It often seems that "truth is forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne." The wicked are well-armed and well-trained. The righteous, by comparison, seem ill-equipped and continually outwitted. But there are certain inflexible laws at work in the moral realm. The way of the transgressor is hard in the end. Sins are sure to come home to roost some day. Men can't get away with their sins forever. The boomerang effect is always at work: Their sword shall enter their own heart. When they need them most their weapons will fail: their bows shall be broken.

37:16 The few possessions of the righteous are better than the enormous riches of many wicked since the saint has the Lord while the sinner does not. The writer of the letter to the Hebrews, after documenting all the incomparable wealth that the believer enjoys in Christ, adds rather wryly: "Be content with such things as you have, for He Himself has said, 'I will never leave you nor forsake you'" (Heb. 13:5).

37:17, 18 The arms of the wicked (that is, their strength) shall be broken. But not so the righteous. They will be upheld by the LORD of infinite power. He knows the number of the days of the upright, all that those days contain, and where they will lead at last. He knows that the heritage of the just will last forever—an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled and unfading, reserved in heaven for all those who by God's power are guarded through faith for a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time (1 Pet. 1:4, 5).

37:19 The saints shall not be ashamed of their faith when hard times come. They have the hidden spiritual resources to see them through. In days of scarcity they enjoy a special kind of abundance. First of all, they have learned to live sacrificially, so that they do not feel deprived when the meal barrel is low. But also they have the Lord, who is able to spread a table in the wilderness. They have the privilege of seeing God provide for them in miraculous ways, and there is a special, secret-sweet flavor to all such manna from heaven.

37:20 But the wicked shall perish. Throughout the Psalm this death bell tolls for the enemies of the LORD. They are called wicked, wrongdoers, those who prosper in their way, men who carry out evil devices, enemies of the Lord, those cursed by the Lord, children of the wicked, and transgressors. The word "wicked" is mentioned fourteen times in this Psalm and constitutes one of its keynotes.

The Lord's foes are like the splendor of the pastures or meadows. One day they luxuriate in wild flowers and verdure; the next day they are mowed down by the reaper or withered with the change of season. Insubstantial as smoke, they shall vanish away.

37:21 The wicked borrows and does not repay. This may mean that he is careless about paying back or cannot. But with all his money, why can't he repay? The answer is that he is always over-extended. In his greed for money he speculates. When he loses, he borrows to cover his losses. It's the old story of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul. He builds his empire on credit and then, when reverses come, he grows desperate to prop up his sagging fortunes. Behind the outward veneer of prosperity lies financial chaos.

Though the righteous are often far from affluent, yet they are incredibly generous, always finding it more blessed to give than to receive. They have proved that if a believer really wants to give, he will never lack the means to do it. As Paul taught:

> And God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that always having all sufficiency in all things have an abundance for every good work (2 Cor. 9:8).

37:22 The destiny of the righteous and the wicked hinges on their relationship to the Lord. Those who have been justified by faith are blessed by the Lord; they will possess the land. Those who have refused God's offer of salvation have put themselves in the unenviable position of standing under His curse; they will be destroyed.

37:23, 24 The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD ... . Although the word good is not in the original text, the idea is certainly included in verses 23 and 24. God plans and orders the pathways of the man who lives in fellowship with Him. He upholds the one whose ways please Him. Though such a man may fall into trials and tribulations, he will never be engulfed by them, for the Lord holds him securely by His hand. It is also true that if a righteous man falls into sin, he will not be abandoned by the Lord, though this is not the specific kind of fall that this verse is referring to.

37:25 Throughout David's life—and he was an old man when he wrote this—he had never seen the righteous forsaken or his descendants begging bread. If someone objects that he has known instances where these things have actually happened, we would make two comments. First, David may have meant that he never knew of the righteous man to be finally forsaken. Or second, he may have been stating a general principle, without barring the possibility of isolated exceptions. Scripture often does this. It makes sweeping statements describing the normal outworking of spiritual laws. Exceptions do not disprove the overall principles.

37:26 Far from having to send out his children to beg, the righteous man is a generous donor and lends frequently. By following God's Word he practices industriousness, thrift and conservation. By working hard, shopping carefully, eliminating waste, and avoiding extravagance, he is able to stretch his funds and thereby to help others who are in need. His descendants become a blessing because they have learned these lessons thoroughly at home and follow them throughout their own lives.

37:27 This verse is one of several in the Bible that seem to teach salvation by good works. We know from passages such as Ephesians 2:8-10 and Titus 3:5 that this is not the case. We must conclude that if a man is saved he will produce good works, and that such faithful saints are the only ones who will abide forever.

37:28 The LORD loves justice, and it is in keeping with His justice to make His saints eternally secure. It is not that the saints deserve eternal life, but that Christ died to purchase it for them, and that God must honor the terms of the purchase.

The psalmist loves to meditate on the security of the believer (see vv. 18, 24, 28 and 33). All who have been born again through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ can know on the authority of the Word of God that they are saved forever. F. W. Dixon wrote:

> If you lack assurance there is only one way to gain it or regain it—take the Word of God. Take it and believe it. God says you are His; that you are safe and absolutely secure, and that He will never let you go; take a large dose of that.[35]

But while the righteous will be preserved forever, the children of the wicked shall be cut off. It is a melancholy business to contemplate the doom of the unsaved. What will it mean to be separated from God, from Christ, and from hope for all eternity?

37:29 Israel's prime hope was to live in the land under the reign of the Messiah. Devout Jews admittedly had a heavenly hope as well (Heb. 11:10), but the emphasis in the OT era was upon material blessings in the land of Israel during the golden age of peace and prosperity. When we read that the righteous will dwell upon the land forever, we must understand that the earthly kingdom of Christ will last for one thousand years, then merge into His everlasting kingdom. It may be that in the eternal state redeemed Israel will inhabit the new earth mentioned in Revelation 21:1; if that is the case then the promise of possessing the land forever can be taken literally.

The contrast between the righteous and the wicked continues.

37:30, 31 The just man's speech is brimful of wisdom. What he says is sound, Scriptural, and solid. He speaks justice—not crookedness and deceit. He meditates continually on the Word of God, and this keeps his steps from slipping into sin and shame. As Spurgeon has mentioned, he has:

the best thing—the law of his God, in the best place—in his heart, producing the best result—his steps do not slip.

37:32, 33 The wicked watches for an opportunity to pounce on the innocent and destroy him. But Jehovah will neither abandon the innocent to the power of the foe nor allow him to be declared guilty if a case against him comes to a trial. God is the Guardian and Advocate of all His own people.

37:34 Our best policy is therefore to trust (wait on the LORD) and obey (keep His way). There's no other way to be happy in Jesus!

But that is not all. For the sixth time the psalmist promises that all such will inherit the land. Then he adds a further assurance. When the wicked are destroyed, the believers' only involvement will be that of spectators. They will not take pleasure in this awful event, but will themselves stand free from any form of judgment.

37:35 David was keen and perceptive in observing human life. He had once observed a wicked, overbearing man spreading himself like a luxuriating tree in its native soil. Apparently the thought is that this tree had never suffered the setback caused by transplanting. It was still in its native soil and thus vigorous and large. The wicked man was correspondingly prosperous and powerful.

37:36 But the next time David was passing through that place, the man was gone. He sought him but couldn't find him anywhere. The man prospered for awhile. His power lasted for a short time, but then he himself was gone, and so were his prosperity and power.

37:37, 38 The psalmist counsels us to notice the contrast between the blameless, upright man and the transgressors. There is a posterity for the man of peace, whereas the future of the wicked shall be cut off. Both the righteous and the unrighteous produce long lines of physical descendants. Tholuck says of the man of peace, "It shall go well at last to such a man." But the wicked has no such promising tomorrow.

37:39, 40 The greatest thing about the righteous is their connection with God. He is their Savior and their strength in time of trouble. No wonder Christians turn instinctively to Him in time of need! They find that He helps them, delivers them, and saves them because they depend on Him completely. Are you in trouble right now? Trust in Him. He will see you through!

Psalm 38: Sorrow for Sin

We might think that this Psalm describes the suffering of the Savior were it not for the references to "my sin" (v. 3), "my iniquities" (v. 4), "my foolishness" (v. 5) and "my plague" (v. 11). It might be valid to apply much of the rest of the language to the Lord Jesus as He suffered at the hands of God and of man, but the basic interpretation certainly belongs to David at a time in his life when intense physical and mental distress were admittedly connected to some sin he had committed.

38:1-4 First David thinks of his sufferings as the rebuke of an angry God and the chastening of His hot displeasure, and he asks the LORD to lift the siege. The arrows of the Almighty have found their mark in the psalmist's mind and body, and God's hand has come down with crushing pressure upon him. As a result of divine wrath his whole body is sick. The illness has seeped into his very bones—and all because of his sin. There is no excusing his iniquities—he is thoroughly convicted of them. Like gigantic waves, they have dashed over him. Like an enormous weight, they have broken his strength.

38:5-8 Foul and festering wounds have broken out over his body, and he has no doubt why this has happened. He is doubled over in pain, laid low with weakness—a living specter of grief. His body is racked with a high fever, and there is no part of his anatomy that has escaped. He has no more fight left in him. Thoroughly whipped, he can do nothing but groan to express how he feels.

38:9-11 It is some comfort to David to realize that the Lord knows the anguish of his heart and the emotions he feels but cannot express. But still his heart is palpitating wildly, his strength rapidly draining away, and all sparkle vanishing from his eyes. His loved ones and his friends avoid him as if he were a leper, and even his relatives are reluctant to visit him.

38:12-14 Nor have his would-be assassins given up their plots, threats, and villainy. But David is deaf to all their threats and remains silent as far as defense, self-vindication, or rebukes are concerned.

38:15-17 Yet no matter how dark the present situation is, he is not without hope. He still has the confidence that God will answer him. He asks that his adversaries might not have the pleasure of celebrating his complete calamity.

But right now he is continually racked with pain and near the limit of human endurance.

38:18 With refreshing candor and brokenness and with no attempt to gloss over his sin, David confesses his iniquity and says "I'm sorry!" Any man who sincerely takes this position before God will never be denied forgiveness. The Lord has gone on record to state that He will grant mercy to the one who confesses and forsakes his sin (Prov. 28:13). If this were not so, all men would be hopelessly doomed.

38:19, 20 David's thoughts go back to his enemies once more. Though he is weak and sickly, they are vigorous and strong. He then acknowledges the justice of God's chastenings but protests that his adversaries have no valid cause for their malice. He has been kind to them but gets only hatred in return. At the bottom of their hostility is the fact that David is a follower of God and of good.

38:21, 22 So he appeals to God not to forsake him, but to stay close by and to hurry to his rescue—to truly be the psalmist's Savior-God!

Paraphrase of Psalm 39: Inner Fire

39:1-3 "I was fiercely determined to keep myself from rebelling or complaining against the Lord in spite of the extremity of my plight. I vowed to muzzle my mouth as long as I was in earshot of unbelievers; I didn't want to give them any excuse for questioning the providence of God. So there I was, dumb and silent, with no outlet for my suppressed emotions. But it was of no use. My heart was red hot with indignation and perplexity. I couldn't understand why the Lord was allowing me to endure such overwhelming grief. The more I nursed my bitterness of soul, the greater the inward pressure became. Finally all my pent up feelings burst forth in questioning prayer.

39:4-6 "LORD, how long is this nightmare going to last? Tell me how much time I have left, and when it is going to run out. At best the span of my life is only about the width of my palm; compared to Your eternity, my lifetime isn't worth mentioning. All of us humans are as unsubstantial as a vapor. We go through life like phantoms. We rush around in frenzied activity—but what does it all amount to after all? We spend our lives scrimping and saving, and leave it all behind to be enjoyed by ingrates or fools or strangers!

39:7, 8 "So what hope do I have, Lord? My only hope is in You. Apart from You I have nothing. Deliver me from all my transgressions—particularly those sins that might have brought this awful trouble into my life. I can't stand the thought of foolish people gloating over my calamity.

39:9, 10 "You know how I have kept quiet since this trouble struck—because I knew it came by Your permissive will. But now I am asking You to remove Your chastening hand from me; I am exhausted under Your recurring blows.

39:11 "When, Lord, You correct a man for his sins with various forms of discipline, he wastes away like a prized garment when it is eaten by moths. It is clear that we are all as transient as a vapor!

39:12, 13 "So I come to You, LORD, and ask You to hear my prayer. Hear and answer my urgent appeal. Don't be unmoved by my tears. After all, I am like an overnight guest in this world of Yours, a nomad like my ancestors. All I ask is that You stop frowning on me in judgment and let me enjoy a brief period of health and happiness before I make my exit from the stage of life, never to be seen on earth again."

Psalm 40: Rescued!

The well-known words "Sacrifice and offering You did not desire" (vv. 6-8) identify this as a Psalm of the Messiah; the words are applied to the Lord Jesus in Hebrews 10:5. But the Psalm poses a difficulty in that the first part deals with His Resurrection while the last part seems to revert to His agony on the cross. To explain this introversion is not easy. Some suggest that in the early verses the Savior is looking forward to His Resurrection and speaking of it as if it had already taken place. Others apply the anguished prayer at the close of the Psalm to the Jewish remnant during the Great Tribulation. In our study we will apply the entire Psalm to the Lord Jesus—first to His Resurrection and then to His sufferings on the cross. If this violation of the chronological order offends our western minds, we may take comfort in the fact that people from the East do not always consider time order to be supremely important.

40:1 The speaker is Messiah Jesus. He waited patiently for the LORD to hear His prayer and to deliver Him out of death. Even our blessed Lord did not always receive instant answers to prayer. But He realized that delays do not necessarily mean denials. God answers prayer at the time that is best suited to the accomplishment of His purposes in our lives.

God's help comes, not too soon, lest we should not know the blessedness of trusting in the dark, and not too late, lest we should know the misery of trusting in vain.

40:2 The Savior likens His glorious deliverance out of death to being rescued out of a horrible pit and from a miry bog. Who can imagine what it meant to the Giver of life to step forth from the tomb as the Victor over sin, Satan, death, and the grave—alive forevermore!

Though Christ's deliverance was unique, in a lesser sense we can all experience the power of God in saving us out of the pits and bogs of life. As we all know, life is full of these deep holes. The unconverted person who is being convicted of his sins by the Holy Spirit is in a particularly horrible pit. The backslidden believer also finds himself in a treacherous quagmire. There are the bogs of sickness, suffering and sorrow. Often when we are seeking guidance, we seem to be in a dark dungeon. And of course we sometimes founder in the morass of bereavement, loneliness, or discouragement. These are unforgettable experiences, times when we pray and cry and groan but nothing seems to happen. We need to learn from our Savior's example to wait patiently for the LORD. In God's own time and way He will come to our side, pulling us up out of the pit, setting our feet upon a rock and making our steps secure.

40:3 Notice that God is the source of our praise as well as its object. He puts the new song in our mouth—and it is a song of praise *to our God.

Our deliverance results not only in praise to God but in testimony to others: "Many will see it and fear, and will trust in the LORD." This was never more true than in connection with the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Think of the endless line of faith's pilgrims who have been won to the Living God through the miracle of the empty tomb!

40:4 As He thinks of those who have tasted and seen that the Lord is good, the Risen Redeemer utters one of the greatest, most basic truths in all spiritual life: "Blessed is that man who makes the LORD his trust. ... " True happiness and fulfillment in life come only through faith in God. It could not be otherwise. We have been created in such a way that we can realize our destiny only when we acknowledge God as our Lord and Master. Pascal said it well: "There is a God-shaped vacuum in the human heart!" And Augustine put it this way: "Thou has made us, O Lord, for Thyself, and our heart shall find no rest till it rest in Thee!"

The blessed man not only turns to God but he turns away from proud men and followers of false gods. He is not tricked by two of the greatest delusions of life—the idea that the honor of proud men is important and the concept that the false gods of materialism, pleasure, and sexual indulgence can satisfy the human heart. The blessed man is more concerned with God's approval than with man's, realizing that fullness of joy is found only in God's presence—not in the company of those who worship at idol shrines.

40:5 This leads the Messiah to think of how numberless are the mercies of God. His works and His thoughts of grace toward His people are beyond computation. Who can fully describe the infinite details of His natural creation? Who can exhaust the remarkable interventions of His providence? Who can comprehend the magnitude of His spiritual blessings—election, predestination, justification, redemption, propitiation, pardon, forgiveness, salvation, the new birth, the indwelling Spirit, the seal of the Spirit, the earnest of the Spirit, the anointing, sanctification, sonship, heirship, glorification—"if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered."

When all Thy mercies, O my God,
My rising soul surveys,
Transported with the view, I'm lost
In wonder, love and praise!
—Joseph Addison

40:6 As was mentioned, verses 6-8 identify the Psalm as being distinctly Messianic. In Hebrews 10:5-9 we learn that these words were the language of the Son of God when He came into the world. He was saying, in effect, that although God had instituted sacrifice and offering for the nation of Israel, they never represented His ultimate intention. They were designed as types and shadows of something better to come. As temporary stop-gaps, they had their place. But God was never really satisfied with them; to Him they were less than ideal because they did not provide a final solution to the sin problem. Recognizing the inherent weakness of burnt offerings and sin offerings, God instead opened the ears of His Beloved Son. This simply means that the Savior's ears were open to hear and to obey the will of His Father. It was with this attitude of willing and ready obedience that Christ came into the world.

In the margin of the ERV, the expression "My ears You have opened" is rendered "Ears thou hast digged (or pierced) for me." Some interpreters think this refers to the Hebrew slave of Exodus 21:5, 6. If a slave did not desire to be freed in the seventh year, his ear was pierced with an awl at the doorpost and he became indentured to his master forever. Christ, the Antitype, became a willing bondslave in His Incarnation (Phil. 2:7) and will continue to serve His people when He comes again (Luke 12:37).

When the clause "My ears You have opened" is quoted in Hebrews 10:5, it is changed to "a body You have prepared for Me." As to the authority for making such a change, the same Holy Spirit who first inspired the words in Psalm 40 certainly has the right to clarify them when He quotes it in the NT. The literal rendering of the Hebrew expression "to dig an ear" is probably a figure of speech in which a part (here, the ear) is given for the whole (here, the body). (This is called synecdoche.) The NT expands and explains the meaning as a reference to the Incarnation.

40:7, 8 When Christ became Man, it was not with meek resignation but with wholehearted delight. He said at this time, "Behold, I come; in the scroll of the book it is written of me. I delight to do Your will, O my God, and Your Law is within my heart." From cover to cover of the OT it was foretold not only that Christ would come into the world but that He would come with an eager, ready spirit to do the will of God. The will of God was not just in His head—it was inscribed in His very heart.

40:9, 10 These verses describe His earthly ministry. He had proclaimed the good news of deliverance in the great congregation, that is, to the house of Israel. He had not held back anything that God had given Him to declare. He had not hoarded the great truths of God's saving help, enduring faithfulness, or steadfast love.

40:11 The remaining verses of the Psalm (11-17) seem to carry us back to the cross. We hear the Savior issuing a most compelling and poignant distress call. There is a close link with what He had just said in verse 10. The connection is this: "I have told the people of Your salvation, Your faithfulness and Your steadfast love. Now do not negate My testimony by withholding these tender mercies from me. Let them continually preserve me!"

40:12 The immediate occasion of His desperate plea was that the calamitous tortures of Calvary were crashing down upon Him. These innumerable evils were linked with innumerable sins, as effect is linked with cause. But when He says, "My iniquities ... " we must be sure to remember that they were actually our iniquities—those sins for which He had contracted to pay the awful penalty. So intense were His sufferings that His heart was failing. Who of us can ever imagine the depths of agony which He endured that we might be pardoned and forgiven!

40:13 In His extremity, Christ stormed the gates of heaven for help—for immediate help. It is as if He pled, "Please deliver me and please do it now!" That is the kind of prayer that wins. Divine Omnipotence is moved into action by it.

40:14, 15 As for His enemies, He asks that their punishment be suited to their crimes. For their attempts on His life He wishes them disgrace and confusion. For wishing Him evil He hopes they will be repelled and shamed. For gloating over His misfortune He would like to see them shocked by the depth of their own humiliation. If someone objects that these sentiments are incompatible with a God of love, I would only remind him that in refusing love, man deliberately chooses his own punishment.

40:16 As for the friends of God, Christ prays that they might always find their enjoyment in the Lord. He hopes that all those who seek God will rejoice and be glad in Him, and that such as love His salvation will say continually, "The LORD be magnified!"

40:17 As for Himself, His strength is small and His need is desperate. But He takes comfort in the fact that the Lord takes thought for Him. As someone has said, "Poverty and need are not barriers to the thoughts of God."

As for God Himself, He is the help and deliverer of His beloved Son. And so in a final salvo of supplication the Lord Jesus prays, "Do not delay, O my God." The answer is not long in coming. On the third day the Father reaches down and delivers Him from the desolate pit, as we saw in the first part of the Psalm.

It seems, then, that in this Psalm we have first the answer to prayer and then the prayer itself. This vividly suggests the promise, "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are still speaking, I will hear" (Isa. 65:24).

Psalm 41: Prayer From a Sickroom

David was sick, and his enemies hoped it was nothing trivial. They were already rejoicing among themselves that his illness was undoubtedly terminal. An added grief to David was that one of the traitors had been his own close friend at one time.

41:1-3 But the patient is not without comfort. First he remembers that the Lord blesses the person who considers the poor. Here "the poor" probably means not so much poor financially as poor in health, weakened by sickness. David consoles himself with the thought that he had done just what the Lord did for people in distress—he had assisted, comforted, and cheered all who were in the grip of disease. Now he claims the promise that the LORD will deliver him too in time of trouble. Yes, the Lord will keep a protective vigil over him, preserving his life. Because David has earned a good reputation for his consideration of the sick and the suffering, he is confident that God will not desert him to the malicious will of his foes. He will instead give David all needed grace for his time in the sickroom, then raise him up to health and strength once more. The Lord is pictured as a nurse, adjusting the patient's bed so as to make him comfortable.

41:4 But the psalmist did not depend solely on his own past consideration of the ill and infirm. He wisely took his illness to the Lord in prayer, confessing his sin and pleading for healing as something he didn't deserve. Not all sickness is a direct result of sin in a believer's life. Many of the ailments of older people, for example, are part of the normal process of deterioration due to age. Sometimes, however, there is a direct link between sin and sickness, and where the faintest possibility of this exists, the believer should rush into the Lord's presence in heartfelt confession. In all such cases, the Great Physician's forgiveness should precede the local doctor's remedies.

41:5 In the meantime, the psalmist's enemies were waiting hopefully for a bulletin from the hospital stating that David had died. "When will he die?" they asked each other, "and when will we hear the last of this fellow?"

41:6 Occasionally one of these evil-wishers would show up during visiting hours, but he had no comfort to offer, no words of hope or encouragement. He talked without saying anything. Actually, it seemed he was just looking for some information to use against David. After he left he broadcast every negative report he could imagine.

41:7, 8 A whispering campaign was going on against the sick man, and the prophets of doom were outthinking themselves in conceiving calamities for David. They spread the word that a fatal disease had attacked him and that his next stop would be the morgue.

41:9 Perhaps the "unkindest cut of all" was the treachery of one who had been an intimate friend. Of all the sorrows of life, this is certainly one of the bitterest—to be betrayed by one who has had close associations with you. It is a sorrow the Savior experienced in the betrayal of Judas, and a not-uncommon experience in the lives of those who follow this Captain.

The Lord Jesus quoted verse 9 in connection with Judas. However, it is significant that He omitted the words "my own familiar friend in whom I trusted." Knowing in advance that Judas would betray Him, the Lord had never trusted him, so He simply said, "He who eats bread with Me has lifted up his heel against Me" (John 13:18).

41:10 David turns away from the one who had, as it were, stabbed him in the back, and looks instead to the LORD for mercy. When others were deserting him, he counts on the Lord to stand by faithfully. He then makes what might seem to be a strange request: "and raise me up, that I may repay them." If at first this seems unworthy of a man of David's stature, we must remember that he was the Lord's anointed ruler of Israel, and it was his duty as king to deal with sedition and betrayal. While as an individual he might have chosen to tolerate villainy and treachery against himself, as the king he was obliged to suppress any attempts to overthrow the government.

41:11, 12 David sees in the failure of his enemies' plots an indication of the Lord's favor toward him. Then he adds:

You uphold me in my integrity,

And set me before Your face forever.

If we prefer this translation, it may sound as if David is boasting excessively. But he actually was a man of integrity in spite of his sins and failures. And compared to his foes he was a paragon of virtue. It is entirely possible that the Lord did uphold him because He saw sincerity and righteousness in his life.

Gelineau's translation of the verse presents less difficulty:

If you uphold me I shall be unharmed and set in your presence for evermore.

In this version everything is dependent on the Lord rather than on David's integrity. The Lord's sustaining grace assures safety in this life and a standing in the presence of the heavenly King forever.

41:13 Confident and serene, the psalmist now raises his voice in a parting burst of praise. Jehovah, the covenant-keeping God of Israel, is worthy to be worshiped from everlasting to everlasting. David could add a double Amen to this tribute, and so can we!

II. BOOK 2 (PSALMS 42-72)

Psalm 42: Thirsting for God

Some people hear the voice of David in this Psalm as he wandered in exile during the rebellion of his own son, Absalom.

Others recognize the voice of the Messiah during the time of His rejection and suffering.

Still others detect the plaintive sob of the Jewish remnant during the future Tribulation Period.

Then there are those who like to apply it to the believer as he looks back on the days of his first love and longs for the renewal of that kind of fellowship with the Lord.

Fortunately, it is not necessary to isolate one view, since all of them are legitimate applications. This is typical of the versatility of the Psalms.

42:1 Our inner longing for fellowship with God can be compared to the vehement craving of the deer as it wanders through the parched countryside, its sides throbbing and its breathing quickened as it longs for the brooks. Gamaliel Bradford transferred the picture to himself when he said:

My one unchanged ambition
Wheresoe'er my feet have trod
Is a keen, enormous, haunting,
Never-sated thirst for God.

42:2 Our thirst is for God alone; no one else will do. And it is for the living God—not for a dead idol. It is a desire that will only be fully satisfied by a personal appearance before the Lord and the privilege of gazing on His face.

Show me Thy face, one transient gleam of loveliness divine,
And I shall never think or dream of other love than thine;
All lesser lights shall darken quite, all lower glories dim,
The beautiful of earth will ne'er seem beautiful again.
—Author unknown

42:3 Who can describe the bitterness of separation from the Lord? It is like a continual diet of tears, a life of unalleviated misery. As if that were not enough, there is the added grief of the enemies' taunts, "Where is your God?" This is what Shimei meant when he said to David, "So now you are caught in your own evil, because you are a bloodthirsty man!" (2 Sam. 16:8).

And this is what the chief priests meant when they said of the crucified Messiah, "He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now if He will have Him ... " (Matt. 27:43).

42:4 Then, of course, there is the memory of better days. It is the remembrance of how wonderful it was to walk in unbroken fellowship with God that makes the absence of this fellowship so intolerable. Knox wonderfully captures the mood in his translation of verse 4:

> Memories come back to me yet, melting the heart; how once I would join with the throng, leading the way to God's house, amid cries of joy and thanksgiving, and all the bustle of holiday.

42:5 The thought of the happy past leads to spiritual depression and activates a ping-pong struggle between pessimism and faith. The soul becomes downcast and disquieted, but faith challenges the tension of this burdened state of mind.

> Hope in God; for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance.

If this were just a pious optimism that "everything will turn out all right," it would be an utterly worthless sentiment. What makes this hope 100% valid is that it is based on the promise of God's Word that His people will see His face (Ps. 17:15; Rev. 22:4).

42:6 The depression recurs in cycles. But faith strikes back with the confident assertion that it will remember God from the land of the Jordan and of Hermon and from the Hill Mizar. Perhaps these three places symbolize three spiritual experiences; we do not know. What does seem clear is that they represent the land of exile, far removed from the house of God in Jerusalem. And the thought seems to be that even when we cannot visit the house of God, we can still remember the God of the house!

42:7 When we come to the seventh verse, our spiritual instincts tell us that in a very special way we are at Calvary, hearing the cries of the Lord Jesus as the waves and billows of God's judgment rolled over Him. The cataracts of divine wrath cascaded down upon Him with resounding thunder as He bore our sins in His own body on the cross.

> View that closing scene of anguish:
> All God's waves and billows roll

Over Him, there left to languish

On the Cross, to save my soul.

Matchless love! how vast! how free!

Jesus gave Himself for me.

—J. J. Hopkins

42:8 Yet, as George Müller said, "Trials are food for faith to feed on." So we hear the confident believer affirm:

> The LORD will command His lovingkindness in the daytime, and in the night His song shall be with me—a prayer to the God of my life.

This is the answer to the day-and-night sequence in verse 3. There the psalmist had said, "My tears have been my food day and night. ... " But now the day is filled with God's steadfast love and the night is filled with song and prayer. So by day and by night God's goodness is proven.

42:9, 10 Once again discouragement returns, this time because of the relentless oppression of the enemy. It seems that God has forgotten His child. The forlorn believer wanders about like a mourner. He says, "With cries that pierce me to the heart, my enemies revile me" (Gelineau). From all outward appearances it would seem that God has forsaken His child. So the enemies taunt him continually with the question, "Where is your God?"

42:11 But faith always has the last word. Don't be discouraged. Don't be unsettled. Hope in God; you will be delivered from your enemies and from your depression as well. And you'll praise Him once again as your Savior and your God. As someone has said:

> The remedy—challenge depression, look up, hope. The Christian life is alertness, upward striving, activity, the running of a race. It is never downcast eyes, folded hands and the acceptance of defeat.

Psalm 43: Send Out Your Light and Your Truth

This is a twin to the preceding Psalm. The connection is so great that the NEB links them together as if they were one composition.

43:1, 2 Here we have the continued prayer of an exile who wants to worship in Zion but is opposed by an apostate nation and an unjust man.

This may picture the oppression of the godly Jewish remnant during the Tribulation Period by the unbelieving nation of Israel and the Antichrist.

First comes the plea for vindication and for help. The psalmist asks God to defend the cause of His people against their unbelieving brethren and the man of sin. It is one of faith's agonies to take refuge in God and yet feel cast off by Him; it is one of faith's puzzles to be on the winning side and yet suffer under the heel of the enemy.

43:3 Then follows a positive and specific prayer for the return to Zion. The beauty of the language is incomparable:

Oh, send out Your light and Your truth!

Let them lead me;

Let them bring me to Your holy hill

And to Your tabernacle.

The psalmist wanted an escort consisting of the light of God's presence and the truth of God's promise. With these to lead him and with goodness and mercy following him (Ps. 23:6), he was assured of a glad return to God's holy hill.

43:4 Notice the progression in verses 3 and 4:

To Your holy hill;

To Your tabernacle;

To the altar of God;

To God my exceeding joy.

The true worshiper is satisfied with neither a geographical location nor a building nor an altar. He must get through to God Himself!

43:5 Brightened by the prospect of appearing before God, the writer once again remonstrates with himself for being disheartened and troubled. Have faith in God, he urges, and He will surely bring you to your desired end.

Be still, my soul: thy best, thy heavenly Friend

Through thorny ways leads to a joyful end!

—Katharina von Schlegel

Psalm 44: Sheep for the Slaughter

The pain of defeat is made more bitter by the memory of former victories, and we never value our fellowship with God so much as when His face seems to be hidden from us.

44:1-3 Israel's history was replete with soul-thrilling instances of God's intervention on their behalf. He had driven the heathen out of the land of Canaan and had given it to His own people. By subduing the Canaanites He had set Israel free in a country of their own. It certainly wasn't because of any military superiority that the Jews won possession of the pleasant land, nor was it by their own strength that they came off victorious. It was by God's powerful right hand, by His omnipotent arm, by His loving favor showered down on them.

44:4-8 The memory of what the Lord has done inspires our own hearts to praise Him. He is the great King and mighty God who gives victories to the unworthy sons of unworthy Jacob. It is through Him that Israel has been able to bulldoze through the ranks of her enemies and to walk triumphantly over her attackers. She has learned that the battlebow is not to be trusted for success, nor is the sword a sufficient savior. God is the One who has delivered His people and thoroughly confused their foes! No wonder the people kept boasting of their connection with Him, kept saying they would never cease to thank Him!

44:9-12 But something has happened in the meantime to change their song to a lament. It seems that the Lord has forsaken His people and made them suffer dishonor. The armies marched out without God's presence and help, and soon they were retreating in panic, with the enemies looting all Israel's wealth. The Lord has abandoned His sheep to the butchers and scattered the survivors among the Gentile nations. It all happened like a business deal in which God sold His people for next to nothing. And the enemy apparently got away with it all without having to pay the consequences.

44:13-16 Poor Israel became the laughingstock of the other nations, an object of ridicule and scorn. Traditional bywords and epithets of derision were used to defame these Jews. God's ancient people became the butt of crude jokes among the nations. Theirs was a shame from which they could not escape. Their faces were constantly crimsoned by the reproaches and jeers of their enemies, by the very sight of the vengeful foe.

44:17 The puzzling thing about all this defeat and shame was that it was not brought on by any conscious backsliding on Israel's part. At other times in history there was a definite connection between suffering and sin. But in this particular case it was not so. It seemed instead that the people's plight was due to the fact that they were God's chosen people. It was a case of suffering for God and for His covenant.

44:18, 19 The calamities had come to a people who had not turned their backs on God or violated His covenant. They had not abandoned their love for Him or the pathway He had marked out for them. Yet the Lord had shattered them in the forsaken land of jackals, and covered them with the shadow of death.

44:20-22 If they had forgotten the name of their God or worshiped idols, wouldn't God have known it? He knows the innermost thoughts and motives. No, that was not the cause. The people were suffering because of their connection with Jehovah. It was for His sake that they were enduring a living death, abused like animals destined for the slaughterhouse.

Centuries later the Apostle Paul found himself in the same situation, and quoted Psalm 44:22 to describe the sufferings of God's people in every age (Rom. 8:36).

44:23-26 The Psalm reaches a peak of bold urgency in verse 23, when the Lord is roused from His apparent slumber and asked to intervene for His people. It is more than the psalmist can understand—how God can hide His face in neglect and indifference while His people lie prostrate in the dust. And so he sounds reveille once again:

Arise for our help,

And redeem us for Your mercies' sake.

Psalm 45: The King of Kings

45:1 It was easy for the psalmist to write this Psalm. In fact, his heart was bursting to put in writing the poem he had composed concerning the King. The words flowed freely from his pen; he felt himself being literally borne along. His tongue was like the pen of a ready scribe, and we are not stretching matters if we identify the ready scribe as the Holy Spirit Himself.

45:2 First we are introduced to the King Himself. His beauty is surpassing. He is the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely One. Grace is poured upon His lips; His speech is most sweet. Because of His personal excellence, God has blessed Him forever.

Fairest of all the earth-born race,
Perfect in comeliness Thou art;
Replenished are Thy lips with grace,
And full of love Thy tender heart.
God ever-blest, we bow the knee,
And own all fullness dwells in Thee.
—Author unknown

45:3-5 Then almost immediately we are carried forward to Christ's Second Advent, to the time when He returns to earth in power and great glory. This time He comes as a conquering Warrior, not as the humble Carpenter of Nazareth. With sword upon His thigh, the Mighty One descends in glory and majesty. In dazzling splendor He rides forth in triumph in the cause of truth, humility, and righteousness. His nail-scarred right hand is adept in wielding the sword in frightening power against His foes. His arrows find their mark in the heart of the King's enemies; the peoples fall in waves before Him.

45:6, 7a Now the smoke of battle has passed and the King is seated on the throne of His glory in Jerusalem. The voice of God is heard from heaven addressing Him as God and certifying His reign as an eternal one. We know it is the voice of God, because Hebrews 1:8, 9 tells us so:

> But to the Son He says: "Your throne, O God, is forever and ever; a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of Your kingdom. You have loved righteousness and hated lawlessness; therefore God, Your God, has anointed You with the oil of gladness more than Your companions."

Notice that God addresses His Son as God, one of the clearest proofs of the deity of Christ in the entire Bible. It is true that some translators of Psalm 45:6 render this phrase "Your divine throne endures for ever and ever" instead of "Your throne, O God, is forever and ever." But when they quote this verse in the Hebrews passage, it becomes "Your throne, O God, is forever and ever." So it is not only true that Christ's throne is divine, but also that He Himself is God.

Christ's kingdom will last forever. After His reign of one thousand years on earth, His earthly kingdom will merge into "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 1:11).

Christ's royal scepter is a scepter of equity. A scepter is a staff which symbolizes royal authority. Here the meaning is that the Messiah will rule with absolute justice. And the reign will also be absolutely holy, for the King loves righteousness and hates wickedness.

45:7b, 8 Because of His righteousness and integrity, God has anointed the Lord Jesus with the oil of gladness more than all other rulers. The oil of joy or gladness refers to the holy anointing oil with which priests were inducted into their office (Ex. 30:22-25). Since our Lord is to be a Priest-King, this is the oil to be used. Myrrh and cassia were the two principal ingredients in this oil, and aloes was one of the "chief spices" mentioned in Song of Solomon 4:14. All of these speak of the surpassing fragrance of the Person and work of our Lord. The myrrh and aloes may have special reference to His sufferings and death, since they were used in preparing His body for burial (John 19:39).

Out of the ivory palaces they make Him glad. It is the royal symphony, sounding forth the world's jubilation that man's day of sobbing and sighing has ended and that the golden age has dawned at last!

45:9 The King is not alone in the day of His power. The daughters of earth's monarchs are among His royal attendants. At His right side is the queen, decked with jewelry of gold from Ophir. And who is the queen? Here we must resist the temptation to identify her with the church, since the church is not the subject of OT revelation (Eph. 3:5-9; Col. 1:26). We believe that the queen is the redeemed remnant of the nation of Israel (Ezek. 16:10-14) and that the attendants may represent Gentile nations won to Christ through Israel's testimony.

45:10, 11 The queen is counseled by an unidentified voice, perhaps that of the Holy Spirit, to forget her own people and her father's house. The meaning, of course, is that she should sever the ties which bind her to her pre-conversion life and be totally committed to the King as her Lord. This advice anticipates the words of our Savior in Luke 14:26:

If anyone come to Me and does not hate his father and mother, wife and children, brothers and sisters, yes, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple.

Our love for Christ must be so great that all other loves are hatred by comparison. The beauty of wholeheartedness is pleasing to Him. Since He is Lord, He deserves all that we are and have.

45:12 The wealthy daughter of Tyre will come to the queen with a gift. Yes, the richest people in the world will travel to Jerusalem with the choicest presents.

45:13 Then the royal daughter is seen in her palace, dressed in regal splendor preparatory to her presentation to the King. Once the wearied drudge of sin, she is now seen in her chamber dressed in garments embroidered with gold.

45:14, 15 And now she is brought to the King, arrayed in multi-colored robes and accompanied by a retinue of virgin companions. There is great rejoicing as they move along, eventually entering the palace of the King Himself.

Who can tell of that joy, the joy of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, and of the holy angels, not to mention their own joy as they enter into the joy of their Lord! Comely in all comeliness, beautiful in all beauty, graceful in all grace, charming in every charm, attractive in every attractiveness, conformed to the image of God's Son (source unknown).

45:16, 17 In the last two verses God the Father is speaking to Christ the King. He promises Him sons who will be worthy successors of the patriarchs, who will "divide a world between them for their domain" (Knox).

As for the King Himself, His name will be praised in all generations. There never will come a time when the people will cease to adore Him.

Psalm 46: God With Us

During the First World War in an island community in the highlands of Scotland, young men were being called up in increasing numbers for military service. Each time contingents of them gathered at the pier to sail to the mainland, their relatives and friends assembled there and sang:

God is our refuge and our strength,
in straits a present aid;
Therefore, although the earth remove,
we will not be afraid:
Though hills amidst the seas be cast;
Though waters roaring make,
And troubled be; yea, though the hills
by swelling seas do shake.
A river is, whose streams make glad the city of our God;
The holy place, wherein the Lord
most high hath his abode.
God in the midst of her doth dwell;
nothing shall her remove:
The Lord to her an helper will,
and that right early prove.
Be still and know that I am God:
among the heathen I Will be exalted; I on earth will be exalted high.
Our God, who is the Lord of hosts,
is still upon our side:
The God of Jacob our refuge for ever will abide.
—from the Scottish Psalter

This scene is one of thousands in which God's saints have been comforted by this Psalm in times of great crisis. No one can know the hearts that have been lifted as these majestic lines have been read in the sickroom, the house of mourning, the dungeon of persecution and the narrow chamber of suffering and tragedy. It was this Psalm that led a tried and harried former Augustinian monk named Martin Luther to pen his famous Reformation hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." Its message is timeless and its encouragement unceasing.

There are three distinct sections to the Psalm, which G. Campbell Morgan has titled as follows:

1-3 Nothing to fear. God is with us.

The challenge of confidence.

4-7 The Lord enthroned in Jerusalem.

The secret of confidence.

8-11 Peace on earth and worldwide dominion.

The vindication of confidence.

It is generally thought that the historical background of the Psalm is the miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem when it was besieged by the Assyrian wolf, Sennacherib (2 Kgs. 18:13-19:35; Isa. 36:1-37:36). At this time the people of Judah were tremendously conscious of God's presence with them in a unique way. And so the Psalm celebrates the praises of Him who is Immanuel—God with us.

46:1-3 God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. He is also "abundantly available for help in tight places" (NASB marg.). Blessed are we when we realize that our safety and protection lie not in riches or armies but in Jehovah alone!

Imagine the worst that can happen! Suppose the earth itself should melt as if caught in the flow of a gigantic volcano. Suppose an earthquake should toss the mountains into the midst of the sea. Suppose a flood of water should roar and foam over the land, or that the mountains should stagger with wild convulsions of nature.

Or think of the mountains as symbols of empires or cities, and the waters as nations. The very foundations of society are crumbling; kingdoms are toppling and disintegrating. The nations of the world are churning with political, economic and social confusion and trouble of unprecedented intensity is enveloping the world.

But God ... ! The worst that can happen is no cause for fear. God Himself is still with us!

46:4 He Himself is the river whose streams shall make glad the city of God. Actually the city of Jerusalem has no river. But everything that a river is to an ordinary city, God is to His holy habitation—and more, for He is the fountain of life and refreshment, the river of mercy and goodness!

> There the majestic Lord will be for us a place of broad rivers and streams, in which no galley with oars will sail, nor majestic ships pass by (Isa. 33:21).

46:5 It is because God is enthroned in Jerusalem that she shall never be moved. God shall help her, just at the break of dawn. It has been a long dark night for God's people, but soon the morning will dawn and Christ will take His rightful place, showing Himself strong on behalf of His own.

46:6 The nations of the earth may rage in fury; the kingdoms may totter. When God speaks in His wrath, the earth will melt in subservience to Him.

46:7 These words look forward in a special way to the Great Tribulation when the earth will be racked with violent disturbances of nature, with political upheaval, with wars and pestilences, and with inconceivable distress. Then the Lord will appear from heaven to crush all insubordination and rebellion and reign in righteousness and peace. At that time the believing remnant of the nation of Israel will say, "The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

The assurance of this verse is inexpressibly sweet. The LORD of hosts is with us, that is, the LORD of the angelic armies of heaven. But He is also the God of Jacob. Now Jacob means "cheat" or "supplanter." Yet God speaks of Himself as the God of Jacob. Put the two thoughts together and you learn that the God of the angelic hosts is also the God of the unworthy sinner. The One who is infinitely high is also intimately nigh. He is with us in every step of our way, our unfailing refuge in all the storms of life.

46:8 By the time we get to verse 8 the tumult and cataclysms have ended. Man's day is over. Now the King is seated upon His throne in Jerusalem. We are invited to go out and examine the field of His victory. Everywhere we look we see the wreckage of His defeated foes. Everywhere lies the evidence of the awful judgments which have descended on the world during the Tribulation and at His glorious appearing.

46:9 But now that the Prince of Peace is enthroned, wars have ceased throughout the world. What councils and leagues and summits have been helpless to achieve, the Lord Jesus brings about by His iron rod. Disarmament has passed from discussion to actuality. Weaponry is scrapped, and the funds formerly spent on munitions are now diverted into agriculture and other productive channels.

46:10 The voice of God rings out to all the inhabitants of the earth in accents of assurance and supremacy. "Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth!" Every fear is stilled, every anxiety quieted. His people can relax. He is God. His cause is victorious. He is supreme among the nations, supreme over all the earth.

It is from verse 10 that Katharina von Schlegel, the author of the hymn "Be Still, My Soul" drew inspiration.

Be still, my soul; thy God doth undertake
To guide the future as He has the past.
Thy hope, thy confidence let nothing shake;
All now mysterious shall be bright at last.
Be still, my soul: the winds and waves still know
His voice who ruled them while He dwelt below.

46:11 No matter what may happen or how dark the hour may be, the believer can still say with confidence and fearlessness, "The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge." If the One who directs the armies of heaven is on our side, who can be successfully against us? The God of the unworthy worm Jacob is a fortress in which we can all take refuge from the storms of this uncertain life!

Be still, the morning comes,
The night will end;
Trust thou in Christ thy Light,
Thy faithful Friend.
And know that He is God,
Whose perfect will
Works all things for thy good:

Look up—Be still.

Psalm 47: Happy New Year!

Jerusalem: The first New Year of the Golden Age of the Messiah was greeted at sundown by a sacred concert in the National Auditorium. Central in the program were the jubilant strains of Psalm 47, which acquired new meaning in view of recent international developments.

47:1-4 As the Psalm began, the audience realized that the Gentile nations which survived the recent global Tribulation Period were being summoned to clap their hands and shout to God with loud songs of joy. In an unprecedented display of emotion, the choir itself clapped rhythmically as if to lead the way. When the singers came to the words "For the LORD Most High is awesome" the people spontaneously rose to their feet. They remembered the recent coronation of the Lord Jesus Christ, when He was publicly acclaimed "a great King over all the earth." Gratitude welled up as the people remembered how He subdued "the goat nations" under our feet, those nations which had been implacably hostile to Israel during our time of trouble. Ripples of applause swept through the auditorium as the choir sang:

He will choose our inheritance for us,

The excellence of Jacob whom He loves. Selah.

47:5 The Messiah who had come down as a Man of war to subdue His foes was now hailed as having gone up to His throne in Jerusalem amid the delirious shouts of His people and the trumpets announcing His overwhelming victory.

47:6, 7 It was a moving moment when the choir called Israel to sing praises to God, to sing praises to our King. No longer was there any hesitancy in acknowledging that King Jesus is God, and that the hands that were pierced on Calvary now hold the reins of universal government! Everyone felt the appropriateness of singing to Him with a skillful Psalm—a maskil of understanding and contemplation.

47:8 Repeatedly the choir emphasized the deity of the Messiah-King. He is the One who now reigns over the nations and whose throne is established on holiness.

47:9 Perhaps a tinge of apprehension was felt by some as the words were sung.

The princes of the people have gathered together ...

So often in the past the princes had gathered to drive Israel into the sea. But as the choir continued, it became clear that they were now assembling as the people of the God of Abraham. They were joining with the Israelites in bringing tribute to the King of kings and Lord of lords.

Not everyone might have understood that the shields of the earth meant the rulers, who were appointed as protectors of the people. Now they all belong to God; He is greatly exalted high above all earth's potentates.

At the conclusion of the concert, critics agreed that there had never been such a meaningful Rosh Hashanah in the entire history of the nation!

Psalm 48: What Did They See?

A foreign invader had come up to the very gates of Jerusalem. Inside, the people were expecting the agonies of a long siege. Humanly speaking, the prospects were bleak. Then the Lord worked a miracle. The enemy saw something that threw them into utter panic. They retreated in terror. Jerusalem was preserved from destruction, and a great wave of praise went up to God. Psalm 48 captures something of the ecstasy of that moment.

48:1, 2 The LORD is inexpressibly great. He is great in power, in knowledge, in glory, in grace. His love is great, and His mercy, and His compassion. He is great in wisdom and in knowledge. His judgments are unsearchable and His ways inscrutable.

Because God is so great, He is greatly to be praised. He is worthy to be praised as the great Creator, the great Sustainer, the great Prophet, the great High Priest, the King of all kings, the great Redeemer, and the great Deliverer of His people. Here in Psalm 48 it is His greatness as the Savior and Protector of His city and His people that is especially in view.

The people speak of God and the city of God in the same breath. They associate the city with the God who dwelt there in the inner shrine of the temple. To them Jerusalem is the most beautiful city in the world, situated on the summit of His holy mountain. Like a gem in a handsome crown, it is beautiful in its elevation—the jewel of the whole earth.

Sometimes known as Mount Zion (after one of the eminences in the city) Jerusalem is described as being "in the far north" or "on the sides of the north." Both Knox and Gelineau translate this phrase as "the true pole of the earth." Jerusalem is truly this in the eyes of God's ancient people; it is the center of magnetic attraction, the place toward which they gravitate as the religious, political and cultural capital of the world. And it is the city of the great King, the future capital of the Lord Jesus Christ when He returns to earth to reign as King of kings.

48:3 Inside her walls God has proved Himself a trustworthy Defender. Everyone knows how He miraculously rescued the city when her destruction seemed momentary. Here is what happened:

48:4 The enemy forces had massed their troops outside the city. In overwhelming hordes they took up their positions in preparation for the assault. Militarily the city had little hope of holding out against such a concentration of armed strength.

48:5 Then the attackers saw something that unnerved them. What did they see?

Was it the city of Jerusalem, as seems indicated in the text? It seems unlikely that the mere sight of such a small city would cause professional military men to panic.

It may be that the curtain between them and the invisible world was drawn back, and that they saw an army of angels poised to defend the city. Or was the mountain filled with horses and chariots of fire (see 2 Kgs. 6:17)? Or did they see the angel of the Lord—the Lord Jesus Christ in one of His preincarnate appearances? (See Isa. 37:36.)

48:6, 7 Frankly, we do not know. But whatever it was, it was an apparition of such terrifying nature that the stout-hearted warriors lost their courage. The sight threw them into panic. Pandemonium broke out in the camp. They beat a hasty retreat, trembling as they went. Their anguish was comparable to that of a woman in the pangs of childbirth. The chaos and disorder among the enemy invaders was like the scattering of an ocean-going fleet when struck by a hurricane.

48:8 The people inside the city are now delirious with joy. What seemed like imminent disaster for them has been turned to miraculous victory. They had always heard in the past that God was the Founder and Defender of Jerusalem; now they have seen with their own eyes. "We have proved what long has been told us—that God upholds the city forever" (Knox).

48:9-11 So they lift their hearts in praise to God. They have had abundant reason to meditate on the lovingkindness of the Lord as they went up to the temple with their thank-offerings. They reflect that wherever God's name is known in the earth, there He is praised as the One whose right hand is filled with righteous victory. They call on Jerusalem to celebrate and on the lesser cities of Judah to be glad.

48:12-14 Now they are walking around the city in a sort of post-victory tour. They encourage one another to count the number of towers (every one of them is still there), to consider her bulwarks (they are all intact), and to walk through the now-deserted palaces (just as undamaged as they were before the enemy arrived). It will be a wonderful story to share with their children and grandchildren—how God supernaturally preserved Jerusalem from the slightest damage! They will teach the new generation that the God who did this is "our God for ever and ever. He will be our guide even to death."

Someone has beautifully suggested that verse 14 could be rendered:This God is our God from eternity to eternity. He will be our guide even unto death, over death, and beyond death.

Psalm 49: The Wicked and Their Wealth

One of the great riddles of life is how the wicked so often enjoy material prosperity while believers are often poor and dispossessed. But this is not the whole story. The wealth in which the ungodly trust so devoutly will fail them in their hour of greatest need. It cannot save them from dying. They cannot enjoy it forever, nor can it prevent corruption in the grave. They can neither take it with them nor come back to enjoy it. In the long run it is stupid to trust in money rather than in the Lord! That is the gist of the message in Psalm 49.

49:1-4 The message is for all peoples and individuals, for small and great, for rich and poor alike. It is a message of distilled wisdom that comes from a heart that is full of insight. Korah's sons turn their attention to probe into this common inequality of life; then, when they come up with the answer, they sing it to the accompaniment of the harp.

49:5-9 Really, there is no reason for God's people to worry in those dark days when oppressors are dogging their heels, when persecutors are surrounding them with their iniquitous plots. Their enemies trust in their gold and in the power it gives; they boast about how affluent they are. But—and this is a very big BUT—all their money cannot save their brother from death (KJV) or their own selves either. The redemption of a man's life is tremendously costly; attempts to stave off the day of death through financial negotiations must be abandoned forever. No one has the means to purchase endless life on earth or to escape the grave.

As the dashes before and after verse 8 indicate, it is parenthetical. Putting verses 7 and 9 together, they read:

> None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him ... that he should continue to live eternally, and not see the Pit.

49:10 Sooner or later even wise men die. Likewise the rich fool and the unthinking man of affluence die and leave their wealth to others. Notice that it does not say that the wise man leaves his wealth to other people. It is more probable that his last will and testament reads:Being of sound mind, I put my money to work for the Lord while I was still alive.

49:11, 12 It is a strange fact of life that men who are intelligent enough to build up a fortune in this world do not seem to realize that they are mortal. Their inward thoughts tell them that their houses will continue forever, that they are going to live on here indefinitely. They name estates and streets and towns after themselves. But the inescapable truth is that man with all his honor must perish. In that respect he is like the beasts. In other respects, of course, man is quite different from the animals. For example, though man's body goes to the grave, his spirit and soul do not perish. And his body will be raised from the grave, either for eternal judgment or for eternal blessing. Man has endless being while the animals do not.

49:13, 14 This is the fate of those who unwisely trust in their wealth rather than in God—they foolishly live as if they were never going to die. But die they must, and when they do their relatives and friends quote them for their profound wisdom. Destined inevitably to be disembodied, they are like sheep being led relentlessly by the shepherd of death to the grave. "The upright shall have dominion over them in the morning"; that is, the tables will be turned, as with the rich man and Lazarus. Remember that Abraham said to the rich man:

> "Son, remember that in your lifetime you received your good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted and you are tormented" (Luke 16:25).

All the magnificence and beauty of the rich man wastes away, and he has no home but Sheol—a striking contrast to the home he enjoyed on earth!

49:15 Here we have one of the few flashes of light about the resurrection found in the OT. Generally speaking, the OT writers reveal very indistinct views of death and beyond. But here the psalmist voices the confidence that God will redeem his soul from the power of the grave, that is, that God will deliver his soul from the disembodied state and reunite it with his resurrected body. When he says "for He shall receive me," he uses the same word that is used in connection with God's receiving Enoch and Elijah.

49:16-19 So there is really no need for a believer to be disturbed when the ungodly man becomes rich and his house becomes more and more ornate and lavish. This earth is the only heaven he is ever going to enjoy! When he dies he shall carry none of his wealth with him. Empty-handed he will go to the grave, with none of his splendor to accompany him. As long as he lives he thinks he can never be robbed of his happiness, and people applaud him for feathering his own nest. But sooner or later he will die like his forefathers and share their long dark night with them.

49:20 There is simply no way that a man can hold on to earthly wealth and honor. Death is as inevitable for him as for the beasts that perish.

Of course someone could object that the righteous die as well as the wicked. This is true. We will all die if the Lord does not come in the meantime. But the point of the Psalm is that the wicked leave all their wealth behind while the righteous go to their eternal reward of infinite wealth.

One final observation. Very often in Scripture a rich man is synonymous with a wicked man. This ought to sober us. While the Bible doesn't say that it is a sin to be rich, it does condemn trusting in riches rather than in the living God (and it is hard to have riches without trusting in them!). The Bible condemns the love of money. It condemns the accumulation of wealth through oppression and dishonesty. And it condemns the hoarding of riches in callous disregard of the needs of a lost and suffering world.

Psalm 50: God's Ongoing Judgment

The setting of this Psalm is a courtroom with God Himself the Judge, Israel the defendant, and heaven and earth the witnesses.

But we should not think of this courtroom scene as some obscure trial that took place long ago in Israel's history; it is instead God's continuing evaluation of His saints throughout the world.

The Court in Session (50:1-6)

50:1 First the Judge is heard as He summons all the people in the entire land[36] of Israel—from east to west—to stand before His tribunal. What gives authority to the Judge's voice is the fact that He is the Mighty One, God the LORD.

50:2, 3 Next the Judge is seen as He leaves His chamber in the temple on Mount Zion in the form of a dazzling, brilliant glory cloud—the Shekinah. He will no longer keep silent about His people's sin. He comes down as He did at Mount Sinai, with a great jet of fire sweeping before Him and a great storm with thunder and lightning all around Him. But this time He comes not to present the law, but to interpret its inward, spiritual meaning.

50:4, 5 As He takes His place on the judgment seat He subpoenas the heavens and the earth to stand by in the witness box. Then He commands His attendants to bring in the defendants. First He is going to try the saints of the nation of Israel, whom He describes as those who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice. (This refers to the covenant of the law made at Mount Horeb and ratified by the blood of sacrifices—Ex. 24:3-8.) The trial of His faithful ones is found in verses 7-15. Later He has a special session with the wicked (vv. 16-19).

50:6 The heavens are called to bear witness to the righteousness of God's judgments. The fact that God Himself is the Judge means that He has perfect knowledge of all the facts, that He is absolutely impartial, and that all His verdicts are wise and equitable.

The Sin of Ritualism (50:7-15)

50:7 God now assumes the position of prosecuting attorney, testifying against His people, Israel. In human affairs it would be unthinkable for the judge to also serve as prosecutor, but in this case it is altogether proper, for the Judge is none other than God the Most High.

50:8 God makes it clear at the outset that Israel has not been remiss in bringing sacrifices to Him. They had been faithful in bringing their burnt offerings. But the trouble was that they thought these rituals completely discharged their obligations to Jehovah. They were like girls who treat their mother indifferently throughout the year, then smother her with chocolates on her birthday! Or like sons who never thank their father for all he does for them, then give him a gift tie on Father's Day!

So Jehovah protests that while they had loaded His altar with sacrificial animals, they had treated Him personally with cold neglect. As to the technical details of the offerings, His people had been punctilious. But when it came to a warm, personal relationship with the Lord Himself, they were seriously lacking. F. B. Meyer writes:

> The Psalm is a severe rebuke of the hypocrite who contents himself with giving a mere outward obedience to the ritual of God's house, but withholds the love and homage of his heart.[37]

50:9 That is why God says that He will not take a bull from their house, nor goats out of their folds. He is not a ritualist, satisfied with religious ceremonies. In instituting the sacrificial system, God had never intended right outward action to serve as a cover for wrong inward attitudes.

50:10-13 If they would only stop to think, God's people would realize that God owns all the creatures in the world anyway—every beast of the forest ... the cattle on a thousand hills, ... the birds of the air, and everything that moves in the field. They would quickly realize that God doesn't need a single thing from men. He doesn't suffer hunger; if He did, He wouldn't have to ask us for anything, because He has a well-stocked pantry! Nor does He derive nourishment or satisfaction from bulls' meat or goats' blood. In that sense, God is totally self-sufficient.

50:14, 15 What then does God want from His people? Three things:

> Thanksgiving. No gift can ever take the place of simple gratitude. Too often we are like the family that took their queenly mother for granted, then after her death attempted to atone for their thanklessness by dressing her body in a two-thousand-dollar Dior original!
> Fulfilled vows. "Pay your vows to the Most High"—vows of love, worship, service and devotion.

Fellowship in prayer. "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver you, and you shall glorify Me." Here we have a wonderful insight into the heart of God. He loves to hear His people pray, and He loves to answer those prayers. He cherishes an intimate, tender relationship between His people and Himself.

But to the Wicked ... (50:16-21)

50:16, 17 It seems clear that the Judge now turns to address a different portion of the nation, those who profess to be religious but whose lives openly contradict the truth. He denies that they have any right to piously quote the Scriptures or to claim the blessings of the Covenant for themselves. Then He levels a series of charges against them.

They hated discipline. Apparently they considered themselves above correction. Instead of welcoming or at least tolerating constructive criticism, these hypocrites resented it bitterly and attacked anyone who tried to offer it —even if it was the Lord.

They treated God's Word with contempt. Instead of profound reverence for the Scriptures, they cast God's words behind them as a worthless thing.

50:18 They refused to walk in a path of separation. By fraternizing with thieves and adulterers, they disobeyed the Lord and brought reproach on His name.

50:19, 20 Their speech was wicked. Their mouths spewed out evil without restraint. They had become experts in lying and deceit. Even their closest relatives were not safe from their vicious slander.

50:21 Because God had not punished them immediately, they thought He was as careless as they were. They failed to realize that His patience was designed to give them time to repent. But now the Lord breaks His silence and rebukes them for the charges listed above.

Warning and Promise (50:22, 23)

The Psalm closes with a warning and a promise. The warning is to those who forget God, living as if He doesn't matter. If they do not repent, God will pounce on them like a lion and utterly destroy them. But those who come to Him with sacrifices of thanksgiving glorify Him; all who walk in this pathway of obedience will experience God's marvelous deliverances in times of peril.

Psalm 51: Sweet Perfumes of Penitence

Alexander Maclaren once said, "The alchemy of divine love can extract sweet perfumes of penitence and praise out of the filth of sin." We have an illustration of this in Psalm 51. As the heading explains, it was written by David after Nathan the prophet had boldly exposed him for committing adultery with Bathsheba and for murdering Uriah. Utterly convicted of his sin, David pours out this torrent of penitence from his broken and contrite heart.

We might paraphrase his confession as follows:

51:1 Mercy, ... O God! I ask for Your mercy! I deserve to be punished. But You are a God of lovingkindness and on that basis I ask that You not treat me the way I deserve. Your mercies are super-abounding and because of that I dare to ask that You erase my awful violations of Your holy law.

51:2 Wash me through and through from every instance where I have departed from Your straight line, and cleanse me from the frightful ways in which I have missed the mark.

51:3 Oh my God, I publicly acknowledge that I have broken Your law. My sin was public and my repentance is public, too. The guilt of my sin has been haunting me day and night, and I cannot stand it any more.

51:4 I now see clearly that it was against You, and You alone that I sinned. Oh, I realize that I also sinned against Bathsheba and against her faithful husband, Uriah—God forgive me for my treachery to this valiant general. But I realize that all sin is first and foremost against You. Your law has been broken. Your will has been flouted. Your name has been dishonored. So I take sides with You against myself. You are absolutely justified in any sentence You hand down, and no one can find fault with Your decisions.

51:5 Lord, I am no good. I was born in iniquity, and going back even farther, I was conceived in sin. In saying this I don't mean to cast any shame on my mother, or even to extenuate my own guilt. What I mean is that not only have I committed sins but that I am sinful in my very nature.

51:6 But You hate sin and You love faithfulness in a man's inward being, so now I am coming to You and asking You to teach me wisdom deep in my heart.

51:7 You directed that hyssop and running water should be used in the ceremony for cleansing a leper (Lev. 14:1-8). Well, Lord, I take the place of a moral leper. Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

51:8 When I sinned, I lost my song. It has been so long since I have known what real joy and gladness are. Let me hear the music of rejoicing once again. In my backslidden condition, it seemed that You had crippled me by breaking my bones. I could no longer dance before You in the holy festivals. Now heal those fractures so that I may join Your people in praising Your name in the dance.

51:9 Oh, my God, I beg You to turn away Your face from looking on my sins in judgment and punishment. Blot out the last vestige of my enormous iniquities. How they stab me every time I think of them!

51:10 Looking back, I realize that the trouble all started in my mind. My thought-life was polluted. I entertained evil thoughts until at last I committed the sins. So now I ask that You create in me a clean mind. I know that if the fountain is clean, the stream flowing from it will be clean as well. Yes, Lord, renew my entire inner self so it will be steadfast in guarding against future outbreaks of sin.

51:11 Don't give up on me, Lord, or banish me from Your presence. I can't stand the thought of being away from You, or of having Your Holy Spirit taken from me. In this age in which I live, You do take Your Holy Spirit from men when they walk in disobedience to You. You did it to Saul (1 Sam. 16:14)—I shudder to think of the consequences. Please, Lord, spare me from this fate.

51:12 As I said before, I have lost my song. Not my soul, but my song. Not Your salvation, but the joy of Your salvation. Now that I have come to You in repentance, confession, and forsaking of sin, I pray that the "chords that are broken may vibrate once more." And not only do I pray that You will restore to me the joy of Your salvation, but also that You will uphold me by Your generous Spirit. In other words, I want Your Spirit to make me willing to obey You and to please You in all things. Then I will be maintained in paths of righteousness.

51:13 One by-product of my forgiveness will be that I will aggressively witness to other transgressors and tell them Your ways of pardon and peace.

When they hear of what You have done for me, they will want to return to You also.

51:14 Then, too, if You deliver me from the guilt of bloodshed, O God, the whole world will hear my testimony of Your deliverance. The guilt of Uriah's blood is heavy upon me, O God of my salvation. Wipe the slate clean and I'll praise You forever.

51:15 My lips have been sealed shut by my sin. Open them by Your forgiveness and my mouth will be dedicated to speaking and singing Your praise.

51:16, 17 Lord, I am not depending on rituals or ceremonies for forgiveness. I know that You are not a ritualist. If I thought You wanted animal sacrifice, I would bring them. But burnt offering does not delight Your heart. It is true that You instituted sacrifices and offerings, but they never represented Your ultimate ideal. And so I come to You with a broken heart—that is the sacrifice You require. You will not despise this shattered and contrite heart that I bring to You.

51:18 And now, Lord, I want to pray for Your dear people as well as for myself. Be pleased to shower them with good things. Rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. My sins have doubtless hindered the progress of Your work. I have brought reproach upon Your name. Now may Your cause move forward without hindrance.

51:19 When we all walk in fellowship with You, confessing and forsaking our sins, then You shall be pleased with our sacrifices of righteousness. Offerings that speak of complete dedication to Yourself will gladden Your heart. We will offer bulls on Your altar—in praise to the God who forgives sin and pardons iniquity.

Psalm 52: The Traitor Unmasked

The historical background of this Psalm is found in 1 Samuel 21, 22. Doeg the Edomite was King Saul's chief herdsman. He was present when the fugitive David received food and Goliath's sword from Ahimelech the priest. Soon afterward he went and tattled to Saul, and was rewarded by being delegated to kill Ahimelech and eighty-four other priests of the Lord.

Subsequently he massacred the women and children at Nob and destroyed the village and even the animals.

Doeg's character is delineated in verses 1-4 and his doom in verses 5-7. The psalmist's contrasting character is seen in verses 8 and 9.

52:1-4 David's opening question assails the traitor for taking pride in his extreme evil and for "forging wild lies all day against God's loyal servant" (NEB). This treacherous prototype of the Antichrist had a razor-sharp tongue that cut people down with its slander. He had a strong bent for evil more than good, and would rather lie than tell the truth. The personification of deceit, he reveled in speech that wrecked other lives.

52:5 Divine and human justice agree on the fate which the psalmist foretells for Doeg and all his counterparts. God will break him down to the ground like a building reduced to rubble. The Most High will snatch him out of His tent, and completely uproot him from the world of living men.

52:6, 7 God-fearing people will live to see that day, will be struck by the awesome judgment of God, and will chuckle at his reversal, saying:"Here is the man who did not make God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness."

52:8, 9 The psalmist's character is in glaring contrast. He compares himself to a green olive tree in the house of God—a picture of prosperity and fruitfulness. The olive is, according to F. W. Grant:

> ... the tree in which abides that (oil) which typifies the Spirit of God, green in its freshness of life eternal. It is in the house of God (in contrast to) that "tent" out of which the wicked one is cast.[38]

In contrast to Doeg who would not make God his refuge, David is determined that he will trust in the mercy of the LORD forever and ever.

Something else he will do forever is to thank the Lord for what He has done—namely, for punishing the wicked and vindicating the righteous.

Finally, he will magnify the name of the Lord in the presence of His loyal saints, because His name is good and all that He is is good.

Psalm 53: The Folly of Atheism

The main difference between Psalm 14 and this one is that the name of God is changed from Jehovah (or Yahweh) to Elohim.[39] In Psalm 14 the fool denies the existence of the covenant-keeping God (Jehovah, LORD) who is deeply interested and involved in the welfare of His people. Here the fool denies the existence of an almighty, sovereign God (Elohim) who sustains and governs the universe.

> God can be denied in both senses: some deny that the Creator has any special interest in any particular race or group of men; others repudiate any possibility of there being a God at all (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

53:1 The fool is not necessarily a dunce or stupid. He may be intellectually brilliant as far as contemporary education is concerned, but he does not want to face the evidence as to the person, power and providence of God. He is willfully ignorant. "The Hebrew word has in it the idea of a malicious refusal to acknowledge the truth."

Atheism is linked with depravity and degradation, sometimes as cause, sometimes as effect. Therefore it is not surprising that those who say "There is no Elohim" are corrupt, doing abominable iniquity. There is none of them who does good.

53:2 Now the subject seems to glide from atheists in particular to mankind in general. Paul quotes snatches from these verses in Romans 3 to establish the total depravity of all mankind. The indictment is true, of course. As God looks down from heaven upon the race of men, He cannot find one who, left to himself, would have the wisdom to fear the Lord. Apart from the prior ministry of the Holy Spirit, no one would seek God.

53:3 They have all turned aside from the living God. They have all become depraved. Not one does good in the sense of something that can gain favor or merit with the Lord.

53:4, 5 Again, there seems to be a switch to a particular class of sinners, namely, those apostates who persecute God's people. How can they be so short-sighted? They are cruel and prayerless. They think no more of destroying the faithful remnant than of eating bread. And they never feel the need of speaking to God in prayer. They seem completely insensible to the fact that one day they will be seized with unprecedented terror. God will scatter the bones of those who wage war against His loyal followers.

53:6 In the last verse, David prays for the coming of the Messiah. He is the Deliverer who will come out of Zion (Rom. 11:26) and save all believing Israel. In that day Israel will be restored, Jacob will rejoice and Israel will be glad.

Psalm 54: God Is My Helper

When David was fleeing from Saul, the Ziphites twice revealed his whereabouts to the king (1 Sam. 23:19; 26:1). These betrayals gave rise to the words of this Psalm, a suitable prayer for God's people in any age when suffering at the hands of men.

54:1 The opening cry for help asks for salvation by God's name and vindication by His strength. His name stands for His nature or character and His strength for His omnipotence. Salvation here means temporal deliverance from enemies.

54:2, 3 The now-or-never urgency of the psalmist is seen in the importunate plea for God to hear, to listen to the hissing-hot words of his mouth.

What had happened was that these strangers had conspired to double-cross David; bloodthirsty men were out to get him—apostates who cared nothing about God.

54:4, 5 God is the answer. The Lord is with those who uphold the believer's life. One day He will repay the enemies of His people with calamity and ruin.

The knowledge of what God will do turns quickly into the prayer, "Do it, Lord. In proof of Your faithfulness, bring their wicked careers to an end."

54:6 The saving name of verse 1 will then become the worshiped name. David will bring a freewill sacrifice to the Lord, and offer thanksgivings to the name of the LORD—the precious name in which all good is enshrined.

54:7 In the final verse David speaks as if all his trouble was past, and as if he had already witnessed the demise of his enemies. "Already," writes Morgan, "though perhaps yet in the midst of the peril, he sings the song of deliverance, as though it were already realized."[40] Faith thus "gives substance to our hopes, and makes us certain of realities we do not see" (Heb. 11:1, NEB).

Psalm 55: Cast Your Burden

Ahithophel was one of David's most trusted advisers who later led a defection to the usurping Absalom. In this Psalm, we sense the extreme anguish of David's heart over this bitter blow. We can also read here something of the deep tides of emotion which surged through the Savior's soul in connection with His betrayal by Judas. And the Psalm foreshadows the prayer of the remnant as they suffer under the conspiracy of the coming Antichrist.

55:1, 2a In deep distress the soul does not lack variety or originality in attracting the attention of God. Positively, there is the request to give ear. Negatively, the word is "do not hide Yourself." There is the appeal for audience, "Attend to me," and the appeal for action, "and hear me."

55:2b-5 Then follows a heart-rending catalog of personal grief and of desperate need.

Restless in complaining and moaning.

Distracted by the shouts of the enemy*.*

Oppressed by the wicked*.*

Buried by them under heaps of trouble*.*

Exposed to furious assaults.

Heartbroken with anguish.

Terrified by impending doom.

Afflicted by uncontrollable trembling*.*

Overwhelmed with horror*.*

55:6-8 His first impulse is to fly away from all his troubles. If he had wings, he would take off for some quiet spot in the wilderness. He would waste no time in escaping from the tempest that was swirling around him.

55:9a But now his terror gives way to burning indignation. He is so revolted by the treachery of the conspirators that he calls on the Lord to destroy—without specifying whether He should destroy the people or their plans. Also he asks God to divide their tongues—which may be an allusion to David's prayer at this time that the Lord would turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness (2 Sam. 15:31).

55:9b-11 As the son of Jesse looks at the city of Jerusalem which he conquered and chose, he sees it filled with violence and strife; day and night these twin evils stalk around it on its walls. The city of peace is now a city of mischief and trouble. Ruin is resident. Oppression and fraud never leave the marketplace, where there ought to be justice and equity.

55:12-15 At the heart of David's complaint, of course, is his cruel betrayal. The pain would have been more endurable if the culprit had been an avowed enemy. If the taunts and insults had come from an out-and-out adversary, then the psalmist could have kept out of his way. But it was one of his own, a companion, a loved and trusted friend who had knifed him in the back. It was one with whom the psalmist used to have sweet fellowship as they walked together in the courts of the tabernacle. The perfidy of this man and his followers deserves sudden death, a quick trip to Sheol, "for wickedness dwells in their homes and deep in their hearts" (Gelineau).

55:16-21 Yet in all his emotional turmoil, David is assured of help in answer to prayer. The sobs and moans that ascend to God evening and morning and at noon will reach the Savior's ear. In spite of the numerical superiority of those arrayed against him, David will emerge from the battle with peace as his portion. Yes, God will hear, and afflict them, even He who sits eternally enthroned. This is the condemnation of those with whom there is no change, i.e., repentance, and who do not fear God. This is the condemnation of the traitor—the bosom companion who stretched out his hand to harm his friends and who broke the covenant of friendship and allegiance. His words seemed smoother than butter, ... yet they were drawn swords.

55:22 The golden peak of Psalm 55 is reached in verse 22:

Cast your burden on the LORD,

And He shall sustain you;

He shall never permit the righteous to be moved.

The psalmist came to realize that the best course in time of troubles is not to run away from them, but to cast the burden of them on the LORD. May we learn the lovely lesson set forth by Bishop Horne: "He who once bore the burden of our sins and sorrows requests that we should now and ever permit Him to bear the burden of our cares."

55:23 Men of murder and treachery will die violently and prematurely. Ahithophel did (2 Sam. 17:14, 23) and so did Judas (Matt. 27:5). But God's people can depend on Him to save them.

Psalm 56: God Is For Me!

It was a bitter pill for David to have to seek refuge from his own countrymen among the Philistines in Gath (1 Sam. 21:10-15; 27:4; 29:2-11), but the fierce hostility of King Saul drove him to it—or so he felt. Psalm 56 describes some of the alternating waves of fear and faith which swept over him at that time.

56:1, 2 He begins with a prayer for God's gracious help in view of the constant harassment of his pursuers. Notice the three kinds of terror which were coming upon him all day from hostile men:

... he oppresses me (v. 1)

My enemies ... hound me (v. 2)

... they twist my words (v. 5)

His foes were arrogantly attacking him, constantly plotting evil against him, federating for greater strength, lurking to pounce upon him, continually spying on him (vv. 2, 5, 6). It seemed like a clear case of overkill.

56:3 But faith breaks through the gloom with the confident declaration, "Whenever I am afraid, I will trust in You." This "cheerful courage of a fugitive," as Delitzsch calls it, is based on the character of God and on the faithfulness of His promises. He is more powerful than all our foes combined, and He has promised to protect us from harm. Nothing can penetrate the protective hedge which He sets up around us except by His permissive will. This is why we can trust in God without a fear.

56:4-6 To the bold challenge "What can mere man do to me?" reason might answer, "Plenty. Man can persecute, injure, maim, shoot, and kill." But the fact is that the child of God is immortal until his work is done. Also we should understand David's fearlessness in the light of our Savior's words:

> And do not fear those who kill the body but cannot kill the soul. But rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell (Matt. 10:28)

56:7 After rehearsing the studied attempts of his enemies to wipe him out, David calls on God to requite them for their treachery by casting them down in His anger.

56:8 Here is an exquisite description of the tender, personalized care of our Lord. He keeps a count of our wanderings or restless tossings during the night, of our fevered turnings from one side to another. He cares so much about the details of our tears of sorrow that He can be asked to keep our tears in His bottle. This may be an allusion to an ancient custom of mourners, namely, preserving their falling tears in a small bottle, which was placed in the tomb of deceased friends, as a memorial of the survivors' affection. In any event, God does keep a record of our tears in His book, just as Jesus later taught us that He numbers the very hairs of our heads.

56:9 With David we can be confident that God will turn back our enemies in answer to our prayers. We know this because God is for us. And if God is for us, who can successfully be against us (Rom. 8:31)?

> There is, ultimately, only one question which matters in life; everything else is secondary to this—'Is God for us?' David, at last, was sure of God; and the man who is sure of God is beyond fear (11) (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

56:10, 11 The refrain of verse 4 is repeated in verses 10 and 11 but this time using two different names of God:

> In God [Elohim] (I will praise His word), > in the LORD [YHWH, Jehovah] (I will praise His word),
> in God [Elohim] I have put my trust;
> I will not be afraid.
> What can man do to me?

The psalmist praises the promise of the Almighty One and of the covenant-keeping One, in utter assurance of His protecting care, and in cool contempt of frail man's ability to harm him.

56:12, 13 The present assurance of future deliverance puts David under constraint to fulfill the vows he made to the Lord, and to pay his debt of gratitude to Him. Though still in enemy territory, he is enjoying the blessing of full salvation. His life has been saved, and his feet kept from stumbling so that he might continue to walk in the presence of God in the light of life.

Psalm 57: In the Shadow of His Wings

David was hiding from Saul in a cave when he wrote this Psalm—either the cave of Adullam or the one at Engedi. There are two ever-present realities before him—the gracious God and the formidable foe. The Psalm see-saws between the two, but faith in the former is greater than fear of the latter and tilts the see-saw in that direction.

The Ever-Present God (57:1-3)

The psalmist does not demand deliverance, as if he had a right to expect it. He asks it as a mercy from God, an undeserved blessing stemming from His kindness. Oblivious of his dank, dark surroundings, he reckons himself as sheltered in the shadow of God's wings, like a chicken snuggled under the wings of the mother hen. And there he will stay until the storms of life have passed by. From this privileged place of conscious nearness, he cries to God Most High with the confidence that no one and nothing can hinder Him from accomplishing His purposes in the lives of His people. When the answer comes from heaven, it will mean deliverance for the trusting heart and dishonor for those who walk all over him. It will be an unforgettable demonstration of God's love and dependability.

The Ever-Present Enemy (57:4)

The enemies are formidable—like savage, fiery lions that tear and devour; these sons of men have teeth like spears and arrows, and tongues like sharp swords. Yet David lies down to rest in the middle of such danger—a truly remarkable feat of faith.

The Ever-Present God (57:5)

In a refrain that is repeated in verse 11, David longs to see God's glory manifested in the crushing of His foes and the vindication of His cause. Nothing will do but that His glory be astral and global in its dimensions.

The Ever-Present Enemy (57:6)

The adversaries laid careful plans to trap the son of Jesse: his soul was bent over with heaviness. Yes, they had dug a pit to trap him, but they themselves fell into it.

The Ever-Present God (57:7-11)

No wonder the psalmist's heart is steadfastly determined to sing with melody to the Lord. No wonder he rouses his soul, and dusts off the lute and harp. No wonder he is determined to greet the dawn with songs of praise.

Nor will it be a private, provincial songfest. He will thank the Lord among the peoples, and sing psalms among the nations, because God's mercy is as infinite as the heavens and His truth as limitless as the clouds.

F. B. Meyer notes that just as David "rose above personal grief in a desire for God's glory" so we should subordinate our own petty griefs in a great passion to see Him exalted.

Psalm 58: The Judges Judged

58:1, 2 As the Psalm opens, it is a vigorous protest against unjust judges or rulers. The mighty lords of the earth are put on the spot. Have they been fair in their decisions? Have they dispensed justice to the common people? The obvious answer is "No." In their hearts they have concocted all sorts of crookedness. Then their hands have dealt out the violence that their hearts had planned. The land is filled with perversion of justice.

58:3 The subject broadens from dishonest magistrates to the wider class of wicked people to which they belong. Their corruption is not a development of later life; it can be traced right back to their birth. Their lawlessness and rebellion are inborn; as soon as they begin to talk, they begin to lie.

58:4, 5 Their speech is slanderous and malignant like the deadly poison of a serpent. Their ears are deaf to the voice of God like the deaf cobra that will not listen to the charmer, no matter how skillfully he plays.

58:6, 7 Just as David drew from the world of nature to describe their wickedness, so he now dips into natural science for fitting metaphors of judgment. Let the teeth of these fierce lions be broken, their cruel fangs extracted. Let them vanish like waters that quickly disappear into the ground, or a stream that mysteriously vanishes underground.

The Hebrew of verse 7b is uncertain. It may mean, "May they be as arrows with the heads cut off—blunt and harmless."

58:8 Then the world of snails and slugs is invaded. Just as a snail "melts away" in a trail of slime, so let these criminals disappear from the haunts of men. Whether snails actually dissolve in slime is an unimportant technicality. No one objects when we say that a burning house "goes up in smoke." Then why quibble over a figurative expression in the Bible?

The next imprecation is that these evildoers might die prematurely, like a stillborn child that never sees the sun. "The eyes of the wicked have never been opened," says Scroggie, "and their possibilities have never unfolded; the sinner is an abortion, a promise never fulfilled."[41]

58:9 Finally the psalmist asks that they may be suddenly swept away, like burning thorns are scattered by a whirlwind before the pot above them feels the heat. Maclaren says:

> The picture before the psalmist seems to be that of a company of travellers round their camp, preparing their meal. They heap brushwood under the pot, and expect to satisfy their hunger; but before the pot is warmed through, not to say before the water boils or the meal is cooked, down comes a whirlwind, which sweeps away fire, pot and all.[42]

58:10 There is nothing uncertain about the Hebrew here. It states unmistakably that the people of God will be elated when the wicked are punished, that he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked. If this sounds vindictive and loveless to our Christian ears, we may justify it by saying, with J. G. Bellett, that while we cannot rejoice in judgment in this Age of Grace, believers will do so when the Lord vindicates His divine glory by vengeance. Or we may consider the words of Morgan that "it is a sickly sentimentality and a wicked weakness that has more sympathy with the corrupt oppressors than with the anger of God."[43]

58:11 In the ongoing judgment of the ungodly, men realize that the righteous are rewarded, and that God actually does judge men here on earth.

58:11 In the ongoing judgment of the ungodly, men realize that the righteous are rewarded, and that God actually does judge men here on earth.

Psalm 59: The God Who Comes to Meet Us

Here David storms the throne of God in almost breathless haste because Saul has sent men to surround the house and tighten the noose.

59:1-4 The words come gushing out like a hot torrent—"Deliver me ... defend me ... save me." The language is vehement, abrupt, urgent. These ungodly men are thirsting for his blood. Relentlessly they wait for their chance to kill him; they unite in a common effort to eliminate him. And yet it is all so unprovoked. The psalmist is not guilty of the treason and disloyalty with which they charge him. Their feverish preparations were provoked through no fault of his. If only God would awaken and come to David's rescue!

59:5 For a moment, the son of Jesse seems to look beyond his immediate foes to all the enemies of Israel and calls on God to do a thorough work of punishment. Here he addresses God as Jehovah, Elohim Sabaoth, Elohe Israel, a reduplication of the names of God that is intended to express all He is in His essential being and in His special relation to Israel.

59:6, 7 Like a pack of wild alley dogs, they return to besiege the psalmist, howling and prowling. Their incessant barking, their snarling growls fill the air. They arrogantly suppose themselves to be immune from detection.

59:8, 9 But they are known to the LORD—and He laughs at their insensate folly, the same God who looks down on the boasting nations with cool derision. This great God is David's Strength, the One for whom he watches and his sure defense.

59:10 Someone has given us this unforgettable paraphrase of verse 10a: "My God, with His lovingkindness, shall come to meet me at every corner." What a comfort for storm-tossed souls of every age! Linked with this assurance is the knowledge that God will preserve us to see this defeat of our enemies.

59:11-13 The prayer of verse 11 is unique. David asks the Lord not to slay the enemy suddenly lest the people of Israel entertain light thoughts of the seriousness of sin. If the punishment is gradual, the severity of God will be more indelibly impressed on them. But it is clear from what follows that ultimate destruction is included in the catalog of dire judgments which the psalmist specifies for his persecutors. He prays that they be scattered by God's power, and brought down by the Lord who guards Israel. He asks that they might be captured while they are showing off their consummate pride and brought to account for their sinful, wicked words. Finally he prays that they might be utterly destroyed for their cursing and lying speech. Then at last the world will know from east to west that God really does care for the descendants of Jacob.

59:14, 15 In the meantime the human dogs return to the city searching for the psalmist, growling, prowling, and howling for his life, and angry when they don't get it.

59:16, 17 The dogs are growling in the evening, but the son of Jesse is singing in the morning. He is extolling the power and mercy of the Lord because He has proved Himself a defense and refuge in the day of deep need. The morning is coming for all God's people when their enemies will be gone and when the power and love of the Savior will be the theme of endless song.

Psalm 60: Our Hope Is in the Lord

According to the heading, the historical background of this Psalm is when David fought against Mesopotamia and Syria of Zobah, and Joab returned and killed twelve thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt. It seems that there was a temporary setback in this war with Syria and Edom (2 Sam. 8:3-14), causing David to storm the gates of heaven with this importunate plea for help.

The outline of the Psalm is as follows:

1. Israel's Defeat Is from the Lord, vv. 1-4.
2. Israel's Hope Is in the Lord, v. 5.
3. Eventual Victory is Promised by the Lord, vv. 6-8.
4. Israel's Need Is for the Lord, vv. 9-11.
5. Israel's Confidence Is in the Lord, v. 12.

Israel's Defeat Is from the Lord (60:1-4)

60:1-3 As he studies reports of casualties inflicted by the Edomite-Syrian alliance, David interprets the disaster as an indication of the Lord's desertion of His people. It can only mean that God has rejected Israel. In His anger, He has smashed down the nation's defenses, leaving it helplessly exposed to enemy attack. Now is it not time for the Lord to turn in mercy and restore His battered forces?

It is as if the country has been torn apart by an enormous earthquake. The economic, political, and social foundations of the nation have been broken up. The walls of society, weakened by gaping holes, are tottering. If only the Lord would repair the breaches and return His people to a measure of normality!

The population has passed through a fiery ordeal. The wine of suffering and defeat has caused them to reel like a drunkard.

60:4 This verse is somewhat obscure in the original. It may mean, as in the NKJV, that the Lord unfurls a banner for those who fear Him, that it may be displayed because of the truth. But the margin of the RV gives quite an opposite sense:

> Thou hast given a banner to them that fear thee, that they may flee from before the bow.

David would then be complaining, with undisguised sarcasm, that the banner God has raised for Israel is not one of victory but of defeat, a flag that signals retreat from before the forces of the enemy.

Israel's Hope Is in the Lord (60:5)

Prayer is born from the ashes of humiliating defeat. Speaking both for himself and his people as "Your beloved," the psalmist implores the Lord for deliverance, victory and the renewal of communion. "O come and deliver Your friends, help with Your right hand and reply" (Gelineau).

Eventual Victory Is Promised by the Lord (60:6-8)

60:6, 7 Verses 6-8 form a divine oracle in which the voice of God, heard in the sanctuary, expresses His determination to reoccupy all the land of Israel and to conquer His Gentile foes.

Shechem, Succoth, Gilead, Manasseh, Ephraim, and Judah are all Jewish territory. God claims them as His own. He will subdivide Shechem, on the west of the Jordan, and the Valley of Succoth on the east. He will possess the trans-Jordan land of Gilead, and the two territories of Manasseh, one on either side of the Jordan.

Ephraim, located centrally in Israel, is His helmet, the tribe that will take the lead in national defense. And Judah is His scepter; according to Jacob's dying prophecy (Gen. 49:10), it will be the governmental seat.

60:8 Then turning to three of the surrounding nations, the Lord asserts His dominion over them. Moab, situated on the southeastern shore of the Dead Sea, will be His washpot. He will cast His shoe upon Edom, a figure signifying forcible possession and servitude and perhaps also contempt. Philistia will shout in triumph because of God's judgments.

Israel's Need Is for the Lord (60:9-11)

60:9 It seems clear that the speaker changes at this point.[44] It could scarcely be the Lord's voice because He would not need anyone to bring Him to the strong city. So we understand these to be the words of David, longing for the day when the capital city of Edom (variously called Bozrah, Sela and Petra) will fall into the hands of the Israelites. Of course, the city here stands for the whole country of Edom. David wishes that he could be instrumental in fulfilling God's intention to cast His shoe upon it.

60:10 But it is a vain hope at the moment because God has hidden His face from His people. He has cast them off. He no longer accompanies Israel's armies as a guarantee of victory.

60:11 So David pleads for God to fight once again on behalf of His troubled people. Divine help is indispensable; the help of man is useless.

Israel's Confidence Is in the Lord (60:12)

The Psalm closes on a note of confidence. Given God's aid, Israel's army is assured of an illustrious record. Their enemies will be crushed under His heel.

Application

The believer's enemies are the world, the flesh and the devil. In himself he is powerless to conquer them. And the help of other men is insufficient, no matter how well-meaning they might be. But there is victory through the Lord Jesus Christ. Those who trust in Him for deliverance will never be disappointed.

Psalm 60 will have a final fulfillment in the last days when the Jewish remnant, harried and dispirited, looks to the Messiah for salvation and triumph. Then the land of Israel will be apportioned among the tribes and the nation's foes will be brought to bay.

Psalm 61: The Rock That Is Higher Than I

David had a wonderful relationship with the Lord. To him God was:

... a living bright Reality,
More present to faith's vision keen
Than any earthly object seen.
More dear, more intimately nigh
Than e'en the closest earthly tie.
—Author unknown

Especially in times of danger, when the situation seemed utterly hopeless, he had learned to cast his burden on the Lord and leave it there.

Here he is in another of those cliff-hanging predicaments. The pressure of circumstances wrings from his heart a prayer that has seldom been surpassed for sheer poignancy and articulateness. It has become the timeless language of thousands of God's people as they have passed through persecution, heartache and suffering because it says what they feel but could never express so well.

61:1 Into the throne room of the universe comes the familiar voice of David:

Hear my cry, O God; attend to my prayer.

God's heart is delighted. The childlike faith of His servant assures instant audience with the Sovereign.

61:2 From the end of the earth I will cry to You,
When my heart is overwhelmed.

The psalmist is not literally at the end of the earth, but he is literally in a place of extremity where safety and deliverance seem remote, where life ends and death begins. Physically and emotionally he is spent, but he knows that the throne of grace is only a breath away, so he draws near to receive mercy and find grace to help in time of need. "Distance," someone has said, "is meaningless and no extremity of life effective in blocking prayer."

Lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

A true spiritual instinct teaches David that he needs a rock for protection, that the rock must be higher than himself, and that he needs divine guidance to reach it. The Lord, of course, is the Rock (2 Sam. 22:32); the metaphor is never used of any mere man in the Bible.[45] The rock must be someone greater than man; otherwise man can never find shelter in it. This points to the deity of Christ. (And incidentally the rock must be cleft to provide a hiding place from the enemy.) Finally, David acknowledges that he does not have the wisdom or strength to direct his own steps, so he asks the Lord to lead him to Himself—the Rock of ages.

61:3 For You have been a shelter for me,

A strong tower from the enemy.

These words confirm that God is the Rock. David had proved Him to be his trustworthy refuge and a tower of strength into which the righteous can run for safety (Prov. 18:10). What He has been, He will be.

61:4 I will abide in Your tabernacle forever;

I will trust in the shelter of Your wings. Selah

Prayers like this cannot fail to touch the throne of God! Such tender affection and simple trust could never be refused. No wonder that God called David a man after His own heart (1 Sam. 13:14). The expression "the shelter of Your wings" may be an allusion to the wings of the cherubim which overshadowed the blood-sprinkled mercy seat.

61:5 For You, O God, have heard my vows;

You have given me the heritage of those who fear Your name.

The word heritage or inheritance is applied in the OT to the land of Canaan (Ex. 6:8), the people of Israel (Ps. 94:5), the Word of God (Ps. 119:111), children in a family (Ps. 127:3), immunity from harm (Isa. 54:17), and finally to the tabernacle or temple (Jer. 12:7). The last named is probably the primary meaning here since the preceding verse mentioned God's tent and alluded to the cherubim. Today, we would think of the heritage of those who fear God's name as eternal life (Col. 1:12).

61:6, 7 You will prolong the king's life,

His years as many generations.

He shall abide before God forever.

Oh, prepare mercy and truth, which may preserve him!

It is interesting that in these two verses, David slips from the first person to the third. Interesting—because while he was still no doubt referring to himself and to the covenant God made with him (2 Sam. 7), his words are more appropriate for another King. If we apply the words to David, they can only be understood as requesting long life for himself and the perpetuation of his kingdom. But applied to the Lord Jesus, they are literally fulfilled:

- His life was prolonged endlessly, in spite of persecution (Heb. 7:16).
- His years will endure to all generations (Heb. 1:12).
- He will be enthroned forever before God (Heb. 1:8).

Steadfast love and faithfulness will watch over Him, like bodyguards (Ps. 91:1-16).

Even the ancient Jewish comment in the Targum says that the King Messiah is in view here.

61:8 So I will sing praise to Your name forever,

That I may daily perform my vows.

And so the Psalm that opened in extremity closes in serenity. David has reached the Rock that is higher than himself, and is so grateful that he determines to sing the praises of the Lord continually, paying his vows of worship, love, and service. He will not be like those who make extravagant vows when the pressure is on, then quickly forget them when the crisis is past. He will not be one who "leaps in prayer but limps in praise."

Psalm 61 inspired this lovely hymn:

O sometimes the shadows are deep,

And rough seems the path to the goal;

And sorrows, sometimes how they sweep

Like tempests down over the soul!

Refrain:

O then to the Rock let me fly,

To the Rock that is higher than I;

O then to the Rock let me fly,
To the Rock that is higher than I.
O sometimes how long seems the day,
And sometimes how weary my feet;
But toiling in life's dusty way,
The Rock's blessed shadow, how sweet!
O near to the Rock let me keep,
If blessings or sorrows prevail,
Or climbing the mountain way steep,
Or walking the shadowy vale.
—Erastus Johnson

Psalm 62: God Alone!

The message of Psalm 62 is that God is the only true refuge. The repetition of the words only and alone emphasize His exclusive right to our full and undivided trust.

Among the many beautiful ways in which He is presented are:

the source of our salvation (vv. 1b, 2a, 6a, 7a)
our rock (vv. 2a, 6a, 7b)
our defense (vv. 2c, 6c)
the basis of our expectation (v. 5b)
our glory (v. 7a)
our refuge (vv. 7b, 8b)
the source of power (v. 11b)
the fountain of mercy (v. 12a)

Anyone who makes God the ground of his confidence and strength has the following confidences:

he shall not be greatly moved (v. 2b)
he has boldness to rebuke his enemies (v. 3)
he can see through their plans and strategies (v. 4)

he shall not be moved (v. 6b)

he will want others to know the joy of trusting God (v. 8)

There are five other objects in which people often trust, but such trust is sure to be disappointed. (1) Men of low degree, that is, common people, are as substantial and transitory as a vapor. (2) Men of high degree, whether rulers or wealthy people, are a delusion in that they seem to offer help and security but they are not dependable. Put the rabble or the elite in the scales and they are weightless as far as trustworthiness is concerned. (3) Oppression is a foolish method to depend on; "it reeks with God's curse." (4) Robbery might seem to be a quick route to power and wealth, but ill-gotten gain is doomed to the judgment of God. (5) Even riches gained through honest industry should never take the Lord's place in our affections and service. F. B. Meyer wrote: "How often have we looked for help from men and money in vain—but God has never failed us."

It seems probable that this Psalm was inspired by Absalom's rebellion. The rebels were out to shatter David as if he were a leaning wall and a tottering fence. Their goal was to cast him down from his high position, that is, from his throne. While pretending loyalty, they were plotting treachery. The fugitive king urges his loyal subjects to maintain their unwavering confidence in the Lord. His enemies were trusting in men and in money, but there was no salvation in either of these. His own trust was in the Lord. Repeatedly the Lord had assured him that He is the fountainhead of power and love; that His power is used to deliver the faithful and to punish the foes; that His love is used to comfort and bless His people. He will see that justice is meted out to all who refuse His grace.

John Donne's comment on the Psalm is memorable:

He is my rock, and my salvation, and my defense, and my refuge and my glory.

If my refuge, what enemy can pursue me?

If my defense, what temptation shall wound me?

If my rock, what storm shall shake me?

If my salvation, what melancholy shall deject me?

If my glory, what calumny shall defame me?

Psalm 63: Better Than Life

Temporarily deposed, David is trekking across the wilderness of Judah to his enforced exile east of the Jordan (2 Sam. 15:23-28; 16:2; 17:16). Even though the king's political fortunes are at a low ebb, his spiritual vitality is high.

63:1 It is magnificent to hear him claiming God as his own: "O, God, You are my God." The words in themselves are simple and childlike, but they contain a world of meaning. My God—an intimate, personal relationship. My God—an abiding treasure when all else is gone. My God—a sufficient resource in every crisis.

And it is humbling to notice the psalmist's passion for God, especially when we remember how cold and diffident we often are. He sought the Lord early— early in life and early every day. And he sought him with a fervor that would not be denied. His soul thirsted for God, his flesh fainted for God —which means that his entire being cried out for fellowship with the Eternal. His longing was as intense as the thirst of a traveler in a dry, weary, waterless land. This, incidentally, is not a bad description of the world—an arid wasteland.

63:2 In memory he goes back to those times when he worshiped at the sanctuary in Jerusalem, to those ineffable moments when, caught up in an ecstasy of sacred contemplation, he saw God in all His power and glory. Now his soul cannot be satisfied with anything less than a new unveiling of the Lord in splendor and might. Some call it the beatific vision—this view of God in His divine glory. Whatever it is called, it is an experience that makes all other glory seem jaded and dull.

Be Thou my vision, O Lord of my heart—

Nought be all else to me, save that Thou art;

Thou my best thought, by day or by night—

Waking or sleeping, Thy presence my light.

—8th century Irish hymn, Trans. by Mary E. Byrne, Versified by Eleanor H. Hill

63:3, 4 Then up from the unlikely wilderness of Judah rises one of the great rhapsodies of adoration.

Because Your lovingkindness is better than life,

My lips shall praise You.

Thus I will bless You while I live;

I will lift up my hands in Your name.

The lovingkindness of the Lord is better than anything that life can afford. Human lips are best employed in praising Him. All of life is not too long to spend in blessing Him. Our hands pulsate with fulfillment when lifted up to Him in praise and prayer.

63:5-8 No banquet is like this sacred communion. Our souls are fed with the choicest delights, and joyful lips respond with overflowing thanks as we redeem the sleepless hours of night by meditating on our glorious Lord. What a help He has been to us—who can ever measure all He has done for us? Shadowed by His wings, we raise our joyful song. And as we cling to Him in loving dependence and in conscious need, He preserves us from dangers seen and unseen, and empowers us to press on toward the mark for the prize.

63:9, 10 "Enemies?" did you say. "O yes, I do have enemies, men who are determined to obliterate me. But they are destined to destruction. They will die a violent death and will suffer the disgrace of not having a decent burial.

63:11 "But I will go on enjoying God. In fact, everyone who swears allegiance to Him will share in the jubilation, whereas those who love to lie will be silenced."

Psalm 64: Bows and Arrows

Two archery contests emerge in Psalm 64. The preliminary event is between the wicked and the righteous (vv. 1-6). The main event is between God and the wicked (vv. 7-10).

64:1-6 The first battle seems to be completely one-sided. The righteous David is opposed by a multitude of villains. He has no arrows; their quivers are full. But he has the secret weapon of prayer and he uses it to enlist the help of his unseen Partner. First, he raises his voice to God for preservation from fear and for protection from the secret plots of the wicked. Then he gives God an intelligence report about the enemy. Their tongues are finely honed, as sharp as a sword. They bend their bows to shoot their arrows of accusation—bitter words of reproach. Their attacks come unexpectedly from secret hide-outs and without fear of a counterattack. They are inflexible in their determination to destroy the innocent. As they conspire to trap the psalmist secretly, they imagine that they are immune from detection. "They have thought their plan out well, each with a cunning heart, each in his deep craft" (v. 6, Moffatt).

64:7 Everything seems to be on the side of the villains so far. But the righteous cling to the promise, "The Lord will fight for you while you hold your peace" (Ex. 14:14). "For the battle is not yours but God's" (2 Chron. 20:15).

64:8 So in the second contest we see God shooting His arrow (singular) at them. It's a bull's-eye. They fall wounded to the ground. God causes their evil words to recoil on themselves, and all the spectators flee away in terror.

64:9, 10 The result is that a sense of awe comes over the populace. Word spreads quickly, and men realize that righteousness has triumphed. This causes righteous people to be glad, of course, and to trust in Jehovah. All those who love what is right will celebrate.

Psalm 65: Millennial Harvest Song

While Psalm 65 is generally used as a classic song of "harvest home," there can be little doubt that its primary interpretation deals with conditions at the Second Advent of the Lord.

65:1 During the long centuries of Israel's estrangement from God, Zion was barren as far as praise to God was concerned. But when God's ancient people are restored to Him, praise will await Him there in the silence of awe and reverence. To Him the vow shall at last be performed. This may mean His own vow that every knee will bow to Him (Isa. 45:23). It may refer to the Messiah's vow of Psalm 22:22: "In the midst of the congregation I will praise You." Or it may mean the vow of love, worship, and service that the persecuted remnant will make during the terrible suffering of the Tribulation.

65:2 Whereas Israel was primarily in view in verse 1, here the subject broadens to include all mankind. God is known by the grand and noble title, "You who hear prayer." The converted nations will lay hold of Him in believing prayer.

65:3 It is important to notice the change of speakers here. In the first clause, the Messiah is rehearsing His vicarious work at Calvary when He was crushed beneath sin's awful load. But the Jewish remnant quickly acknowledges that it was not His sins but "our transgressions." They say, "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement for our peace was upon Him; and by His stripes we are healed" (Isa. 53:5). And as soon as Israel makes this confession of guilt, they will have the assurance that their transgressions are all forgiven.

65:4 Again we are aware that the first part of the verse speaks of the Messiah Jesus, whereas the second part is the language of redeemed Israel. God's blessed Son is the One whom God chose, as we read in Isaiah 42:1: " ... My elect One in whom My soul delights." Also He is the One whom God caused to approach Him—a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek. He shall dwell in the courts of the Lord, in the place of special nearness to Him.

Then the remnant expresses its confidence of complete satisfaction with the goodness of God's house, that is, His holy temple. This reference to the temple causes some to question the Davidic authorship of the Psalm since the temple was not built until after David's death. However the difficulty vanishes when we realize that the word temple was sometimes used to describe the tabernacle before Solomon's temple was erected (1 Sam. 1:9; 3:3; 2 Sam. 22:7).

65:5-7 The remnant is still speaking. In answer to their prayers, the Lord righteously punishes their enemies with awesome judgments. Thus He reveals Himself as the God of their salvation and the confidence of people throughout the earth and in far-off seas. What a great God He is! With omnipotence as His belt, He established the mountains firm in their place by an act of super-power. It's nothing for Him to pacify the raging seas, the fury of their waves (on the Sea of Galilee, for instance). Or to suppress the fury of the Gentile peoples, for that matter.

65:8 No wonder that unbelievers in the farthest lands are afraid of the signs and wonders which God visits upon them. Or that believers in the lands of sunrise and sunset rejoice.

65:9 While verses 9-13 describe the harvest year from seedtime to harvest, they apply especially to conditions in the Millennium when the curse will be lifted and bumper crops will be the rule.

Springtime is like a visit from God. He sends the showers from His overhead river—the clouds that scud across the sky. Then when the ground has been prepared, He provides the seed to be planted.

65:10 During the growing season, the plowed furrows are irrigated, the rain melting the clods and keeping the ground soft. Soon the crops are shooting up in profusion.

65:11-13 God crowns the growth cycle with His goodness. Wherever His feet have passed, the stream of plenty flows (Knox). The pastures yield rich supplies of fodder. The little hills are covered with lush vegetation, as if hilarious with joy. The pastures wear a sheepskin coat, clothed as they are with innumerable flocks. Ripened grain bends in rhythmic cadence across the floors of the valleys. It seems that all nature is celebrating the arrival of the age of the Messiah.

Psalm 66: Come, See, and Hear!

66:1-4 In the first four verses, the psalmist calls on the whole earth to join in singing the praises of God. It should be a joyful song and one that celebrates the excellencies of His name. The praise should be glorious because the Subject is glorious. The very words of the song of universal worship are given. We might paraphrase them as follows:

> Lord, Your accomplishments are tremendous. Your power is so devastating that Your enemies cringe before You. At last the whole earth bows before You in worship. Everywhere people praise Your name in song.

This song will no doubt be a favorite when the kingdom age arrives.

66:5-7 The recurrence of our and us in verses 5-12 leads us to believe that these are the evangelistic sentiments of the Jewish remnant in the last days as they invite the nations to ponder the astounding things that God has done for Israel. Two terrific displays of His might come to mind. He made a highway of dry land through the Red Sea. And when the Israelites came to the Jordan River forty years later, they were able to cross dry-shod. What rejoicing exploded in Israel then! The people exulted in their God whose mighty dominion never ends and whose eyes keep close watch on the nations. It's foolish for anyone to rebel against a God like this.

66:8-12 The Gentiles should also bless God for the miraculous way in which He preserved the people of Israel. In a rapidly changing succession of figures Israel is pictured as:

> being refined like silver when it is subjected to intense heat by the smelter (v. 10).
> being imprisoned as if in a net (v. 11a).
> being forced to slave labor (v. 11b).
>
> being downtrodden by wretched men (v. 12a).
> being exposed to frightful dangers, as if going through fire and through water (v. 12b).

Yet God did not allow them to be finally overthrown. Rather He brought them into rich fulfillment—a reference to Israel's superabundant prosperity in the Millennium. As Williams puts it:

> In spite of the unceasing efforts of Satan and man to utterly destroy Israel, her twelve tribes will appear at Mt. Sion upon the Millennial morn, and so demonstrate the truth of the ninth verse. They will testify that the chastisements justly laid upon them (vv. 10-12) were designed in love and executed in wisdom.[46]

66:13-15 In verses 13-20, the I and my indicate that the chorus has become a solo. Several sober commentators believe that the speaker is the Lord Jesus, Israel's King and Great High Priest. He comes to God with burnt offerings of a life totally devoted to the will of His Father. He pays the vows of praise which He had promised when in trouble. This may refer to His own sufferings on the cross, or to the sufferings which He felt in the sufferings of His people, for "In all their affliction He was afflicted" (Isa. 63:9).

When we read here of burnt offerings, of the sacrifice of rams and of an offering of bulls and goats, we need not take them with exact literalness, except as the psalmist spoke of his own experience. In association with His people, the Messiah uses these as figures of the spiritual worship which He and the remnant will bring. However, this does not deny that a modified sacrificial system may be reinstituted in the Kingdom.

66:16-19 In verse 5, the invitation was "Come and see." Here in verse 16 it is "Come and hear." The works of God in history can be seen, but His dealing with the soul can only be heard. The Messiah invites all God-fearing people to hear His testimony of answered prayer. He had cried to Him in supplication and in exaltation. The reference is to the days of His flesh when He "offered up both supplications and entreaties to Him who was able to save Him out of death, with strong crying and tears" (Heb. 5:7, JND). If He had regarded iniquity in His heart, the Lord would not have heard Him. But He was without sin, and so He was heard "because of His piety" (Heb. 5:7, JND).

66:20 And this inspired the closing burst of praise:

Blessed be God,

Who has not turned away my prayer,

Nor His mercy from me!

Psalm 67: Israel's Missionary Call

When God called the nation of Israel, He intended that the nation should have a missionary character. It was to be a witness and a testimony to the surrounding nations of two important truths.

1. The truth of monotheism—that there is only one God (Ex. 20:2, 3; Deut. 6:4; Isa. 43:10-12).
2. The truth that a people living in obedience under the government of Jehovah would be happy and prosperous (Lev. 26:3-12; Deut. 33:26-29; 1 Chron. 17:20; Jer. 33:9).It was not God's will that Israel should be the terminal of His blessing, but a channel. There are numerous indications throughout the OT that God's salvation was for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews, and that Israel as a kingdom of priests was to serve as mediator between God and the nations.

Unfortunately Israel failed in this aspect of its mission. By lapsing into idolatry, it denied the very truths it was called on to proclaim.

But God's purposes are not so easily defeated. During the Tribulation, a remnant of believing Jews will carry the gospel of the kingdom to all the world (Matt. 24:14). And in the ensuing kingdom, Israel will be the channel of blessing to the nations (Isa. 61:6; Zech. 8:23).

67:1, 2 This Psalm anticipates that time. In it we hear believing Jews praying that God will bless them so that they can be the means of evangelizing the Gentiles. When we read the words, "that Your way may be known on earth," we should remember that Christ is the way (John 14:6). Only through Him can God's saving power be experienced by nations or individuals.

67:3, 4 In an extraordinary burst of missionary enthusiasm, Israel then prays that great torrents of praise will ascend to God from the Gentiles, that the nations will enjoy a gala time of celebration as they enjoy Christ's beneficent and equitable rule and His tender, shepherd care.

67:5 Just as Israel yearns to hear God praised by all the peoples of the world, as F. B. Meyer reminds us, so should "we want crowns for the brow of Christ."

67:6, 7 The last two verses picture the Millennium as having already arrived. The crops have been harvested, and the barns and silos are bursting. This proof of God's blessing to Israel will be a powerful testimony to the nations. The Hebrew scholar Franz Delitzsch summarized: "For it is the way of God, that all the good that He manifests toward Israel shall be for the well-being of mankind."[47]

Psalm 68: Our God Is Marching On!

This is Israel's national processional, in which the journey of the ark of the covenant from Mount Sinai to Mount Zion is seen as symbolizing the march of God to ultimate victory. To the Jewish mind, the ark rightly represented the presence of God; when the ark moved, God moved.

It is quite generally believed that the song was composed to celebrate one particular incident in the history of the ark—the return to Mount Zion after its inglorious capture by the Philistines and after its stay in the house of Obed-Edom (2 Sam. 6:2-18).

We can better enter into the spirit of this marching song if we see that it is divided into the following seven sections:

1. Introductory hymn of praise to God (vv. 1-6).

2. The ark moving from Sinai through the wilderness (vv. 7, 8).
3. The entrance and conquest of the land of Canaan (vv. 9-14).
4. The capture of Jerusalem by David (vv. 15-18).
5. Song praising God for victory over the Jebusites (vv. 19-23).
6. The procession carrying the ark to the sanctuary in Jerusalem (vv. 24-27).
7. The jubilant throng anticipating the final victory of God (vv. 28-35).

In its Messianic setting, the Psalm pictures Christ's Incarnation, His conquest at Calvary, His Ascension, and His Second Advent.

Introductory Hymn (68:1-6)

68:1-3 The first verse gives us a clue that the movements of the ark are the main subject; these are almost the same words which Moses used when the ark first started off from Sinai (Num. 10:35). The sight of the sacred chest under way suggested the time when God arises and moves into action. For His enemies it means disaster and dispersal; for the righteous, deep-seated joy. His enemies scatter in every direction. They flee in pandemonium. As insubstantial as smoke, as unresisting as melting wax, they stagger to their doom. But for the righteous it is a time of vindication and reward, of joy and jubilation.

68:4-6 It is a time to sing praises to God and to clear a way for the Lord in the deserts (MT, see NKJV margin, cf. Isa. 40:3; 62:10). His name is YAH, the covenant-keeping Jehovah; He is worthy of endless praise. Though He is infinitely high, yet He is intimately near to the friendless and the dispossessed. As the God of all grace, He is father of the fatherless, defender of widows. He provides the warmth and fellowship of a happy home for the lonely, and as for those who have been unjustly condemned to prison, He leads them into prosperity with shouts of joy.

With the rebellious, it's a different story; they are consigned to a desolate wilderness.

These introductory verses, then, say in the words of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Our God is marching on," and contrast the results of His march on the righteous and on rebels.

Although it is not noticeable in the English version, seven names of God are woven into the texture of this Psalm: Elohim (v. 1), Yah (v. 4), Jehovah

(v. 10), El Shaddai (v. 14), Yah Elohim (v. 18), Adonai (v. 19), and Jehovah Adonai (v. 20).

The Ark Moves from Sinai through the Wilderness (68:7, 8)

When the Israelites broke camp at Sinai and started the trip toward the Promised Land with the ark in the vanguard, it was an emotion-packed moment. Nature itself seemed to enter into the awesomeness of the event. The earth quaked, the heavens broke loose with rain, and Mount Sinai shuddered at the sight.

The Entrance and Conquest of the Land (68:9-14)

68:9, 10 By verse 9, Israel is in Canaan and God has produced changes in the weather so that the land is abundantly supplied with rain—a welcome change from the irrigation of Egypt and the wilderness drought. The countryside has taken a new lease on life as the drooping vegetation revives and flourishes. The people are at home, richly provisioned by the Lord.

68:11-13 The narrative moves quickly to the conquest of the land. The Lord gives the word, that is, the command to march against the enemy. Implicit in His word is the assurance of victory. The next thing you know, a great company of women[48] are spreading the news at home: "Kings of armies flee, they flee!" In language strongly reminiscent of the Song of Deborah (Judg. 5), we see the women dividing the spoil of battle, though they themselves never left the sheepfolds. As they try on the beautiful clothes and jewelry, they resemble the wings of a dove covered with silver, or, when the light hits at a different angle, they gleam like feathers with yellow gold.

68:14 For the enemy it was a disastrous rout. God scattered kings like snow in Zalmon.

The Capture of Jerusalem by David (68:15-18)

68:15, 16 Jerusalem was still held securely by the pagan Jebusites. The first thing David did after he had been anointed king over all Israel was to move against the city. The defenders were smugly satisfied that it was so impregnable that it could be defended by the blind and lame. But David and his men captured the stronghold and called it the City of David (2 Sam. 5:1-9).

This is what the psalmist is referring to here. As the citadel's capture reveals Jerusalem as the chosen city, the high snow-summit of Hermon, located north of Bashan, looks enviously at Mount Zion. Hermon is a majestic mountain range with many majestic peaks, yet God passed it by and chose Zion for His permanent dwelling. That is why it looks jealously at Zion.

68:17 David recalls the capture of Jerusalem from the Jebusites. But he has no illusions as to the real source of victory. It was not his clever strategy or the valor of his men. It was the numberless chariots of God assaulting the city. The march of God that had begun at Sinai had now reached a glorious finale at Zion.

68:18 As David remembered how his soldiers had stormed the heights of Jerusalem, he looked beyond flesh and blood to see God ascending the high mount, taking captives in His train and winning spoils of victory for those who were former rebels so that He could dwell among these people as their Lord and Savior.

Paul applies verse 18 to the Ascension of Christ (Eph. 4:8-10). When Christ ascended from earth to heaven, He led captivity captive, that is, He triumphed gloriously over His foes and gave gifts to men. The gifts He received among men as reward for His finished work on the cross (Ps. 68:18), He turned around and gave these same gifts to men for the establishment and expansion of His church (Eph. 4:8).

Song Praising God for Victory over the Jebusites (68:19-23)

68:19, 20 Memories of the capture of Zion inevitably awaken praise to God. The song presents God as both Deliverer and Destroyer. As Deliverer, He "bears our burdens and wins us the victory" (Knox). He is the God of our salvation, and He has the power to deliver from death.

68:21-23 As Destroyer, He will crush His foes, those rebels whose long hair symbolizes their lawless, wicked careers. He has promised to track them down in the wilds of Bashan and from the coasts of the high seas so that Israel can wash its feet in their blood, and so that Israel's dogs can feed on their carcasses.

Verse 22 does not refer to the regathering of Israel, but to the hunting down of Israel's enemies.

The Procession Carrying the Ark to the Sanctuary in Jerusalem (68:24-27)

Not long after David captured Jerusalem, he arranged for the ark to be brought to a tent which had been erected to house it (2 Sam. 6:12-19). The procession is described here. As it moves toward the sanctuary, "the psalmist says, in effect, 'Look, here He comes.'"[49] The choir is leading, the band brings up the rear, and in between are young women playing timbrels. Listen to the words of the song:

Bless God in the congregations,The LORD, from the fountain of Israel. The tribes are all represented, from those in the south—little Benjamin and Judah— to those in the north—Zebulun and Naphtali.

The Jubilant Throng Anticipating the Final Victory of God (68:28-35)

As the ark disappears inside the tabernacle, the people outside join in a final prayer (vv. 28-31) and in a song urging all the earth to praise the Lord (vv. 32-35).

68:28, 29 The prayer first of all calls on God to summon His might, to show His strength again on behalf of His people, to complete what He has begun for them. This prayer will be finally answered in the Millennium when the temple will be the glory of Jerusalem, and when kings will bring presents of gold and frankincense (Isa. 60:6) to the Great King.

68:30 The Hebrew of verse 30 is obscure, but the overall thought seems to be this: The people call on God to rebuke the beasts and the herd of bulls. The beasts that live among the reeds, probably crocodiles and hippopotami, represent the leaders of Egypt. The bulls represent the other rulers who "lord it over the peaceful herd of nations" (Knox).

The clause translated "Till everyone submits himself with pieces of silver,"may mean "until those nations bow down to You with silver as tribute" or "vanquishing those nations that have thrived on silver tribute." The sense is good in either case. And in the same vein the prayer goes up, "Scatter the peoples who delight in war." These requests will be fully answered at the Second Advent of Christ when aggressors and warmongers will be destroyed.

68:31 In that day, envoys from Egypt will bring tribute, and Ethiopia will stretch out her hands imploringly and adoringly to the King of all the earth.

68:32-35 The closing verses call on the kingdoms of the earth to acknowledge the God of Israel as worthy of homage and praise. The words carry a tremendous sense of the grandeur and greatness of God. He is the transcendent One, who rides in the ancient heavens. He is the God of revelation, speaking with a mighty voice. He is the omnipotent one, strong on behalf of Israel, but almighty beyond the clouds.

Awesome as He is in His holy places, yet He stoops to give strength and power to His people.

There is only one thing left to say—Blessed be God!

Psalm 69: Save Me, O God!

Our blessed Redeemer's sufferings and death were, for Him, an immersion in the ocean of God's wrath. He Himself spoke of His approaching passion as a baptism:

> I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how distressed I am till it is accomplished! (Luke 12:50).

And in Psalm 42:7 we hear Him crying:

> Deep calls unto deep at the noise of Your waterfalls;
> All Your waves and billows have gone over me.

In His death of bitterest woe, He plumbed the depths of God's judgment against our sin.

69:1-3 Here in Psalm 69 we are privileged to hear the deepest exercises of His holy soul as He sinks into death. The waters have come up to His neck and are about to engulf Him completely. There is nothing to support Him—nothing but deep mire under His feet. Now the floods are dashing over His head. The waters are very deep—deeper than any of the ransomed will ever know. In a real sense God has gathered all the waters together in one place—Calvary—and the Son of His love is enduring that mighty ocean of judgment in order to pay the penalty for our sins.

Above the trackless waste of water reverberates His continuous urgent appeal, "Save me, O God!" It seems as if He has been pleading for an eternity. His throat is hoarse and parched—worn out with His crying. His eyes are swollen shut, ceaselessly scanning the horizon for some sight of help from God. But no help is near.

69:4 The angry mob is milling before the cross, a seething collage of venom, hatred, bitterness and cruelty. What a scene! The Creator and Sustainer of the universe is hanging on a criminal's cross. His guilty murderers are gathered before Him. Who are they? They are men and women who owe their very breath to Him, yet they hate Him without a cause. They are out to destroy Him; they attack Him with lies.

> Why? What hath my Lord done?
> What makes this rage and spite?

He made the lame to run,

He gave the blind their sight.

Sweet injuries!

Yet they at these Themselves displease,

And 'gainst Him rise.

—Samuel Crossman

Now the poignant sentence crosses the Savior's lips: "What I did not steal, I still must restore." Through man's sin, God was robbed of service, worship, obedience, and glory, and man himself was robbed of life, peace, gladness and fellowship with God. In a very real sense Christ came to restore what He did not steal.Aside He threw His most divine array,

And veiled His Godhead in a robe of clay

And in that garb didst wondrous love display,

Restoring what He never took away.

—Author unknown

In this respect He reminds us of the trespass offering (Lev. 5). The prominent feature of this offering was that restitution had to be made for any loss that the offerer had caused, and an additional fifth part had to be added. As our trespass offering, the Lord Jesus not only restored what had been stolen through man's sin, but He added more. For God has received more glory through the finished work of Christ than if sin had never entered. Through sin He lost creatures; through grace He gained sons. And we are better off in Christ than we ever could have been in unfallen Adam.

In Him the sons of Adam boast

More blessings than their father lost.

69:5 We must understand verse 5 as referring to our sins which Jesus voluntarily took upon Himself. He had no folly or wrongs, but "He took our sins and our sorrows, and made them His very own." It was wonderful grace that He would identify Himself so closely with us that He could speak of our sins as His sins.

69:6 Then a fear casts a shadow across His holy mind. He fears that some earnest believers might be stumbled by the fact that His prayers to God go unanswered. He prays that it may not happen—that no one who hopes in God might be ashamed because of what was happening to Him, and that no one who seeks the God of Israel might be brought to dishonor through His humiliation and abandonment.

69:7, 8 It was, after all, because of His obedience to the Father's will that He was bearing reproach. It was His delight in pleasing God that allowed men to cover His face with unmentionable shame and spitting. Part of the cost of obedience was the sorrow of alienation from His own mother's children: His own half-brothers looked upon Him as being out of His mind.

69:9 The Lord Jesus was consumed with a zeal for His Father's house. Whenever He heard men speak insultingly about God, He took it as a personal insult. On that day in Jerusalem when He drove the money changers from the temple courts, His disciples remembered that it was written of Him here in Psalm 69, "Zeal for Your house has eaten me up" (John 2:17).

69:10-12 Nothing that He ever did as a Perfect Man here on earth seemed to please His critics. If He humbled His soul with fasting, they found fault with Him—perhaps suggesting, for instance, that He was only trying to appear pious. When He was plunged in the deepest mourning, He became a byword to them instead of an object of sympathy. In all strata of society, He was spoken against—from the rulers who sat at the gate of the city to the drunkards in the local taverns, bawling their coarse songs of derision. This is indeed a strange thing—the Lord of life and glory has come into the world and He is the song of the drunkards!

69:13-18 And so once again He retreats into God, His only resource. What fervency, what importunity there is in His prayer! He storms the bastions of heaven with successive pleas for help. But even then He reserves to God the right to answer at an acceptable time. As He sinks into the mire, He implores God to rescue Him with His faithful help, to deliver Him from His enemies, and to save Him out of the deep waters, ... the floodwater and the pit. In His deep extremity, He bases His pleas on God's lovingkindness and His abundant mercies. His petitions are short and specific. Hear me, ... turn to me, ... do not hide from me, draw near to me, redeem me, and deliver me. "Deliver me because of my enemies" doubtless means "lest they gloat over my unalleviated distress."

69:19, 20 That mention of His enemies recalls all that He has suffered at the hands of men. His pathway through life was strewn with reproach, shame and dishonor. From the time of His infancy, He was pursued by adversaries: God knew how numerous they were. His heart was broken by insults—that heart that desires only good for the sons of men. The grief and heaviness of it all plunged Him into despair. There was no one who took pity on Him in His sorrow and suffering. He looked in vain for comforters. Even His disciples forsook Him and fled. He was all alone.

69:21 Then in another of those startling prophecies spoken by David but fulfilled only in Jesus, we read:

They also gave me gall for my food,

And for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

The fulfillment is found in Matthew 27:34, 48:

They gave Him sour wine mingled with gall to drink. But when He had tasted it, He would not drink. ... Immediately one of them ran and took a sponge, filled it with sour wine and put it on a reed, and gave it to Him to drink.

Gall was a bitter and perhaps poisonous substance which in small quantity might have acted as a sedative. The Lord would not take it because He must suffer as our Substitute in full consciousness. The vinegar was a sour wine which might have accentuated His thirst rather than alleviating it.

69:22 The tone of the Psalm changes abruptly at verse 22, and for the next seven verses we hear the dying Savior calling on God to punish the nation which condemned Him to die. At first this seems surprising when we remember that the Lord Jesus also prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they do" (Luke 23:34). But actually there is no conflict between the two prayers. Forgiveness was available if they would have repented. But, in the absence of any change of heart, there was nothing left but the judgment described here.

It is important to see that these verses apply particularly to the nation of Israel. Paul applies verses 22 and 23 to Israel in Romans 11:9, 10. Also the mention of "their tents," signifying encampment (v. 25), is a distinctly Jewish allusion.

The verses predict the judgments which would come upon the race of people who had rejected their Messiah and brought about His execution.

Their table would become a snare. The table speaks of the sum total of the privileges which were conferred on Israel as God's chosen, earthly people. Instead of being a blessing, these privileges would determine the measure of their condemnation.

When they experience well-being (peace, Heb. sha¯lôm), it would become a trap. Tribulation would spring forth just as the people think that all is well.

69:23 Their eyes would be darkened, so that they would not be able to see. This refers to the judicial blindness which has actually come on Israel nationally (2 Cor. 3:14). Because they rejected the Light, they have been denied the Light.

Their loins would shake continually. Dispersed among the nations, they would find no rest for the sole of their feet, but the Lord would give them "a trembling heart, failing eyes, and anguish of soul" (Deut. 28:65).

69:24 God's indignation would be poured out upon them and His wrathful anger would overtake them. We remember with deep, deep sorrow how this has been fulfilled in the awful anti-semitic pogroms, the concentration camps, the gas chambers and the ovens. Though these atrocities were perpetrated by wicked men, there can be no doubt that they were permitted by God to descend upon the people who said, "His blood be on us and on our children" (Matt. 27:25).

69:25 Their habitation would become desolate and no one would dwell in their tents. Here we are reminded of the Messiah's words in Matthew 23:38, "See! Your house is left to you desolate." The words were amply fulfilled in A.D. 70 when Titus and the Roman army sacked Jerusalem and destroyed the temple.

69:26 If the punishment seems severe, think of the crime that provoked it.

For they persecute him whom You have struck,

And talk of the grief of those You have wounded.

In the parable of the vineyard, the tenants are quoted as saying concerning the son of the householder, "This is the heir. Come, let us kill him and seize his inheritance" (Matt. 21:38). They knew He was the Son, and they killed Him nonetheless. The latter part of verse 26 described those followers of the Messiah who would be martyred.

69:27, 28 In view of this, there is no need to apologize for the severity of the Savior's words:

Add iniquity to their iniquity,

And let them not come into Your righteousness.

Let them be blotted out of the book of the living,

And not be written with the righteous.

And yet we should not forget that even after the crucifixion of God's Son, the Spirit of God still pleaded with the nation of Israel to repent and to turn to Jesus as the Messiah. All through the period of the Acts, you hear the heartbeat of God as He yearns over the nation He loves and tenderly invites to accept His mercy and grace. Even today the gospel goes out to the Jewish people as to the Gentiles. And the only ones who ever have to suffer the judgments described in verses 22-28 are those who deliberately choose that fate by rejecting the Christ of God.

69:29 Now there is a final word from the dying sinner's Friend. Afflicted and in indescribable pain, He asks that the salvation of God might set Him securely on high.

And that is exactly what happened. God raised Him from the dead on the third day and set Him at His own right hand, a Prince and a Savior. His sufferings for sin are over forever. And we are glad!

Never more shall God Jehovah

Smite the Shepherd with the sword;

N'er again shall cruel sinners

Set at nought our glorious Lord.

—Robert C. Chapman

And now we sing:

The storm that bowed Thy blessed Head

Is hushed forever now,

And rest divine is ours instead,

Whilst glory crowns Thy brow.

—H. Rossier

69:30-33 The speaker in the final seven verses is the risen Redeemer. First He vows to extol God for delivering Him from death and the grave. He will praise the name of God with a song and will magnify Him with thanksgiving. This will mean far more to the LORD than the most costly sacrifices. And oppressed people everywhere will take heart when they realize that just as the LORD heard the Savior's prayers and delivered Him, so He will hear the needy and free the prisoners who call on Him.

69:34-36 And what about the nation of Israel? The last three verses predict a bright tomorrow. Though set aside temporarily, Israel will be restored to the place of blessing. When they look on Him whom they pierced and mourn for Him as one mourns for an only son, when they say, "Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord," God will save Zion and rebuild the cities of Judah. No longer dispersed among the nations, His servants shall dwell in the land, and their children shall possess it. This looks forward, of course, to the Millennium when the Lord Jesus will reign as Messiah-King, and Israel will dwell securely in the land.

Psalm 70: Help Quickly!

For the most part, Psalm 70 is a repetition of Psalm 40:13-17. The heading states that it is a Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance. Four distinct movements appear.

Help Quickly (70:1)

Morgan calls it "a rushing sob of anxious solicitude." This is certainly the impression we get in verse 1 where David is urging the Lord to make haste to deliver him.

Punish Thoroughly (70:2, 3)

The defeat and rout of his foes is of major concern at the moment. He accuses them of trying to kill him, of taking pleasure in harming him, and of jeering at his calamity. He, in turn, asks that they might be thoroughly nonplussed, that they might be turned back and confused, and that they might be startled or appalled by the depth of their own shame.

Be Praised Continually (70:4)

The flow of thought here is that if God comes to the psalmist's rescue, this will result in a great wave of praise to Him. All those who seek the Lord will have occasion to exult in His help, and to worship Him as the great God of salvation.

Help Quickly (70:5)

Again the cry for speedy rescue goes up from the destitute. Although David cannot be said to be soaring in confidence, yet his faith is in the LORD as his help and his deliverer, and such faith will never go unrewarded.

Psalm 71: Old Age

As is so often the case, we can trace a close parallel between the experiences of the psalmist and those of the nation of Israel. Thus, as Bellett suggests, this Psalm can be studied as a prayer of the afflicted remnant in Israel's old age.[50]

71:1-3 The first three verses are similar to Psalm 31:1-3. The LORD is praised as refuge, rock and fortress, and is entreated for vindication of the psalmist's trust, for deliverance, rescue, salvation, and for His saving help as a rock of refuge and a fortress.

71:4 As the prayer continues, it is pervaded by a strong sense of gratitude for God's help in the past and confidence in His continued mercy in old age.

If we apply the Psalm to Israel, the wicked, unjust and cruel man of verse 4 is the Antichrist. His dictatorship of horror will tax the endurance of the saints and wring out from them the most importunate pleas.

71:5, 6 Happy is the man who can say that God has been his hope and trust from childhood. If he has leaned on Jehovah from his birth, he will not lack support in the sunset years of life. If he can trace God's marvelous grace back to the moment of his birth, he will not lack material for praise in later years.

71:7, 8 The psalmist had been a wonder to many by the depth of his rejection and suffering, and perhaps also by his marvelous deliverances. But through all the changing circumstances of life, God had been his strong refuge. And so he wanted every day to be crammed with His praise and glory.

*71:9Do not cast me off in the time of old age;

Do not forsake me when my strength fails.

To grow old gracefully calls for more Grace than Nature can provide. Old age is a new world of strange conflicts and secret fears; the fear of being left alone, the fear of being a burden to loved ones, the fear of becoming a helpless invalid, the fear of losing one's grip, the fear of being imposed upon. These fears are not new. The psalmist is here thinking aloud for the encouragement of all who are in the autumn of life (Daily Notes of the Scripture Union).

71:10, 11 Of course, he had the added fear of enemies who vilified him and who conspired to kill him. Mistakenly supposing that God had forsaken him, they prepared their final assault with no fear of opposition.

71:12, 13 This crisis prompted a distress call in which he urges God to come to his side and help. With no additional trouble, God could also swamp the foes with shame and defeat, reproach and dishonor.

71:14-16 But hope quickly rises above fear, and praise begins its mighty crescendo. The lyrics recount God's righteous acts and the numberless times He has rescued His beleaguered child. With holy determination the psalmist says, "I will come with the inexhaustible narration of the mighty acts of Jehovah Elohim."[51]

71:17, 18 Once again, as in verses 5-11, he runs the gamut from youth to old age (vv. 17-21) and finds nothing but the faithfulness of God. God had taught him from the days of his youth and, as Knox continues, "still I am found telling the tale of Thy wonders." Now he is old and grayheaded, but he doesn't feel his work is done. He pleads for time to tell the new generation and those to come about the mighty miracles of the Lord. This prayer was answered, of course, by the Psalm's being preserved in the sacred Scriptures.

71:19-21 God is really wonderful! His power and His righteousness are higher than the heavens. No one can hold a candle to Him, especially when you think of the great things He has done.

Sometimes God is said to have done what He has permitted. So here, He made the psalmist (and Israel) experience many bitter troubles. For Israel, this suggests the Tribulation Period. But He is the God of recovery, and He will revive His people, and snatch them from the jaws of the grave. That isn't all! He will give them honor in place of reproach and surround them with comfort.

71:22 The lute will be pressed into service to sing the faithfulness of God, and the harp enlisted to magnify the Holy One of Israel. This name of God—the Holy One of Israel—is used two other times in the Psalms—in 78:41 and 89:18.

71:23, 24 But lute and harp will be joined in the chorus by the psalmist's lips, soul and tongue. His lips will be effervescently joyful in song. His soul, redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, will also greatly rejoice in song. His tongue also shall be unwearied in talking about God's dependability, for all his enemies have been thoroughly confounded.

Psalm 72: Messiah's Glorious Reign

This Psalm starts out as a prayer for an earthly monarch, possibly Solomon, but before long we realize that the writer is looking beyond Solomon to the glories of the reign of the Lord Jesus Christ. It will be a wonderful time for this weary, warring world. The golden era for which mankind has yearned will then be ushered in. Creation's groan will be hushed, and peace and prosperity will flourish.

72:1 In the first verse, we hear the prayer that rises from the holy convocation as the King is invested. Knox translates it, "Grant to the King Thy own skill in judgment; the inheritor of the throne, may He be just as Thou art just."

Every one of the "He will's" or "He shall's" in the rest of Psalm 72 will become fact when the Redeemer sets up His resplendent reign.

72:2 He will judge the people with righteousness and the poor with justice. Corruption, bribery and oppression will have ceased. Trials will be conducted with strict impartiality, and the poor will no longer be disadvantaged.

72:3 The mountains will bear a harvest of peace and prosperity for the people, and justice will cover the little hills. Mountains are often used in Scripture to signify governmental authorities. So the thought here may be that the subjects of Christ's kingdom can expect equity and justice from all the courts in the land—from the supreme court all the way down to the local magistrate.

72:4 Down through the centuries the poor and needy have been oppressed, underpaid, persecuted and even killed. In the Millennium, the King Himself will be their Advocate. He will emancipate them once for all and punish those who took advantage of them.

72:5, 6 His subjects will respect and fear Him as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations. His presence shall prove beneficial and refreshing—just like rain upon the grass and showers on the parched earth.

72:7 He will be the true Melchizedek—King of righteousness and King of peace. During His reign justice will flourish, and peace will abound, until the moon ceases to exist. Notice that righteousness precedes peace. "The work of righteousness will be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever" (Isa. 32:17). By His righteous work for us on the cross, He bequeathed peace to us. And by His righteous rule He will one day bring peace to the war-torn world.

72:8 The boast of the United Kingdom used to be, "The sun never sets on the British Empire." British colonies were interspersed among the other nations of the world. But Christ's kingdom will be universal. It will not be a matter of scattered colonies. All nations will be included. His dominion will extend from one sea to another and from the Euphrates River to the ends of the earth.

72:9 The ungovernable nomads of the desert will bow before Him at last, and His enemies will go down to defeat. To lick the dust means to suffer ignoble and shameful subjugation.

72:10, 11 Gentile kings will come to Jerusalem with tribute and with presents for the King of kings. Here comes the ruler of Spain, there are the heads of states from various island countries, and now you see the rulers of the sheikdoms of Southern Arabia. The airport is crowded with visiting dignitaries because all acknowledge His sway and all nations without exception serve Him.

"Kings of wealth, and thought, and music, and art have already acknowledged Him, and shall," said Meyer.

72:12-14 The King's tremendous compassion for the needy is seen here. The poor, the downtrodden and the underdogs will have a Mighty Deliverer. Poverty will vanish and social injustice will be a thing of the past. The weak and the needy will have instant access to Him, and will be certain of considerate attention and prompt action. He will rescue them from unjust and cruel treatment, and He will show the world how precious their lives are to Him.

72:15 The shout, "Long live the King," will rise from His loyal subjects. In their gratitude they will give Him gold from the treasures of Sheba. Never-ceasing prayer will ascend from all over the world for Him, and people will bless Him from dawn to dusk.

72:16 The fertility of the land will be indescribable. Barns and silos will bulge with grain. Even places never previously cultivated, like the top of the mountains, will wave with fields of ripened grain, undulating in the breeze like the forests of Lebanon.

The cities will be richly inhabited with people, as the fields are filled with grass. It will be a population explosion of epic proportions, yet there will be no scarcity of food.

72:17 His name shall endure, loved and revered forever. As long as the sun exists, His fame shall continue. In accordance with the promise God made to Abraham, all men shall bless themselves in Him, and all nations shall call Him blessed.

72:18, 19 The Psalm closes with a doxology. The glorious reign of the Lord Jesus is God's achievement. It is He who brings about these wonderful conditions, as no one else could do. And so it is fitting that His glorious name be praised forever, and that His glory fill the whole earth.

72:20 The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended. This cannot mean that David's prayers are ended as far as the Book of Psalm is concerned, for many more follow. It might mean that his prayers are ended as far as Book II of the Psalms is concerned, Psalm 72 being the last in Book II. But a more plausible explanation is that the predicted reign of the Lord Jesus Christ represents the ultimate fulfillment of his prayers. The kingdom described in the preceding verses was the subject of his last words (2 Sam. 23:1-4), and was the event toward which his prayers were directed. When the Messiah would take His place upon the throne and rule, David's desires would be fully met.

III. BOOK 3 (PSALMS 73-89)

Psalm 73: Faith's Dilemma

73:1 This is Asaph speaking. And let me make one point clear at the outset. I know for a fact that God is good to Israel, to such as are pure in heart. The truth is so obvious that you'd think no one would ever question it.

73:2, 3 But there was a time when I actually began to wonder. My stance on the subject became very wobbly, and my faith almost took a temporary tumble. You see, I began to think how well off the wicked are—lots of money, plenty of pleasure, no troubles—and soon I was wishing I was like them.

73:4-9 Everything seems to be going their way. They don't have as much physical suffering as believers do. Their bodies are healthy and sleek (naturally—they can afford the best of everything). They escape many of the troubles and tragedies of decent people like ourselves. And even if trouble should strike them, they are heavily insured against every conceivable form of loss. No wonder they are so self-confident. They are as proud as a peacock and ruthless as a tiger. Just as their bodies seem to overflow with fatness, so their minds are spilling over with crooked schemes. And are they ever arrogant! They scoff and curse at their underlings and treat them as if they were dirt, threatening them continually. Even God Himself does not escape their malice. Their speech is punctuated with profanity, and they brazenly blaspheme Him. Their tongue swaggers and struts through the earth, as if to say, "Here I come; get out of my way."

73:10-12 Most of the ordinary people think they are great. They bow and scrape and show utmost respect. No matter what the wicked do, the people find no fault with them. And this only confirms the oppressors in their arrogance. They figure that if there is a God, He certainly doesn't know what's going on. So they feel safe in pursuing their careers of crookedness. And there they are—cushioned in luxury and getting richer all the time.

73:13, 14 Well, I began to think, "What good has it done me to live a decent, honest, respectable life?" The hours I've spent in prayer. The time spent in the Word. The distribution of funds to the work of the Lord. The active testimony for the Lord, both public and private. All I've got for it has been a daily dose of suffering and punishment. I wondered if the life of faith was worth the cost.

73:15 Of course, I never shared my doubts and misgivings with other believers. I knew better than to do that. I often thought of the man who said, "Tell me of your certainties; I have doubts enough of my own." So I kept all my doubts to myself, lest I should offend or stumble some simple, trusting soul.

73:16 But still the whole business was a riddle to me: the wicked prosper while the righteous suffer. It seemed so hard to understand. In fact, it wore me out trying to solve the problem.

73:17 Then something wonderful happened. One day I went into the sanctuary of God—not the literal temple in Jerusalem but the heavenly one. I entered there by faith. As I was complaining to the Lord about the prosperity of the wicked in this life, the question suddenly flashed across my mind, "Yes, but what about the life to come?" The more I thought about their eternal destiny, the more everything came into focus.

73:18-20 So I spoke to the Lord something like this: Lord, now I realize that, despite all appearances, the life of the wicked is a precarious existence. They are walking on the slippery edge of a vast precipice. Sooner or later they fall over to their destruction. In a moment they are cut off—swept away by a wave of terrors too horrible to contemplate. They are to me like a dream when one awakes in the morning—the things that disturbed the dreamer are seen to be nothing but phantoms.

73:21, 22 I see now that the things that were causing me to be envious were mere shadows. It was stupid of me to become bitter and agitated over the seeming prosperity of the ungodly. In questioning Your justice I was acting more like a beast than a man. (Excuse me for behaving as I did.)

73:23, 24 Yet in spite of my ignorant behavior, You have not forsaken me. I am continually with You, and You hold on to me, like a father holds his child by the hand. Throughout all my life, You guide me with Your counsel, and then at last You will receive me to glory.

73:25, 26 It is enough that I have You in heaven; that makes me fabulously wealthy. And now I have no desire for anything upon earth apart from Yourself. Let the ungodly have their wealth. I am satisfied with You and find my all-sufficiency in You. My body may waste away and my heart may fail, but God is the strength of my life and all I'll ever need or want throughout eternity.

73:27, 28 Those who try to keep as far away from You as possible shall perish without You. And all those who desert You for false gods will be destroyed. As far as I am concerned, I want to be as near to You as possible. I have committed myself to You for protection, and I want to declare all Your wonderful works to anyone who will listen.

Psalm 74: Remember!

This moving lament looks back to the destruction of the temple by the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar. But it also looks forward to three other similar tragedies in Israel:

The desecration of the sanctuary by Antiochus Epiphanes, 170-168 B.C.

The leveling of the temple by Titus and his Roman legions, A.D. 70.

The still-future desolation of the temple, as prophesied in Matthew 24:15.

When the Babylonian wreckers were finished, it seemed that God had forsaken His people once for all. As they watch smoke arising from the debris, they correctly interpret the catastrophe as a smoking of His anger. But even then they remind the Lord with telling pathos that they are still:

the sheep of His pasture (v. 1).

His congregation (v. 2).

the tribe of His inheritance (v. 2).

His poor turtledove (v. 19).

the oppressed (v. 21).

the afflicted and needy (v. 21).

They also ring the changes on the word "Remember":

Remember Your congregation (v. 2).

Remember Mount Zion (v. 2).

Remember the scoffing of the enemy (v. 18).

Remember how an impious man sneers and reviles God's name (v. 22).

74:1-4 As if He didn't know what had happened, they call God to come and see how completely the Chaldean soldiers had razed the sacred building. Then they give an eyewitness account of how it happened. The foreign invaders stormed right into the middle of the holy place. They set up their own banners for signs, which means that they introduced heathen rites and idolatrous symbols in place of the scriptural worship of Jehovah.

74:5-8 Just as thick trees go down in swift succession under the deft blows of the woodsmen, so the costly carved work and wood paneling of the temple was shattered by the axes and sledge hammers of the pagan warriors. As soon as the place was in shambles, they set the ruins on fire and thus utterly desecrated God's sanctuary. Intent on making complete havoc of Israel and its worship, they burned up all the meeting places of God in the land.

74:9 The extreme plight of the nation is summed up in three vacuums and four questions. The vacuums are:

No signs. The miraculous interventions of God which Israel had experienced in the past were conspicuously absent.

No prophet. The prophetic voice was silenced at this time (Ezek. 3:26).

No hope of respite. There was no one who knew how long the misery would continue.

74:10, 11 The four questions are:

How long will God allow the adversary to ridicule?*

Will God allow His name to be reviled indefinitely?

Why is His hand restrained from stopping the destruction?*

Why does He keep His right hand idly hidden in the folds of His robe?

74:12-17 But the psalmist finds hope and comfort in rehearsing God's mighty power in the past on behalf of His people. As Israel's King of long standing, He has distinguished Himself by the fantastic deliverances He wrought in various places. For instance, He divided the Red Sea by His strength to make an easy route for the Jews escaping from Egypt. Then when the Egyptian sea serpents, that is, Pharaoh's soldiers, tried to follow, He caused the waters to return to normal and drowned the hosts of the enemy. He crushed the heads of Leviathan, the monstrous crocodile that symbolized Egyptian power, and the corpses of the soldiers, washed up on the shores of the sea, became food for the vultures and beasts of the desert. He broke open springs and brooks in the wilderness, and dried up the Jordan so the people could enter the promised land. Day and night are under His control, and the sun, moon, and stars serve by His appointment. It was He who arranged the geography and topography of the earth, and the seasons are controlled by Him.

74:18-21 The psalmist reminds God that He too is involved in the disaster. The enemy has reproached His name; yes, a vile, foolish people has heaped contempt on Him.

But His people's plight is desperate. They implore Him not to abandon them, His turtledove, to the wild Babylonian beast, or to forget His afflicted ones forever. They beg Him to respect the covenant which He made with Abraham now when the dark places of the land of Israel harbored violence and cruelty. They beg Him to bring back His oppressed people in honor, not in shame, and thus give them ample cause to praise His name afresh for answered prayer.

74:22, 23 Ultimately it is God's cause that is at stake. He must defend the honor of His name, because the impious are mocking Him daily. He must not forget the swelling derision of His enemies which fills the air continually with challenges.

Psalm 75: The Source of Exaltation

The prayer of Psalm 74 is answered in Psalm 75. The Lord will arise to plead His own cause (Ps. 74:22) and to quell all insubjection. Ultimately the Psalm looks forward to that moment in history when the Lord Jesus returns to earth to reign in righteousness.

75:1 In anticipation of that event, the Savior leads His people in giving thanks to God. All God's wondrous works declare that He is near to deliver His chosen ones and to punish His foes. All His mighty miracles give proof that He cares (LB).

75:2 The same Speaker says, "When I choose the proper time, I will judge uprightly." The time has been set by God the Father (Mark 13:32). When it arrives, He will seize it and fulfill Isaiah's prophecy, "A king will reign in righteousness" (32:1).

75:3 At that crucial time when the foundations of human government will be disintegrating, He will set up a kingdom that shall never be moved. Though human society becomes utterly corrupt spiritually, politically, and morally, the pillars of His government are solid and secure.

75:4, 5 He says to the boastful, "Quit your bragging," and to the wicked, "Who do you think you are? Don't be so proud, self-confident, and unbending. Don't exalt yourself with conceit."

75:6, 7 "True exaltation doesn't come in that way. It doesn't come from the east or west, or from the wilderness in the south. ... " The fact that the north is not mentioned may be because the invader usually came from the north, and that meant conquest rather than exaltation. Or it may be because the north is sometimes associated with God's dwelling place (Isa. 14:13; Ps. 48:2). In either case, the thought is clear that "lifting up" does not come from any human or earthly source but from the Lord alone. He is the Supreme Ruler, abasing one and exalting another.

75:8 As the Abaser, He holds a cup in His hand. The cup contains the wine of judgment. It is foaming, red, and fully mixed, that is, in restive motion and highly potent. When He pours it out, the wicked inhabitants of the earth will be compelled to drink all of it—down to the dregs.

75:9, 10 In the last two verses, the Lord Jesus is still the Speaker. He will sing praises forever to the God of Jacob, the God who has exalted His unworthy people. The horns of the wicked, that is, their strength and honor, He will cut off, but the power and glory of the righteous shall be increased.

Psalm 76: The Wrath of Man Praising God

In 701 B.C. the Assyrian army under Sennacherib threatened to destroy Jerusalem. But before they could even get near the city, the Angel of the Lord visited their encampment by night and slew 185,000 troops.

This Assyrian disaster is memorialized in Byron's epic poem, "The Destruction of Sennacherib," which is quoted in full at the commentary on Isaiah 37:36. If we see Psalm 76 against this historical backdrop, it will come alive in a new and exciting way. It is well worth reading along with this psalm.

76:1 God is famous in Judah because of His spectacular overthrow of the army that threatened the city and the sanctuary. His name is illustrious in Israel for this unforgettable chapter in the history of the nation.

76:2-4 He designated Jerusalem, the city of peace, as His capital, the hill of Zion as His dwelling place. And that is where He smashed the armaments of the foe—the glistening arrows, the shield, and sword of battle, and all the other weapons.

This city set upon a hill is more majestic than the mountains of prey, that is, than the great Gentile governments that have plundered her. And by metonymy this means that the God of Jerusalem is more glorious than any power that might lift its hand against Judah.

76:5, 6 This is seen in what happened to the Assyrian army. The stouthearted warriors suddenly dropped their weapons. In a moment they became powerless. One word from the God of Jacob and both riders and horses sank into the sleep of death.

76:7-9 What a God He is! And how greatly He should be feared! All opposition is futile when once His anger has been ignited. As soon as He pronounces judgment to come from heaven, the earth trembles and becomes still—like the lull before the storm. Then God steps forth to make right the wrongs of earth and to deliver its oppressed people.

76:10 He has a wonderful way of making the wrath of man to praise Him. And what won't praise Him, He girds on Him like a sword of a conquered general.

The wrath of men shall praise Thee,
The rest shalt Thou restrain,
And out of earth's disasters
Will bring eternal gain.
The purpose of man's evil heart
Works out Thy sovereign will.
Our God is still upon the throne,

Therefore, believe, be still.
Be still and know that I am God,
This banishes our fears,
While passing through this scene of strife,
Of sorrow and of tears.
The One who rules the heavenly hosts
Holds all within His hand,
And none can say, "What doest Thou?"
Can His arm withstand.
—Author unknown

76:11a In view of the inexpressible greatness and glory of the Lord, the people of Judah are exhorted to make vows to the LORD their God, and to pay them.

76:11b, 12 Then the Gentile nations surrounding Israel are counseled to bring presents as tribute to the Supreme Ruler—this Mighty One who can reduce earth's princes to size and cause awesome things to happen to the most powerful rulers.

Psalm 77: The Cure for Introspection

In the first ten verses, Asaph has a king-sized case of introspection. The personal pronouns I, me, and my are found over twenty times, while the names of God are found only seven times, and pronouns referring to God seven times. But there is a distinct change at verse 10. In the last ten verses the personal pronouns are found only three times whereas nouns and pronouns referring to Deity are used over twenty times. "The ministry of Christ through the Holy Spirit does away with I, me, and my."

Someone has described the flow of thought here in four words:

Sighing (vv. 1-6)
Sinking (vv. 7-10)
Singing (vv. 11-15)
Soaring (vv. 16-20)

77:1-3 First, Asaph pours out his tale of woe to God. Some unnamed trouble has come to camp on his doorstep. In his misery, he can think of no one and nothing but himself. In spite of unceasing prayer, he complains that comfort eludes him. He finds himself in the anomalous situation where thoughts of God cause him to moan instead of rejoice. The more he meditates, the more melancholy he becomes.

77:4-6 He blames his acute case of insomnia on God alone. Words fail him to express the anguish of his spirit. He seeks comfort in remembering the good old days when things went smoothly with him. But the more he is occupied with himself and looks for victory within, the more he begins to doubt the kindness of the Lord. He is assailed by doubts that find expression in five unbelieving questions.

77:7-10 The first raises the frightening suggestion that perhaps the Lord is finished with him for good. The second asks if God has ceased to love. Next he wonders if the Lord has scrapped His promises. Again, the impertinent thought crosses his mind that perhaps God has forgotten to be gracious. And finally, he asks if God's anger has cut off the flow of His compassion. And he answers himself that this is the case. The right hand of the Most High has changed. All his grief can be traced to a change in God's attitude toward him.

77:11-13 But in verse 11 there is a spiritual turning point comparable to the transition from Romans 7 to Romans 8. After introspection had plunged him into the depths of despondency, Asaph turns his eyes heavenward and determines to reflect on God's past interventions for His people when they were in tight spots. This leads him at once to the acknowledgment that God is holy, that everything He does is perfect, righteous, and good. He makes no mistakes.

77:14, 15 Specifically the psalmist thinks of the marvelous and miraculous display of the strength of God that delivered the people of Israel from the bondage of Egypt. By this time he is soaring. The personal pronouns have disappeared entirely from his vocabulary. Self-centeredness has given way to God-centeredness.

77:16-18 With superb literary skill, he pictures the waters of the Red Sea as looking up and seeing their Creator, then retreating in terror. All nature exploded in a violent storm. Torrents of rain poured down. Shattering crashes of thunder burst overhead. Lightning zigzagged across the sky, lighting up the landscape. A furious whirlwind blitzed the area, and the countryside shook under the fierce assault.

77:19, 20 God Himself made a highway through the sea. It was He who opened a path so His people could cross dry-shod. Yet no one saw His footprints. As is so often the case, there were abundant evidences of His presence and power, though He Himself was concealed in the shadows.

The Psalm closes on a peaceful note—the Shepherd-God leading Israel through the wilderness to Canaan in the care of Moses and Aaron. At the outset, Asaph was a likely prospect for a psychiatric clinic. At the end he is calm and serene. And so the Psalm is an illustration of the well-known saying:

Occupation with self brings distress;

Occupation with others brings discouragement;

Occupation with Christ brings delight.

Psalm 78: A Parable From History

"God's ways in grace and Israel's ways in perverseness"—that is how Bellett sums up the message of this Psalm. It is one of the great songs of Israel's history. Its purpose is to teach us to learn from the past, so that we will not be condemned to relive it.

The Psalmist's Invitation to Learn from History (78:1-4)

The psalmist calls for the attention of his people (and of all of us) because he is going to speak in a parable, that is, there is going to be a deeper meaning beneath the surface of what he recounts. As he rehearses various chapters from the history of his nation, there will be hidden lessons which he calls "dark sayings of old." Just as our parents passed down to us a record of the past, so we are obligated to pass on to the next generation an account of the Lord's dealings with His people in grace and government.

God's Gracious Intention in Giving the Law (78:5-8)

Asaph begins his parabolic teaching with the institution of the law. God gave it to Israel with instructions that it be faithfully transmitted to succeeding generations. God's desire in all this was fourfold:

> That His people would set their hope in Him.
> That they would not forget His glorious works*.*
> That they would be obedient.
> That they would learn from the past and not repeat the rebellions of their forefathers.

The People's Disobedience, Rebellion, and Ingratitude (78:9-11)

But what happened? Under the leadership of the tribe of Ephraim, the Israelites failed the Lord. Armed with bows, they turned back in the day of battle. This may refer to their dismal cowardice at Kadesh Barnea when they accepted the pessimistic report of the spies. Or it may allude to their failure in utterly driving out the Canaanites from the land. More probably it is a general description of their characteristic behavior. They repeatedly and willfully broke the law of God. They habitually forgot all the mighty wonders that He had performed for their benefit.

The People's Forgetfulness of Their Deliverance from Egypt (78:12-14)

They forgot Egypt—and the marvel of their deliverance from the forced slave-labor in the fields of Zoan (Tanis). How could they forget the crossing of the Red Sea—when the waters stood at attention on both sides of them so they could cross on dry land? There was the miracle of the glory cloud that led them in the daytime and the fiery light that went before them at night.

The People's Forgetfulness of God's Miraculous Supply of Water in the Wilderness (78:15, 16)

They quickly forgot how God provided water in abundance by splitting rocks in the wilderness—it came gushing out as if there were a huge fountain. Rivers of water in the desert—but their memories were short.

The People's Insolent Demand for Bread and Meat (78:17-22)

They began to provoke the Lord about their diet. Dissatisfied and grumbling, they presented new demands to the Most High. They insinuated that God had led them out into the wilderness to die of starvation. They doubted His ability to provide. Grudgingly admitting that He had provided water, they questioned His willingness and ability to provide bread and meat.

It really infuriated the LORD that His people did not trust Him. He was understandably furious that they did not trust His saving power. He caused the fire of His anger to blaze forth against Israel.

God's Gracious Supply of Manna (78:23-25)

They wanted bread. But there were no supermarkets in the wilderness. Neither were there the ingredients for making bread. So God opened the doors of His heavenly granary and rained down unfailing supplies of manna. The people feasted on something better than bread; it was angels' food, the bread of heaven.

God's Gracious Supply of Quail (78:26-31)

They also wanted meat. But where could they find meat to feed a multitude in the desert? God solved the problem by harnessing the east wind to deliver flocks of quail right into the camp of the Israelites. These birds certainly weren't native to the wilderness; they had to be brought from some distance. But they were provided abundantly and freely.

While the people were still gorging themselves, the wrath of God blazed out against them. He sent a plague that killed off the finest specimens of Israel's manhood.

The People's Continued Sin and God's Unfailing Mercy (78:32-39)

In spite of all the proofs of His love, their hearts were still unfaithful. Nothing God did pleased them. Despite His miracles, they were compulsive grumblers. So from time to time Jehovah visited the nation with death and destruction. This seemed to speak to the survivors for a while; they turned to the Lord, repented of their wickedness, and became earnest seekers. They realized what a refuge He had been to them, how He had redeemed them from the terrors of Egypt. But soon again they were living a lie, speaking piously and acting perversely. They were fickle and disobedient.

The Lord showed tremendous restraint. Because of His super-abounding compassion, He forgave their chronic backsliding and withheld the disaster they deserved. He remembered that they were mere men, here today and gone tomorrow.

The People's Rebellions, Provocations, and Ingratitude (78:40, 41)

The psalmist is going to go over the whole sorry history again (vv. 40-58). If we as readers grow weary of the repetition, think of how irritating it was to the Lord!

Their repeated rebellions in the desert grieved Him to the heart. Over and over again they put Him to the test and pained the Holy One of Israel by limiting Him.

The People's Forgetfulness of Their Deliverance from Egypt (78:42-53)

78:42 They did not remember how He had proved Himself strong on their behalf, how He had rescued them from the enemy. Their deliverance from Egypt was the greatest display of divine power in human history up to that time. But they took it for granted.

78:43 In verses 43-53 Egypt is in retrospect again, this time with emphasis on six of the plagues in the following order:

First plague—rivers turned to blood (v.44).

Fourth plague—flies (v. 45a).

Second plague—frogs (v. 45b).

Eighth plague—locusts (v. 46).

Seventh plague—hail (vv. 47, 48).

Tenth plague—death of the firstborn (vv. 49-51).

78:44 God turned their rivers into blood, so that the Egyptians could not drink from them. The Nile, which they regarded as sacred, suddenly became polluted. But the water supply of the Israelites remained uncontaminated.

78:45 He sent swarms of flies into all the houses of the Egyptians. They had worshiped Beelzebub, the "lord of flies," and now this god turned on them to devour them. Interestingly enough, the flies did not invade the land of Goshen where the Israelites were living.

He sent a plague of frogs into Egypt. Respected as a symbol of fertility, the frogs destroyed the people in the sense that they brought normal life to a standstill. But the plague affected only Egyptians; the Hebrews were protected by the hand of God.

78:46 God sent locusts to cover the land of Egypt. The god Serapis was supposed to protect the people from these destructive insects. But Serapis was powerless. The crops were ruined; the harvest wiped out. During all this the Israelites saw neither caterpillar nor locust.

78:47, 48 The seventh plague involved hail, frost and fiery lightning. It wrought tremendous havoc on man, cattle, flocks, vines, and trees. But it was a discriminating judgment. " ... In the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, there was no hail" (Ex. 9:26).

78:49 Then there was the culminating stroke of God—the death of the firstborn. The psalmist speaks of it as a loosing of God's fierce wrath, indignation, and trouble, the work of a company of angels of destruction. In some Scriptures the Lord Himself is described as passing through the land of Egypt to destroy the firstborn (Ex. 11:4; 12:12, 23, 29), but in Exodus 12:23, there is a reference to a destroyer whom He used as His active agent. The psalmist suggests that it was a band of destroying angels.

78:50-53 He made a path for His anger so that it could blaze forth without restraint. In every Egyptian home the firstborn son was struck down by an otherwise unnamed plague or pestilence. The flower of Egypt's manhood died that night. But the homes of the Israelites were protected by the blood of the passover lamb, and not one Hebrew son was killed.

All the plagues were so discriminating that no natural explanation could ever account for them. How could the Jews ever cease to be thankful for the wonderful way God had worked in their behalf?

He led them out of Egypt like a flock of sheep, and guided them through a trackless wilderness. "He led them in safety with nothing to fear, while the sea engulfed their foes" (Gelineau). It was a marvelous exhibition of His love and power!

The People's Forgetfulness of God's Kindness in Bringing Them to the Promised Land (78:54, 55)

He brought them to the border of the holy land, to the mountain range which His right hand had acquired for them. Of course, it was inhabited by idolatrous pagans at the time, so He also drove out the nations and divided the land among the tribes of Israel. No shepherd ever cared as tenderly for his sheep as Jehovah did for His!

The People's Treachery and Idolatry in the Land (78:56-58)

Were they grateful to Him? No! During the time of the Judges they tested Him to the limit, they rebelled against Him, they disregarded His commandments. Like fathers—like sons, they proved utterly faithless and unreliable, just like a warped bow that the archer cannot depend on. They provoked the Lord by their idolatrous hilltop shrines, and made Him exceedingly jealous with their carved images.

God's Wrath, and His Rejection of Israel (78:59-67)

78:59, 60 In poetic language, the psalmist pictures God as hearing of their dark ingratitude and exploding in a storm of wrath. Actually it came as no surprise to Jehovah; it was only the last straw in a long series of rebellions. But this time He lowered the boom on Israel, that is, on the northern tribes who were the ringleaders in the provocations and rebellions. He abandoned Shiloh as the site of the tabernacle—the spot on earth where He had previously chosen to dwell among His people.

78:61-64 At this time God allowed His strength, that is, the ark of the covenant, to be taken into captivity by the Philistines. The gold-covered symbol of His glory passed into enemy hands (1 Sam. 4:11a). There was a great slaughter among the people of Israel; 30,000 foot soldiers fell in the battle (1 Sam. 4:10). With so many young men devoured by war, there were no marriage songs, no wedding bells for their maidens. The priests who fell by the sword were Hophni and Phinehas, the corrupt sons of Eli (1 Sam. 4:11b). Their widows did not mourn their passing, probably because of their overriding grief that the ark had been captured by the Philistines. They realized that the glory had departed from Israel (1 Sam. 4:19-22).

78:65, 66 For a while it seemed that Jehovah was indifferent to His people's plight. But then He awoke with blazing indignation, shouting like a man who has been aroused with wine. And what a rout it was for the Philistines! He beat them back as they turned to flee—a shameful way for them to suffer defeat (1 Sam. 7:10, 11; 13:3, 4; 14:23).

78:67 Yet God stood firm in His decision to reject the tent of Joseph; He would not choose the tribe of Ephraim. Here both Joseph and Ephraim are used to signify the ten northern tribes. After Reuben had forfeited the birthright, Joseph inherited the double portion as far as territory was concerned, through his sons, Ephraim and Manasseh.

God's Choice of Judah, Mt. Zion, and David (78:68-72)

78:68, 69 But Ephraim was the leader in rebellion; therefore God bypassed him as far as rule was concerned and gave that honor to Judah. It was in Judah's territory that He chose Mount Zion as the place to build His sanctuary— towering like the high heavens and immoveable as the earth.

78:70, 71 And it was from Judah that He also chose David His servant. This shepherd-king served his apprenticeship among the sheepfolds, caring for the ewes that had young and learning spiritual truths from the natural realm. Then Jehovah brought him to shepherd Jacob His people, and Israel His inheritance. And David did this.

78:72 So he shepherded them according to the integrity of his heart,And guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

And so the Psalm closes on this peaceful, pastoral note. But before leaving it, we must remind ourselves that Israel's history is only a mirror of our own. And if anything, we are more culpable than they because our privileges are so much greater. Living in the full blaze of Calvary's love, why should we ever complain, or rebel, or limit the Lord, or fail to be thankful? Yet we stand condemned. We have provoked the Holy One of Israel times without number. We have grieved Him by a thousand falls. We have murmured and grumbled in spite of countless blessings.

God's patience is not inexhaustible. There comes a time when He allows us to taste the bitterness of our backsliding. If we despise His grace, we will experience His government. If we refuse to serve Him faithfully and loyally,

He will find others to do it. We will miss the blessing, and will never find a better master to serve.

Psalm 79: The Groans of the Prisoners

Psalm 79 is a partner to Psalm 74. That one dealt primarily with the destruction of God's real estate—the temple. Although this one refers briefly to the bulldozing of the temple, it is mostly concerned with the ravaging of God's people—the Israelites. The psalmist pleads the cause of the Jews with rare eloquence and asks for respite and revival.

79:1 The pagan aggressors have invaded the land of Israel and have swept, like panzer units, into the capital. The sacred shrine has been defiled by their unsanctified feet, and the beloved city is now reduced to rubble.

79:2-4 The carnage is terrible. The air reeks with the smell of rotting flesh. Jewish bodies lie everywhere, suffering the final indignity of being left unburied. The vultures swoop down on them, and the carnivorous beasts greedily gobble their prey. Blood has flowed like water all around Jerusalem, and the invaders haven't bothered to arrange for burial of the slain. Israel's Gentile neighbors are gloating over the national calamity.

79:5-7 It is obviously a sign of the Lord's fierce anger and jealous wrath, but how long will His jealousy burn like fire against Israel? Isn't it time to turn against the Gentiles for a change? After all, these nations do not want to know Jehovah; they willfully refuse to call on His name. And now they have crowned their sins with the slaughter of God's people and the devastation of the land.

79:8-10 Everything up to this point has been introductory. The psalmist comes to the crux of the matter now when he recognizes that the nation's sin is the root cause of the disaster. "Do not remember the iniquities of our forefathers against us!" Once that confession has surfaced, he brings out irresistible arguments to move the Almighty to mercy. First he appeals to the compassion of God; the people never needed it more than now. Then he bases his plea on the glory of God's own name. The Lord has promised forgiveness and deliverance to those who are broken and contrite; now the honor of His name is at stake. And finally, it is important to silence the jeers of the enemy. They are saying that Israel's God doesn't exist. This is His grand opportunity to prove His existence by raining down vengeance upon them to requite the outpoured blood of His loyal servants.

79:11, 12 The psalmist then asks God to listen to the doleful groaning of the prisoner, and to rescue those who are abandoned to die in a way that is worthy of His great power. And He asks that the enemies will reap sevenfold for all the sacrilegious taunts which they hurled at the Lord.

79:13 All this will mean peace for Israel and praise to God. His loving flock will never cease to thank Him. Generation after generation will rise to sing His praise.

Psalm 80: The Man of God's Right Hand

The sorrow and sighing which permeate so many of the Psalms are continued here also. First under the figure of a flock, then of a vine, Israel pleads for forgiveness and restoration.

80:1-3 The appeal is addressed to the Shepherd of Israel, a name of God which appeared in Jacob's blessing of Joseph—"the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel" (Gen. 49:24). It was He who led Joseph like a flock from Egypt to Canaan. It was He who in the glory cloud was enthroned between the cherubim which overshadowed the mercy seat in the most holy place. But now it seems that He has deserted Israel, and the sanctuary has been destroyed, thus the prayer for Him to shine forth in mercy and favor before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh. These were the three tribes that were in the vanguard of the procession when the Kohathites carried the ark. Here they represent all of Israel. They desperately desire God to stir up His strength (perhaps we would say "to flex His muscles") and to move in to their rescue. They appeal that He restore them from captivity. If only His face would shine on them in compassion, their deliverance would be assured.

80:4-7 Terrible distance has come in between Israel and the LORD God of hosts (Jehovah Elohim Sabaoth). He is angry not only with their sins but even with their prayers. For food He has given them a diet of weeping, and for drink a torrent of tears. He has made them a cause of strife and contention to their Gentile neighbors, and they are the butt of cruel jokes among their enemies. There is only one solution—that is for the God of hosts (Elohim Sabaoth) to look down in grace and salvation upon them.

80:8-11 God brought Israel out of Egypt like a tender vine. In order to plant it in the promised land, He cast out the Canaanites. As the owner of a vineyard clears the ground and cultivates it, so the Lord took great pains with His people. The transplant was successful. The vine took deep root and the population multiplied and filled the land. The vine became luxuriant, higher than the hills in glory and stronger than the mighty cedars. Its tendrils reached out to the Mediterranean Sea on one side and to the River Euphrates on the other. Under the reign of Solomon Israel occupied land as far east as the Euphrates (1 Kgs. 4:21, 24), but this was very temporary.

80:12, 13 But then God lowered His protective wall and allowed the marauding nations to pick away at the vine. The boar and other wild animals came in and laid it waste—first Egypt, Assyria, and Babylonia, then in later years Persia, Greece, and Rome. In using the figure of a boar, the psalmist wrote beyond his knowledge because centuries later Israel was ravaged by the Roman Army with the boar proudly displayed as its military ensign.

80:14, 15 Once more the people implore the God of hosts to return to them in blessing. They want Him to look down from the ramparts of heaven and take pity on this vine which they describe as "the vineyard which Your right hand has planted, and the branch that You made strong for Yourself." The Targum, interestingly enough, renders this "and upon the King Messiah, whom You have established for Yourself." In verse 15 it seems more consistent to regard the vineyard and the branch as referring to Israel. Two verses later the Messiah is unmistakably introduced.

80:16 The vine has been cut down and burned by the invading armies. They deserve to perish by a condemning frown from the Lord.

80:17, 18 "Let Your hand be upon the man of Your right hand, upon the son of man whom You made strong for Yourself." The Man of God's right hand is the Lord Jesus Christ (Ps. 110:1; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 10:12). The Son of Man is the title by which He most frequently spoke of Himself in the Gospels. Full and complete blessing will only come to Israel when He is given His proper place. Then Israel will never backslide again. Revived by the Lord, they will call upon the name of the Lord.

80:19 The familiar refrain closes the Psalm. The Shepherd is urged to restore His wandering sheep. One smile from the LORD God of hosts and Israel shall be saved.

Psalm 81: The Feast of Trumpets

Unger describes this Jewish holiday as follows:

> [The Feast of Trumpets] was observed as a feast day, in the strict sense, by resting from all work, and as a memorial of blowing of horns, by a holy convocation. In later times, while the drink offering of the sacrifice was being poured out, the priests and Levites chanted Psalm 81, while at the evening sacrifice they sang Psalm 29. Throughout the day trumpets were blown at Jerusalem from morning to evening. ... The rabbins [rabbis] believed that on this day God judges all men, and that they pass before him as a flock of sheep pass before a shepherd.[52]

The Feast of Trumpets is a type of the regathering of Israel to its homeland after the out-gathering of the Church.

81:1-5a In the opening verses, the people of Israel are called to join in singing the praises of God who is the source of their strength, and to make a joyful shout to the God of Jacob, that is, the God of all grace. The Levites are invited to join the happy chorus with their musical instruments, and the priests mark the arrival of the seventh New Moon by blowing the shophar. It is a holiday instituted by God for the nation of Israel (Lev. 23:23-25; Num. 29:1). He established it in Joseph (here Joseph stands for all Israel) when He went throughout the land of Egypt. Here the meaning seems to be that God ordained this feast after the confrontation with Egypt and after His people came out of that land.

81:5b At the end of verse 5, we read, "I heard a language I did not understand," and we must consider whether the speaker is the psalmist, Israel, or God.

If it is the psalmist or Israel speaking, the language may refer to:

1. The foreign language of the Egyptians (Ps. 114:1).
2. God speaking to Israel in the redemption from Egypt, a new revelation of God to their souls.
3. The oracle of God which is found in the remaining verses of the Psalm.

If God is the Speaker, then the thought may be:

> I heard a language (of the Egyptians) that I did not know (in the sense of "acknowledge"). As Williams puts it, "He did not acknowledge the Egyptians as His sheep."

In favor of the latter is the fact that the pronoun "I" in the rest of the Psalm always refers to God.

81:6, 7 God had relieved the shoulders of the people from the burden of servile work under the Egyptians. Their hands were freed from having to carry baskets filled with clay and bricks. From all their trouble He delivered them when they called. He answered them in the secret place of thunder—a reference to the cloud which guided and protected them, or to the giving of the law at Mt. Sinai. He tested them at the waters of Meribah where Moses struck the rock and incurred God's displeasure.

81:8-10 He had warned them that the pathway of blessing lay in faithfulness to Him as the one true God. His prohibition of idolatry was unmistakable. After reminding them how He had brought them out of the land of Egypt, He made the marvelous promise that if they would open their mouth wide, He would fill it. This promise has sometimes been wrongly used by lazy preachers to justify any lack of preparation; all they have to do is open their mouth and the Lord will give them a message. But that is not the meaning at all! The thought is that if they came to God with great petitions, He would grant them. There is nothing good that He would not do for an obedient people. Gaebelein puts it well:

> Who is able to grasp the full meaning of the sentence! He is the omnipotent Lord; there is nothing too hard for the Lord. Open thy mouth, He says, as wide as you can, and I will fill it. Ask anything in My Name, He says in the New Testament, and I will do it. All He asks is obedience to Him, the yielding of the heart and will.[53]

81:11-16 But God's people turned a deaf ear to His voice, and Israel would not obey Him. So He let them have their own way, and gave them over to the misery of following their own advice. But this abandonment was not without a pang in the heart of God. He mourns their continued folly and stubbornness. If only they would listen to Him, He would soon subdue their enemies. Their adversaries would come cringing in fear before Him, and Israel's prosperity would know no interruption (AV). He would feed His people with the finest of wheat—that is, the best spiritual and physical nourishment, and with the delicious honey that comes from beehives in the rocks of Palestine.

Psalm 82: Earth's Rulers on Trial

82:1 The court is called to order. The Judge has taken His place at the bench. It is God Himself. He has called a special session of the divine council in order to reprove the rulers and judges of the earth. They are called gods because they are representatives of God, ordained by Him as His servants in order to maintain an ordered society. Actually, of course, they are only men like ourselves. But because of their position, they are the anointed of the Lord. Even if they do not know God personally, yet they are God's agents officially and therefore dignified here with the name of gods. The basic meaning of the name is mighty ones.

82:2 First God rebukes them for malfeasance in office. They have been guilty of graft and corruption. Under their administration, the rich have been favored while the poor have been oppressed. Criminals have escaped unpunished, and the innocent have had to suffer loss without recourse. The scales of justice have become scales of oppression.

82:3, 4 Then the Judge of all the earth reminds them once more of their responsibilities in the area of social justice. They are to champion the rights of the poor and fatherless, ... the afflicted and needy. They should be the helpers of all who are dispossessed and downtrodden.

82:5 But despite all the Lord's warnings, there seems to be no hope of improvement. As if in an aside, He sighs that they fail to act with knowledge and understanding. Since they themselves are groping about in darkness, there is scant hope of their helping others who need direction. And as a result of their failure to act righteously and wisely, the foundations of society are unstable. Law and order have all but vanished.

82:6, 7 Though exalted to heaven in privilege, they shall be cast down in punishment. The fact that God calls them gods and children of the Most High does not grant them immunity from judgment. They will be subject to the same treatment as other men, and fall like one of the princes. Actually the degree of their punishment will be greater because of their greater privilege.

Our Lord quoted verse six in one of His confrontations with His foes (John 10:32-36). They had just accused Him of blaspheming because He claimed equality with God.

> Jesus answered them, "Is it not written in your law, 'I said, "You are gods"'? If He called them gods, to whom the word of God came (and the Scripture cannot be broken), do you say of Him whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world, 'You are blaspheming,' because I said, 'I am the Son of God'?"

To the western mind, the argument might not seem clear or convincing, but it obviously had compelling power on His hearers. They understood that Jesus was arguing from the lesser to the greater. The force of the argument is as follows:

In Psalm 82, rulers and judges are addressed by God as gods. Actually they are not divine, but because of their position as God's ministers, they are dignified with the name of gods. Their greatest distinction is that the word of God came to them, that is, they were officially ordained by God as higher powers concerned with government and justice (Rom. 13:1).

If the name gods could thus be loosely applied to men like them, how much more fully and accurately can the name God be applied to the Lord Jesus. He had been sanctified and sent into the world by God the Father. This implies that He had lived with God the Father in heaven from all eternity. Then the Father had set Him apart to a mission on earth and had sent Him to be born in Bethlehem.

The Jews understood perfectly that He was claiming equality with God, and they sought to apprehend Him but He eluded them (John 10:39).

82:8 But now back to the last verse of the Psalm:

> Arise, O God, judge the earth;
> For You shall inherit all nations.

It is Asaph calling on the Lord to intervene in the affairs of men, bringing righteousness and justice to replace corruption and inequity. The prayer will be answered when the Lord Jesus returns to reign over the earth. At that time, as the prophets predicted, "justice shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field" (Isa. 32:16). The earth will enjoy a time of social justice and freedom from graft and deceit.

Psalm 83: Psalm of the Six-Day War

On May 28, 1967, Gamal Abdel Nasser, President of the United Arab Republic, said, "We plan to open a general assault on Israel. This will be total war. Our basic aim is the destruction of Israel." When war broke out on June 5, the United Arab Republic was joined by Jordan, Syria, Iraq, Algeria, Sudan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and Morocco. The attempt of this confederacy to drive Israel into the sea was unsuccessful. In six days the war was over. Israel was the undisputed victor.

For many Bible lovers, Psalm 83 took on new meaning after the Six-Day War. And perhaps it will have further fulfillments before Israel's claim to the land is irrevocably settled by the coming of the Lord Jesus to reign as King.

83:1-5 The language is obviously that of besieged Israel, calling on God to break His silence and to act decisively. Although the people are pleading for their own safety and preservation, they present their case as if it were God's cause as much as their own: "Your enemies ... those who hate You ... Your people ... Your sheltered ones ... They form a confederacy against You." They will not let Him forget that Israel's enemies are His enemies.

The details are true to life. The enemies are in tumult—a vivid description of the blustering threats of the opposition. They lay crafty plans—assisted behind the scenes by advisors from Soviet Russia. They consult together—in what have now become known as Arab summit meetings. They threaten the annihilation of Israel—as witnessed by the quotation above. They form a formidable federation of nations—mostly of people who are near relatives of the Israelites.

83:6-8 When we try to identify these nations with modern counterparts, we run into difficulty. We do know that Assyria is the same as modern-day Iraq, and that the Ishmaelites, descended from Abraham and Hagar, were the progenitors of the Arabs. We know that the Edomites and the Amalekites were descended from Esau, and the Moabites and Ammonites from Lot, but to trace them today is well-nigh impossible. The Philistines inhabited the area now known as the Gaza strip. The city of Tyre was located in what is now Lebanon. Gebal is the same as ancient Gubla or Byblos, located in Phoenicia. Some sources list the Hagrites as descendants of Hagar, and therefore a segment of the Ishmaelites, but the identification is not positive. Since so much obscurity surrounds these names, it is best not to try to link them with modern countries in the Middle East, but simply to see them as representing Gentile foes of Israel.

How could little Israel stand against such an overwhelming confederacy? Part of the answer is found in the fact that God's people are His "sheltered ones" (v. 3), His "hidden ones" (AV), His "precious ones" (LB), or "those He loves" (Gelineau). In the hour of danger, He miraculously shields them, and makes His strength perfect in their weakness. When the odds are all against them, He sends a victory that defies all human explanations.

83:9, 10 Now the beleaguered people call on Jehovah to deal with the current threat as He did with His enemies on three different occasions in the past.

Jabin, king of Canaan, and Sisera, his commander in chief, were killed ingloriously at En Dor after a disastrous defeat at the Brook Kishon (Judg. 4). Their decaying carcasses became fertilizer for Israel's soil.

83:11, 12 Oreb and Zeeb, two princes of Midian were killed and decapitated (Judges 7:23-25). According to Isaiah (10:26), it was an epic slaughter.

Two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, had threatened to occupy "the pastures of God." They managed to escape from the Israelites when Oreb and Zeeb were slain, but they were subsequently overtaken and executed by Gideon (Judg. 8).

83:13-18 In its bold plea for God's judgment on His foes, Israel leaves nothing to the divine imagination. The details of the punishment are specified. Let them be like the whirling dust, or as some translate it, like a tumbleweed. Let them be like the chaff driven before the wind. Let them be pursued as if by a fire sweeping through the woods, and consumed as if by a raging holocaust. Let them be terrified by the Lord's storm. Let them be thoroughly put to shame so that men might seek the LORD. Let them perish in disgrace so that men might learn that Jehovah alone is the Sovereign Ruler over all the earth. Strong language? Yes, strong but not unjustified. When the honor of God is at stake, love can be firm. Morgan explains:

> These singers of the ancient people were all inspired supremely with a passion for the honor of God. With them, as with the prophets, selfish motives were unknown. Selfishness sings no song, and sees no visions.

On the other hand, a passion for the glory of God is capable of great sternness as well as great tenderness.[54]

Psalm 84: Homesick for Heaven!

There is no question as to the primary interpretation of Psalm 84. It breathes out the deep longings of exiled Jews to be back at the temple in Jerusalem once again.

It can also be applied, of course, to the Christian today who is somehow prevented from attending the meetings of the local fellowship. He eats his heart out to be back with God's people as they meet to worship the Lord.

But the application I like best is that of a godly pilgrim who is downright homesick for heaven. Let us look at the Psalm from this viewpoint.

84:1, 2 What place can be compared in loveliness to the dwelling place of God! It is a place of unparalleled beauty, unique splendor and unutterable glory. But let us be clear on this point. The place is used, by a figure of speech known as metonymy, for the Person who lives there. And so when the psalmist says, "My soul longs, yes, even faints for the courts of the LORD," he was really yearning to be with the Lord Himself. He says as much in the next sentence, " ... my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God."

84:3 The pilgrim compares himself to a sparrow and a swallow. In another Psalm, the sparrow is used as a picture of utter loneliness, " ... a sparrow alone on the housetop" (102:7). And anyone who has ever watched a swallow knows what a restless creature it is, darting and soaring on the air currents. Both are apt descriptions of God's people sojourning in this wilderness; they are lonely and restless. The only place where they find rest and security for themselves and their families is at the altars of the LORD.

There were two altars in the tabernacle and the temple. One was the brazen altar and the other the golden altar. The first typified Christ's death and the second His resurrection. Taken together they represent the finished work of our Savior. Here is the place where our souls, like the swallow, can rest, and here we can bring our children to find rest also. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved, you and your household" (Acts 16:31).

84:4 Then in an outburst of what we might call sanctified jealousy, the exile says, "Blessed are those who dwell in Your house; they will still be praising You." When we thus think of the happiness of loved ones who have gone home to be with the Lord, we cannot grieve over them. For us it is loss, but for them eternal gain. They are better off than we are.

84:5 In verses 5-7 we switch back from the blessedness of those who are already in heaven to the lesser blessedness of those who are en route. Several things are mentioned about them. First of all, their strength is in the Lord, not in themselves. They are "strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" (Eph. 6:10). Then in their heart are the highways to Zion. The world is not their home. Though in it, they are not of it. Their heart is set on pilgrimage.

84:6, 7 The third thing is that as they pass through the Valley of weeping, for that is what Baca means, they convert it into a spring. These indomitable souls can sing in the midst of sorrow and trace the rainbow through their tears. They transform tragedies into triumphs and use misfortunes as stepping stones to greater things. The secret of their victory over circumstances is found in the next statement, "the rain also covers it with pools." The rain is commonly taken as a type of the Holy Spirit, and here He is seen in His ministry of refreshment, providing pools of cool, clear water for the desert travelers. We take the water to stand for the Word of God (as in Eph. 5:26). This explains how they go from strength to strength. Instead of getting weaker as the journey progresses, they get stronger all the time. Though the outer nature is wasting away, the inner nature is being renewed every day (2 Cor. 4:16). And then a wonderful note of assurance: Each one appears before God in Zion. No question about it, the trek through the desert will be crowned at last with the joy of seeing the King in His beauty.

84:8 Now the psalmist breaks out into impassioned prayer. It is addressed first to the LORD God of hosts, then in the next breath to the God of Jacob. As LORD God of hosts, He is the sovereign over the vast multitude of angelic beings. As the God of Jacob, He is the God of the unworthy one, the God of the cheat. Just think! The God of innumerable angels in festal gathering is also the God of the worm Jacob. The One who is infinitely high is also intimately nigh. And that is the only reason why you and I will ever enter His presence.

84:9 And what is our title to be there? O God, behold our shield, and look upon the face of Your anointed. Our only acceptance is through the Person and work of the Lord Jesus.

God sees my Savior and then He sees me

In the Beloved, accepted and free.

84:10 And what is it like, being in heaven? Well, a day in His courts is better than a thousand elsewhere. Which is just another way of saying that there is no comparison. We simply cannot conceive the glory, the joy, the beauty, the freedom of being where Jesus is. And it's a good thing we can't. Otherwise we would probably be unhappy to remain here and to get on with our work.

Better to be a doorkeeper in the house of your God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. As Spurgeon said, "God's worst is better than the devil's best." And not only better but more enduring. Note the contrast between the house of our God and the tents of wickedness. One is a permanent dwelling, the other is pitched for a relatively short while.

84:11 The LORD God is a sun providing illumination through the darkness, and a shield for protection against the scorching heat along the way. The LORD will give grace along the way for every time of need, and then He will give glory at the end of the journey as He welcomes His redeemed children into His eternal home. As a matter of fact the pilgrim has the assurance that he will lack nothing between here and heaven for no good thing will He withhold from those who walk uprightly. If it's good for us, He won't withhold it; if He withholds it, it isn't good. "He who did not spare His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. 8:32).

84:12 No wonder the psalmist ends with the heartfelt exclamation, "O LORD of hosts, blessed is the man who trusts in You!" To which my own heart responds, "Yes, Lord, I'm eternally grateful to be a Christian."

Psalm 85: Revive Us Again!

This prayer for revival is divided into four easily discernible sections:

A past instance of revival in Israel (vv. 1-3).

A plea for God to do it again (vv. 4-7).

A pause to hear how the Lord will answer (vv. 8, 9).

A promise of future restoration (vv. 10-13).

It is impossible to pinpoint the particular restoration of Israel that is described here. It could not be the restoration after the Babylonian captivity since this is a Psalm of the sons of Korah, and they lived long before that time. But the identification of the event is not important. What really matters is that God had done it. And if He did it once, He can certainly do it again.

85:1-3 The revival is described as a time when the LORD was favorable to the land and when He restored the fortunes of Jacob. Three actions led up to it. The first was confession of sin. Though this is not explicitly stated, confession is an invariable moral necessity before the others can take place. The second was forgiveness of the iniquity of His people and the third an averting of God's wrath.

85:4 This former demonstration of God's pardoning mercy is the basis for a plea that He repeat it. Faith is not satisfied with history; it wants to see God in current events. Although the psalmist does not engage in confession, it is implicit in the prayer, "Restore us. ... " When God restores, He first brings His people to repentance, then He forgives their sins, and then He terminates the punishment that resulted from His indignation.

85:5 Any time spent away from the Lord seems like an eternity of misery. But the poignant plea of verse 5 takes on special meaning in the lips of the nation of Israel with its centuries of persecution and dispersion: "Will You be angry with us forever? Will You prolong Your anger to all generations?"

85:6 Spiritual declension results inevitably in a loss of joy. Broken fellowship means that the believer's song is gone. Rejoicing cannot co-exist with unconfessed sin. So here the prayer goes winging up to heaven. "Will You not revive us again, that Your people may rejoice in You?" The Spirit's renewal sets the joy-bells ringing once again. Every great revival has been accompanied by song.

85:7 When God restores His people it is a gracious demonstration of His mercy. But no more than any of His other dealings with us. It is love that chastens us, that disciplines us, that corrects us, and that brings us back at last. And how steadfast is that love that bears with us in all our wanderings, our backslidings, and our disobedience. There is no love like the love of the Lord.

And revival is a granting of salvation from the Lord—here not salvation of the soul but deliverance from all the consequences of unfaithfulness—dispersion, captivity, affliction, powerlessness, and unhappiness.

85:8, 9 Having brought His plea for restoration to the throne of grace, the psalmist waits for the answer, confident that it will be an answer of peace, and that it will come quickly. His confidence is based on the fact that the covenant-keeping God always speaks peace to those who turn to Him in their hearts, and delivers those who fear Him, not turning back to folly. And the inevitable result is that glory will dwell in the land. Glory here is used to signify the God of glory, and the thought is that the Lord can be depended on to dwell in the midst of His people when they are in fellowship with Him.

85:10 The answer to the prayer for revival is given in the closing verses. They describe the idyllic conditions which will prevail when the Lord Jesus reigns over restored Israel in the coming age of glory. But in a broader poetic sense they tell what it is always like when revival fires are burning.

Mercy and truth have met together. In human affairs strict adherence to the claims of truth usually prevent the display of love and mercy. But God can shower His steadfast love on His people because all the claims of truth were fully met by the Lord Jesus on the cross. In the same sense, righteousness and peace have kissed. Believers enjoy peace with God because all the claims of divine justice were met by the substitutionary work of the Savior.

Our sins were placed on Jesus' head.
'Twas in His blood our debt was paid.
Stern justice can demand no more,
And mercy can dispense her store.
—Albert Midlane

85:11-13 Truth, or faithfulness, shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from the sky. As the believer is true to His Eternal Lover, the heavens respond righteously with multiplied blessing. The LORD, ever faithful to His Word, gives what is good. He withholds no good thing from those who walk uprightly (Ps. 84:11). Drought and famine conditions cease and the land produces a bumper crop. As the Lord visits His land, His route takes Him among a people whose righteous lives are morally prepared for His presence.

Psalm 86: Prayer with Reasons Attached

One of the noteworthy things about this Psalm is that David gives a reason for almost everything he says, whether in petition or adoration. We may illustrate this by the following arrangement:

PETITION • REASON

86:1 For audience with the Lord • The psalmist's helplessness and need.

86:2a For preservation (Note the recurrence of the title "servant" in vv. 4 and 16) • His position as a holy person

86:2b For temporal salvation • No explicit reason is given but it may be implied in the clause "You are my God"

86:3 For gracious consideration • David's persistence in prayer all day long.

86:4 For joy and gladness • His hope is in the Lord and in no one else.

86:5 • This verse may give an additional reason for the preceeding requests. Or it may be mated to the prayer in verse 6.

• The goodness, readiness to forgive, and mercy of the Lord are poured out on all those who call upon Him.

86:6 For audience with the Lord. •

86:7 For help in the day of his trouble. • The fact that God does hear and will answer prayer.

The psalmist turns to praise in the next verses. •

PRAISE • REASON

86:8 For the matchlessness of the Lord's Person and works. •

86:9 For His worthiness to be adored by all nations. (This will be fulfilled in the Millennium) •

86:10 • God is great. His works are wondrous There is no other God.

PETITION • REASON

86:11 For instruction in the way of the Lord • In order that the psalmist might walk in obedience to God's truth.

• For a heart that is complerely dedicated to reverve and obey the Lord.

PRAISE • REASON

86:12, 13 Here David simply expresses his determination to praise the Lord with all his being, and to glorify His name forevermore. • For God's great mercy in delivering him from the depths of Sheol. If we apply the Psalm to the Messiah, the this is a reference to His resurrection.

86:14-16 The remaining verses describe the imminent peril of the psalmist. A mob of arrogant, violent men have conspired to take his life. These men have no time for God. But David knows the Lord and in this crucial moment he comforts himself in the knowledge that God is full of compassion, gracious, longsuffering and abundant in mercy and truth. Therefore he is confident in asking the Lord to turn to him in pity, to strengthen him and to save him—the son of God's maidservant. Some understand the expression "the son of Your maidservant" to be a figure of speech meaning "your property" as was the case with the son of a female slave. Those who take the Psalm as Messianic see it as a possible reference to the Virgin Mary.

86:17 Finally, the psalmist asks that the Lord will give him some definite sign of His favor. Then his enemies will realize that they have been on the wrong side when they see how God has helped David and comforted him.

We mentioned at the outset that the Psalm was notable in that it gave reasons for most of its prayers or praises. There are two other unique features that should be mentioned. First, David has quoted prolifically from other Scriptures; he is actually praying or praising with almost a scissors-and-paste collection of Bible verses. Second, the divine name "Adonai" is used seven times (it is translated "Lord" in vv. 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 12 and 15). God-fearing Jews often used this title rather than Jehovah. The Sopherim, or ancient custodians of the Sacred Text, changed the name Jehovah to Adonai

134 times when reading aloud, out of what they considered extreme reverence for the Ineffable Name "Jehovah."[55]

Regarding uniting our hearts to fear God's name (v. 11b) F. W. Grant writes:

> This is indeed what is everywhere the great lack among the people of God. How much of our lives is not spent in positive evil, but frittered away and lost in countless petty diversions which spoil effectually the positiveness of their testimony for God! How few can say with the apostle, "This one thing I do!" We are on the road ... but we stop to chase butterflies among the flowers, and make no serious progress. How Satan must wonder when he sees us turn away from the "kingdoms of the world and the glory of them" ... and yet yield ourselves with scarce a thought to endless trifles, lighter than the thistle-down which the child spends all his strength for, and we laugh at him. Would we examine our lives carefully ... , how should we realize the multitude of needless anxieties, of self-imagined duties, of permitted relaxations, of "innocent" trifles, which incessantly divert us from that alone in which there is profit! How few, perhaps, would care to face such an examination of the day by day unwritten history of their lives![56]

Psalm 87: Psalm of the Royal Census

The mayor of Jerusalem, Teddy Kollek, and his co-author express natural wonder at the surprising greatness of their 4,000 year old city:

> Archaeologists and historians have long wondered why Jerusalem should have been established where it was, and why it should have become great. It enjoys none of the physical features which favored the advancement and prosperity of other important cities in the world. It stands at the head of no great river. It overlooks no great harbour. It commands no great highway and no cross-roads. It is not close to abundant sources of water, often the major reason for the establishment of a settlement, though one main natural spring offered a modest supply. It possesses no mineral riches. It was off the main trade routes. It held no strategic key to the conquest of vast areas prized by the ancient warring empires. Indeed it was blessed with neither special economic nor topographic virtues which might explain why it should have ever become more than a small, anonymous mountain village with a fate any different from that of most contemporary villages which have long since vanished.[57]

87:1-3 The reason for its greatness, of course, is that it was chosen by God. He founded it in the holy mountains, and He loves its gates more than all the other cities or towns in the land. And its greatest glory is still future—when it will be the capital of the Messianic Kingdom, the royal city of the long-awaited King. This Psalm looks forward to that day when glorious things will be spoken of Zion, the city of God.

There is a sense in which it will be the spiritual birthplace of many nations:

> Now it shall come to pass in the latter days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow to it. Many people shall come and say, "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; He will teach us His ways, and we shall walk in His paths" (Isa. 2:2, 3).

87:4 That is what seems to be in view in verse 4. Zion is personified as saying that among those nations that know her as mother, she can mention

Rahab (that is, Egypt) to the south and Babylon to the north. Also people will speak of Philistia, Tyre, and Ethiopia as having been born in Jerusalem. These will be among the nations that recognize Zion as the spiritual, political, and economic capital of the world, and will go up to worship there and bring their tribute to the Great King (Isa. 60:5-7). The nations that refuse to go up to keep the Feast of Booths will suffer drought and plague (Zech. 14:16-19).

87:5 Zion therefore will be reckoned as the place where the nations experience spiritual rebirth, because the Most High Himself shall establish her in that place of universal sovereignty.

87:6 And when the LORD takes a census of the peoples, He will note carefully that certain nations realized their true destiny in becoming citizens of Zion. They visit the capital:

> not to admire its architecture, or gaze upon its battlements, or envy the tribes who had come up to worship in the city which is compact together, but to claim its municipal immunities, experience its protection, obey its laws, live and love in its happy society, and hold communion with its glorious Founder and Guardian.[58]

Gaebelein writes:

> Jehovah keeps a record as one after another of the nations are brought into the Kingdom through Zion's exaltation and blessing. Then Zion becomes the glorious metropolis of the whole world.[59]

87:7 It will be a time of festival and holiday. Singers and players on instruments will join in the chorus, "All my springs are in you." No longer the place of tears and trouble, Jerusalem will be a fountain of blessing, a source of refreshment, and a spiritual home to all the nations of the earth.

But before leaving the Psalm, there is a personal application that should be made. It is this. A time is coming when God is going to register the people. It will be the census of heaven's inhabitants. The great, single qualifying factor will be the new birth. Only those who have been born again will see or enter the kingdom of God (John 3:3-5). So when God writes up the people, He will say, "This man was born again in such and such a place."

Will He be able to say that concerning you?

There is a way in which you can qualify for heavenly citizenship. That way is set forth in John 1:12:

> But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, to those who believe in His name.

Psalm 88: The Saddest Psalm

When we come to Psalm 88 we have reached the nadir of human sorrow and suffering. It seems that the psalmist here ransacks the vocabulary of gloom and bitterness to describe his hopeless plight. His is definitely a terminal case, he feels—as if he were on the critical list in the isolation ward of a hospital for incurables. The only thing left is the morgue, and it is only a matter of time before the sheet will be drawn over his face and he will be carted away.

88:1, 2 The only bright spot in the Psalm is the name of God with which it begins—"O LORD, God of my salvation." Gaebelein calls it the one ray of light that struggles through the gloom, the star that pierces the thick midnight darkness.

But immediately the writer launches into a mournful description of his desperate predicament. Day and night he has been crying to the Lord, but still no relief. When will God break the impasse by hearing his prayer and doing something about it?

88:3-7 His life is one seething mass of troubles, and he is moving irresistibly toward death and the grave. He has been given up for dead—already counted as a casualty. Any strength he had has ebbed away. Now he is adrift among the dead, like an unconscious soldier on a corpse-strewn battlefield, or like a war victim buried with others in a common grave. He feels that he is forgotten by God and thus cut off from any hope of divine help. Like a captive consigned to a dungeon, so he has been abandoned by God to the lowest pit, to the chamber of horrors, dark and ominous. There can be only one explanation, he feels: God is angry with him and he is being submerged by the mountainous waves of divine judgment.

88:8, 9 His acquaintances have forsaken him as if he were a leper. They treat him as if he were some hideous apparition or "as a thing accursed" (Knox). He is shut up in a cell from which there is no escape. His eyes, once bright and full of expression, have lost all their sparkle. And prayer seems unavailing. Daily he cries to the LORD with his hands raised in earnest entreaty, but nothing happens.

88:10 Then in a series of questions he challenges God to tell what good would come to Him from the psalmist's death. The questions reveal the imperfect knowledge which OT saints had concerning death and the hereafter, and make us unceasingly grateful for the assurance that to die is to be with Christ which is far better (Phil. 1:23). Here then are the questions:

Does God work wonders for those who have died? The implied answer is "No." To a Jew living under law, death was a perplexing region of oblivion where nothing constructive ever happens.

Do the "shades" arise to praise Him? Those who have departed are regarded as ghost-like shadows that have no way of praising the Lord.

88:11, 12 Is God's steadfast love declared in the grave or His faithfulness in Abaddon, the place of destruction?

> Since it was believed that no action or speech was possible in the grey, grim, dusty halls of Sheol, it was surely in God's own interests to keep alive as long as possible those whose earnest praises were always pleasing to Himself.[60]

88:13-18 As if with renewed intensity, the psalmist pleads with the LORD. As surely as he lives, every morning hears his passionate prayer. He expresses utter perplexity that God should so completely abandon him and hold back any look of pity or of favor. From his youth his life had been an uninterrupted story of suffering and dying. Now in the vortex of the divine terrors, he is distraught and helpless. God's fierce wrath has overwhelmed him like a tidal wave, and His terrors have left him speechless. The furious flood is encircling and unremitting; the waves close in on him in one united assault. It is as if God has caused loved one and friend to forsake him. His only companion is darkness.

And so ends the saddest Psalm. If we wonder why it is in the Bible, we might listen to the testimony of J. N. Darby. He said that at one time this was the only Scripture that was any help to him because he saw that someone had been as low as that before him. Clarke quotes an unknown source:

> "There is only one Psalm like this in the Bible to intimate the rareness of the experience, but there is one to assure the most desperately afflicted that God will not forsake him."[61]

Psalm 89: God's Covenant with David

89:1, 2 At the outset, Ethan declares his personal delight in the steadfast love and faithfulness of Jehovah as expressed in the Davidic covenant. He is determined to sing of the mercies of the LORD forever because they endure forever.

89:3, 4 Faith reverently reminds God of the covenant He had made with David. Because David was His chosen servant, He had sworn that he would never lack heirs to sit on his throne and that his kingdom would endure to all generations. An unbroken dynasty sitting on an everlasting throne!

89:5 Then faith rehearses the wonders of the LORD who had made the covenant. It is almost as if Ethan is reminding the Lord that the honor of His name is at stake.

89:6-8 He is greater than all the angelic hosts in the heavens. The myriads above are called to praise His wonders and His faithfulness. No angel can be compared to Him; He is supreme above all the heavenly beings. The greatest of them stand in reverential awe of Him; they recognize that He is greater in every way. No one is as mighty as the LORD God of hosts, resplendent in robes of faithfulness.

89:9, 10 But that is not all. God is great in creation, in providence and in moral perfections (vv. 9-15). One dramatic instance of His greatness in creation is the way in which He rules the raging of the sea and makes its waves cease. He did this on blue Galilee many years ago, and He does it continually in the storm-tossed lives of His people. As to His greatness in providence, what better example could be adduced than His conquest of Egypt (Rahab) at the time of the exodus? He crushed that proud nation like a lion crushes the carcass of its victim; He scattered His enemies like leaves in the wind.

89:11-13 The heavens and the earth are His by creatorial right; the world and everything in it belongs to Him because it was He who founded them. The north and the south owe their origin to Him. Mount Tabor and Mount Hermon lift up their heads as if joyfully acknowledging Him as their Maker. His arm is enormously mighty and His hand is strong. His right hand is high over all, supreme in the world of power.

89:14 As for His moral perfections, His throne is founded on the twin principles of righteousness and justice. Mercy and truth are shed abroad wherever He goes.

89:15-18 Having rehearsed the greatness of the covenant-making God,Ethan now describes the blessedness of His people: "Blessed are the people who know the joyful sound!" To the pious Jew the joyful sound was the festive shouts of the people as they walked to Jerusalem for the high holy days of the religious calendar. To us, it will always be the joyful sound of the gospel. Several things are delineated concerning these happy people. They walk ... in the light of His countenance; that is, they walk in His favor and are guided by His presence. They find in Him the spring of all their joy and never stop rejoicing in His righteousness. They do not boast in their own power but in His alone. It is only through His favor that their horn is exalted, in other words, that they are made strong. For our shield belongs to the LORD, and our king to the Holy One of Israel.

89:19 And that brings Ethan to the covenant which Jehovah made with David (vv. 19-37). Many years before, God had spoken to his faithful one in a vision. The holy one may refer to Samuel (1 Sam. 16:1-12), to Nathan (2 Sam. 7:1-17) or perhaps to the Servant of Jehovah, the Lord Jesus Christ. He made an unconditional covenant of free grace, setting the crown upon a mighty one, and exalting one chosen from the people. In many of these descriptions of David, we feel almost instinctively that we are seeing beyond David to the coming Messiah-King.

89:20-24 Jehovah had selected David from among his brothers and, through Samuel, had anointed him with the holy oil reserved for king-making. The covenant guaranteed that God's hand would forever be upon David and the inheritors of his throne in preservation and protection, and His arm would provide all needed strength. The king's enemies would not be able to outfox him, neither would the wicked be able to afflict him. The Lord guaranteed to crush his foes and plague those who hate him. The faithfulness and mercy of the Lord would never leave him, and the house of David would derive its strength from Him.

89:25 In accordance with the promise made to Abram (Gen. 15:18), the eventual borders of the kingdom would stretch from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates river. In Genesis 15, it says from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates, but since the river of Egypt flows into the Mediterranean, the boundaries are the same.

89:26, 27 David would acknowledge Jehovah as his Father, his God, andhis rock of refuge. God in turn would make him His firstborn, the highest of the kings of the earth. The phrase "the firstborn" sometimes means first in time, as when Mary brought forth her first-born Son (Luke 2:7). But it could not mean that in David's case because he was the last-born son of Jesse. Here it means first in rank or honor, as explained in the rest of the verse, "the highest of the kings of the earth." This is also what Paul means when he refers to the Lord Jesus as "the firstborn over all creation" (Col. 1:15). It does not mean that Jesus was the first created being, as some cults teach, but that He is preeminent over all creation.

89:28, 29 Nothing will ever alter God's love for David, and nothing will affect the covenant He has made. There will always be a throne of David, and the royal line will be perpetuated forever.

89:30-32 The covenant would not exempt David's sons from punishment when they sinned. Any infractions of the law would be dealt with righteously. Historically, this is what had happened. David's descendants had been unfaithful to Jehovah, and He had chastised them with the rod and scourges of Babylonian captivity.

89:33 Nevertheless the covenant still stood, and although the kingdom was in eclipse for a time, and there was no king reigning in Jerusalem, yet God was still miraculously preserving the royal seed and He would re-institute the kingdom in His own time.

89:34-37 In the strongest possible language, God repeats the inviolability of the covenant and His determination to keep His promise to David. David's line would endure forever, and his throne as long as the sun and the moon ... in the sky.

89:38, 39 To outward appearances it may have seemed that God had forgotten the Davidic covenant. Judah was invaded by the Babylonians and carried off into exile. No one has sat on the throne of David from that day to this. But God had not forgotten. Almost two thousand years ago, the Lord Jesus was born in David's royal city. He was the adopted son of Joseph, and since Joseph was in the direct line of the kings of Judah, Jesus inherited the legal right to the throne of David through him (Matt. 1). Jesus was the real son of Mary, and since Mary was a lineal descendant of David through Nathan, our Lord is of the seed of David (Luke 3:23-38). So the covenant is thus fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ. David's throne is perpet-uated through Him, and since He lives in the power of an endless life, there will always be a descendant of David to sit upon the throne. One day, perhaps soon, He will return to earth to take His rightful place on the throne of David and reign as David's greatest Son.

Ethan could not have seen this, of course. To him it looked as if the covenant had been scrapped. Listen to him as he complains that God has cast off and rejected the royal line, that He has been furious against the king whom He had anointed. To Ethan there was no other explanation than that God had gone back on His promise to David, and dragged his crown in the dust. Ethan knew deep in his heart that God couldn't renege on His promise, and yet from all appearances it had happened.

89:40-45 The walls of Jerusalem had gaping holes in them, and the strongholds were shattered. Travelers passing the city helped themselves to the unprotected loot, and unfriendly Gentile neighbors sneered at Judah's plight. Israel's adversaries held the upper hand and chortled over their victory. The weapons of God's people proved useless in battle; the soldiers simply were not able to stand against the foe. The king was deposed and his throne vandalized. Humiliated and covered ... with shame, he became an old man prematurely.

89:46-48 The LORD who had made the covenant seemed to be hiding from His people. His wrath against them was burning like fire. The plaintive "How long?" goes winging its way to heaven. Ethan asks God to remember how short He has made human life anyway, how frail man is, and how insignificant as well. In his day, every man could be sure of death; the power of the grave would at last win over him. We have a better hope than Ethan; we know that not all will die but that all will be changed when the Lord Jesus returns to take His church home to heaven (1 Cor. 15:51; 1 Thess. 4:13-18). But all this was a secret as far as OT saints were concerned.

89:49-51 Ethan's pleading is very bold and clamant. He asks what has happened to the lovingkindnesses which God had guaranteed to David in the strongest possible terms. He is keenly sensitive to the taunts and jeers of Israel's enemies, how they insult Ethan himself and mock the exiled king as he moves about.

89:52 But in the closing verse faith triumphs. Though Ethan cannot see the answer to his perplexity, he can still bless Jehovah. It is as if he is saying, "Lord, I can't understand but I will still trust." So he ends his prayer on the rapturous note, "Blessed be the LORD forevermore! Amen and Amen."

IV. BOOK 4 (PSALMS 90-106)

Psalm 90: Tolling of the Death Bell

Permit me to use a little sanctified imagination in explaining this Psalm. The scene is the Wilderness of Sinai. It is years since the spies returned to Kadesh-Barnea with their evil report. Now the people are still trekking around the desert but getting nowhere in the process. It is an exercise in futility.

Every morning a reporter comes to Moses' tent with a fresh report of casualties. Deaths, deaths, deaths, and more deaths. Obituaries are the commonest item of news, and the desert seems to be an expanding cemetery. Every time the people break camp, they leave another field of graves behind.

On this particular day, Moses the man of God has had all he can take. Overwhelmed by the mounting toll, he retreats into his tent, prostrates himself on the ground and pours out this prayer to God.

90:1, 2 In the midst of so much transience and mortality, he first finds relief in the eternity of the LORD. While all else fades and vanishes, God is unchanging, a home and refuge for His people. From all eternity and to all eternity, He is God, "infinite, eternal and unchangeable in His being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth."

90:3, 4 In stark contrast to God's agelessness is the brevity of human life. It seems that God is constantly issuing the order, "Return to dust," and a never-ending line trudges down to the grave. To One who is eternal, fallen man's original life-span of about a thousand years is no more than a past memory or a fraction of a night.

90:5, 6 Even to Moses, human life seems as evanescent as sleep. You sleep, you dream, you awake, and yet you are scarcely conscious of the passing of time. Or to change the figure, life is like grass—fresh and green in the morning, then faded and withered by evening. As Spurgeon said, it is "sown, grown, blown, mown, gone."

90:7-10 While all death is a result of the entrance of sin, Moses realizes that what is happening in the desert is a special visitation from God. All the soldiers who were twenty years or older when they left Egypt will die before they reach Canaan. The tolling of the death bell is a sign that God is angry with His people because they took sides with the unbelieving spies instead of marching into Canaan as Caleb and Joshua had encouraged. Their iniquities and secret sins are ever before Him, a constant irritation and rankling. As a result, the Israelites are living under the somber cloud of His anger, and overwhelmed in the churning waves of His wrath. Some, it is true, live their allotted span of seventy years, and some even as much as eighty. But even in their case, life is a weariness. One ailment follows another. The smallest tasks are an effort. And soon the pulse beat has stopped, and another one becomes "the missing face."

90:11, 12 The man of God stands in awe of the power of God that has been awakened in anger. Who, he wonders, can reverence Him adequately when one considers the immensity of His wrath? This much is sure: it should make us value every day of our lives and spend each one in obedience to Him, and in such a way that it will count for eternity.

90:13, 14 Moses pleads with the LORD to return to His people in mercy. Will His anger burn forever? Won't He please have compassion on them and satisfy them early with His mercy that they might live out their remaining days in a measure of tranquility and happiness?

90:15, 16 Now Moses pleads for "equal time," that is, he asks for as many years of gladness for Israel as the years of affliction and trouble they had seen. They had already seen His power displayed in works of judgment; now he asks that the Lord show the other side of His countenance; that is, acts of grace.

90:17 Finally, the intercessor asks the Lord to look in favor on His chosen earthly people and to make them fruitful in all their endeavors: "Yes, establish the work of our hands."

Traditionally Psalm 90 has been a favorite reading at Christian funerals. And not without reason, because it reminds us of the shortness of life and the need to redeem the time or buy up the opportunities. But the Psalm does not breathe out the comfort and assurance of the NT era. Christ has brought "life and immortality to light through the gospel." We know that to die is gain; it is to be absent from the body and to be at home with the Lord. And so the somber and dark outlook of the Psalm should be replaced by the joy and triumph of the believer's hope in Christ, for now death has lost its sting and the grave has been robbed of its victory. The believer can sing:

Death is vanquished! Tell it with joy, ye faithful;
Where is now the victory, boasting grave?
Jesus lives! no longer thy portals are cheerless;
Jesus lives, the mighty and strong to save.
——Fanny J. Crosby

Psalm 91: My Psalm

In 1922, in the Western Hebrides, a five-year-old lad was dying of diphtheria. A mucous membrane was forming across his throat, and breathing was becoming increasingly difficult. His Christian mother turned her back so she would not see him take his last breath. At that very moment there was a knock at the door. It was her brother-in-law from an adjoining village. He said, "I've just come to tell you that you don't have to worry about the child. He is going to recover, and one day God is going to save his soul." She was distracted and incredulous: "Whatever makes you say that?" Then he explained he had been sitting at his fire reading Psalm 91 when God distinctly spoke to him through the last three verses:

Because on me he set his love,
I'll save and set him free;
Because my great name he hath known,
I will set him on high.

He'll call on me, I'll answer him;
I will be with him still,
In trouble to deliver him,
And honour him I will.
With length of days unto his mind
I will him satisfy;
I also my salvation
Will cause his eyes to see.
—from The Scottish Psalms In Metre.

I was that boy. God delivered me from death that night; He saved my soul thirteen years later, and He has satisfied me with long life. So you will understand why I refer to Psalm 91 as my Psalm. I usually add, with tongue in cheek, that I am willing to share it with others—but it is definitely my Psalm!

Most theologians don't agree with me at all. They say that this is a Messianic Psalm. And of course they are right. Its primary interpretation concerns our wonderful Lord Jesus Christ. And we are going to study it from that perspective, but all the while remembering that in a lesser way, we may appropriate its precious promises to ourselves:

All the rivers of Thy grace, I claim;
Over every promise write my name.

91:1, 2 Jesus is the One who in a preeminent way dwelt in the secret place of the Most High, and abode under the shadow of the Almighty. There never was a life like His. He lived in absolute, unbroken fellowship with God, His Father. He never acted in self-will but did only those things that the Father directed. Though He was perfect God, He was also perfect Man, and He lived His life on earth in utter and complete dependence on God. Without equivocation He could look up and say, "My refuge and my fortress, my God, in Him I will trust."

91:3 It seems that the Holy Spirit's voice is heard in verses 3-13, assuring the Lord Jesus of the tremendous security that was His because of His life of perfect trust. What are the guarantees of security? There are nine:

Deliverance from hidden dangers. The snare of the bird-trapper speaks of the enemy's evil plot to trap the unwary.

Immunity from fatal disease. In our Lord's case, there is no reason to believe that He was ever sick at all.

91:4 Shelter and refuge in the Almighty. God's tender, personal care is likened to that of a mother bird with her young.

Protection in the faithfulness of God. His promises are sure. What He has said, He will do. This is the believer's shield and buckler.

91:5 Freedom from fear. Four types of danger are mentioned that commonly cause apprehension:

> Attacks made by an enemy under the cover of night *are especially terrifying because the source is hard to identify.*The arrow that flies by day may be understood as a literal missile or as a figure for "the evil plots and slanders of the wicked" (Amplified Version).

91:6 The pestilence that walks in darkness may also be taken literally or figuratively. Physical disease thrives where it is shielded from the sun's rays, and moral evil also breeds in the dark.The destruction that lays waste at noonday is unspecified, and perhaps it is best to leave it that way, so that the promise may have a more widespread application.

91:7, 8 Safety even in the midst of massacre. Even where there is slaughter on a wholesale basis, the Beloved of the Lord is absolutely safe. When the wicked are punished, He will be a spectator only, free from the possibility of harm.

91:9, 10 Insurance against calamity. Because the Savior made the Most High His refuge and His dwelling place, no disaster would strike Him, no calamity would get near Him.

91:11, 12 Guarded by angelic escort. This is the passage which Satan quoted to the Lord Jesus when tempting Him to throw Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple (Luke 4:10, 11). Jesus did not deny that the verses applied to Him, but He did deny that they could be used as a pretext for tempting God. God had not told Him to jump down from the temple. If the Savior had jumped, He would have been acting outside the divine will, and then the promise of protection would not have been valid.

91:13 Victory over the lion and cobra. It is interesting that Satan stopped before coming to this verse. If he had quoted it, he would have been describing his own doom! The devil is presented in Scripture as a roaring lion (1 Pet. 5:8) and as an ancient serpent (Rev. 12:9). As a lion, he is the loud, horrendous persecutor using physical violence. As a serpent, he employs wily stratagems to deceive and to destroy.

And so the Holy Spirit has given nine guarantees of safe-conduct to the Son of Man during His life of perfect trust and obedience on earth. At this point God the Father confirms the guarantees by six tremendous "I wills." In these perhaps there is a suggestion of the entire career of the Man Christ Jesus:

91:14 His spotless life on earth. "Because he has set his love upon Me, therefore I will deliver him; I will set him on high, because he has known My name."

91:15 His suffering for sins. "He shall call upon Me, and I will answer him; I will be with him in trouble."

His resurrection and ascension. "I will deliver him and honor him."

91:16 His present session at God's right hand and His coming kingdom. "With long life I will satisfy him, and show him My salvation."

So much for what the Psalm says! But wait! You are probably thinking of what it does not say, of important questions that it does not answer. For example, how can we reconcile all these promises of safe-keeping for the Messiah with the fact that men ultimately did put Him to death? And if we apply the Psalm to believers today, how does it square with the fact that some of them do succumb to disease, or fall in battle, or die in plane crashes?

Part of the answer, at least, lies in this: The one who trusts in Jehovah is immortal until his work is done. Jesus said as much to His disciples. When He suggested returning to Judea, the disciples said:"Rabbi, lately the Jews sought to stone You, and are You going there again?" Jesus answered, "Are there not twelve hours in the day? If anyone walks in the day, he does not stumble, because he sees the light of this world. But if one walks in the night, he stumbles, because the light is not in him" (John 11:7-10).The Lord knew that the Jews could not touch Him until He had finished His work. And this is true of every believer; he is kept by the power of God through faith.

Then the Lord may speak to a believer in a special, personal way through some verse of this Psalm. If He does, the person can claim the promise and rely on it. The personal incident at the beginning illustrates this.

And finally, it is true in a general way that those who trust the Lord are sure of His protection. We may tend to overemphasize the exceptions. The general rule is still true: there is safety in the Lord.

Psalm 92: A Lesson in Spiritual Botany

92:1-5 No one can deny the fact that it is downright good to give thanks to the LORD. It is good in the sense that the Lord deserves such gratitude, and it is good also for the one who offers the thanks and for those who hear it. To sing praises to the name of the Most High is about as appropriate an activity as anyone can engage in. And there is no lack of subject matter for praise. His lovingkindness is an unending theme for the morning and His faithfulness is sufficient to occupy the nighttime hours—and then some. Enhance the beauty of the song with an instrument of ten strings, the lute, and the harp, and with harmonious sound. No amount of sweet music is enough to praise the Lord for His wonderful works of creation, providence, and redemption. Just to think of all He has done makes the heart sing with joy. The marvelous, intricate plans of God, His deep designs and wise plans add fuel to the flame of praise.

92:6-9 But don't expect the natural man to understand the deep things of God. He can't understand them, "because they are spiritual discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14). As far as divine realities are concerned, he is dull and stupid though he may be an intellectual giant as far as the world is concerned. He never comes to grip with the fact that fixed moral laws in the universe prescribe destruction for the wicked. Though he may seem to prosper for a while, still his success is as short-lived as grass. Just as sure as the LORD is enthroned forevermore, so surely will His enemies be scattered and perish.

92:10, 11 The other side of the coin is that God exalts the horn of the righteous like that of the wild ox, that is, He gives strength and honor to His people. And He anoints the faithful ones with fresh oil, which typifies the gracious ministry of the Holy Spirit. When the last chapter is written, the saints of God will have witnessed the demise of their enemies, and will have heard the long, low wail of their doom.

92:12-15 The prosperity of the righteous is comparable to that of a palm tree and a cedar of Lebanon. The palm tree symbolizes beauty and fruitfulness while the cedar is an emblem of strength and permanence. The reason for the luxuriant growth of believers is that they are planted in the house of the LORD and flourish in the courts of our God. In other words, they live in daily fellowship with the Lord, drawing their strength and sustenance from Him. Age does not impair their fruit-bearing capabilities. They continue to pulsate with vigorous spiritual life (the sap) and their testimony remains ever green. Their prosperity is an evidence that the LORD is upright in fulfilling His promises. He is the dependable rock, and there is nothing unreliable about Him.

The wicked are compared to grass (v. 7), the righteous to an evergreen (v. 14). The wicked wither and fade away, but the righteous go on from strength to strength. This is the order in spiritual botany.

Psalm 93: The Eternal King and His Eternal Throne

93:1, 2 The songs that will be sung when Jesus is crowned LORD are all ready—and this is one of them. It anticipates the glorious day when Israel's Messiah proclaims Himself King. He will be clothed with majesty, in contrast to the lowly grace which characterized Him at His First Advent. He will openly clothe Himself with the strength that is needed to reign over the world. And world conditions will then be established on a firm, stable basis, no longer subject to vast moral and political convulsions.

Of course, the throne of Jehovah has always existed, but it has not been as clearly manifest as it will be when the Millennium dawns. The King Himself too is eternal, and as His authority had no beginning, so it will have no end.

93:3, 4 When the psalmist speaks of floods and mighty waves, it seems clear that he is thinking of the Gentile nations which have oppressed His people through the ages and which will conspire against Him when He comes to reign. But their efforts will be futile and short-lived. Though they will lift up their voices in terrifying threats and awesome boasts, they will learn that the enthroned Jehovah is mightier than all their federations, than all the armed might they can assemble.

93:5 And so it will be seen that God's Word is true after all, and all the promises He made concerning the defeat of His foes and the establishment of

His righteous reign will be fulfilled. The temple in Jerusalem will be cleansed from evil, an appropriate purity for the One whose house it is.

> All will be holy when He reigns; and everything will be characterized by holiness, as predicted in Isaiah 23:18; Zechariah 14:20, 21; Revelation 4:8.[62]

Psalm 94: God of Vengeance

In his splendid work on The Attributes of God, A. W. Pink writes:

> It is sad to find so many professing Christians who appear to regard the wrath of God as something for which they need to make an apology, or at least they wish there were no such thing. ... Others harbor the delusion that God's wrath is not consistent with His goodness, and so seek to banish it from their thoughts. ... But God is not ashamed to make it known that vengeance and fury belong to Him. ... The wrath of God is as much a Divine perfection as His faithfulness, power or mercy. ... The very nature of God makes Hell as real a necessity as Heaven is.[63]

94:1-3 In Psalm 94 we hear the faithful remnant of Israel in the last days appealing to the God of vengeance to reveal Himself in His hatred of evil. The time has come for the righteous Judge of all the earth to avenge the crimes of evil rulers against His beloved people. The cry "How long?" is about to be hushed. The gloating of the wicked will soon be silenced.
